℣. 1. Belſhazzar the king made a great feaſt, &c.] This king was not the immediate ſucceſſor of Nebuchadnezzar, but Evil-Merodach, Jer. lii. 31. who according to Ptolemy's canon reigned two years; then followed Nerigliſſar, his ſiſter's huſband, by whom he was ſlain, and who uſurped the throne, and reigned four years; he died in the beginning of his fourth year, and left a ſon called Laboroſoarchod, who reigned but nine months, which are placed by Ptolemy to his father's reign, and therefore he himſelf is not mentioned in the canon; and then followed this king, who by Ptolemy is called Nabonadius; by Beroſus, Nabonnedus[t]; by Abydenus[u], Nabannidochus; by Herodotus[w], Labynitus; and by Joſephus[x], Naboandelus, who according to him is the ſame with Belſhazzar; whom ſome confound with the ſon of Nerigliſſar; others take him to be the ſame with Evil-Merodach, becauſe he here immediately follows Nebuchadnezzar, and is called his ſon, ℣. 11, 13, 18. and others, that he was a younger brother, ſo Jarchi and Theodoret; but the truth is, that he was the ſon of Evil-Merodach, and grandſon of Nebuchadnezzar, which agrees with the prophecy in Jer. xxvii. 7. for tho' Nebuchadnezzar is called his father, and he his ſon, ℣. 2, 11, 13, 18, 22. this is ſaid after the manner of the eaſtern nations, who uſed to call anceſtors fathers, and their more remote poſterity ſons. He had his name Belſhazzar, from the idol Bel, and may be rendered, Bel's treaſurer; though, according to Saadiah, the word ſignifies a ſearcher of treaſures, of his anceſtors, or of the houſe of God. Hillerus tranſlates it, Bel hath hidden. This king made a great feaſt; or bread[y], which is put for all proviſions; it was great, both on account of plenty of food, variety of diſhes, and number of gueſts, and thoſe of the higheſt rank and quality. On what account this feaſt was made is not eaſy to ſay; whether out of contempt of Cyrus and his army, by whom he was now beſieged, and to ſhew that he thought himſelf quite ſafe and ſecure in a city ſo well walled and fortified, and having in it ſuch vaſt quantities of proviſion; or whether it was on account of a victory he had obtained that morning over the Medes and Perſians, as Joſephus Ben Gorion[z] relates; and therefore in the evening treated his thouſand lords, who had been engaged in battel with him, and behaved well: tho' it ſeems to have been an anniverſary feaſt; ſince, according to Xenophon and Herodotus, Cyrus knew of it before-hand; either on account of the king's birth-day, or in honour to his gods, particularly Shach, which was called the Sachæan feaſt; ſee the notes on Jer. xxv. 26. and li. 41. which ſeems moſt likely, ſince theſe were praiſed at this time, and the veſſels of the temple of God at Jeruſalem profaned, ℣. 2, 3, 4. this feaſt was propheſied of by Iſaiah, ch. xxi. 5. and by Jeremiah, ch. li. 39. it had its name from Shach, one of their deities, of which ſee the note on ch. i. 4, 7. the ſame perhaps with Belus or the ſun. The feaſts kept in honour of it, were much like the Saturnalia of the Romans, or the Purim of the Jews; and were kept eleven days together, in which every one did as he pleaſed, no order and decorum being obſerved; and for five of thoſe days eſpecially, there was no difference between maſter and ſervant, yea the latter had the government of the former; and they ſpent day and night in dancing and drinking, and in all exceſs of riot and revelling[a]; and in ſuch like manner the Babylonians were indulging themſelves, when their city was taken by Cyrus, as the above writers aſſert[b]; and from the knowledge Cyrus had of it, it appears to be a ſtated feaſt, and very probably on the above account. According to Strabo[c], there was a feaſt of this name among the Perſians, which was celebrated in honour of the goddeſs Anais, Diana, or the moon; and at whoſe altar they placed together, Amanus and Anandratus, Perſian dæmons; and appointed a ſolemn convention once a year, called Saca. Some ſay the occaſion of it was this; that Cyrus making an expedition againſt the Sacæ, a people in Scythia, pretended a flight, and left his tents full of all proviſions, and eſpecially wine, which they finding, filled themſelves with it; when he returning upon them, finding ſome overcome with wine and ſtupified, others overwhelmed with ſleep, and others dancing and behaving in a bacchanalian way, they fell into his hands, and almoſt all of them periſhed; and taking this victory to be from the gods, he conſecrated that day to the god of his country, and called it Sacæa; and wherever there was a temple of this deity, there was appointed a bacchanalian feaſt, in which men and women appeared night and day in a Scythian habit, drinking together, and behaving to one another in a jocoſe and laſcivious manner; but this could not be the feaſt now obſerved at Babylon, tho' it is very probable it was ſomething of the like nature, and obſerved in much the ſame manner. And was made to a thouſand of his lords; his nobles, the peers of his realm, governors of provinces, &c. ſuch a number of gueſts, Ptolemy king of Egypt feaſted at one time of Pompey's army, as Pliny from Varro relates[d]; but Alexander far exceeded, who at a wedding had nine, ſome ſay ten, thouſand at his tables, and gave to every one a cup of gold, to offer wine in honour of the gods[e]; and Pliny reports[f] of one Pythius Bythinus, who entertained the whole army of Xerxes with a feaſt, even ſeven hundred and eighty-eight thouſand men. And drank wine before the thouſand; not that he ſtrove with them who ſhould drink moſt, or drank to every one of them ſeparately, and ſo a thouſand cups, as Jacchiades ſuggeſts; but he drank in the preſence of them, to ſhew his condeſcenſion and familiarity; this being, as Aben Ezra obſerves, contrary to the cuſtom of kings, eſpecially of the eaſtern nations, who were ſeldom ſeen in public. This feaſt was kept in a large houſe or hall, as Joſephus[g] ſays, afterwards called the banqueting-houſe, ℣. 10.

℣. 2. Belſhazzar whilſt he taſted the wine, &c.] As he was drinking his cups, and delighted with the taſte of the wine, and got merry with it: or, by the advice of the wine[h], as Aben Ezra and Jarchi interpret it, by a proſopopeia; as if that dictated to him, and put him upon doing what follows; and which often puts both fooliſh and wicked things into the heads of men, and upon doing them: then he commanded to bring the golden and ſilver veſſels, which his father Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple which was in Jeruſalem; what theſe veſſels were, and the number of them, we learn from the delivery of them afterwards to the prince of Judah by Cyrus, Ezra i. 9, 10, 11. theſe were put into the temple of Bel by Nebuchadnezzar, ch. i. 2. and from thence they were now ordered to be brought to the king's palace, and to the apartment where he and his nobles were drinking: that the king and his princes, his wives and his concubines might drink therein; Saadiah ſays, this day the ſeventy years captivity ended, and ſo in contempt of the promiſe and prophecy of it, he ordered the veſſels to be brought out and drank in, to ſhew that in vain the Jews expected redemption from it.

℣. 3. Then they brought the golden veſſels that were taken out of the temple of the houſe of God, which was at Jeruſalem, &c.] That is, the ſervants to whom the orders were given fetched them from the temple of Bel, and brought them to the king's houſe; and tho' only mention is made of golden veſſels, yet no doubt the ſilver ones were alſo brought, according to the king's command: and the king and his princes, his wives and his concubines drank in them; by which they were profaned, being dedicated to holy uſes, but now put to common uſe, and that by ſuch impious perſons; and who did it, not on account of the value and antiquity of theſe veſſels, and in admiration of them, and to the honour of their feſtival; but in contempt of them, and in a profane and ſcurrilous way, as follows:

℣. 4. They drunk wine, &c.] That is, out of the veſſels of the temple at Jeruſalem, and perhaps till they were drunk: and praiſed the gods of gold, and of ſilver, of braſs, of iron, of wood, and of ſtone; for they had gods of all theſe materials; ſee the note on ch. i. 2. and theſe they praiſed by offering ſacrifices unto them; or rather by ſinging ſongs, and drinking healths, and by aſcribing all their victories over the nations of the world to them; as that by their means they had got ſuch large dominions, and ſuch great wealth and treaſures, and particularly theſe veſſels of gold and ſilver; and ſo inſulted and triumphed over the God of Iſrael, and defied the prophecies and promiſes of the deliverance of them, that went under his name.

℣. 5. In the ſame hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, &c.] From heaven, as Jarchi; or they came forth as if they came out of the wall: this was done by the power of God, tho' it might be by the intervention or means of an angel; ſo Joſephus Ben Gorion[i] ſays, that an angel came and wrote what follows; and Saadiah ſays it was Gabriel, called a man, ch. ix. 21. but this is conjecture; however, at the very time the king and his nobles were feaſting and revelling, praiſing their idols, and reproaching the God of Iſrael, this wonderful phænomenon appeared: and wrote over-againſt the candleſtick, upon the plaſter of the wall of the king's palace; this candleſtick was either upon the table, as Saadiah; or affixed to the wall, or hung as a chandelier in the midſt of the hall; or be it where it will, right over-againſt it this hand appeared, and wrote, that by the light of it it might be clearly and diſtinctly ſeen: though Guſſetius[k] thinks, not a candleſtick, but a buffet is meant; where ſtood the drinking cups and veſſels, and which he takes to be more agreeable to the ſignification of the word; and moreover obſerves, that it is not likely this feaſt ſhould be made in the night, or at leaſt it is not certain it was, or that it was yet night when this affair happened: however, this writing was upon the plaſter of the wall, made of lime, and was white; and if the writing was with red colour, as Ben Gorion ſays, it was the more viſible: and the king ſaw the part of the hand that wrote; the back part of the hand; had he only ſeen a writing, but no hand writing it, he might have thought it was done by ſome preſent; but ſeeing a hand, and only part of one, or however not any other members of the body of a man, nor a man himſelf; it ſtruck him with ſurprize, and he concluded at once there was ſomething extraordinary in it; whether any other ſaw the hand beſides himſelf is not certain, however he ſaw it for whom it was particularly deſigned.

℣. 6. Then the king's countenance changed, &c.] Or, his brightneſs[l]; his ruddy countenance, his florid looks, his gay airs; all his jollity and mirth, that appeared in his face, were changed into paleneſs, ſadneſs, and confuſion: and his thoughts troubled him; what ſhould be the meaning of this; perhaps he might immediately fear it preſaged ruin and deſtruction to him; the ſins of his former life might at once come into his thoughts, and thoſe particularly he had now been guilty of; his luxury and intemperance, his idolatry and profanation of the veſſels of the ſanctuary, which his conſcience might accuſe him of, and give him great diſtreſs and trouble: ſo that the joints of his loins were looſed; looſed; or, the girdles of his loins [m]; which were looſed or broke, thro' the agitation he was in; or he was all over in a ſweat, ſo that he was obliged to looſe his girdle; or as perſons in great fear and conſternation, he was ſeized with a pain in his back; it opened as it were; nor could he hold his urine, as Grotius and others; ſee Iſ. xlv. 1. where this ſeems to be propheſied of: and his knees ſmote one againſt another; as is the caſe of perſons in a great tremor, or under a pannic. Et ſubito genua intremuere timore. Ovid.

℣. 7. The king cried aloud to bring in the aſtrologers, the Chaldeans, and the ſoothſayers, &c.] Or, with ſtrength [n]; with a ſtrong voice, as loud as he could; which is expreſſive of the fright he was in, and of his eagerneſs and impatience of information; laying aſide all decency, and forgetting his royal majeſty, like a man out of his ſenſes, quite diſtracted as it were: of the aſtrologers, &c. ſee the note on ch. i. 20. and ii. 2. this was the uſual courſe the kings of Babylon took, when they had matters of difficulty upon them, as appears from ch. ii. 2. and iv. 6, 7. and though they found it oftentimes fruitleſs and vain, yet ſtill they purſued it; ſo beſotted and addicted were they to this kind of ſuperſtition: and the king ſpake and ſaid to the wiſe men of Babylon; who were preſently brought in from the ſeveral parts of the city where they dwelt, and probably many of them might be at court at that time; and being introduced into the hall where the king and his nobles were, he addreſſed them in the following manner: whoſoever ſhall read this writing, and ſhew me the interpretation thereof; pointing to the writing upon the wall, which continued; and which neither the king nor any about him could read or interpret, and therefore both are required to be done: he ſhall be clothed with ſcarlet, and have a chain of gold about his neck; or with purple [o]; the colour, wore by perſons of rank and figure; and the chain of gold was an emblem of honour and dignity, and more to be regarded for that, than for the value of the gold of which it was made: and ſhall be the third ruler in the kingdom; not rule over the third part of the kingdom, as Aben Ezra; but be the third man in the kingdom; next to the king and the queen-mother, or to the king and the heir apparent; or one of the third principal rulers; or one of the three preſidents of the kingdom, as Daniel afterwards was.

℣. 8. Then came in all the king's wiſe men, &c.] The whole college of them, the perſons before deſcribed; over whom, in Nebuchadnezzar's time, Daniel was the chief of the governors, ch. ii. 48. theſe came in readily, in hope of getting both riches and honour: but they could not read the writing, nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof; for if they could not do the former, it muſt be impoſſible to do the latter; of the reaſon of which, various are the conjectures [p]: as that tho' theſe words were written in Chaldee, yet in characters, as the Samaritan or Phœnician, they did not underſtand; or were written without points, and ſo they knew not which were the proper ones to put to them; or they were written according to the poſition of the letters of the alphabet, called Athbaſh, of which ſee the note on Jer. xxv. 26. or the words were placed ſo as to be read backward, or elſe downward, and not ſtrait forward; or they were all in one word; or only the initial letters of words; but the true reaſon was, that it was ſo ordained by the Lord, that they ſhould not be able to read and interpret them; this being reſerved for another man, Daniel, that he might have the honour, and God the glory.

℣. 9. Then was king Belſhazzar greatly troubled, &c.] A ſecond time, and perhaps more than before; ſince he had conceived ſome hope that his wiſe men would have informed him what this writing was, and the meaning of it; but finding that they were non-pluſſed by it, it gave him ſtill greater uneaſineſs: and his countenance was changed in him; again; very likely, upon the coming in of the wiſe men, he had a little recovered himſelf, and became more compoſed and ſerene, which appeared in his countenance; but upon this diſappointment, his countenance changed again, and he turned pale, and looked ghaſtly: and his lords were aſtoniſhed; were in the utmoſt conſternation and confuſion, when they underſtood that the writing could neither be read, nor interpreted; neither the dignity of their ſtation, nor their numbers, nor their liquor, could keep up their ſpirits; ſo that the king had not one with him, to ſpeak a comfortable word to him, or give him any advice in this his time of diſtreſs; they were all in the ſame condition with himſelf.

℣. 10. Now the queen, by reaſon of the words of the king and his lords, came into the banquet-houſe, &c.] Not the wife of Belſhazzar, as Porphyry would have it; but rather the queen-mother, as Jacchiades, the widow of Evil-Merodach his father, whoſe name was Nitocris; and is ſpoken of by Herodotus [q], as a very prudent woman; and as this ſeems to be by her words and conduct: tho' Joſephus [r] ſays it was his grandmother, ſhe who had been the wife of Nebuchadnezzar; and of this opinion were ſome mentioned by Aben Ezra; whoſe name was Amyitis; and it appears by what ſhe ſays afterwards, that ſhe was well acquainted with affairs in his time; and being an ancient woman, might be the reaſon why ſhe was not among the ladies at the feaſt in the banqueting-houſe; but came into it, without being ſent for, on hearing the conſternation and diſtreſs the king and his lords were in, and the moanful deſpairing words they expreſſed on this occaſion: and the queen ſpake and ſaid, O king, live for ever; the uſual ſalutation given to the kings of Babylon, and other eaſtern monarchs; ſee ch. ii. 4. and vi. 21: let not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed; at this affair, as if it could never be underſtood, and the true meaning of it be given; but be of good chear, and put on a good countenance; there is hope yet that it may be cleared up to ſatisfaction.

℣. 11. There is a man in thy kingdom, &c.] She does not ſay, in his court; very probably after the death of Nebuchadnezzar, perhaps in one of the former reigns, he was removed from his offices; for had he been in one, very likely the queen would have deſcribed him by it; and this ſeems to receive confirmation by the queſtion Belſhazzar put to him upon his coming into his preſence, art thou that Daniel, &c. and only ſays that he had heard of him, ℣. 13, 14: in whom is the ſpirit of the holy holy gods; ſomething divine, ſomething more than human; ſhe uſes the very words of Nebuchadnezzar; which ſeems to confirm that opinion, that ſhe was his widow, ch. iv. 8: and in the days of thy father, light, and underſtanding, and wiſdom like the wiſdom of the gods was found in him; light in the knowledge of things obſcure; underſtanding in the interpretation of dreams; and wiſdom in things both human and divine, like that of an angel of God, as Jacchiades interprets Elohim: of this, inſtances were given in the days of his grandfather, for ſo Nebuchadnezzar was; nor is it unuſual for a grandfather to be called a father, and even a more remote anceſtor; which inſtances were, telling him his dream when he had forgot it, as well as the interpretation of it; and explaining his dream or viſion of the tree cut down to its ſtump; of which ſee ch. ii. and iv: whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy father, the king, I ſay, thy father made maſter of the magicians, aſtrologers, Chaldeans, and ſoothſayers, ch. ii. 48. ſhe ſeems tacitly to upbraid him with his neglect of ſuch a man, or with turning him out of his office, when ſo great a prince as his grandfather was, took ſo much notice of him, and ſo highly advanced him.

ỷ. 12. Foraſmuch as an excellent ſpirit, &c.] A ſuperior ſpirit to all the wiſe men in Babylon for natural knowledge and political wiſdom; and he had yet a more excellent ſpirit which ſhe knew nothing of, and was no judge of; a ſpirit of real grace, and true piety and devotion: and knowledge, and underſtanding, interpreting of dreams; of which, interpreting two of Nebuchadnezzar's, was a proof: and ſhewing hard ſentences; or explaining enigmas and riddles, or proverbial, parabolical and figurative phraſes and expreſſions: and diſſolving of doubts; or untying knots, ſolving problems, and anſwering knotty, intricate and difficult queſtions: were found in the ſame Daniel: whom the king named Belteſhazzar; the prince of his eunuchs gave him that name, perhaps by the king's order; however it was confirmed by him; he called him by it, and ſays it was according to the name of his god; ſee ch. i. 7. and iv. 8: now let Daniel be called, and he will ſhew the interpretation; this ſhe was confident of, from the knowledge ſhe had of the above facts.

ỷ. 13. Then was Daniel brought in before the king, &c.] Proper officers being ſent to ſeek and find him; and having fetched him from his houſe or apartment where he lived, which ſeems to have been in the city of Babylon, tho' not very probably at court as formerly, he was introduced in form into the king's preſence: and the king ſpake and ſaid unto Daniel, art thou that Daniel, which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king my father brought out of Jewry? by which it appears he did not know him, at leaſt had forgot him; not having admitted him to any familiarity with him, as his grandfather had done; and tho' the queen had given ſuch great commendations of him, yet the king does not treat him with that reſpect as might have been expected, and as Nebuchadnezzar did, ch. iv. 9. but ſeems to reproach him with his ſervile condition, being a captive whom his grandfather had brought out of Judea, as it were triumphing over him and his people; which ſhows the haughtineſs of his heart, and that it was not brought down by this conſternation and fright he was thrown into.

ỷ. 14. I have even heard of thee, &c.] Very probably he had heard often of him, tho' he did not think fit to honour him, and uſe him with that familiarity his grandfather had; or however he had now juſt heard of him by the queen, whoſe encomiums of him he recites in her own words: that the ſpirit of the gods is in thee, and that light, and underſtanding, and excellent wiſdom is found in thee; which are the expreſs words of his mother, ỷ. 11, 12.

ỷ. 15. And now the wiſe men, the aſtrologers have been brought in before me, &c.] For it ſeems they came not of themſelves, or upon hearing his loud cry; but were ſent for by him, and came by his orders, and were introduced into his preſence by the proper officers: that they ſhould read this writing, and make known unto me the interpretation thereof; pointing to the writing upon the wall: but they could not ſhew the interpretation of the thing; nor even read it; tho' it may be ſome of them might attempt to read it, and did read it in their way, as well as they could, or at leaſt pretended to read; yet could make no manner of ſenſe of it, which was the thing the king was intent upon.

ỷ. 16. And I have heard of thee, &c.] That is, by the queen, which he repeats for the ſake of obſerving what ſhe had ſaid of him, and which gave him encouragement to ſend for him: that thou canſt make interpretations; of dreams, and of things hard to be underſtood: and diſſolve doubts; untie knots, ſolve difficulties, and anſwer hard and intricate queſtions: now if thou canſt read the writing, and make known to me the interpretation thereof; that which is upon the wall before thee, and which the wiſe men of Babylon could not: thou ſhalt be clothed with ſcarlet, and have a chain of gold about thy neck, and ſhalt be the third ruler in the kingdom; the ſame reward he had propoſed to the aſtrologers and ſoothſayers, ỷ. 7. but what was no temptation or motive to Daniel, as appears by what follows:

ỷ. 17. Then Daniel anſwered and ſaid before the king, &c.] With great freedom, boldneſs and intrepidity: let thy gifts be to thyſelf; remain with thee; I neither want them, nor deſire them; nor will I receive them on condition of reading and interpreting the writing: and give thy rewards to another; which he had promiſed to thoſe that could read and interpret the hand-writing on the wall; even to be clothed with ſcarlet, have a golden chain, and be the third ruler in the kingdom. It may be rendered, or give thy rewards to another [a]; either keep them thyſelf, or give them to whomſoever thou pleaſeſt: ſhould it be aſked why Daniel refuſed gifts now, when he received them from Nebuchadnezzar? it may be anſwered, he was then young, and wanted them, and could make uſe of them for the benefit of his countrymen, but now was old, and needed them not; beſides, he knew then that the captivity would continue long, but that it was now juſt at an end, and the monarchy coming into other hands, when theſe gifts and rewards would be of little uſe; as alſo this king was a very wicked one, worſe than his grandfather, and he did not chooſe to receive from him; and eſpecially, ſince the interpretation of the writing would be bad news to him; as well as to let him know, that he did not do theſe things for fee and reward, but for the glory of God; and that as he had freely received ſuch knowledge, he freely communicated it: and therefore adds, yet I will read the writing to the king, and make known to him the interpretation; terpretation; in reverence of him as a king, and in ſubjection to him, and to ſatisfy him in this matter; for he refuſed his gifts, not from pride and vanity, and a ſupercilious contempt of the king and his affairs; nor as being doubtful of ſucceſs in reading and interpreting the writing; which he well knew he was able to do, and therefore promiſes it.

℣. 18. O thou king, &c.] Hear[t], O king; ſo Aben Ezra ſupplies it; what he was about to ſay firſt, in order to prepare him for the meaning of the hand-writing, and the cauſe of it; or, thou knoweſt, as Saadiah ſupplies it; namely, what follows: the moſt high God gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father a kingdom; a very large one, which reached to the ends of the earth: this was not to be aſcribed to his predeceſſor that left it to him; or to his victorious arms, which increaſed it; or to his idol-gods, to whom he attributed it; but to the moſt high God, from whom promotion alone cometh; and who, being above all gods and kings, ſets up, and pulls down, as he pleaſes; he gave him his large dominions: and majeſty, and glory, and honour; greatneſs among men; glory and honour from them, on account of the majeſty of his perſon and kingdom; the victories he obtained, and the great things he did to make him famous while he lived, and to perpetuate his memory after death.

℣. 19. And for the majeſty that he gave him, &c.] The greatneſs of his power, the largeneſs of his dominions, and the vaſt armies he had at his command: all people, nations and languages trembled, and feared before him; not only thoſe that were ſubject to him, but thoſe that had only heard of him; who dreaded his approach unto them, and their falling into his victorious hands, and being made vaſſals to him: whom he would, he ſlew, and whom he would, he kept alive; he ruled in an arbitrary and deſpotic manner, and kept the power of life and death in his own hands; whom he would he put to death, tho' ever ſo innocent; and whom he would he preſerved from death, tho' ever ſo deſerving of it; he had no regard to juſtice, but acted according to his own will and pleaſure. Jacchiades renders the laſt clauſe, whom he would, he ſmote; but both the punctuation of the word, and the antitheſis in the text, require the ſenſe our verſion gives, and which is confirmed by Aben Ezra and Saadiah: and whom he would, he ſet up; and whom he would, he put down; according to his pleaſure he raiſed perſons from a low eſtate to great dignity, and put them into high poſts of honour and profit, as he did Daniel; and others he as much debaſed, turned them out of their places, and reduced them to the loweſt degree of diſgrace and poverty; and all according to his abſolute and irreſiſtible will, without giving any reaſon for what he did.

℣. 20. But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride, &c.] When his heart was elated with his ſucceſſes and victories, with the enlargement of his dominions, and with his grandeur and glory he had arrived unto; and his pride increaſed yet more, till he was ſtrengthened and hardened in it: or, to deal proudly[u]; and behave haughtily to God and man: or, to do wickedly, as Jarchi interprets it; for pride and haughtineſs of mind puts men, eſpecially great men, kings and monarchs, on doing things extremely vile and wicked: he was depoſed from his kingly throne; not by his nobles and ſubjects, but by the hand of God, which ſtruck him with madneſs, and made him unfit for government; obliged him to quit the throne, and to range among the beaſts of the field, as is afterwards obſerved: and they took his glory from him; the watchers, the angels, or the divine perſons that ordered the tree to be cut down to the roots, ch. iv. 14, 17, 23. or it may be rendered imperſonally, and his glory was taken from him[w]; his glory as a man, being deprived of his reaſon, and acting like a brute beaſt; and his glory as a king, which departed from him for a ſeaſon, while he was driven from men, from his royal palace and court, and lived among beaſts, and fed as they did, as follows:

℣. 21. And he was driven from the ſons of men, &c.] From their company, and from converſation with them; his madneſs was of that kind, that he choſe rather to be with beaſts than men; it drove him from men, and made him more deſirous of being with beaſts; or it was ſo intolerable, that his family, friends and courtiers were obliged to remove him from them, from his palace and court, and from all converſation with men, which he was incapable of thro' his frenzy and madneſs: and his heart was made like the beaſts; to have the ſame affections and deſires as they have; to crave the ſame things they did, and like what they liked, and live as they lived: or, he put his heart with the beaſts[x]; either Nebuchadnezzar himſelf choſe to be with them, and delighted in a beaſtly life; or God did it; he put ſuch an heart into him, or ſo diſpoſed it, that it became brutiſh; tho' to read the words imperſonally, as before, ſeems beſt: and his dwelling was with the wild aſſes; in a wilderneſs or field; or rather in ſome incloſed place, in one of his parks, where ſuch creatures were kept for hunting; among theſe he dwelt, as being like them, having loſt the uſe of his reaſon, and ſo was become ſtupid and ſottiſh as they: and they fed him with graſs like oxen; as they are fed, and which he choſe above any other food: and his body was wet with the dew of heaven; being without cloaths, and lying naked in ſome open place all night: till he knew that the moſt high God ruled in the kingdom of men, and that he appointed over it whomſoever he will; till he came to his ſenſes, and was brought to ſee and own the ſovereign dominion of the one, true and living God over all the kingdoms of the earth, and that they are at his diſpoſe; ſee ch. iv. 32.

℣. 22. And thou his ſon, O Belſhazzar! &c.] His grandſon; ſee the note on ℣. 1: haſt not humbled thine heart; ſo as to acknowledge the moſt high God, and his dependence on him; to own him as his ſovereign, by whom he held his crown and kingdom, and to whom he was accountable; but on the contrary, lifted up his heart in pride and haughtineſs againſt him: tho' thou kneweſt all this; either by the relation of others, his father, and mother, and others; or being an eye-witneſs of it himſelf; wherefore his ſin was the more aggravated, ſince he had had an example before him of pride being humbled in a very awful manner, and yet took no warning by it.

℣. 23. But haſt lifted up thyſelf againſt the Lord of heaven, &c.] Who made it, and dwells in it; from whence he beholds all the actions of the children of men, and will bring them to an account for them; and yet, tho' ſo high and great, ſuch was the inſolence of this king, that he dared to lift up himſelf againſt him, as if he was above him, and greater than he; and indeed ſo it may be rendered, above the Lord of heaven[x]; which ſhewed his great pride and vanity, his want of knowledge, both of himſelf, and of the true God. This name of God is the ſame with Beelſamen[y], by which the Phœnicians uſed to call him: and they have brought the veſſels of his houſe before thee; that is, his ſervants by his orders had brought the veſſels of the temple at Jeruſalem, which Nebuchadnezzar had took from thence, and ſet them upon his table for him and his company to drink out of; which is an inſtance of the pride of his heart, and of his daring boldneſs and impiety; ſee ℣. 2, 3: and thou and thy lords, thy wives and thy concubines have drank wine in them; even that very day or night: this Daniel had knowledge of by ſome means or another; and his intelligence was ſo good that he could with great certainty affirm it: and thou haſt praiſed the gods of ſilver and gold, of braſs, iron, wood, and ſtone; ſee ℣. 4: which ſee not, nor hear, nor know; no more than the ſeveral metals and materials of which they are made; and therefore it muſt be great madneſs and folly to praiſe ſuch as gods that are below men, and even brutes; have neither the ſenſe of animals, nor the knowledge of men; ſee Pſ. cxv. 4, 5, 6, 7: and the God in whoſe hand thy breath is; who gave it to him at firſt, and as yet continued it in him, and could take it away when he pleaſed: and whoſe are all thy ways; counſels and deſigns, works and actions; under whoſe direction and controul they all are; the events, iſſue and ſucceſs of which all depend upon him; ſee Jer. x. 23: him haſt thou not glorified; by owning him as the only true God; aſcribing all he was and had unto him, and giving due worſhip, adoration, and honour to him; but, on the contrary, ſetting up his idol-gods above him, and treating him and every thing belonging to him, with ignominy and contempt.

℣. 24. Then was the part of the hand ſent from him, &c.] That is, from God; being thus reproached and blaſphemed, at that very inſtant, and for that reaſon, becauſe the veſſels of his ſanctuary were profaned, and idol-gods were praiſed, and he deſpiſed; he cauſed part of an hand, the writing-fingers of it, to appear on the wall of the king's palace: and this writing was written; which was then upon the wall, and he points to it.

℣. 25. And this is the writing that was written, &c. They are ſuch and ſuch letters, and ſo to be read, as follows: MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN; which are Chaldee words, and may be literally rendered, he hath numbered, he hath numbered; that is, God hath certainly, perfectly and exactly numbered; he hath weighed, God hath weighed thee, Belſhazzar; and they divide the kingdom; that is, the Medes and Perſians, as appears from the following interpretation.

℣. 26. This is the interpretation of the thing, &c.] Or word[z]; for they might all ſeem as one word; or this is the ſenſe of the whole: MENE; as for this word, it ſignifies, God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finiſhed it; God had fixed the number of years, how long that monarchy ſhould laſt, which he was now at the head of, and which was foretold, Jer. xxv. 1, 11, 12. and xxvii. 7. and alſo the number of years that he ſhould reign over it; and both theſe numbers were now completed; for that very night Belſhazzar was ſlain, and the kingdom tranſlated to another people: and a dreadful thing it is to be numbered to the ſword, famine and peſtilence, or any ſore judgment of God for ſin, as ſometimes men are; ſo more eſpecially to be appointed to everlaſting wrath, and to be numbered among tranſgreſſors, among the devils and damned in hell.

℣. 27. TEKEL, &c.] As for the meaning of this word, and what it points at, it is this; thou art weighed in the balances; of juſtice and truth, in the holy righteous law of God; as gold, and jewels, and precious ſtones are weighed in the ſcales by the goldſmith and jeweller with great exactneſs, to know the worth of them: and art found wanting; found to be adulterated gold, reprobate ſilver, bad coin, a falſe ſtone; found to be a worthleſs man, a wicked prince, wanting the neceſſary qualifications of wiſdom, goodneſs, mercy, truth and juſtice. The ſcriptures of truth, the word of God, contained in the books of the Old and New Teſtament, are the balances of the ſanctuary, in which perſons, principles and practices are to be weighed; and ſad it is, where they are found light and wanting: men both of high and low degree, when put here, are lighter than vanity. The Phariſee or ſelf-righteous perſon, when weighed in the balance of God's law, which is holy, juſt and good, will be found wanting of that holineſs and righteouſneſs he pretends to, and appear to be an unholy and an unrighteous man; his righteouſneſs neither, for the matter of it, nor manner of performing it, being agreeable to that law, and ſo no righteouſneſs in the ſenſe of it, Deut. vi. 25. it being imperfect, and ſo leaves him to the curſe of it, Gal. iii. 10. and not being performed in a pure and ſpiritual manner that it requires, is rejected by it; and miſerable will be the caſe of ſuch a man at the day of judgment, when his works will be found wanting, and not anſwerable to the demands of a righteous law, and he without the wedding garment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and ſo naked and ſpeechleſs. The hypocrite and formal profeſſor, when weighed in the balance of the ſcripture, will be found wanting the true grace of God; his faith will appear to be feigned, and his hope groundleſs, and his love to be in word and in tongue only, and not at all to anſwer to the deſcription of true grace given in the word of God; and bad will it be with ſuch perſons at laſt, when at the bridegroom's coming they will be deſtitute of the oil of true and real grace; only have that which is counterfeit, and the mere lamp of an outward profeſſion, which will then ſtand them in no ſtead, or be of any avail unto them: in the ſame balances are the doctrines and principles of men to be weighed; and ſuch as are according to them, are ſolid and weighty, and are comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; but ſuch as are not, are light, and like wood, hay and ſtubble, which the fire of the word will reveal, try and burn up, not being able to ſtand againſt it; and if theſe are weighed in the balances, they will be found wanting of real truth and goodneſs, and be but as chaff to wheat; and what is the one to the other? there is no compariſon between them; and dreadful will be the caſe of falſe teachers, that make and teach an abomination, and a lie; and of thoſe that are given up to believe them, theſe will not be able to ſtand the trying hour of temptation, and much leſs the laſt and final judgment. Sad for preachers of the word to be found wanting in their miniſtry, and hearers to be wanting in their duty; not taking care neither what they hear, nor how they hear, or whether they put in practice the good they do hear.

℣. 28. Peres, &c.] The ſingular of Pharſin, ℣. 25. The ſenſe of this word is, thy kingdom is divided; which, tho' it conſiſted of various provinces united under Belſhazzar, now ſhould be broken and ſeparated from him: and given to the Medes and Perſians; to Darius the Mede, and to Cyrus the Perſian, who was a partner for a while with his uncle Darius in the government of the empire: there is an elegant paronomaſia in the words Peres and Perſians; and a grievous thing it is to ſinners, not only to have body and ſoul divided at death, but to be divided and ſeparated from God to all eternity; and to hear that ſentence, depart from me ye curſed, into everlaſting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

℣. 29. Then commanded Belſhazzar, &c.] As ſoon as he had heard the writing read and interpreted; inſtead of being full of wrath, as might have been expected, he orders the reward promiſed to be given, to ſhew he had a regard to his word and honour, as a king; and to ſecure his credit with his nobles and people; and perhaps he might not underſtand by Daniel's interpretation, that the deſtruction of him and his kingdom was ſo near at hand, as it was; or he might put this evil day far from him, and hope it might be prevented: and they clothed Daniel with ſcarlet; the king's ſervants by his orders: or, that they ſhould clothe Daniel with ſcarlet[a]; theſe were his orders; but whether executed, is not certain; probably not, ſince the king was ſlain the ſame night; and ſo the reſt of the clauſes may be read, and ſhould put a chain of gold about his neck, and ſhould make proclamation concerning him, that he ſhould be the third ruler in the kingdom; all which was the reward promiſed to him, that ſhould read and interpret the writing, ℣. 7, 16. but that this was done, the king's death being ſo ſudden, does not appear; and therefore it is needleſs to enquire the reaſons of Daniel's acceptance after his refuſal.

℣. 30. In the night was Belſhazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, ſlain.] Not by a ſervant of his own, as Jacchiades; or by an eunuch, one of his guards, as Saadiah and Joſeph ben Gorion[b]; but by Gadates and Gobryas, who led Cyrus's army up the river Euphrates into the city of Babylon, its courſe being turned; the inhabitants of which being revelling and rioting, and the gates open, theſe men went up to the king's palace; the doors of which being opened by the king's orders to know what was the matter, they ruſhed in, and finding him ſtanding up with his ſword drawn in his own defence, they fell upon him, and ſlew him, and all about him, as Xenophon[c] relates; and this was the ſame night the feaſt was, and the hand-writing was ſeen, read, and interpreted. This was after a reign of ſeventeen years; for ſo Joſephus ſays[d], that Baltaſar or Belſhazzar, in whoſe reign Babylon was taken, reigned ſeventeen years; and ſo many years are aſſigned to him in Ptolemy's canon; tho' the Jewiſh chronicle[e] allows him but three years, very wrongly, no more of his reign being mentioned in ſcripture; ſee ch. vii. 1. His death, according to biſhop Uſher[f], Mr. Whiſton[g], and Mr. Bedford[h], was in the year of the Julian period 4176, and before Chriſt 538. Dean Prideaux[i] places it in 539.

℣. 31. And Darius the Median took the kingdom, &c.] This was Cyaxares the ſon of Aſtyages, and uncle of Cyrus; he is called the Median, to diſtinguiſh him from another Darius the Perſian, that came after, Ezra iv. 5. the ſame took the kingdom of Babylon from Cyrus who conquered it; he took it with his conſent, being the ſenior prince, and his uncle. Darius reigned not long, but two years, and not alone, but Cyrus with him, tho' he is only mentioned. Xenophon[k] ſays, that Cyrus after he took Babylon, ſet out for Perſia, and took Media in his way; and ſaluting Cyaxares or Darius, ſaid that there was a choice houſe and court for him in Babylon, where he might go and live as in his own: being about threeſcore and two years old; and ſo was born in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar, the year in which Jechoniah was carried captive, 2 Kings xxiv. 12. thus God in his counſels and providence took care that a deliverer of his people ſhould be raiſed up and provided againſt the appointed time. Darius was older than Cyrus, as appears by ſeveral paſſages in Xenophon: in one place[l] Cyaxares or Darius ſays, "ſince I am preſent, and am elder than Cyrus, it is fit that I ſhould ſpeak firſt;" and in another place[m], Cyrus writing to him, ſays, "I give thee counſel, tho' I am the younger;" and by comparing this account of the age of Darius with a paſſage in Cicero, which gives the age of Cyrus, we learn how much older than he Darius was; for out of the books of Dionyſius the Perſian, he relates[n], that Cyrus dreaming he ſaw the ſun at his feet, which he three times endeavoured to catch and lay hold upon, but in vain, it ſliding from him; this the Magi ſaid, portended that he ſhould reign thirty years, and ſo he did; for he lived to be ſeventy years of age, and began to reign when he was forty; which, if reckoned from his reigning with his uncle, then he muſt be twenty-two years younger; or if from the time of his being ſole monarch, then the difference of age between them muſt be twenty-four years; tho' it ſhould be obſerved, that thoſe that make him to reign thirty years, begin his reign from the time of his being appointed commander in chief of the Medes and Perſians by Cyaxares[o], which was twenty-three years before he reigned alone, which was but ſeven years[p]; and this account makes but very little difference in their age; and indeed ſome[q] have taken them to be one and the ſame, their deſcent, age and ſucceſſion in the Babylonian empire agreeing.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter gives an account of Daniel's being caſt into the den of lions, and the cauſes of it, and the ſteps leading to it; and alſo of his wonderful deliverance out of it, and what followed upon that. It firſt relates how Daniel was made by Darius firſt preſident of the princes of the kingdom, which drew their envy upon him, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. and that theſe princes finding they could get no occaſion againſt him, but in religion, propoſed to the king to make a law forbidding prayer to any god for thirty days, which they got eſtabliſhed, ℣. 5—9. and Daniel breaking this law, is accuſed by them to the king, and the penalty, caſting into the den of lions, is inſiſted on to be executed, ℣. 10—13. which the king laboured to prevent, but in vain; and Daniel is caſt to the lions, to the great grief of the king, ℣. 14—18. who viſited the den the next morning, and to his great joy found Daniel alive, ℣. 19—23. upon which, by the law of retaliation, his accuſers, their wives and children were caſt into it, ℣. 24. and an edict was publiſhed by the king, commanding all in his dominions to fear and reverence the God of Daniel, ℣. 25—28.

℣. 1. It pleaſed Darius to ſet over the kingdom an hundred and twenty princes, &c.] This is the ſame Darius mentioned in the latter part of the preceding chapter; who, as ſoon as he took the kingdom of Babylon, divided it into an hundred and twenty provinces, as Jacchiades obſerves; as was the manner of the Medes and Perſians. So Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes divided the kingdom of Perſia into twenty provinces, and ſet governors over each, according to Herodotus [r]; to theſe hundred and twenty provinces, ſeven more were afterwards added thro' the victories of Cyrus and Cambyſes, and Darius Hyſtaſpes, Eſth. i. 1. Joſephus [s], thro' forgetfulneſs, makes theſe princes and provinces three hundred and ſixty: which ſhould be over the whole kingdom; or, in the whole kingdom [t]; in the ſeveral parts of it, and take care of all things relative to the civil government of it, both for the honour and advantage of the king, and the good of the ſubjects.

℣. 2. And over theſe, three preſidents, &c.] To whom the hundred and twenty princes were accountable for their conduct, and to whom the people might apply for redreſs of grievances, if oppreſſed; perhaps the whole empire was divided into three greater parts, and each part had forty provinces in it, and over it a preſident or deputy of the king; to whom the princes of each province gave in the account of what they received for the king, and what uſe they made of it: (of whom Daniel was the firſt); or one [u], who was now an old man, having been about ſeventy years in Babylon, and had had a large experience of the affairs of civil government, being advanced in the times of Nebuchadnezzar to high poſts; and very probably Darius had heard of the wiſdom of Daniel before he came to the kingdom, as well as the king of Tyre, Ezek. xxviii. 3. and might be informed of his prediction of Belſhazzar's death, and the change of the empire; and of Belſhazzar's promiſe to make him the third ruler in the kingdom; and he might alſo himſelf obſerve in him an uncommon ſagacity and fitneſs for buſineſs of this ſort. Joſephus [w] ſays, that Darius took Daniel with him into Media, and made him one of the three preſidents; and indeed no mention is made in this hiſtory of the nobles of Babylon, but only of the Medes and Perſians: that the princes might give account unto them, and the king ſhould have no damage; or loſs in his revenues, thro' the fraud and bad management of the princes of the provinces; ſince they might be diſcovered and checked by the preſidents, who were to audit their accounts: or, have no trouble [x]; in looking over and paſſing the accounts of the princes.

℣. 3. Then this Daniel was preferred above the preſidents and princes, &c.] Not only above the princes, but the preſidents, being the firſt of them, as before: or, he was victorious above them [y]; he got more credit and applauſe than they did, being more exact, diligent and laborious, faithful and conſcientious: becauſe an excellent ſpirit was in him; meaning not a ſpirit of grace, piety and religion, which the heathen king was no judge of, nor valued him for it, tho' it was in him; but a ſpirit of knowledge of civil affairs, and of prudence in managing them, and of integrity throughout the whole of his conduct: and the king thought to ſet him over the whole realm; or, wherefore the king thought [z], &c. becauſe there was ſuch a ſpirit in him, which ſo qualified him for public buſineſs, he began to think of aboliſhing his triumvirate of preſidents, and making Daniel his vice-roy over the whole empire, which very probably they had got ſome knowledge of; and this, as well as being above them, drew the envy of them on him, and put them upon the following ſcheme.

℣. 4. Then the preſidents and princes ſought to find occaſion againſt Daniel concerning the kingdom, &c.] Concerning the management of the affairs of the kingdom, he being prime-miniſter of ſtate; the preſidents and princes joined together in this enquiry; the princes, becauſe Daniel was ſo ſtrict and exact in looking into their accounts, that no fraudulent meaſures were taken to cheat the king of his revenue; and the preſidents, becauſe he was preferred above them: but they could find none occaſion, nor fault; or corruption [a], that he had been guilty of any male-adminiſtration, or any corrupt practices: foraſmuch as he was faithful, neither was there any error or fault found in him; no miſtake in his accounts; no blunder in his management of things; nothing done amiſs, neither wilfully, nor thro' ignorance, negligence or inadvertence; ſo faithful and upright, ſo prudent and diſcreet, ſo exact and careful, that the moſt watchful obſervers of him, and theſe envious and his moſt implacable enemies, could find no fault in him, or any thing, or the colour of it, to ground an accuſation upon.

℣. 5. Then ſaid theſe men, &c.] To one another: we ſhall not find any occaſion againſt this Daniel; whom they ſpeak of with great diſdain and contempt, calling him this Daniel, this fellow, tho' in the higheſt poſt in the kingdom: except we find it againſt him concerning the law of his God; about his religion; not that they thought he would be prevailed upon to break the law of his God in any reſpect; but they knew he was tenacious of the Jewiſh religion, and of all the laws, rites and ceremonies of it; if therefore they could get an act paſſed and ſigned by the king, which would any ways affect his religion, or any branch of it, or prohibit the performance of it for any time; they hoped to get an advantage of him, knowing that he would not on any conſideration forſake or neglect that; which being ſaid by his enemies, was greatly to his honour.

℣. 6. Then theſe preſidents and princes aſſembled together to the king, &c.] Having conſulted the matter, and agreed upon and formed a ſcheme among themſelves, and drawn up a bill or decree in form, ready to be ſigned by the king, whom they hoped to perſuade to it; and for that end they got together, and went in a body to him. The word [b] ſignifies to aſſemble in a tumultuous and noiſy way; they thought by their number and noiſe, their buſtle and bluſter, to carry their point. Ben Melech compares it with Pſ. ii. 2: and ſaid thus unto him, O king Darius, live for ever; this they ſaid as courtiers, profeſſing ſubjection to him, and affection for him, wiſhing him health, long life and happineſs.

℣. 7. All the preſidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counſellors, and the captains, &c.] There were but three preſidents, and Daniel was one of them, ſo that theſe all were but two; they made the moſt of it they could; and very probably not all and every one of the other officers mentioned were preſent; but they were willing to make their requeſt appear as general as they could, in order that it might have the greater weight with the king: have conſulted together to eſtabliſh a royal ſtatute, and to make a firm decree; that is, they had met together, and had drawn up a bill that might be paſſed into a law by having the royal aſſent, and be made ſure and firm by the king's ſigning it; which is as follows: that whoſoever ſhall aſk a petition of any god or man for thirty days, ſave of thee, O king, he ſhall be caſt into the den of lions; by which law, all invocation of their own gods was prohibited for a month, as well as of the living and true God; but this they ſtuck not at, provided they could gain their point againſt Daniel; and they were obliged to expreſs it in this general way to cover their deſigns; for had they mentioned a particular deity, as the God of the Jews, or the God of Daniel, their views would have been ſeen into by the king; and not only religious invocation is here forbidden, but all civil requeſts are prohibited: ſervants might not aſk any thing of their maſters, nor children of their parents, nor wives of their huſbands, nor one neighbour of another; for this ſeems not to be limited to aſking any thing of a man worſhipped as a god; tho' Saadiah ſays, there were ſome in Darius's kingdom that believed in, worſhipped and prayed to, a man; but all men are excluded, except Darius himſelf, of whom only any thing was to be aſked for thirty days; which was not only a deifying him, but exalting him above all gods and men; and ſuggeſting, as if it was in his power to anſwer all the exigencies of his ſubjects, and ſupply all their wants, many of which it was impoſſible for him to do. Joſephus [c] mentions this law in a different manner; as if the deſign of it was to give the people an intermiſſion from devotion for ſuch a time, and that they were neither to pray to Darius, nor any of the gods during it; whereas, the exception is expreſs, ſave of thee, O king. The ſanction or penalty of it is, caſting into the den of lions; the king's den of lions, as Jarchi, where his lions were kept; as it is uſual with princes: this very probably was a puniſhment common in the eaſtern nations, as caſting the chriſtians to the lions was uſual with the Romans.

℣. 8. Now, O king, eſtabliſh the decree, and ſign the writing, &c.] For they had not only agreed upon it among themſelves what to propoſe, as to the ſubſtance of it; but they had drawn it up in writing, ready to be ſigned, which they urge to have done immediately: that it be not changed, according to the law of the Medes and Perſians, which altereth not; when once ſigned by the king: mention being made of both the Medes and Perſians, ſhews that theſe two nations were now united in one government; that Darius and Cyrus were partners in the empire; and it is eaſy to account for it, why the Medes are mentioned firſt; becauſe Darius was the Mede, and Cyrus the Perſian; the one the uncle, the other the nephew; but afterwards, when a Perſian only was on the throne, then the Perſian is mentioned firſt, Eſth. i. 19.

℣. 9. Wherefore king Darius ſigned the writing and the decree.] Moved to it by the number and importunity of his principal men; and chiefly thro' affectation of deity, which this law gave him; and that he might have an opportunity of ingratiating himſelf into his new ſubjects by his munificence and liberality, not being aware of the ſnare laid for his favourite Daniel.

℣. 10. Now when Daniel knew that the writing was ſigned, &c.] This he knew, either by the relation of others, or by the public proclamation of it thro' the city; however, he did not know of it till it was ſigned, or otherwiſe he might have prevented it by applying to the king, in whom he had great intereſt; but now the thing was done, he did not ſolicit the abrogation of it, knowing it was in vain; nor did he go to the king with complaints againſt his enemies, ſhewing the deſign they had in it; but let things take their own courſe, he being determined to be found in his duty, be it as it would: he went into his houſe; he left the court at the proper time of prayer, and went to his own houſe to perform it; he did not, in defiance of this law, go to prayer in the court, or in the ſtreets, but retired home, as he was uſed to do: and his windows being opened; not to be ſeen of men, but that he might have a clear view of the heavens, where his God dwelt, to whom he prayed, and be the more affected with the conſideration of his greatneſs and glory: in his chamber toward Jeruſalem; it was not in the lower part of the houſe, nor on the top of the houſe, in either of which he might be more eaſily ſeen; but in his chamber, where he was wont to retire, the windows of which were opened towards Jeruſalem; not towards the king's palace, as if he prayed to him, and ſo eluded the decree; nor towards the eaſt, as the heathens did; but towards Jeruſalem, which lay to the ſouth of Babylon; and that either becauſe of his remembrance of that city, his affection to it, and concern for its re-edification; or having ſome reſpect to the words of Solomon, 1 Kings viii. 33, &c. and ſo, according to the Jewiſh writers, it was the cuſtom of their people. Ben Gerſom, on the above place, ſays, that though they did not pray within the temple, yet they prayed, turning themſelves towards it, as much as poſſibly they could; and even when it was deſtroyed, as now, yet they in praying turned to the place where it had ſtood, as Saadiah, Aben Ezra, and Jarchi obſerve: and chiefly Daniel did this, becauſe the temple was a type of Chriſt, through whom the perſons and prayers of the ſaints are acceptable unto God: he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed; kneeling is a prayer-geſture, a token of reverence and humility; this was done three times a day, morning, noon, and evening; ſee Pſ. lv. 17. in the morning, before he went out about the king's buſineſs; at noon, when he returned home to dinner; and at evening, when all his work was done, and he was about to retire to bed; the hours of prayer with the Jews, ſeem to have been the third, ſixth, and ninth; that is, at nine in the morning, twelve at noon, and three in the afternoon; ſee Acts ii. 1, 15. and iii. 1. and x. 9: and gave thanks before his God; for the benefits he daily received from him: or, he confeſſed before him[d]; the ſins he had been guilty of, and owned the favours he partook of: as he aforetime did; as it had been his cuſtom from his youth upward, and therefore would not omit it now, on account of this edict.

[b] הרגשו tumultuarie convenerunt, Montanus; cum tumultu accurrerent, De Dieu; convenerunt gregatim & cum ſtrepitu, Gejerus.

[c] Antiq. l. 10. c. 11. §. 5.

℣. 11. Then theſe men aſſembled, &c.] Gathered together, and went in a body to Daniel's houſe; knowing his times of prayer, and where, and in what manner he uſed to pray, to ſee if they could find him at it as aforetime; that ſo they might have to accuſe him with it. Saadiah ſays, they found a girl, and aſked her what Daniel was doing? ſhe told them, that Daniel was on his knees praying to his God in his chamber; immediately they went, and found as ſhe had ſaid: and found Daniel praying and making ſupplication before his God; they went into his houſe, and up into his chamber, the doors not being locked, pretending perhaps buſineſs with him, and ſaw him at his devotions; ſo that they were able, upon their own knowledge, to bring in an accuſation againſt him for breach of the king's law, and prove it.

℣. 12. Then they came near, &c.] They went immediately from Daniel's houſe to the king's palace, and into the king's preſence; which they could do either by virtue of their offices, or being admitted by the proper officer in waiting: and ſpake before the king, concerning the king's decree; at firſt they ſaid nothing about Daniel, but about the decree, to get it recognized, and afreſh ratified and confirmed; leſt, under ſome pretence or another, the king ſhould change it: haſt thou not ſigned a decree, that every man that ſhall aſk a petition of any god or man within thirty days, ſave of thee, O king, ſhall be caſt into the den of lions? they don't ſay peremptorily that he had ſigned ſuch a decree, but put the queſtion to him, that they might have it affirmed by himſelf: the king anſwered and ſaid, the thing is true, according to the law of the Medes and Perſians, which altereth not; it is true that ſuch a decree is made and ſigned, and it is an unalterable one; ſuch as is every eſtabliſhed and ſigned decree of the Medes and Perſians: it is as if he had ſaid, it is very true what you put me in mind of, and I will never recede from it, or nullify and make it void.

℣. 13. Then anſwered they, and ſpake before the king, &c.] Having obtained what they deſired, a ratification of the decree, they open the whole affair to him they came about: that Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee, O king; they call him that Daniel, by way of contempt; and to make him the more deſpicable, repreſent him not only as a foreigner, but a captive, and therefore ought to have been humble and obedient, as Jacchiades obſerves; and a Jewiſh captive too, of all people the moſt odious; and tho' he had been raiſed from a low eſtate to great honour and dignity, yet ſuch was his ingratitude, that he made no account of the king, nor of his orders, but deſpiſed him: nor the decree that thou haſt ſigned; the decree concerning making any petition to God or man for a month, which was ſigned with the king's own hand, and was firm and ſtable; and of which Daniel could not be ignorant, and therefore wilfully, and in a contemptuous manner, acted contrary to it: but maketh his petition three times a day; to whom they ſay not, whether to God or man; but in this general way accuſe him, which they thought beſt and ſafeſt; they feared, had they mentioned his God, ſomething might have been ſaid in his favour to excuſe him; and to aggravate the matter, they obſerve the frequency of his doing it, three times; ſo that it was not a ſingle fact he is charged with, but what he had repeated again and again.

℣. 14. Then the king, when he heard theſe words, was ſore diſpleaſed with himſelf, &c.] Or, at it[e]; or, with him; with Daniel, not ſo much for what he had done, but that he had not done it with more caution, or more privately, that it might not have been known: or rather, as we render it, with himſelf, that he ſhould ſo raſhly ſign the decree, without conſidering the conſequences of it; for he now found that he was circumvented by his princes, and that their deſign was not his honour and glory, but the deſtruction of Daniel: or the ſenſe in general is, that what he heard was very diſagreeable, afflictive, and diſtreſſing to him: and ſet his heart on Daniel to deliver him; he reſolved, if poſſible, to do it; he applied his mind to it; he turned his thoughts wholly that way, and contrived all ways and means to effect it: R. Mattathiah, in Saadiah, interprets the phraſe of his offering money as a ranſom for his life: and he laboured till the going down of the ſun to ſave him; from the will of the princes, and from the jaws of the lions: very probably it was early in the morning theſe princes found Daniel at prayer, who went immediately to the king with their accuſation; ſo that he was all day labouring with all his might and main to find out ways and means to ſave his darling favourite; he ſtudied to put ſuch a ſenſe upon his decree, that it might not reach Daniel's caſe; he ſtrove to make the princes eaſy, and to perſuade them to drop the affair, and not inſiſt on the execution of the decree.

[d] מודא confitebatur, V. L. Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Calvin, Cocceius. [e] עלוהי ſuper eo, Montanus; ſuper ipſum, De Dieu.

℣. 15. Then theſe men aſſembled to the king, &c.] Who had left him for a while to conſider of the caſe; or they departed to conſult among themſelves about the king's propoſals to them; or went home to their own houſes to dinner, and returned in a body; they came in a tumultuous way, as the word ſignifies; ſee ℣. 6. they cluttered about him, and were very rude and noiſy, and addreſſed him in an authoritative and threatening manner: and ſaid unto the king, know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Perſians is, that no decree nor ſtatute which the king eſtabliſheth may be changed; they perceived that he was deſirous of altering or nullifying the decree he had made, which to have done would have been to his reputation; and to this they oppoſe a fundamental law of the realm, that no decree ratified by the king could be altered; to attempt to do this would be a breach of their conſtitution, and of dangerous conſequence; it would leſſen the king's authority, and be a means of his ſubjects riſing up in rebellion againſt him: for that there was ſuch a law, the king knew as well as they; nor do they ſay this by way of information, but to urge him to the execution of the decree; and there is no doubt to be made that there was ſuch a fundamental law, tho' a fooliſh one, and which afterwards continued, Eſth. i. 19. but the inſtance which ſome writers give out of Diodorus Siculus [f], concerning Charidemus, a general of the Athenians, whom another Darius king of Perſia condemned to die for the freedom of ſpeech he uſed with him, and afterwards repented of it, but in vain; for his royal power, as the hiſtorian obſerves, could not make that undone which was done; this is no proof of the immutability of the laws of the Perſians, ſince the king's repentance was after the general's death, which then was too late.

℣. 16. Then the king commanded, &c.] Being over-awed by his princes, and fearing they would conſpire againſt him, and ſtir up the people to rebel; and conſulting his own credit, leſt he ſhould be thought fickle and inconſtant; he ordered the decree to be put in execution againſt Daniel, and delivered his favourite into their hands: and they brought Daniel, and caſt him into the den of lions; not the princes, but proper officers employed by them: according to the additions to this book of Daniel, there were ſeven lions in this den, ch. xiv. 31. but according to Joſeph ben Gorion [g], there were ten, who uſed to devour ten ſheep, and as many human bodies, every day; but this day they had no food, and eat nothing, that they might be more greedy, and devour Daniel the ſooner: now the king ſpake and ſaid unto Daniel; being brought into his preſence in his palace, before he was caſt into the den; or at the mouth of the den, whither the king accompanied him: thy God whom thou ſerveſt continually, he will deliver thee; he calls the Lord, Daniel's God, not his own, as he was not, he ſerved other gods; yet he ſuggeſts that Daniel was right in ſerving him continually, in praying to him daily, the very thing for which he was caſt to the lions; and expreſſes his confidence that his God he ſerved would deliver him from being devoured by them; which he might conclude, from the innocency, integrity, and faithfulneſs of Daniel, and from his being ſuch a peculiar favourite of God, as to be indulged with the knowledge of future things; and perhaps he might have heard of the deliverance of his three companions from the fiery furnace: tho' the words may be rendered, as they are by ſome, as a wiſh or prayer, may thy God, &c. deliver thee [h]; I cannot, I pray he would; it is my hearty deſire that ſo it might be.

℣. 17. And a ſtone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den, &c.] Not an heap of ſtones, but a ſingle one, a very large one, ſufficient to ſtop up the mouth of the den, that nothing might enter in at it, or be caſt into it: this ſtone was brought by proper perſons, and a ſufficient number of them, according to the order of the king, or his princes, or both; for what Jarchi ſays, of there being no ſtones in Babylon, only bricks, and of the angels bringing this ſtone out of the land of Iſrael, is all fabulous: but for what end it ſhould be brought and laid, is not eaſy to ſay; if it was laid here by the order of the princes, it could not ſurely be to keep any of his friends from going in to deliver him, for who would venture himſelf there? nor to keep Daniel in it, ſince it might be concluded, that as ſoon as ever he was caſt in, he would be ſeized upon by the lions, and devoured at once; unleſs it can be thought, that theſe men ſaw, that when he was thrown in, the lions did not meddle with him; which they might attribute to their having been lately fed, and therefore that he might be reſerved till they were hungry, they did this: if it was by the order of the king, which is very likely, the reaſon might be, he believed, or at leaſt hoped, that God would deliver him from the lions; but leſt his enemies ſeeing this, ſhould throw in ſtones or arrows, and kill him, the mouth of the den was ſtopped, ſo Jarchi and Saadiah: no doubt but this was ſo ordered by the providence of God, as well as the ſealing of it, that the miracle of the deliverance might appear the more manifeſt: and the king ſealed it with his own ſignet, and with the ſignet of the lords; that none might dare to remove it; ſo the ſtone that was laid at the door of Chriſt's ſepulchre was ſealed with a ſeal, Matt. xxvii. 66. the reaſon of ſealing it follows, that the purpoſe might not be changed concerning Daniel; the view the lords had in it was, that the king might not change the ſentence paſt on Daniel, or take any methods to deliver him; and the view the king had in it might be, that ſhould he be ſaved from the lions, as he hoped he would, that no other ſentence might paſs upon him, or he be delivered to any other kind of death.

℣. 18. Then the king went to his palace, &c.] After he had accompanied Daniel to the den, and he was caſt into it, the ſtone was laid to the mouth of it, and that ſealed; this was after ſun-ſet, for he had laboured till then to ſerve him, ℣. 14. perhaps it was late at night: and paſſed the night faſting; vexed for what he had done, in ſigning the decree; fretting becauſe he could not ſave Daniel, and his heart full of grief for him, and ſo had no ſtomach to eat; went to bed without his ſupper, lay all night faſting, and would not eat a bit, nor drink a drop of any thing: neither were inſtruments of muſic brought before him; as uſed to be after ſupper, and played upon; his heart was too full, and his mind and thoughts ſo intent on Daniel's caſe, that he could not liſten to muſic, or bear the ſound of it. Jarchi interprets it a table, to ſit down at, and eat, being furniſhed and well ſerved, as was uſual; but this is implied in the preceding clauſe. Aben Ezra, Saadiah, and Jacchiades, explain it by ſongs and muſical inſtruments, harps and pſalteries; and Saadiah adds, girls to ſing and dance. De Dieu, from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, thinks, that incenſe is meant, which was uſed at feaſts, and in the palaces of princes. And his ſleep went from him; whilſt he was up he could take no pleaſure in eating and drinking, and hearing muſic; and when he was in bed, he could not ſleep for thinking what he had done, and what was the caſe of Daniel.

[h] ישזבנך liberet te, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Grotius, Cocceius, Michaelis.

℣. 19. Then the king aroſe very early in the morning, &c.] Or, in the morning with light[i]; as ſoon as ever light appeared, or the day broke: the word for morning is doubled, and one of the letters in it is larger than uſual; and all which denote not only his very great earlineſs in riſing, but his earneſtneſs and ſolicitude for Daniel, to know whether he was alive or no: and went in haſte unto the den of lions; he did not ſend a ſervant, but went in perſon, and with as much expedition as poſſible, tho' a king, and an old man; this ſhows the great love and ſtrong affection he had for Daniel, and his concern for his good and welfare.

℣. 20. And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel, &c.] Expreſſing grief and ſorrow his heart was full of; it was rather like howling than ſpeaking; thus he cried before he ſaw Daniel, or heard him ſpeak: when he was near to the den[k], as it may be rendered; and he was between hope and fear about Daniel's ſafety; when within ſight of the den, and hearing of Daniel, ſhould he be alive to ſpeak: but when he came nearer and ſaw him, then the king ſpake and ſaid to Daniel, O Daniel, ſervant of the living God; art thou alive? this is a plain caſe, that the God whom thou ſerveſt is the living God, ſince he has ſaved thee; and that thou art a true and faithful ſervant of his, ſeeing he has wrought ſuch deliverance for thee: is thy God whom thou ſerveſt continually, able to deliver thee from the lions? has he made it to appear that he is able to deliver from them? has he really done the thing? he could ſcarcely believe for joy, being filled with amazement; for theſe words are not to be conſidered as expreſſive of any doubt or heſitation he had of the power of God to ſave him; for he had declared he had before, yea his confidence that he would deliver him; but of his wonder and admiration at it, the thing being ſo extraordinary and amazing.

℣. 21. Then ſaid Daniel unto the king, &c.] Whoſe voice he knew, tho' the tone of it was ſo much altered: O king, live for ever; he does not reproach him for delivering him into the hands of his enemies, and ſuffering him to be caſt into that place, which he might have prevented, had he had more reſolution; he knew it was done with reluctance, tho' with weakneſs; which he does not upbraid him with, but freely forgives him, and wiſhes him health, long life, and proſperity.

℣. 22. My God hath ſent his angel, &c.] Daniel takes up the king's expreſſion, and confirms it; he aſſerts God to be his God, of which he had given him a proof in ſending his angel to him that night; either one of the miniſtring ſpirits about him, or the angel of the covenant, the ſame with him, ſaid to be like the Son of God, that was ſeen in the fiery furnace, even the Meſſiah in human form: and hath ſhut the lions mouths, that they have not hurt me; by taking away hunger from them, or by ſtriking terror into them; ſo that they had either no inclination to hurt him, or were afraid of him: foraſmuch as before him innocency was found in me; either before God, or before his angel, Daniel appeared to be an innocent and righteous perſon; therefore the Lord pleaded his cauſe, and made it to appear that he was juſt, and his cauſe good; for this is not to be underſtood of the merits of his works, and the cauſality of them to juſtify and ſave; for here he is ſpeaking not of the righteouſneſs of his perſon, but of his cauſe, and not of eternal, but temporal ſalvation: and alſo before thee, O king, have I done no hurt; either to his perſon or government; nothing that was criminal and ſinful, but what was juſt and right, ſerving daily his God; and this was plain to the king, what he knew and owned; and tho' he had acted contrary to the decree the lords had craftily obtained, yet it was not out of diſreſpect to the king, but in obedience to his God; and in doing of which he had done nothing prejudicial to the king's intereſt.

℣. 23. Then was the king exceeding glad for him, &c.] For Daniel, becauſe of his ſafety, becauſe he was alive, and in health, and unhurt; and the ſpeech he made was very acceptable to him, agreeable to his ſentiments, and which he was ſatisfied was juſt and true: or with, or for himſelf[l]; being now eaſed of a guilty and diſtracted conſcience: and commanded that they ſhould take Daniel up out of the den; that is, he ordered thoſe that were with him, his ſervants that attended him, either to roll away the ſtone, and ſo let him out; or to let down ropes, and draw him out, or ladders by which he might aſcend; for one would think it would not have been ſafe for them to have gone down into it, to take him up: theſe orders the king gave without the conſent of his lords, being animated to it by the miracle wrought: ſo Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him; no bruiſe by throwing him into the den, no wound was made by the lions, or his fleſh in the leaſt torn by them: becauſe he believed in his God; ſerved and worſhipped him; of which ſervice and worſhip faith is a particular branch, and is put for the whole, and without which it is not pleaſing and acceptable to God; he truſted in the Lord, he committed himſelf to his power and providence; he left himſelf wholly in the hands of the Lord, to diſpoſe of him, whether for life or death, as he pleaſed; he believed he was able to deliver him, but he was not anxious about it: for this ſeems not to deſign any particular act of faith, with reſpect to this miracle wrought for him, but his general truſt and confidence in God; and the apoſtle ſeems to have reference to this, when among other things he aſcribes to faith the ſtopping of the mouths of lions, Heb. xi. 33.

℣. 24. And the king commanded, and they brought thoſe men which had accuſed Daniel, &c.] Not all the hundred and twenty princes, and the two preſidents; but the chief of them, who were moſt buſy in getting the decree ſigned; watched Daniel's houſe, and what he did there; brought the charge againſt him to the king, and were moſt ſolicitous and urgent to have the decree put in execution againſt him: and they caſt them into the den of lions; lions; the ſervants of the king, who were ſent to fetch them, and who brought theſe by the king's orders, caſt them into the ſame den of lions that Daniel had been in: thus often the pit wicked men dig for others, they fall into themſelves; ſo Haman was hanged on the gallows he prepared for Mordecai: them, their children, and their wives; which might be according to the laws of this monarchy in capital offences, relating to affairs of ſtate, as this was for an accuſation of a prime-miniſter of ſtate, to take away his life; tho' ſuch things were common with arbitrary princes, for the terror of others; ſo Haman and his ſons were hanged up by Ahaſuerus: this may ſeem cruel and inhuman, tho' it might be, that the wives and children of theſe men adviſed them to do what they did, and were encouragers and approvers of it. Joſephus[m] relates, that the enemies of Daniel, when they ſaw no hurt came to him, would not aſcribe it to the providence of God, but to the lions being full of food; upon which the king ordered much meat to be given them, and then the men to be caſt in to them, to ſee whether becauſe of their fulneſs they would come unto them or no: and the lions had the maſtery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den; the lions ſeized them at once; and tho' they did all they could to defend themſelves, fighting with them; yet the lions were too powerful for them, and overcame them, and not only tore off their fleſh, but broke their bones in pieces, and that as they were falling, before they came to the bottom, or the lower part of the den; this was a plain proof that it was not thro' fulneſs, or want of appetite, that the lions did not fall upon Daniel and devour him: this affair happened in the firſt year of Darius, which according to Biſhop Uſher[n], and Dean Prideaux[o], and Mr. Whiſton[p], was in the year of the Julian period 4176, and before Chriſt 538; Mr. Bedford[q] places it in 537.

℣. 25. Then king Darius, &c.] Being thoroughly convinced of the miracle, and of the powerful interpoſition of divine providence in it, and of the omnipotence of God, and of his concern in the government of the world; that all might be acquainted with the ſame, wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; he being at the head of the Babyloniſh monarchy, which included many nations and people of various languages; and which was increaſed, and ſtill increaſing, by the victories of Cyrus, who was partner with him in the empire; ſee ch. iii. 4, 29: peace be multiplied unto you; an increaſe of all kind of proſperity; an uſual ſalutation or wiſh with the eaſtern people.

℣. 26. I make a decree, that in every dominion of my kingdom, &c.] In every province of his large empire; this explains who are meant by all people, nations, &c. before-mentioned; namely, ſuch as were within his dominions; for to no other could his decree reach: this decree is very different from that he had made a few days before, forbidding any man to aſk any thing of any god or man for the ſpace of a month; but now his order is, that men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel; that they would ſerve with fear and trembling, and reverence and adore the God that Daniel ſerved and worſhipped; and who manifeſtly appeared to be his God, and to be the true God, by his wonderful deliverance of him: for he is the living God, and ſtedfaſt for ever; that has life in himſelf, and is the author and giver of life to others, and ever remains ſo, without any variation or ſhadow of turning; he is everlaſting and unchangeable, permanent and immutable in his nature; ſteady and ſtedfaſt in his purpoſes and promiſes, in his conduct in the government of the world; and in the courſe of his providences: and his kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed, and his dominion ſhall be even unto the end; unto the end of time; other kingdoms will be deſtroyed, but his will not; all other rule, dominion, and authority will be at an end, but his will continue for ever; his kingdom is an everlaſting one: this doctrine Darius had learned from Daniel, as Nebuchadnezzar before had done; ſee ch. ii. 44. and iv. 3.

℣. 27. He delivereth and reſcueth, &c.] As he did the three companions of Daniel from the fiery furnace, and now Daniel himſelf from the lions den: and he worketh ſigns and wonders in heaven, and in earth; which are out of the common courſe of nature, and not according to the laws of it; ſuch as hindering the natural force of fire from burning, as in the caſe of the three children; and ſtopping the mouths of lions from devouring Daniel, as follows: who hath delivered Daniel from the power of the lions; or, from the hand[r] of them; from their deſtroying paws, and devouring jaws; which was nothing leſs than a miracle, and a proof of the divine omnipotence, and of his power of doing wonders.

℣. 28. So this Daniel proſpered in the reign of Darius, &c.] This Daniel, of whom ſo much has been ſaid in all the preceding chapters, and who had been ſo lately and ſo wonderfully delivered from the lions den, the ſame flouriſhed throughout the reign of Darius the Mede; continued a favourite with the king; retained his honour and dignity; and kept his poſts and places of truſt and profit. Darius the Mede reigned two years; tho' Jarchi ſays he reigned but one, and was ſlain in war; for which he refers to Joſeph ben Gorion, who has not a word of it. And in the reign of Cyrus the Perſian; who, as Jacchiades ſays, was the ſon-in-law of Darius, and inherited the kingdom after him; which is true, for he married the daughter of Cyaxares or Darius, who was his uncle, and ſucceeded him as ſole monarch of the empire: he reigned with him the two years he had the government of the Babyloniſh monarchy; and when he died, it ſolely devolved on him, who reigned ſeven years after, as Xenophon[s] relates; but the canon of Ptolemy aſcribes nine years to his reign, which includes the two years he was partner with Darius. Daniel was in the ſame favour with this prince as the former, who in the firſt year of his reign proclaimed liberty to the Jews, to return to their country, and build their temple; whether Daniel lived throughout his reign is not certain; he was alive in the third year of it, as appears from ch. x. 1. ſome take Darius and Cyrus to be one and the ſame perſon, and render this laſt clauſe as explanative of the former, even or that is, in the reign of Cyrus the Perſian[t].

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter contains Daniel's viſion of the four beaſts. The time, place, manner, writing, and declaration of the viſion, ℣. 1. the riſe of the beaſts, and the deſcription of them, ℣. 2—8. the judgment of God upon them, eſpecially the laſt, and the delivery of univerſal monarchy to his Son, ℣. 9—14. the interpretation of the viſion at the requeſt of Daniel, being greatly affected with it, ℣. 15—18. a particular enquiry of his about the fourth beaſt, concerning which a full account is given, ℣. 19—27. all which cauſed in him many thoughts of heart, and reflections of mind, ℣. 28.

℣. 1. In the firſt year of Belſhazzar king of Babylon, &c.] Daniel having finiſhed the hiſtorical part of his book, and committed to writing what was neceſſary concerning himſelf and his three companions, and concerning Nebuchadnezzar, Belſhazzar, and Darius the Mede; proceeds to the prophetic part, and goes back to the firſt year of Belſhazzar's reign, ſeventeen years before his death, and the fall of the Babyloniſh monarchy laſt mentioned; for ſo long Belſhazzar reigned, according to Joſeſephus[u]; and with which agrees the canon of Ptolemy, who aſcribes ſo many years to the reign of Nabonadius, the ſame with Belſhazzar: he began to reign, according to Biſhop Uſher[w], Dean Prideaux[x], and Mr. Whiſton[y], in the year of the Julian period 4159, and before Chriſt 555; and in the firſt year of his reign, Daniel had the dream of the four monarchies, as follows: Daniel had a dream; as Nebuchadnezzar before had, concerning the ſame things, the four monarchies of the world, and the kingdom of Chriſt, only repreſented in a different manner: or, ſaw a dream[z]; in his dream he had a viſion, and objects were preſented to his fancy as if he really ſaw them, as follows: and viſions of his head came upon his bed; as he lay upon his bed, and deep ſleep was fallen on him, things in a viſionary way were exhibited to him, very wonderful and ſurprizing, and which made ſtrong impreſſions upon him: then he wrote the dream; awaking out of his ſleep, and perfectly remembring the dream he had dreamt, and recollecting the ſeveral things he had ſeen in it; that they might not be loſt, but tranſmitted to poſterity for their uſe and benefit, he immediately committed them to writing: and told the ſum of the matters; the whole of what he had dreamt and ſeen; or however the ſum and ſubſtance of it, the more principal parts of it, the moſt intereſting things in it, and of the greateſt importance: when it was day-light, and he roſe from his bed, and went out of his chamber, he called his friends together, and told them by word of mouth what he had ſeen in his dream the night paſt; or read what he had written of it, which was as follows:

℣. 2. Daniel ſpake and ſaid, I ſaw in my viſion by night, &c.] He declared he had had a viſion by night, and this was the ſubſtance of it: and behold the four winds of the heaven ſtrove upon the great ſea; the eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth winds, broke out from their ſeveral quarters, and ruſhed in upon the great ſea; either the Mediterranean, ſo called in compariſon of the ſea of Sodom, and the ſea of Tiberias in Judea; or upon the waters of the main ocean, and raiſed up its waves, and ſeemed as it were to be ſtriving and fighting with them, and put them into a ſtrange agitation; by which may be meant the whole world, and the kingdoms and nations of it, becauſe of its largeneſs, inconſtancy, inſtability, and diſquietude; ſee Rev. xvii. 15. Iſ. lvii. 20. and by the four winds ſome underſtand the angels, either good or bad, concerned in the affairs of providence on earth, either by divine order or permiſſion; or rather the kings of the earth raiſing commotions in it, ſtriving and fighting with one another, either to defend or enlarge their dominions; and which have been the means in providence of the riſing up of ſome great ſtate or monarchy, as after appears.

℣. 3. And four great beaſts came up from the ſea, &c.] Which are afterwards interpreted of four kings or kingdoms, ℣. 17. which roſe up in the world, not at once, but ſucceſſively, and out of the ſea or world, thro' the commotions and agitations of it; and theſe are the four monarchies, Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian, and Roman; compared to beaſts, becauſe of the rapine and violence, cruelty, oppreſſion, and tyranny, by which they were obtained, ſet up, ſupported, and maintained; and to great ones, being not like ſingle ſeparate kingdoms, as the kingdom of Iſrael, and the like, but conſiſting of many kingdoms and nations, and ſo like beaſts of an enormous ſize: diverſe one from another; in their ſituation, language, manner, ſtrength, and power; hence expreſſed by divers ſorts of beaſts, as the lion, bear, leopard, &c. as in Nebuchadnezzar's dream by different metals, gold, ſilver, braſs, and iron.

℣. 4. The firſt was like a lion, &c.] That which roſe up firſt, the kingdom of the Babylonians, as the Syriac verſion expreſſes it; or the Aſſyrian monarchy, founded by Nimrod, increaſed by the Aſſyrians, and brought to its height under Nebuchadnezzar by the Babylonians and Chaldeans; this is ſaid to be like a lion for its ſtrength and power, for its greatneſs, dignity, and majeſty; the ſame with the head of gold in Nebuchadnezzar's dream; ſee Jer. iv. 7. and l. 17: and had eagles wings; denoting the celerity and ſwiftneſs with which Nebuchadnezzar ran, or rather flew, over ſeveral kingdoms and countries, and added them to his empire; ſee Jer. iv. 13. and xlviii. 40. and xlix. 22: and I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked; it was retarded and ſtopped in its conqueſts; it could fly no farther, nor make any new acquiſitions; yea, it was deplumed and ſtripped of ſome of its dominions, the Medes and Perſians falling off, and making war with it: and it was lifted up from the earth; or, with which it was lifted up from the earth[a]; with which wings it raiſed itſelf up, and lifted itſelf above other kingdoms and nations; but now were plucked, and could not ſoar aloft as formerly; its glory and majeſty, power and ſtrength, were leſſened, whole provinces revolting, as in the times of Evil-merodach, Nerigliſſar and Belſhazzar: and made ſtand upon the feet as a man; it did not fly like an eagle as before, and over-run countries, and waſte them; or go upon all four, as a beaſt; but ſtood on its feet, its two hinder legs, like a man; ſignifying, that it abated in the reigns of the above princes, of its ſtrength and fierceneſs, and became more mild and tractable, and was reduced within bounds like other kingdoms: and a man's heart was given to it; inſtead of a lion-like heart, that was bold and intrepid, and feared nothing, it became weak and fearful, and timorous like the heart of man, eſpecially in Belſhazzar's time; not only when he ſaw the hand-writing on the wall, to which Jacchiades refers this; but when he was ſo fearful of Cyrus that he ſhut himſelf up in Babylon, and durſt not ſtir out to give him battel, as Xenophon [b] relates; and when the city was taken, the Babylonians were obliged to deliver up their arms, employ themſelves in tilling their fields, and to pay tribute to the Perſians, and always ſalute them as their lords and maſters, as the ſame hiſtorian [c] ſays; ſee Jer. li. 30.

℣. 5. And behold, another beaſt, a ſecond, like to a bear, &c.] Another monarchy, and which ſucceeded the former, and roſe up upon the ruins of it, the Medo-Perſian monarchy; and ſo the Syriac verſion prefixes to this verſe by way of explanation, "the kingdom of the Medes;" like to a bear, leſs generous and ſtrong than the lion; more rough and uncivil, but equally cruel and voracious; which deſcribes the Medes and Perſians as a fierce and cruel people, and leſs poliſhed, and more uncivilized, than the Chaldeans; and anſwers to the ſilver breaſts and arms in Nebuchadnezzar's dream; ſee Iſ. xiii. 17, 18. Jer. li. 27, 28: and it raiſed up itſelf on one ſide; either of the lion, the firſt beaſt it deſtroyed; or rather on one ſide of itſelf, on the ſide of Perſia; from whence Cyrus came, who was the principal inſtrument of raiſing this empire to the pitch it was brought unto. Some render it, and it raiſed up one government [d]; one empire out of many nations and kingdoms it ſubdued: and it had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it; that is, three ribs covered with fleſh, which it was devouring; the bear being very voracious, and a great fleſh-eater: theſe, according to ſome, ſignify three kings that followed Darius the Mede; Cyrus, Ahaſuerus, and Darius; ſo Jarchi and Jacchiades; and according to Jerom, three kingdoms, the Babylonian, Median, and Perſian: but neither of theſe kings nor kingdoms can be ſaid to be in its mouth, and between its teeth, as ground and devoured by it, unleſs the Babylonian; wherefore it is better interpreted by others, as Theodoret, the three parts of the world it conquered, weſtward, northward and ſouthward, ch. viii. 4. tho' it is beſt of all, with Sir Iſaac Newton and biſhop Chandler, to underſtand by them Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt; which countries were ground and oppreſſed by the Medes and Perſians, as the ribs of any creature are ground in the mouth of a bear: and they ſaid thus unto it, ariſe, devour much fleſh; which Jerom refers to Haman's orders to deſtroy the Jews in the times of Ahaſuerus; but it is much better applied by others to Cyaxares or Darius ſending for Cyrus to take upon him the command of his army; and to the Hyrcanians, Gobryas, and others inviting him to avenge them on the Babylonians, promiſing to join and aſſiſt him, as Xenophon [e] relates: or rather this is to be interpreted of the divine will, and of the conduct of providence by means of angels ſtirring up the ſpirit of Cyrus, and of the Medes and Perſians, to attack and ſubdue many nations, and particularly the Babylonians, and fill themſelves with their wealth and ſubſtance; hence they are ſtiled the Lord's ſanctified, whom he ordered and called to ſuch ſervice; ſee Iſ. xiii. 3. and xxi. 2.

℣. 6. After this, I beheld, and lo, another like a leopard, &c.] Another beaſt, another monarchy, a third monarchy ſucceeding the Perſian monarchy, and which roſe up on the ruins of that; Darius king of the Perſians being beat by Alexander king of Macedon, who was the inſtrument of ſetting up the Grecian monarchy here intended; compared to a leopard, a ſmaller creature than a lion; ſignifying that this monarchy aroſe from a ſmall beginning; and a crafty one, Alexander having many wiſe counſellors of his father's about him, tho' he himſelf was raſh and haſty; and a ſpotted one, denoting the various virtues and vices of Alexander, and his inconſtancy in them; ſometimes exerciſing the one, and ſometimes the other; or rather the different nations, and the manners of them he conquered, of which this empire conſiſted; not to ſay any thing of the cruelty and ſwiftneſs of this creature, which are both to be obſerved in this conqueror: which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; denoting the ſwiftneſs of Alexander in his conqueſts; who in a few years made himſelf maſter of the whole world, at leaſt as he thought, whoſe empire was greater than that of Nebuchadnezzar and the Chaldeans, to whom only two wings of an eagle are given, ℣. 4. Says Jerom, "nothing was more ſwift than the conqueſt of "Alexander, from Illyricum and the Adriatic-ſea, "unto the Indian ocean, and the river Ganges; "he rather ran thro' the world by victories than "by battels, and in ſix years ſubdued part of "Europe, all Aſia even unto India," to which may be added all Egypt, Syria and Paleſtine. Arimazes being maſter of a rock in Sogdiana, which was thought inacceſſible and impregnable, Alexander ſent a meſſenger to him to demand the delivery of it to him; but among other things he proudly ſaid, he aſked the meſſenger with a ſneer if Alexander could fly; which, when the meſſenger reported, nettled him much, that he ſhould be inſulted becauſe he had not wings; and vowed that the next night he would make him believe that the Macedonians did fly; and accordingly they found ways and means to get to the top of it, which, when the governor ſaw, he declared that Alexander's ſoldiers had wings [f]: the beaſt alſo had four heads; which ſignify the four kingdoms into which the Grecian empire was divided after Alexander's death, under four of his generals, who were heads or governors of them: Macedonia under Antipater, or, as others, Caſſander; Egypt under Ptolemy; Syria under Seleucus; and Aſia under Antigonus, or, as others, Lyſimachus: and dominion was given to it; the dominion of the whole world, or however a very large dominion; and this was given of God, and according to his will, and the ordering of his providence; for to nothing elſe can it be aſcribed, that with thirty thouſand men Alexander ſhould beat an army of ſix hundred thouſand; and with ſuch an handful of men ſubdue ſo many kingdoms and nations, and that in the ſpace of a few years.

℣. 7. After this, I ſaw in the night-viſions, and behold, a fourth beaſt, &c.] Not in another night, as Jarchi; but in the ſame night, and in the ſame viſions of it; only after he had ſeen the other three ſucceſſively, then laſt of all he ſaw this fourth beaſt; and more being ſaid of this than of the reſt, ſhews that this was the principal thing in the viſion to be obſerved, as being to endure until, and having a cloſe connexion with, the kingdom of the Meſſiah; which ariſing ſhall deſtroy it, and take place of it: this is not the Turkiſh empire, as Aben Ezra, and others; nor the kingdom of the Seleucidæ, as Grotius, and others; to which neither the characters, nor the duration of it, agree; but the Roman empire, which ſucceeded the Grecian, ſo Gorionides [g]: dreadful and terrible, and ſtrong exceedingly; exceeding powerful, as the Roman empire was, and terrible to all the kingdoms of the earth; its arms, wherever they came, ſtruck terror among the nations, and threw them into a pannic, killing, waſting, robbing all they met with [h]; and eſpecially it was terrible to chriſtians, by their perſecutions of them, as both Rome pagan and Rome papal have been. Rome has its name from ſtrength with the Greeks, and from height with the Hebrews, as Jerom [i] obſerves: it had great iron teeth; which may deſign its generals and emperors, ſuch as Scipio, Pompey, Julius Cæſar, and others; which cruſhed and devoured all that came in their way: this monarchy anſwers to the legs and feet of iron in Nebuchadnezzar's dream: it devoured and brake in pieces, and ſtamped the reſidue with the feet of it; it devoured nations, broke kingdoms in pieces, and brought them in ſubjection to them; reducing them to the greateſt ſervitude, and obliging them to pay heavy taxes and tribute: it was diverſe from all the beaſts that were before it; in its original, language, laws, cuſtoms, and forms of government; it was ſuch a monſter, that no name could be given it; there was no one beaſt in nature to which it could be compared; it had all the ill properties of the other beaſts, for craft, cruelty, oppreſſion and tyranny; and therefore John deſcribes this ſame beaſt as being like a leopard, having the feet of a bear, and the mouth of a lion, Rev. xiii. 2: and it had ten horns; which are explained of ten kings or kingdoms, ℣. 24. the ſame with the ten toes in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and with the ten kings that received power as kings with the beaſt, or ten kingdoms, into which the Roman empire was divided about the time of the riſe of antichriſt, Rev. xvii. 12. ſee the note there.

℣. 8. I conſidered the horns, &c.] The ten horns of the fourth beaſt; theſe the prophet particularly looked at, took ſpecial notice of them, carefully obſerved them, their number, form and ſituation, and pondered in his mind what ſhould be the meaning of them: and behold; while he was attentive to theſe, and thinking within himſelf what they ſhould be, ſomething ſtill more wonderful preſented: there came up among them another little horn; not Titus Veſpaſian, as Jarchi; nor the Turkiſh empire, as Saadiah; nor Antiochus Epiphanes, as many chriſtian interpreters; for not a ſingle perſon or king is meant by a horn, but a kingdom or ſtate, and a ſucceſſion of governors; as by the other ten horns, are meant ten kings or kingdoms; beſides this little horn is a part of the fourth, and not the third beaſt, to which Antiochus belonged; and was to riſe up, not in the third or Grecian monarchy, as he did, but in the fourth and Roman monarchy; and was to continue until the ſpiritual coming of Chriſt, or until his kingdom in a ſpiritual ſenſe takes place; which is not true of him: and ſince no other has appeared in the Roman empire, to whom the characters of this horn agree, but antichriſt, or the pope of Rome, he may be well thought to be intended. Irenæus [k], an ancient chriſtian writer, who lived in the ſecond century, interprets it of antichriſt; of whom having ſaid many things, has theſe words: "Daniel having reſpect "to the end of the laſt kingdom, that is, the "laſt ten kings, among whom their kingdom "ſhould be divided, upon whom the ſon of perdition ſhall come; he ſays, that ten horns ſhall "be upon the beaſt, and another little horn ſhould "riſe up in the midſt of them; and three horns "of the firſt be rooted out before him; and behold, ſaith he, in this horn were eyes as the eyes "of man, &c. of whom again the apoſtle Paul, "in 2 Theſſ. declaring together the cauſe of his "coming, thus ſays, and then ſhall the wicked one "be revealed," &c. and in a following chapter [l], the ſame writer obſerves, "John the diſciple of "the Lord in the Revelation hath yet more manifeſtly ſignified of the laſt time, and of thoſe "ten kings in it, among whom the empire that "now reigns (the Roman empire) ſhall be divided; "declaring what ſhall be the ten horns, which "were ſeen by Daniel, ſaying, the ten horns which "thou ſaweſt are ten kings, which have received no "kingdom as yet, &c. therefore it is manifeſt, that "of theſe he that is to come ſhall ſlay three, and "the reſt ſhall be ſubject to him, and he ſhall be "the eighth among them;" and Jerom on the place ſays, that this is the ſenſe of "all eccleſiaſtical writers, that when the Roman empire is "deſtroyed, there ſhall be ten kings who ſhall "divide it among them; and an eleventh ſhall "ariſe, a little king, who ſhall conquer three of "the ten kings; and having ſlain them, the other "ſeven ſhall ſubmit their necks to the conqueror;" who, he further obſerves, is not a devil or dæmon, but a man, the man of ſin, and ſon of perdition; ſo as that he dare to ſit in the temple of God, making himſelf as if he was God: now to the Roman antichriſt every thing here ſaid anſwers: he is a horn poſſeſſed of power, ſtrength, authority and dominion, of which the horn is an emblem; a little one, which roſe from ſmall beginnings, and came to his eccleſiaſtic power from a common paſtor or biſhop, to be a metropolitan of Italy, and then univerſal biſhop; and to his ſecular power, which at firſt was very ſmall, and ſince increaſed; and yet, in compariſon of other horns or kingdoms, but little; tho' being allowed to exerciſe a power within others, is, or at leaſt has been, very formidable: this came up among the other horns; when the northern barbarous nations broke into the empire, and ſet up ten kingdoms in it, this little horn ſprung up among them; and while they were forming kingdoms for themſelves, he was contriving one for himſelf; they roſe at the ſame time, and reigned together; ſee Rev. xvii. 12, 13:

before whom there were three of the firſt horns pluckt up by the roots; before whom three kings or kingdoms fell, and were ſubdued as in ỷ. 20, 24. which, according to Mr. Mede [m], were the kingdoms of the Greeks, of the Longobards, and of the Franks; but according to Sir Iſaac Newton [n], they were the exarchate of Ravenna, the kingdom of the Lombards, and the ſenate and dukedom of Rome; or according to the preſent biſhop of Clogher [o], the Campagnia of Rome, the exarchate of Ravenna, and the region of Pentapolis, which were plucked up by Pipin and Charlemagne kings of France, and given to the pope; and were confirmed to him by their ſucceſſor Lewis the Pious, and is what is called the patrimony of St. Peter; in memory of which a piece of Moſaic work was made and put up in the pope's palace, repreſenting St. Peter with three keys in his lap; ſignifying the three keys of the three parts of his patrimony; and to ſhew his ſovereignty over them, the pope to this day wears a triple crown: and behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man; in ſome monſtrous births there have been eyes in the knees, and in the belly above the navel [p]; but never was there known ſuch a monſter as this, to have a horn, and eyes in the horn; horns ſome monſters have had, but not eyes in them: theſe may deſign the pretended ſanctity and religion of the pope of Rome or antichriſt, who, tho' a beaſt would be thought to be a man, a religious creature; or his pretended modeſty, humanity and courteſy, when he is all the reverſe; or rather his inſight into the ſcriptures he makes pretenſions to, ſetting himſelf up as an infallible judge of them, and of all controverſies: tho' they ſeem better to deſign what he really has, than what he pretends to; and may denote his penetration and ſagacity, his craft and cunning, and ſharp looking out to get power and dominion, temporal and ſpiritual; and his watchfulneſs to keep it, that it is not encroached upon, and took away from him; and alſo all means and inſtruments by which he inſpects his own and others affairs; particularly the order of the Jeſuits, which are his eyes every where, ſpies in all kingdoms and courts, and get intelligence of what is done in the councils and cabinets of princes: how many eyes this horn had, is not ſaid; nor is it eaſy to ſay how many the pope of Rome has; he has as many as Argus, and more too, and theſe ſharp and piercing: and a mouth ſpeaking great things; as that he is Chriſt's vicar on earth, Peter's ſucceſſor, head of the church, and univerſal biſhop; that he is infallible, and cannot err; that he has all power in heaven, earth and hell; that he can forgive ſin, grant indulgences, make new laws, and bind the conſciences of men; diſpenſe with the laws of God and men; diſpoſe of kingdoms, and remove and ſet up kings at pleaſure, with many others of the like kind; ſee Rev. xiii. 5, 6.

ỷ. 9. I beheld till the thrones were caſt down, &c.] On which the governors of the above monarchies ſat; and thoſe of the ten kings, ſignified by the ten horns; and alſo that of the little horn. The prophet kept looking on the objects before him, till he in his dream, and the viſions of the night, ſaw all thoſe empires and kingdoms demoliſhed, and all rule, power and authority put down, and way made for the glorious kingdom of the Meſſiah, and his ſaints with him; to this ſenſe Aben Ezra, Saadiah and Jacchiades interpret the word uſed; but the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, until the thrones were ſet up [q]; for the judges to ſit upon to try, judge and condemn the four beaſts or monarchies; in order to make way for the kingdom of the ſon of man to take place in the ſpirituality and glory of it: here are more thrones than one; ſee Rev. xx. 4. one for the ancient of days, and another for him who was like to the ſon of man, brought near before him; and ſo the Jews [r] ſay, here were two thrones pitched and prepared, one for the ancient of days, and another for David, that is, the Meſſiah, or ſon of David; and ſo Jarchi paraphraſes the words, "the thrones were pitched and prepared to ſit upon in judgment;" and this ſenſe is confirmed by the uſe of the word in Ezra vii. 24. and in the Targum on 2 Kings xviii. 14. Jer. i. 15. and to this agrees beſt the following clauſe: and the ancient of days did ſit; on one of the thrones pitched, as chief judge: this is to be underſtood of God the Father, as diſtinct from the Meſſiah, the Son of God, ſaid to be like the ſon of man brought unto him, ỷ. 13. and is ſo called, not only becauſe he is from everlaſting, and without beginning of days; but chiefly becauſe he is permanent, and endures for ever; his years fail not, and of his days there will be no end; and he will be when theſe empires, ſignified by the four beaſts, will be no more; and very fit to be judge of them, becauſe of his conſummate wiſdom and prudence, ſignified alſo by this phraſe; and the divine Father of Chriſt is ſtill more proper, becauſe it is in Chriſt's cauſe, the judgment will proceed; and this in order to introduce him openly into his dominions in the world: whoſe garment was white as ſnow; denoting the purity of his nature, the brightneſs of his majeſty, and his incorruptneſs in judgment: and the hair of his head like the pure wool; ſignifying his venerableneſs, gravity, wiſdom, and ripeneſs of judgment; being wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working: his throne was like the fiery flame; expreſſive of him, as awful and formidable, as a conſuming fire; and of his piercing judgment, and the ſeverity of it: and his wheels as burning fire; the wheels of his throne; alluding to ſuch ſeats and thrones as were made to turn about, and to be moved from place to place; denoting the power and providence of God every where; the clear view he has of all things, in all places; and his ſwiftneſs in the execution of his judgments.

ỷ. 10. A fiery ſtream iſſued and came forth from before him, &c.] Or, a river of fire [s]; which denotes the copious judgments of God, the abundance of them; the full flow of his wrath, and the fierceneſs of it; and alſo its rapidity, which cannot be reſiſted and ſtopped: thouſand thouſands miniſtred unto him; attended upon him, waiting his orders, and ready to execute them; an innumerable company of angels, Pſ. ciii. 20, 21: and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him; to be judged by him; the numerous inhabitants of the ſeveral monarchies with their kings; particularly all the antichriſtian ſtates, and the worſhippers of the beaſt, whom the whole world went after, Rev. xiii. 3, 8. and xiv. 10, 11: the judgment was ſet; that is, the court was ſet; the judge was upon the bench, and all his aſſeſſors and apparitors about him, and that miniſtred to him: and the books were opened; both to take the trial in writing, and to produce evidence againſt the criminals; the book of God's purpoſes and decrees concerning theſe beaſts; the book of prophecies relating to them; the book of God's remembrance, and of their own conſciences, with reſpect to the evils committed by them; and the book of records, ſtatutes and laws made in ſuch caſes; even the book of the ſcriptures, which contains the revelation of the will of God. In ſome things there is a likeneſs between this and the laſt and future judgment, and in other things a diſagreement; the judge in both is a divine perſon, the eternal God, omniſcient, omnipotent, holy, juſt and true, which is abſolutely neceſſary for carrying on ſuch a proceſs; none but God over all is equal to ſuch a work: in the laſt judgment, as in this, there will be thrones; the throne of God and of the Lamb, particularly a great white throne, a ſymbol of purity, juſtice and equity, on which the judge himſelf will ſit, and execute judgment, from whoſe preſence the earth and heaven will flee away; and beſides, there will be other thrones for the martyrs of Jeſus, and true profeſſors of his name, to ſit upon as ſpectators, witneſſes and approvers of the ſolemn procedure, and ſhall reign with Chriſt a thouſand years: likewiſe the number of the perſons judged, as here, will be very great, even innumerable; all, both ſmall and great, as to age or dignity, will ſtand before the judge, to be judged by him, and receive their ſentence from him; and there will be books for that purpoſe, as here, even the ſame, and particularly the book of life, in which, if a man's name is not written, he will be caſt into the lake of fire; ſee Rev. xx. 4, 11, 12, 15. but in other things they differ; here the judge is God the Father, the firſt perſon in the Trinity, called the ancient of days, diſtinguiſhed from Chriſt, ſaid to be like the ſon of man; whereas, the laſt and future judgment will be committed to the Son of God, the ſecond perſon, who is ordained judge of quick and dead, and who will come a ſecond time to judge the world in righteouſneſs; and tho' the deſcription of the ancient of days will agree well enough with him, he having the ſame glorious perfections his Father has, which qualify him for a judge; ſee Rev. i. 14. yet it is certain not he, but his divine Father is intended: nor in the account of the future judgment is there any mention of a fiery ſtream iſſuing forth before him, as here, for the burning of the body of the beaſt; unleſs the lake of fire may be thought to anſwer to it, into which will be caſt all ſuch who have no part in the Lamb, nor a name in his book of life: however, the accounts of both are very awful and ſtriking; and this may be conſidered as a type, example, preſage and pledge of the future judgment; this will be at the beginning of the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, when antichriſt will be deſtroyed with the breath of his mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming; the judgment of the ſaints will be at the beginning of his perſonal reign, even of the quick and dead, thoſe that will be found alive, and thoſe that will be raiſed from the dead, at his appearing and kingdom; and the judgment of the wicked will be at the cloſe of it, or at the end of the millennium; ſee Rev. xx. 5, 6, 12.

℣. 11. I beheld then, becauſe of the voice of the great words, which the horn ſpake, &c.] Or, from the voice[t]; from the time it was heard, the prophet continued looking to ſee what would be the iſſue of all this; eſpecially from the time he heard the little horn ſpeak ſuch blaſphemous things againſt God, and Chriſt, and his people, which were ſo intolerable, that he concluded ſome notice would be taken of them in a way of correction and puniſhment; and the rather, when he ſaw the judge appear with ſo much majeſty and grandeur, and all things prepared for a judicial proceſs: I beheld even till the beaſt was ſlain; the fourth beaſt, the Roman monarchy, to which a period will be put, and be utterly aboliſhed in every form and ſhape, and with it the little horn or papacy; when the beaſt on which the whore of Rome ſits and rules, and by whom ſhe is ſupported, will go into perdition; and ſhe herſelf ſhall be made deſolate and naked, her fleſh eat, and ſhe burned with fire by the ten horns or kings that ſhall riſe up againſt her, being filled with hatred to her, Rev. xvii. 3, 8, 16: and his body deſtroyed, and given to the burning flame; when Rome with all its power and wealth ſhall ceaſe, and be no more, the whole body of the antichriſtian ſtates ſhall periſh; the city of Rome ſhall be burnt with fire; the beaſt and falſe prophet ſhall be taken and caſt into a lake of fire burning with brimſtone, Rev. xviii. 8. and xix. 20.

℣. 12. As concerning the reſt of the beaſts, &c.] The other three, which repreſent the Babylonian, Perſian and Grecian monarchies: they had their dominion taken away; not at this time, when the fourth beaſt or Roman empire is deſtroyed, but long ago; and not together, but ſucceſſively; the dominion was taken away from the Babylonians, and given to the Perſians; and then their dominion was taken away, and given to the Grecians; and after that the dominion of the Grecians was taken away from them, and given to the Romans: the prophet having obſerved what became of the fourth beaſt, he was moſt intent upon, juſt in a few words takes notice of the fate of the other three, before this: yet their lives were prolonged for a ſeaſon and time; theſe monarchies did not at once become extinct, as the fourth beaſt or monarchy will, but by degrees; and the kingdoms of which they conſiſted are ſtill in being, tho' in another form of government, and in different hands; whereas, when the fourth monarchy is deſtroyed, all rule and authority will be put down, and the kingdom be given to Chriſt and his ſaints, as follow:

℣. 13. I ſaw in the night-viſions, &c.] Very probably the ſame night in which he had the dream and viſion of the four beaſts; but this that follows being a new object preſented, is introduced and prefaced after this manner; as well as being ſomething wonderful and worthy of attention, has a behold prefixed to it: and behold, one like the ſon of man came with the clouds of heaven; not Judas Maccabæus, as Porphyry; nor the Roman people, as Grotius; nor the people of Iſrael, as Aben Ezra; nor the people of the ſaints of the Moſt High, as Cocceius; but the Meſſiah, as moſt chriſtian interpreters, and even the Jews themſelves, both ancient and modern, allow. In the ancient book of Zohar[u], it is ſaid, “ in the times of the Meſſiah, Iſrael ſhall be one people to the Lord, and he ſhall make them one nation in the earth, and they ſhall rule above and below; as it is written, behold, one like the ſon of man came with the clouds of heaven; this is the king Meſſiah, of whom it is written, and in the days of theſe kings ſhall the God of heaven ſet up a kingdom which ſhall never be deſtroyed, &c. ch. ii. 44.” So in the Talmud [w], this prophecy is thus reconciled with another, concerning the Meſſiah, in Zech. ix. 9. to what R. Alexander ſaid, R. Joſhua ben Levi objects what is written, and behold one like to the ſon of man came with the clouds of heaven; and it is written, poor and riding upon an aſs; which is thus adjuſted, “ if they (the Iſraelites) are worthy, he (the Meſſiah) comes with the clouds of heaven; but if they are not worthy, he comes poor and riding on an aſs;” and ſo it is interpreted in their ancient Midraſhes [x], or expoſitions, as well as in more modern ones: Jarchi on the text ſays, “ he is the Meſſiah;” and ſo R. Saadiah Gaon and Jacchiades, this is Meſſiah our righteouſneſs; and Aben Ezra obſerves, that this is the ſenſe R. Jeſhua gives, that one like to the ſon of man, is the Meſſiah; and he adds, it is right, only along with him muſt be joined the holy people, who are the Iſraelites; and with the Jews, Anani, which ſignifies clouds, is the name of the Meſſiah, founded upon this text, in the Targum of 1 Chron. iii. 24. where mention is made of the name of a perſon, Anani, it is added, “ who is the Meſſiah that is to be revealed;” ſo in an ancient book called Tanchuma [y], ſpeaking of Zerubbabel, it is aſked, from whence did he ſpring? it is anſwered from David, as it is ſaid 1 Chron. iii. 10. and Solomon's ſon was Rehoboam, &c. and ſo all in the line are mentioned unto Anani, ℣. 24. and then it is aſked, who is this Anani? this is the Meſſiah, as it is ſaid, Dan. vii. 13. and I ſaw in the viſions of the night, and behold, one like to the ſon of man came with the clouds of heaven. He is ſaid to be as, or like the ſon of man, in agreement with the ſtile of theſe viſions, ℣. 4, 5, 6. or becauſe as yet he was not really incarnate, only appeared in an human form; or this as is not a note of ſimilitude, but of truth and reality, as in John i. 14. Matt. xiv. 5. Phil. ii. 7, 8. or becauſe he was more than a man: and his coming with the clouds of heaven, denotes the majeſty, viſibility and ſwiftneſs with which he came to take open poſſeſſion of his kingdom and glory. Saadiah interprets them of the angels of heaven, with which he will be attended: and came to the ancient of days; his divine Father, from whom as man and Mediator, he receives his mediatorial kingdom, is inveſted with it, and inſtated into it; ſee Rev. v. 7. this is not to be underſtood of his firſt coming in the fleſh, which was from his Father, and not to him; nor of his aſcenſion to heaven, exaltation and ſeſſion at the right-hand of God, when he indeed received the kingdom from the Father, and was made and declared Lord and Chriſt; but this ſeems to reſpect what ſhall be upon the deſtruction of the fourth beaſt, when Chriſt ſhall receive and take to himſelf his great power, and reign, and more viſibly appear by his Father's deſignation and appointment, and his open glory, to be King and Lord over all: and they brought him near before him; not Elijah the prophet, as Jacchiades; rather the angels, as others; or the ſaints by their prayers, who haſten to, and haſten thereby the coming and kingdom of Chriſt in a more ſpiritual and glorious manner; or it may be rendered imperſonally, “ he was brought near before him,” as by the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions.

℣. 14. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, &c.] That is, a large, powerful and glorious kingdom; not but that he had a kingdom before, but now it will be more extenſive, and appear in greater glory: this will be fulfilled when the kingdoms of this world ſhall become his, and all nations ſhall ſerve and worſhip him, Rev. xi. 15. and xv. 3, 4. as follows: that all people, nations and languages ſhould ſerve him; embrace his goſpel, ſubmit to his ordinances, ſerve and worſhip him in every religious duty; every people, of all nations, and of every language under heaven; which will be the caſe when the everlaſting goſpel will be preached to them all with ſucceſs, Rev. xiv. 6. Pſ. lxxii. 11: his dominion is an everlaſting dominion; it ſhall never have an end, as the reſt of the monarchies, ſignified by the four beaſts, have had, or will have; ſee Pſ. xlv. 6. Iſ. ix. 7: which ſhall not paſs away; or be removed from one to another, like the above monarchies: and his kingdom, that which ſhall not be deſtroyed; or corrupted [z], aboliſhed and brought to nothing, as the ſaid monarchies were one by another; and, at laſt, all of them by the ſtone cut out of the mountain; ſee Dan. ii. 44.

℣. 15. I Daniel was grieved in my ſpirit, in the midſt of my body, &c.] Or ſheath [a]; the ſoul being in the body as a ſword in its ſcabbard; where it was cut [b] and pierced, as the word ſignifies; and was wounded, diſtreſſed and grieved at the viſion ſeen; not at the ſight of the ſon of man, and the glorious and everlaſting kingdom given to him; but of the four beaſts, and eſpecially the laſt, and more particularly the little horn, and the look, and words, and actions of that, as well as the awful ſcene of judgment preſented to his view: and the viſions of my head troubled me; the things he ſaw, which appeared to his fancy as real things, gave him a great deal of uneaſineſs, and chiefly becauſe he did not underſtand the meaning of them; it was not ſo much the things themſelves, as ignorance of them that cut him to the heart, and grieved and troubled him; for what is more ſo to an inquiſitive mind, that has got a hint of ſomething great and uſeful to be known, but can't as yet come to the knowledge of it?

℣. 16. I came near unto one of them that ſtood by, &c.] To one of the angels that attended, either the throne of judgment, or the ſon of man in his approach to his divine Father: and aſked him the truth of all this; the ſubſtance of theſe viſions; what theſe images preſented to his view, were ſhadows and repreſentations of; ſo type and truth, ſhadow and ſubſtance, are oppoſed to each other. The real meaning of all this was what he aſked; nor need any be aſhamed to aſk of whomſoever they can hope to get knowledge of truth, and eſpecially of ſuperiors, of the angels of the churches, or paſtors of them: ſo he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things; he interpreted every thing in the viſion to him, and gave him the true meaning and real deſign of the whole, as follows: this was aſked and told, not when Daniel was awake, and was conſidering of what he had dreamed; but in his dream, in his viſion by night; this was all tranſacted in a viſionary way, both the things and the interpretation of them.

℣. 17. Theſe great beaſts which are four, are four kings, &c.] Or kingdoms, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions; and ſo Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Saadiah; ſo the fourth beaſt is called the fourth kingdom, ℣. 23. or a ſucceſſion of kings in four kingdoms or monarchies, comparable to beaſts for their ſtrength, cruelty and tyranny: theſe are the words of him that ſtood by, of one of the angels Daniel applied to, to know the meaning of his dream; and might be better rendered, as to theſe[c] great beaſts which are four; for their quality beaſts, for their quantity great, and for number four. The meaning is, four kings ſhall ariſe out of the earth; or kingdoms; which have an earthly original and foundation; are ſupported by earthly and worldly means, and with earthly and worldly views; and are different from the kingdom of Chriſt and his ſaints, which is not of the world, tho' it may be in it: this explains what is meant by the great ſea, from whence theſe beaſts are ſaid to come up, ℣. 3. nor is it any material objection that the firſt of theſe kingdoms, the Babylonian, was riſen already, and almoſt at an end; ſince the denomination is taken from the larger number; three of them were to ariſe, and the firſt was of the ſame original with them; thus 'tis ſaid, ch. xi. 2. that three kings of Perſia ſhould ſtand up, and yet Cyrus, who was one of them, reigned already.

℣. 18. But the ſaints of the Moſt High, &c.] Or, of the moſt high ones[d], Father, Son, and Spirit; ſeparated by God the Father in election, and in that ſenſe his ſaints, or ſanctified ones, Jud. ℣. 1. and redeemed by the Son, and ſanctified with his blood, or their ſins atoned by it, and to whom he is made ſanctification, and ſo his ſaints, Heb. xiii. 12. 1 Cor. i. 30. and ſanctified by the Spirit, who in converſion implants principles of grace and holineſs in them, 1 Cor. vi. 11. or, the ſaints of high[e], places or things; who are born from above, and are called with an high and heavenly calling, towards which they are preſſing, reckoning themſelves ſtrangers here below: theſe ſhall take the kingdom; or receive[f] it, as a free gift from God; and not by force, and rapine, and violence, as the beaſts did: and poſſeſs the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever; after the four monarchies are deſtroyed, a fifth kingdom ſhall be ſet up; and this will be given to, and put into the poſſeſſion of the ſaints; they ſhall have the rule and government in the world, even in the whole world, as well as reign with Chriſt ſpiritually; which manner of rule ſhall laſt long; and then after the firſt reſurrection they ſhall reign with him a thouſand years on earth, and afterwards in heaven to all eternity. There is another rendring, and ſenſe of the words given, and they (the beaſts) ſhall receive the kingdom of the ſaints of the Moſt High[g], &c. and ſo Saadiah interprets them, "and theſe kingdoms ſhall receive the kingdom of Iſrael, who "are the ſaints of the Moſt High, until the world "to come, until the Meſſiah reigns;" and this way go many others, who underſtand the words of thoſe ſeveral monarchies poſſeſſing the land of Judea, and ruling over it; and of the continuance of it in the hands of Papiſts or Turks for a long time, even until the glorious kingdom of Chriſt takes place; but this does not agree with the accentuation of the words, their form of conſtruction, their connexion, and ſtrong manner of expreſſion, for ever and ever; and eſpecially if compared with ℣. 22, 27.

℣. 19. Then I would know the truth of the fourth beaſt, &c.] What it repreſented, what kingdom or monarchy was meant by it; for by the above anſwer of the angel, he underſtood the four beaſts ſignified four kings or kingdoms; the three firſt he pretty well underſtood; at leaſt he was not ſo ſolicitous about them as about the fourth; and this he was deſirous of having a very particular and exact account of; it threatning, by its appearance, a great deal of trouble to the world, and eſpecially to the church of God: which was divers from all the others; or, from all them, or thoſe[h], the other three beaſts: exceeding dreadful; to other kingdoms and nations: whoſe teeth were of iron; of theſe parts of its deſcription, ſee on ℣. 7: and his nails of braſs; this is a new circumſtance, not before mentioned, and here added with great propriety; nails belonging to a beaſt of prey, and theſe ſaid to be of braſs, to denote its ſtrength, cruelty and voraciouſneſs in tearing its prey to pieces; and moreover, to ſhew that this kingdom has ſomewhat of the nature of the third or Grecian monarchy, ſaid to be of braſs in Nebuchadnezzar's dream; ſome out of that kingdom being taken into the Roman militia, as Theodoret obſerves; and ſoldiers are to a king, what nails are to a beaſt: which devoured, brake in pieces, and ſtamped the reſidue with his feet; ſome kingdoms and provinces were deſtroyed by it, and the reſt were made ſubject to it; ſee ℣. 7.

℣. 20. And of the ten horns, &c.] That is, Daniel deſired to know the truth of the ten horns, or the meaning of them, what they ſignified, and who they pointed at, of which in ℣. 7. here it is added, that were in his head; obſerving the ſituation of them; tho' the horns of a beaſt could hardly be thought to be elſewhere: and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; particularly he was very deſirous to know the meaning of a ſingle horn, which roſe up among the reſt, and before which three of the other horns fell, being plucked up by the roots: even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that ſpake very great things; ſee the note on ℣. 8: whoſe look was more ſtout than his fellows; than the other beaſts, or rather than the other horns; either than his fellow-biſhops, claiming an authority over them, as being univerſal biſhop; or than the kings and princes of the earth, ſetting up himſelf above all that is called god, emperors and kings; taking to himſelf all power in heaven, and in earth; a power to depoſe kings, and abſolve their ſubjects from allegiance to them, and even over the conſciences of men; ſo that his look is more bold and impudent than others, as well as more fierce and terrible, threatening kings and kingdoms with his bulls, anathema's, and interdicts: or, whoſe appearance is greater than his fellows[i]; in pomp and ſplendor, making a greater ſhow and figure than the kings of the earth, and claiming a ſuperiority over them.

℣. 21. I beheld, and the ſame horn made war with the ſaints, &c.] The ſame little horn before deſcribed; not Antiochus Epiphanes, who made war with the Jews, as many think; or the Roman Cæſars, that perſecuted the church of Chriſt, as others; nor Titus Veſpaſian, who fought againſt Iſrael, as Saadiah; but antichriſt, or the pope of Rome; and this refers to the wars of the popes with the Waldenſes, which began in the year 1160, and continued long, and with the two witneſſes at the cloſe of their teſtimony, Rev. xi. 7. and xiii. 7. this Daniel had a view of in viſion; not whilſt he was enquiring of the angel, but before, tho' not mentioned till now; and was a reaſon he was ſo very inquiſitive about this little horn, becauſe of its war with the ſaints, and its ſucceſs, as follows: and prevailed againſt them; as the popes and their abettors did againſt the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, whom they ſlew in great numbers, and got the victory over; as the beaſt alſo, the ſame with this little horn, will overcome the witneſſes, and ſlay them, Rev. xi. 7.

℣. 22. Until the ancient of days came, &c.] Not locally, by change of place, he being the omnipreſent God; but in a providential way, to check and put a ſtop to the power and prevalency of the little horn over the ſaints; for this is the terminus or end of that; which puts a period to it; for when the ancient of days comes in the exertion of his power and providence, he will come and ſit as a judge upon this little horn or antichriſt, and judge, and condemn, and puniſh it; ſee ℣. 9, 11: and judgment was given to the ſaints of the Moſt High; their characters vindicated from all calumny and falſe aſperſions; their adverſaries condemned and puniſhed; and power, dominion, and authority, given to them with Chriſt; ſee ℣. 27. John v. 22: and the time came that the ſaints poſſeſſed the kingdom; as in ℣. 18. ſee the note there; till which time the little horn or antichriſt will reign and rage, and prevail over the ſaints, but no longer.

℣. 23. Thus he ſaid, &c.] The perſon that ſtood by, the angel, of whom Daniel made his enquiries, and who anſwered him, as follows: the fourth beaſt ſhall be the fourth kingdom on earth; which ſhows that the angel by four kings, ℣. 17. meant four kingdoms, that ſhould ſucceſſively ariſe in the earth, and out of it, one after another; and this kingdom is not the kingdom of the Seleucidæ, nor the Turkiſh, but the Roman empire; for this is to continue until the kingdom of Chriſt takes place; ſee ℣. 7: which ſhall be divers from all kingdoms; from the kingdoms and monarchies that were before it; particularly as a kingdom, in its form of government, both when pagan, and when papal; ſee ℣. 7: and ſhall devour the whole earth, and ſhall tread it down, and break it in pieces; not the whole land of Judea only, as ſome read and interpret it; but the whole world, which the Romans became maſters of; and the phraſes uſed denote the deſtruction and deſolation they made, wherever they carried their arms, and the cruelty and tyranny they exerciſed, and the vaſt profuſion of blood made by them, both among the heathens they ſubdued, and the chriſtians they perſecuted.

℣. 24. And the ten horns out of this kingdom, are ten kings that ſhall ariſe, &c.] Or ten kingdoms which ſprung out of the Roman empire, or into which it was broken and divided upon the diſſolution of it, about A. D. 476; which, according to Mr. Mede[k], were thus divided, A. D. 456, 1. Britons; 2. Saxons; 3. Franks; 4. Burgundians; 5. Wiſigoths; 6. Suevians and Alanes; 7. Vandals; 8. Almanes; 9. Oſtrogoths; 10. Greeks. The liſt biſhop Lloyd[l] has given of them is, 1. Hunns, who erected their kingdom in that part of Pannonia and Dacia, which was from them called Hungary, about A. D. 356.— 2. Oſtrogoths, who ſettled themſelves in the countries that reach from Rhetia to Mæſia, even to Thrace, about 377; and afterwards came into Italy under Alaricus, in 410.— 3. Wiſigoths, who ſettled in the ſouth parts of France, and in Catalonia, about 378.— 4. Franks, who ſeized upon part of Germany and Gaul, A. D. 410.— 5. Vandals, who ſettled in Spain; afterwards ſet up their kingdom in Africa, A. D. 407; their king Genſericus ſacked Rome, 455.— 6. Suevians and Alans, who ſeized the weſtern parts of Spain, A. D. 407; and invaded Italy, 457.— 7. Burgundians, who came out of Germany, into that part of Gaul called from them Burgundy, 407.— 8. Herules, Rugians, and Thoringians, who ſettled in Italy under Odoacer, about A. D. 476.— 9. Saxons, who made themſelves maſters of Great-Britain about the ſame time, 476.— 10. Longobards, called likewiſe Gopidæ, who ſettled in Germany about Magdeburg, A. D. 383; and afterwards ſucceeded the Heruli and Thuringi in Hungary, about the year 826. Sir Iſaac Newton[m] reckons the ten kingdoms in the following order: 1. the kingdom of the Vandals and Alans in Spain and Africa;—2. of the Suevians in Spain;—3. of the Wiſigoths;—4. of the Alans in Gallia;—5. of the Burgundians;—6. of the Franks;—7. Of the Britons;—8. Of the Hunns;—9. of the Lombards;—10. of Ravenna; who gives an account of the ſeveral kings of theſe kingdoms; and theſe, as the ſame learned writer ſays[n], whatever was their number afterwards, they are ſtill called the ten kings from their firſt number; and tho' they have not always been in the ſame form and order, yet they have been generally about, if not exactly the ſame number; as they are now near the ſame; and may be thus reckoned, as the kingdoms of France, Spain, Portugal, Germany, Great-Britain, Sardinia, Denmark, the two Sicilies, Swedeland, Pruſſia, and Poland; of which ſee more on the note on Rev. xvii. 12. And another ſhall riſe after thee; not Titus Veſpaſian, as Jarchi and Saadiah; nor the nation of Gog and Magog, as Jacchiades; but the pope of Rome or antichriſt; who came to his power as univerſal biſhop, and as a horn or temporal prince, after the above kingdoms aroſe; not after they were at an end, but after they were conſtituted and eſtabliſhed, as it was proper they ſhould firſt be; ſince they were to give their ſtrength, power, and kingdom, to the antichriſtian beaſt, by which it became a horn or temporal prince, Rev. xvii. 13. The Septuagint render it, behind them; which Mr. Mede[o] interprets of his ſpringing up unawares, imperceptibly, unnoticed, and unobſerved by them, till he overtopped them. And he ſhall be divers from the firſt; from the firſt ten horns, kings or kingdoms; having, beſides a ſecular power and temporal authority, an eccleſiaſtical and ſpiritual one; a power not only over the bodies and eſtates of men, but over their ſouls and conſciences; and even over the other horns and kingdoms, which they had not over one another; and ſo was different from them all: and he ſhall ſubdue three kings; deſigned by the three horns plucked up by the roots, and which fell before him; of which ſee the note on ℣. 8.

℣. 25. And he ſhall ſpeak great words againſt the Moſt High, &c.] Or, at the ſide of the Moſt High [p]; ſetting himſelf up as a rival, and upon an equality with him; taking the names and characters of holineſs, infallibility, yea of deity itſelf, unto him; claiming a power to forgive ſin, which is peculiar to God; and preferring his own laws, doctrines, and traditions, to the word of God: and ſhall wear out the ſaints of the Moſt High; by his wars with them, and murders and maſſacres of them; by taking away their lives and their ſubſtance; ſo leſſening their numbers, and weakening their ſtrength and power, wear them out, as a garment is wore out, as the word [q] ſignifies; utterly conſume and deſtroy them, at leaſt in his own apprehenſions; which will be the caſe when the witneſſes will be ſlain, Rev. xi. 8, 9, 10. and eſpecially will wear out their patience, or however thoroughly exerciſe it. The word [r], in the Arabic language, ſignifies to afflict and handle roughly; and ſuch uſage the ſaints have met with more or leſs, in all ages, from the man of ſin. And think to change times and laws; to alter the forms and conſtitutions of kingdoms, and the cuſtoms and uſages of them; yea, to ſet up and pull down kings at pleaſure; ſee ch. ii. 21. or to change the uſe of times and ſeaſons, by ſetting apart days as holy for canonized ſaints; and appointing ſuch days in a week, and ſuch a ſeaſon in the year, for abſtinence from meats; and even to change the laws of God and man, by diſpenſing with both, and making new ones of his own: and they ſhall be given into his hand; either the ſaints he makes war with, and wears out, who ſhall be overcome by him; or the times and laws, which he ſhall not only have it in his mind and purpoſe to change, but ſhall have it in his power to do it, and ſhall do it: until a time, and times, and the dividing of time; by a time is meant a year, the longeſt part of time; by times, two years; and the dividing of time, half a year; in all three years and a half, which is the ſame with 1260 days, or 42 months, the time of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, and of the reign of antichriſt; ſo long ſhall he continue, exerciſing his power and authority, his wrath, and rage, and blaſphemy, and no longer; ſee Rev. xi. 2, 3. and xii. 14. and xiii. 5.

℣. 26. But the judgment ſhall ſit, &c.] As in ℣. 10. the court ſhall ſit, the judge ſhall take the bench, and all things be prepared for the arraignment, trial, condemnation, and puniſhment of the little horn or antichriſt, when the above time is up; God the Father, the ancient of days, and Chriſt, ſaid to be like the ſon of man, brought near to him, ſhall ſit as judges, attended by the holy angels: and they ſhall take away his dominion, to conſume, and to deſtroy it unto the end; either the angels, or rather the ſaints of the Moſt High; particularly the chriſtian princes, into whoſe hearts God will put it to hate the whore, eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire; ſo that there ſhall be an utter end of antichriſt; he ſhall be ſtripped of all his power and authority; his deſtruction will be inevitable and irrecoverable; he ſhall never come out of it; it ſhall continue to the end of the world, to the end of time.

℣. 27. And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatneſs of the kingdom under the whole heaven, ſhall be given to the people of the ſaints of the Moſt High, &c.] Not only the dominion that ſhall be taken away from the little horn or antichriſt, and from all the antichriſtian ſtates, but the dominion of all others throughout all the earth, and under the whole heaven, ſhall be given to the people of God, and the true profeſſors of faith in Chriſt. The kingdoms of this world will become Chriſt's, and chriſtian princes will be kings of them every where; and not only the royal power and authority will be veſted with them, but all the grandeur and ſtate belonging to them will be theirs; as well as all the ſaints in general ſhall reign in a ſpiritual manner with Chriſt, enjoying all ordinances, and all religious liberties, as well as civil, and be free from all perſecutions. Whoſe kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, and all dominions ſhall ſerve and obey him; the people of the ſaints of the Moſt High, all ſhall be ſubject to them, all dominions, and the governors of them; or Chriſt the head of them, under and with whom they reign. So Saadiah [s] paraphraſes it, "the kingdom of the king "Meſſiah is an everlaſting kingdom, and his go"vernment is to generation and generation, and "all dominions ſhall ſerve and obey him." This ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, which will take place in a more glorious manner at the deſtruction of antichriſt, will continue until the millennium, or the perſonal reign of Chriſt begins; and after that will be the ultimate glory, in which Chriſt and his people will reign to all eternity.

℣. 28. Hitherto is the end of the matter, &c.] Of the angel's words, and of the interpretation of thoſe things Daniel was deſirous of being informed about, and of the whole dream and viſion Daniel had; and indeed this is the end and iſſue of all events in providence, the kingdom and glory of Chriſt with his people: as for me Daniel; with reſpect to his frame of mind, and the ſtate of his body, when he awaked from this dream, and reflected upon it, and eſpecially upon that part of it which affected the people of God: my cogitations much troubled me; when he thought of theſe powerful monarchies, their ſtrength and cruelty, and what the people of God would ſuffer under them, and eſpecially under the fourth beaſt or monarchy, and more particularly under the little horn or antichriſt: and my countenance changed in me; turned pale; he looked ſorrowful and dejected, becauſe of the afflictions of God's people; tho' the iſſue of them, one would have thought, would have inſpired him with joy and pleaſure: but I kept the matter in my heart; laid it up in his memory;

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter contains the viſion of a ram and he-goat, and the interpretation of it. It begins with obſerving the time and place of the viſion, ℣. 1, 2. then deſcribes the ram ſeen, by the place of his ſituation; by his two horns; and by his puſhing ſeveral ways with ſo much force and fury, that none could ſtand before him, or deliver out of his hands, ℣. 3, 4. next the he-goat appears, and is deſcribed by the part from whence he came; the ſwiftneſs of his motion; the notable horn between his eyes; and his running to the ram in great fury, ſmiting him between his horns, caſting him to the ground, and trampling upon him, and none to deliver, ℣. 5, 6, 7. but after waxing great and powerful, its horn was broken, and four more roſe up in its ſtead, and out of one of them a little horn, ℣. 8, 9. which little horn is deſcribed by its power and prevalence to the ſouth and to the eaſt, towards the pleaſant land, the hoſt of heaven, and the prince of the hoſt; and by it the ſtars were caſt down and trampled upon, the daily ſacrifice made to ceaſe, the place of the ſanctuary caſt down, and truth itſelf, ℣. 9, 10, 11, 12. and upon enquiry it appeared, that theſe ſacred things were to continue in this deſolate condition unto 2300 days, ℣. 13, 14. Daniel being deſirous of knowing the meaning of this viſion, the angel Gabriel is ordered by Chriſt, to give him an underſtanding of it; who drew near to him, and awaked him out of his ſleep, and gave him the interpretation of it, ℣. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. which is as follows; the ram, with two horns, ſignifies the kings of Media and Perſia; the rough goat, the king of Greece; and the great horn the firſt king, Alexander the Great; and the four horns, four kingdoms which roſe up out of the Grecian empire upon his death, ℣. 20, 21, 22. and the little horn a king of fierce countenance, Antiochus Epiphanes; who is deſcribed by his craft and cunning, by his power and might, and by the deſtruction he ſhould make, ℣. 23, 24, 25. this viſion the angel aſſures the prophet was true, and bids him ſhut it up, ſince it was for many days, ℣. 26. upon which Daniel fainted, and was ſick for a time, but afterwards recovered, ſo as to be able to do the king's buſineſs; but aſtoniſhed at the viſion himſelf, and which was not underſtood by others, ℣. 27.

℣. 1. In the third year of the reign of king Belſhazzar, &c.] Which ſome ſay [t] was the laſt year of his reign; but, according to Ptolemy's canon, he reigned ſeventeen years; and ſo ſays Joſephus [u]; however, this, as well as the preceding viſion, were ſeen before what happened recorded in the fifth and ſixth chapters. The following viſion was ſeen by Daniel, according to Biſhop Uſher [w] and Dean Prideaux [x], in the year of the Julian period 4161, and before Chriſt 553: Mr. Bedford [y] places it in 552; and Mr. Whiſton [z], very wrongly, in 537, two years after the death of Belſhazzar. The prophet having, in the preceding chapters, related what concerned the Chaldeans, he wrote in the Chaldee language; but now hence forward, writing of things which concerned the Jews more eſpecially, and the church and people of God in after-times, he writes in the Hebrew tongue. A viſion appeared unto me, even to me Daniel; and not another; which is ſaid for the certainty of it; whether it was ſeen by him waking, or in a dream as the former viſion, is not certain; it ſeems rather as if he was awake at firſt, tho' he afterwards fell proſtrate to the ground, and into a deep ſleep; yet the Syriac verſion takes it to be a dream, and ſo renders the firſt clauſe of the next verſe: after that which appeared to me at the firſt; at the beginning of Belſhazzar's reign, in the firſt year of it, recorded in the preceding chapter; which was concerning the four monarchies in general, and particularly concerning the fourth or Roman monarchy, of which a large account is given; and the Chaldean monarchy being near at an end, here the two monarchies between, namely, the Perſian and Grecian, are in this viſion deſcribed.

℣. 2. And I ſaw in a viſion, &c.] The following things: and it came to paſs when I ſaw, that I was at Shuſhan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; not in reality, but ſo it ſeemed to him in the viſion; as Ezekiel, when in Babylon, ſeemed in the viſions of God to be at Jeruſalem, ch. viii. 3. This city Shuſhan, or Suſa, as it is called by other writers, and ſignifies a lily, was ſo called from the plenty of lilies that grew about it, or becauſe of the pleaſantneſs of it; it was the metropolis of the country Suſiana, which had its name from it, and was afterwards the royal ſeat of the kings of Perſia. This was firſt made ſo by Cyrus; for Strabo [a] ſays, that he and the Perſians having overcome the Medes, obſerving that their own country was ſituated in the extreme parts, and Suſa more inward, and nearer to other nations, being, as he ſays, between Perſia and Babylon, ſet his royal palace in it; approving both the nearneſs of the country, and the dignity of the city. Here the kings of Perſia laid up their treaſures, even prodigious large ones; hence Ariſtagoras told Cleomenes, that if he could take that city, he would vie, and might contend with, Jupiter for riches [b]; for hither Cyrus carried whatever money he had in Perſia, even forty thouſand talents, ſome ſay fifty [c]. Alexander [d], when he took this city, found a vaſt quantity of riches in it. It is called here a palace; and ſo it is ſpoken of by Herodotus [e], Diodorus Siculus [f], Pauſanias [g], Pliny [h], and others, as a royal city, where were the reſidence and palace of the kings of Perſia; but the royal palace was not in it at this time; the kings of Babylon had their palace, lace, and kept their court at Babylon, where Daniel was; but in viſion it ſeemed to him that he was in Shuſhan, and which was repreſented to him as a palace, as it would be, and as the metropolis of the kingdom of Perſia, which he had a view of in its future flouriſhing condition, and as deſtroyed by Alexander; for as before obſerved, it was Cyrus that firſt made it a royal city; whereas this viſion was in the third year of Belſhazzar king of Babylon. Some verſions render it, a tower or caſtle; and ſo ſeveral writers, as Strabo [i], Plutarch [k], and Pliny [l], ſpeak of the tower or caſtle in it. Diodorus Siculus [m] ſays, when Antigonus took the tower of Suſa, he found in it a golden vine, and a great quantity of other works, to the value of fifteen thouſand talents; and out of crowns, and other gifts and ſpoils, he made up five thouſand more. And Polybius [n] relates, that tho' Molon took the city, yet could not take the fortreſs, and was obliged to raiſe the ſiege, ſo ſtrong it was. It muſt be a miſtake of Pliny [o], that this city was built by Darius Hyſtaſpes; he could only mean, it was rebuilt, or rather enlarged by him, ſince it was in being long before his time, and even a royal city in the times of Cyrus. Strabo [p] ſays, it was built by Tithon the father of Memnon, was in compaſs an hundred and twenty furlongs, of an oblong figure, and the tower was called after his father's name Memnonia; and Shuſhan itſelf is called by Herodotus [q], Suſa Memnonia. At this day, with the common people, it goes by the name of Tuſter [r]. The eaſt gate of the mountain of the houſe, which led to the temple at Jeruſalem, was called Shuſhan. Some ſay [s] there was a building over this gate, on which the palace of Shuſhan was pourtrayed, from whence it had its name. The reaſon of this portrait is differently given; the Jewiſh commentators on the Miſnah [t] commonly ſay, that this was ordered by the kings of Perſia, that the people of Iſrael might ſtand in awe of them, and not rebel againſt them. Their famous lexicographer [u] ſays, that this was done, that the Iſraelites, when they ſaw it, might remember their captivity in it. But a chronologer [w] of theirs gives this as the reaſon, that the children of the captivity made this figure, that they might remember the miracle of Purim, which was made in Shuſhan; and this, he ſays, is a good interpretation of it. This city was in the province of Elam; that is, Perſia, as it is alſo called, Iſ. xxi. 6. for Joſephus [x] ſays, the Perſians had their original from the Elamites, or Elameans; and Pliny [y] obſerves, that Elymais joined to Perſia; and the country of Suſiane, ſo called from Suſa its chief city, was, according to Strabo [z] and Ptolemy [a], a part of Perſia: and here Daniel in viſion thought himſelf to be; and a very ſuitable place for him to have this viſion in, which ſo much concerned the affairs of Perſia. And I ſaw in a viſion, and I was by the river Ulai; that is, in viſion; it ſeemed to the prophet that he was upon the banks of the river Ulai; the ſame with the Eulæus of Strabo [b], Pliny [c], Ptolemy [d], and others, which ran by, and ſurrounded the city of Shuſhan, or Suſa; the water of which was ſo light, as Strabo [e] obſerves, that it was had in great requeſt, and the kings of Perſia would drink of no other, and carried it with them wherever they went. Herodotus [f] and Curtius [g] make mention of the river Choaſpes, as running by Suſa, and ſay the ſame things of its water; from whence it might be concluded it was one and the ſame river, called by different names; tho' Strabo takes notice of them together, as if they were diſtinct; yet he, from Polycletus [h], makes them, with Tigris, to diſembogue into the ſame lake, and from thence into the ſea. The river which runs by Shuſhan, now called Souſter, according to Monſieur Thevenot [i], is Caron, and comes from the hills about it, and is thought to be the Choaſpes of the ancients; near to which, as he was told, is a hill that now goes by the name of Choaſp; ſo that upon the whole, they ſeem to be one and the ſame river [k]. Joſephus ſays [l], that Daniel had this viſion in the plain of Suſa, the metropolis of Perſia, as he went out with his friends, that is, out of the city: and the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, by the gate Ulai; a gate of the city of Shuſhan ſo called: and ſo Saadiah Gaon interprets it a gate; but the former ſenſe is beſt.

℣. 3. Then I lifted up mine eyes, &c.] To ſee what was to be ſeen in this place, where he in the viſion was brought; he lift up the eyes of his underſtanding, being enlightened by the viſion of prophecy, and the eyes of his body, to which objects of corporal things formed in the fancy were repreſented: and ſaw, and behold; he ſaw ſomething wonderful in a viſionary way, and which ſtruck his mind, and raiſed his attention: there ſtood before the river; the river Ulai, near Shuſhan, the palace, the ſeat of the kings of Perſia, to the eaſt: a ram, which had two horns; a ſymbol of the kingdom of the Medes and Perſians, ſignified by the two horns, ℣. 20. an emblem of power and dominion, and ſometimes uſed to ſignify kings and kingdoms; ſee ch. vii. 24. and theſe as united in one monarchy, under one monarch, Cyrus, and continued in his ſucceſſors unto the times of Alexander; and therefore called a ram, or one ram [m], as in the original; and which in ſound has ſome likeneſs to Elam or Perſia: and this kingdom or monarchy may be ſignified by it, partly becauſe of its ſtrength and power, and partly becauſe of its riches, as ſome think, as well as becauſe it is a fighting creature; and it may be chiefly, becauſe this monarchy was mild, and kind, and gentle to the Jewiſh nation: and it is very remarkable, that according to Ammianus Marcellinus [n], the ram was the royal enſign of the Perſians; whoſe kings uſed to wear for a diadem, ſomething made of gold, in the ſhape of a ram's head, ſet with little ſtones: and the two horns were high; grew ſtrait up on high, and ſo were different from the uſual horns of a ram, which are crooked; denoting the great power, authority, wealth, and riches, theſe two kingdoms roſe up unto: but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up laſt; I think the words might be rendered better, and the firſt was higher than the ſecond, but it aſcended or grew up higher at laſt [o]; the kingdom of the Medes was the firſt kingdom, and it was at firſt ſuperior to the kingdom of Perſia; but afterwards the kingdom of Perſia became greater than that, under Cyrus and his ſucceſſors: and Sir John Chardin ſays [p], that rams heads with horns, one higher than another, are ſtill to be ſeen in the ruins of Perſepolis.

℣. 4. I ſaw the ram puſhing weſtward, and northward, and ſouthward, &c.] That is, with his horns, as rams do; theſe kingdoms uſing all their power and ſtrength, wealth and riches, in fighting with, and ſubduing nations, and puſhing on their conqueſts in all parts here mentioned; to the weſt, Babylon, Syria, Aſia, and part of Greece; to the north, Iberia, Albania, Armenia, Scythia, Colchis, and the inhabitants of the Caſpian ſea; and to the ſouth, Arabia, Ethiopia, Egypt, and India; all which places were conquered by Cyrus and his ſucceſſors. No mention is made of the eaſt, becauſe this ram ſtood in the eaſt, facing the weſt; and at the right and left were the north and ſouth; and ſo Cyrus is ſaid to come from the eaſt, Iſ. xlvi. 11. So that no beaſt might ſtand before him; no not the firſt beaſt, the Babylonian monarchy, which fell into the hands of Cyrus; nor any other king or kingdom, he and his ſucceſſors fought againſt: neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; or power; Crœſus, the rich king of Lydia, and other allies of the king of Babylon, aſſiſted him againſt Cyrus, and endeavoured to prevent his falling into his hands, but all in vain: but he did according to his will, and became great; none being able to oppoſe him, he carried his arms where he pleaſed, and impoſed what tribute he thought fit, and obliged them to do whatever was his will; and ſo became great in power and dignity, in riches and wealth: this monarchy was very large and extenſive, and very rich and wealthy, in the times of Cyrus and his ſucceſſors; and eſpecially in the times of Darius, the laſt monarch of it, conquered by Alexander, who is deſcribed, as follows:

℣. 5. And as I was conſidering, &c.] The ram, and the ſtrange things done by him; wondering that a creature of ſo little ſtrength, comparatively with other beaſts, ſhould be able to do ſuch exploits: and thinking with himſelf what ſhould be the meaning of all this, and what would be the iſſue of it, behold, an he-goat came from the weſt; which is interpreted of the king or kingdom of Grecia, which lay to the weſt of Perſia; and a kingdom may be ſaid to do what one of its kings did; particularly Alexander king of Macedon in Greece, who with the Grecian army under him, marched from thence to fight the king of Perſia; and which might be ſignified by an he-goat, becauſe of its ſtrength, its comelineſs in walking, and its being the guide and leader of the flock: and alſo it is remarkable, that the arms of Macedon, or the enſigns carried before their armies, were a goat, ever ſince the days of Caranus; who following a flock of goats, was directed to Edeſſa, a city of Macedon, and took it; and from this circumſtance of the goats, called it Ægeas, and the people Ægeades, which ſignifies goats; and put the goat in his arms [q]. On the face of the whole earth; all that lay between Greece and Perſia, all Aſia; yea, all the whole world, at leaſt as Alexander thought, who wept becauſe there was not another world to conquer: hence Juvenal ſays [r], unus Pellæo juveni non ſufficit orbis; one world was not enough for this young man. And touched not the ground; as he went; he ſeemed rather to fly in the air, than to walk upon the earth; with ſuch ſwiftneſs did Alexander run over the world, and make his conqueſts: in ſix or eight years time he conquered the kingdom of the Medes and Perſians, Babylon, Egypt, and all the neighbouring nations; and afar off, Greece, Thrace, Illyricum, and even the greateſt part of the then known world: hence the third or Grecian monarchy under him, is ſaid to be like a leopard, with four wings of a fowl on its back [s], ch. vii. 6. ſee the note there: he conquered countries as ſoon almoſt as another could have travelled over them; in his marches he was ſwift and indefatigable. Ælianus [t] reports, that he marched, clad in armour, thrice four hundred, that is, twelve hundred furlongs, upon a ſtretch; and before his army could take any reſt, fought his enemies, and conquered them. Some render the words, whom no man touched in the earth [u]; that is, none could oppoſe, reſiſt, and ſtop him; he bore down and carried all before him; there was no coming at him, ſo as to touch him, or hurt him; he was ſo ſwift in his motions, and ſo powerful in his army. And the goat had a notable horn between his eyes; or, a horn of viſion; which in ℣. 21. is interpreted of the firſt king of Greece, ℣. 21. that is, when it became a monarchy; who was Alexander the Great; and very properly called a horn, being poſſeſſed of great power and authority; and a notable one, very remarkable and famous, as he has been in all ages ſince: a horn of viſion [w], as it may be rendered; a very viſible and conſpicuous one, to be ſeen afar off, and which attracted the eyes of all unto it: its ſituation was between the eyes of the goat, denoting his ſagacity, wiſdom, prudence, craft, and cunning; being attended and ſurrounded with his father Philip's wiſe counſellors, as Parmenio, Philotas, Clitus, and others. It is remarkable, that by the Arabs Alexander is called Dulcarnaim, or Dhilcarnain; that is, one having two horns [x]: the reaſon of which was, he affected to be the ſon of Jupiter Hammon, and therefore at feaſts and public entertainments would put on the purple and horns of Hammon: hence, as Clemens of Alexandria obſerves [y], he is by the ſtatuaries repreſented as horned, or wearing horns; but then, as Arnobius [z] and others take notice, Hammon is made by the painters and ſtatuaries to have ram's horns; whereas it ſeems more likely that Alexander's were goat's horns, ſince the goat was in the arms of Macedon; and ſo Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, who mimicked Alexander in his armour, is ſaid to have goat's horns on his helmet, upon the top of his creſt [a]; and to ſuch enſigns is the alluſion here.

[s] Alexander was remarkable for the agility of his body, as appeared by his mounting his horſe Bucephalus *, to the admiration of his father, and all that beheld him; as well as famous for the quick marches of his army, and his very ſwift and expeditious execution of his deſigns. Plurimum pedum celeritate pollebat; he greatly excelled in ſwiftneſs of foot, ſays the hiſtorian: and again, armatuſque de navi, tripudianti ſimilis proſiluit; he leaped armed out of the ſhip, like one that danced †. And he himſelf, ſpeaking of the countries he had conquered, ſays, quas tanta velocitate domuimus: and elſewhere, cujus velocitatem nemo valuiſſet effugere. And of Beſſus it is ſaid, that Alexandri celeritate perterritus. And Cobares, the magician, calls him, velociſſimus rex ‡. ℣. 6. And he came to the ram that had two horns, &c.] Alexander being choſen and made by the ſtates of Greece captain-general of all Greece againſt the Perſians; marched from thence with his army, paſſed the Helleſpont, and entered into the kingdom of the Medes and Perſians, ſignified by the ram with two horns, and came up to Darius Codomannus, poſſeſſed of this large monarchy, and at the head of a numerous army: which I had ſeen ſtanding before the river; the river Ulai, near to Shuſhan, the royal ſeat of the kings of Perſia; here Darius ſtood in his royal majeſty and dignity, as the defender of his empire, and unconcerned at the attempt of Alexander, having nothing to fear, as he thought, from ſuch a puny adverſary: and ran unto him in the fury of his power; or, heat of his power [b]; which denotes the haſte Alexander made with his army into Aſia; his eager deſire, and the fervour of his mind to engage with the Perſians: the hiſtorian ſays, that he paſſed the Helleſpont into Aſia, incredibli ardore mentis accenſus; fired with an incredible ardour of mind: and a little after, having conquered the rebels of Piſidia, he marched againſt Darius, ſummo mentis ardore; with the greateſt ardour of mind, and with no leſs alacrity [c]; which exactly agrees with the ſacred text. The running of the he-goat to the ram in an hoſtile way, is deſcribed in alluſion to the manner of thoſe creatures when they fight with one another, or attack an enemy.

℣. 7. And I ſaw him come cloſe unto the ram, &c.] Tho' the diſtance between Greece and Perſia was very great, and many rivers and mountains in the way, which ſeemed unpaſſable; Alexander got over them all, and came up to Darius, and fought ſeveral battles with him, and entirely defeated him, tho' greatly inferior in number to him, as follows: and he was moved with choler againſt him; exceedingly imbittered againſt him; exaſperated and provoked to the laſt degree by the proud and ſcornful meſſage he ſent him; calling himſelf king of kings, and a-kin to the gods, and Alexander his ſervant; ordering his nobles to take Philip's madding ſtripling, as he called him in contempt, and whip him with children's rods, and clothe him in purple, and deliver him bound to him; then ſink his ſhips with the mariners, and tranſport all his ſoldiers to the further part of the Red-ſea [d]: and ſmote the ram; in three battels, in each of which the Perſians were ſmitten and routed by the Grecians: firſt at the river Granicus, where Alexander with thirty thouſand foot, and five thouſand horſe, met the Perſians, tho' more than five times his number, being, as Juſtin [e] ſays, ſix hundred thouſand, and got the victory over them; here twenty thouſand of the Perſian foot, and two hundred and fifty of their horſe, were ſlain, and not more than thirty-nine of the Macedonians killed [f]: Plutarch [g] ſays, it was reported that the Perſians loſt twenty thouſand foot, and two thouſand five hundred horſe; and from Ariſtobulus he ſays, that the Macedonians loſt only thirty-four men, of which twelve were footmen: and Diodorus Siculus [h] relates, that the Perſians loſt more than ten thouſand foot, and not leſs than two thouſand horſe, and more than twenty thouſand were taken: according to Juſtin [i], of Alexander's army there only fell nine foot, and a hundred and twenty horſe: others ſay, that of the Macedonians, twenty-five men of Alexander's own troop fell in the firſt attack, about ſixty other of the horſe were killed, and thirty of the foot [k]; ſo different are the accounts of the ſlain in this battel; however, the victory appears to be very great, whereby Sardis, with all Darius's rich furniture, fell into the hands of Alexander, and all the provinces of the leſſer Aſia ſubmitted to him. The next battel was fought at Iſſus in Cilicia, where Darius had an army, according to Plutarch [l], conſiſting of ſix hundred thouſand men; according to Juſtin [m], four hundred thouſand foot, and a hundred thouſand horſe, which was routed by Alexander; when a hundred thouſand of the Perſian foot, and ten thouſand of their horſe, were ſlain; and only on Alexander's ſide, five hundred and four of the foot wounded, thirty-two wanting, and a hundred and fifty of the horſe killed [n]: here alſo the accounts vary; Plutarch [o] ſays above a hundred and ten thouſand of the Perſians were ſlain: according to Diodorus Siculus [p], there fell of them an hundred and twenty thouſand foot, and not leſs than ten thouſand horſe; and of the Macedonians, three hundred foot, and about an hundred and fifty horſe: according to Arrian [q], the Perſians loſt ten thouſand horſe, and ninety thouſand foot: according to Juſtin [r], ſixty-one thouſand foot, and ten thouſand horſe, were ſlain, and forty thouſand taken; and of the Macedonians, there fell one hundred and thirty foot, and one hundred and fifty horſe; but be it as it will, the victory was exceeding great, whereby the camp of Darius, his mother, wife, and children, and all his riches at Damaſcus, fell into the hands of Alexander, with all Syria. The third and laſt battel was fought near Arbela, or rather at Gaugamela in Aſſyria, when Alexander with fifty thouſand men, beat Darius with an army of eleven hundred thouſand men; Plutarch [s] ſays ten hundred thouſand; forty thouſand of which were ſlain, and of the Macedonians only three hundred or leſs were wanting [t]; according to Arrian [u] thirty thouſand were ſlain; but Diodorus Siculus [w] ſays ninety thouſand: this was the deciſive battel; after this Babylon and Perſepolis were taken by Alexander, and he became maſter of the whole empire, which is intended in the next clauſe: and brake his two horns; conquered the Medes and Perſians, the two kingdoms united in one monarchy, but now deſtroyed; another monarchy, the Grecian, took its place: and there was no power in the ram to ſtand before him; there was no ſtrength in the whole empire ſufficient to reſiſt, oppoſe, and ſtop him; tho' vaſt armies were collected together, theſe were ſoon broken and routed, and Darius at the head of them was forced to fly, and make his eſcape in the beſt manner he could: but he caſt him down to the ground, and ſtamped upon him; not Darius perſonally, for he was ſlain by Beſſus, one of his own captains; but the Perſian empire, it ceaſed to be, and was no longer in the hands of the Perſians, but was taken from them by Alexander; and all the glory and majeſty of it were defaced and deſpiſed; the famous city and palace of Perſepolis were burnt in a drunken fit, at the inſtigation of Thais the harlot: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand; not his armies, nor his generals, nor his allies, nor his offers to Alexander of his daughter in marriage, and part of his kingdom; all were in vain, and to no purpoſe; he and his whole empire fell into the conqueror's hands, and there was no remedy againſt it. Joſephus[x] ſays, that when Alexander was in his way to Jeruſalem, Jaddus the high-prieſt met and accompanied him into the city and temple, and ſhewed him this prophecy of Daniel, that ſome one of the Grecians ſhould aboliſh the empire of the Perſians; and thinking himſelf to be intended, was greatly pleaſed. Gorionides[y] ſays the high-prieſt, whom he calls Ananias, ſaid to Alexander on ſhewing him the prophecy, thou art this he-goat, and Darius is the ram; and thou ſhalt trample him to the ground, and take the kingdom out of his hand; and he greatly ſtrengthened the heart of the king.

℣. 8. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great, &c.] The Grecian monarchy under Alexander became very powerful, and was very extenſive; he not only conquered the Perſian empire, but alſo the Indies, yea the whole world as he imagined; and indeed he did bring into ſubjection to him the greateſt part of the then known world; and he was very great in his own eſteem, at leaſt, reckoned himſelf Lord of the world, called himſelf the ſon of Jupiter Ammon, and affected to be worſhipped as a god: and when he was ſtrong, the great horn was broken; when the Grecian monarchy was eſtabliſhed, and became very powerful, and reached to the greateſt part of the earth, then Alexander the firſt king of it, a great horn, and powerful monarch, died, or was broken; not as the two horns of the ram, by the power of the enemy; not by violence, but by intemperance, in a drunken fit, or as was ſuſpected, by poiſon; and that when he was in the height of his glory, ſwelled with his victories; and that in the prime of his days, when in his full ſtrength, being in the thirty third year of his age: and for it, or in the room and ſtead of it[z], came up four notable ones; or, four horns of viſion[a]; very famous and conſpicuous, like that in ℣. 5. which were the four kingdoms into which the empire was divided ſome time after Alexander's death, and the four kings that were over them: the kingdoms were thoſe of Egypt, Greece, Aſia, and Syria. Ptolemy was king of Egypt, to which belonged Lybia, Paleſtine, Arabia, and Cæleſyria. Caſſander was king of Macedonia and Greece. Lyſimachus was king of Aſia, to which belonged Thrace, Bithynia, and other places; and Seleucus was king of Syria, and of the eaſtern countries: theſe are the four heads of the leopard or third beaſt, which ſignifies the Grecian monarchy, ch. vii. 6. and theſe were toward the four winds of heaven; eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth: Egypt with its appendages lay to the ſouth; Aſia and what belonged to that to the north; Macedonia and Greece to the weſt; and Syria to the eaſt: and thus was the Grecian empire divided into four kingdoms among the ſucceſſors of Alexander: there were ſome partitions of it before this into provinces among governors, under the brother and ſon of Alexander; but after the battel of Ipſus, in which Antigonus, one of Alexander's captains, and a very principal, active and ambitious man, was ſlain, and his army routed; the four confederate princes againſt him, above named, divided by conſent the empire between them into ſeparate kingdoms, and became really, and not in title only, kings of them[b]; which is what is here propheſied of.

℣. 9. And out of one of them came forth a little horn, &c.] Meaning not the kingdom of Titus Veſpaſian, as Jarchi; nor the kingdom of the Turks, as Saadiah; but the kingdom of Antiochia, as Aben Ezra and Jacchiades; or rather Antiochus Epiphanes, who ſprung from the kingdom of the Seleucidæ in Syria, or from Seleucus king of Syria, one of the four horns before-mentioned: this is that ſinful root, ſaid to come out from thence, 1 Mac. i. 11. called a horn, becauſe he had ſome power and authority, and which he uſurped and increaſed in; tho' but a little one in compariſon of Alexander the great horn; or at his beginning, being an hoſtage at Rome; from whence he got away by ſtealth, and ſeized the kingdom of Syria, which belonged to his elder brother's ſon, whom he diſpoſſeſſed of it; and by mean, artful and deceitful methods got it into his hands, who had no right unto it, nor any princely qualities for it: which waxed exceeding great toward the ſouth; towards Egypt, which lay ſouth of Syria; into which Antiochus entered, and fought againſt Ptolemy Philometer king of it, took many cities, and beſieged Alexandria; and in all probability would have ſubdued the whole country, had not the Romans[c] reſtrained him, by ſending their embaſſador Popilius to him, who obliged him to deſiſt and depart; ſee 1 Mac. i. 17, 18, 19, 20: and toward the eaſt; towards Armenia and Perſia, the Atropatii in Media, and the countries beyond the Euphrates, whom he made tributary to him; ſee 1 Mac. iii. 31. and vi. 1, 2: and toward the pleaſant land; the land of Judea, ſo called becauſe of its delightful ſituation, and great fruitfulneſs; and becauſe God choſe it above all others for his habitation; where his word, and worſhip, and ordinances were obſerved and enjoyed; and where the Meſſiah ſhould be born and dwell; into this Antiochus led his army, and greatly afflicted and diſtreſſed it; he made himſelf maſter of moſt places in Galilee and Judea. The Arabic verſion reads, toward the weſt; no mention is made of the north, becauſe there he himſelf reigned; Syria being north to Egypt, as that was ſouth to Syria; hence afterwards the king of Egypt is called the king of the ſouth, and the king of Syria the king of the north.

℣. 10. And it waxed great, even to the hoſt of heaven, &c.] The people of the Jews, the army of the living God, the church militant, among whom were many of the citizens of heaven, whoſe names are written there; ſuch was the inſolence of this king, as to moleſt and diſturb them: and it caſt down ſome of the hoſt, and of the ſtars to the ground, and ſtamped upon them; ſome of the common people he perſecuted and deſtroyed, or prevailed upon them, either by threats or flatteries, to relinquiſh their religion; and even ſome of the ſtars, the lights of the people, the prieſts and Levites that miniſtred unto them; or the princes, prieſts and elders of the people whom he ſlew, as Jacchiades interprets it; or removed from their poſts, ſo that they could not do their office; or they turned apoſtates, and thoſe that did not, he barbarouſly put to death, and inſulted over them, and uſed them in a very contemptuous manner, as old Eleazar, the mother, and her ſeven ſons; ſee 2 Maccab.

[c] See Joſeph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 5. §. 2.

℣. 11. Yea, he magnified himſelf even to the prince of the hoſt, &c.] Either the high-prieſt Onias, whom he diſpoſſeſſed of his office, and put Jaſon a wicked man into it; or Judas Maccabeus, the prince of the Jewiſh nation; or rather, as Jacchiades, God himſelf, the Lord God of Iſrael, the king, prince, governor and defender of them, whom Antiochus blaſphemed; whoſe worſhip he put a ſtop to; and whoſe temple he profaned, and ill-uſed his people; all which was againſt God himſelf, and is a proof of the pride and inſolence of this king: and by him the daily ſacrifice was taken away; the lambs in the morning and evening were forbid to be ſacrificed; or they could not be offered, becauſe the altar was pulled down or profaned; and ſo all other ſacrifices were made to ceaſe, as well as this, which is put for all: or, from him [d], the prince, the daily ſacrifice was taken away; either from the prieſt, who uſed to offer it; or from God, to whom it was offered: and the place of his ſanctuary was caſt down; not that the temple was deſtroyed by him, but it was profaned and rendered uſeleſs; the worſhip of God was not carried on in it, but the image of Jupiter was ſet up in it, and it was devoted to the ſervice of an idol; yea, the altar was pulled down, and all the veſſels and ornaments of the temple were taken away and deſtroyed; ſee 1 Maccab. i. 22. &c. and iii. 45, 52.

℣. 12. And an hoſt was given him againſt the daily ſacrifice, by reaſon of tranſgreſſion, &c.] Which ſome interpret of a garriſon of ſoldiers placed by Antiochus, thro' his ſin and wickedneſs, to hinder the oblation of the daily ſacrifice, as Grotius: others, of an hoſt of apoſtates among the Jews, who adviſed Antiochus againſt the daily ſacrifice, and to kill ſwine, and offer them on the altar, as Jacchiades; or rather it may be rendered, and the hoſt was given over, or delivered, i. e. to the enemy, becauſe of the tranſgreſſion againſt the daily ſacrifice [e]; that is, becauſe of the tranſgreſſion of the prieſts, or the people in neglecting the daily ſacrifice, the hoſt or people of the Jews were delivered up into the hands of Antiochus; or they were delivered up together with the daily ſacrifice, for their ſins [f]. The word צבא is by Jarchi and Ben Melech interpreted, a ſet time, a fixed time which ſhall have an end; and Calvin inclines to this ſenſe, that tho' the daily ſacrifice would be taken away, becauſe of the tranſgreſſion of the people, yet it was only for a certain time, and would be reſtored again when that time was up; and ſo is ſpoken for the comfort of the Lord's people: and it caſt down the truth to the ground; that is, the little horn Antiochus, or his hoſt and army; he did all that in him lay to extirpate and aboliſh true religion and godlineſs; he cut in pieces the copies of the book of the law, and burnt them, called the law of truth in Mal. ii. 6. as Jacchiades obſerves, and put to death the profeſſors of the truth; and ſhewed all the contempt of true doctrine and worſhip he was capable of; ſee 1 Mac. i. 59, 60: and it practiſed, and proſpered; he did what he pleaſed, and he ſucceeded in his attempts for a while, there being none to oppoſe him.

℣. 13. Then I heard one ſaint ſpeaking, &c.] An angel, either a created angel, pure and holy in his nature, as Gabriel; or the increated angel Jeſus Chriſt, the Word of God; what he was ſpeaking of, is not ſaid; perhaps Daniel did not hear what he ſaid, tho' he heard him ſpeaking, or perceived that he ſpake; yet did not underſtand what he ſaid, or what was the ſubject of his diſcourſe; very probable it was ſomething relative to the viſion now ſeen: and another ſaint ſaid unto that certain ſaint that ſpake; another angel ſaid to him that ſpake, whoſe name is unknown, only called ſuch a one, or Palmoni, which ſome render, the wonderful numberer; or the numberer of ſecrets, or that has all ſecrets numbered [g]; and apply it to Chriſt, whoſe name is Pele, wonderful; the eternal Word of God, that is in the boſom of the Father, and knows all ſecrets, and the number of times and ſeaſons, how long they will laſt; what created angels know not, he does; and therefore they apply to him for inſtruction and knowledge in hidden things: how long ſhall be the viſion concerning the daily ſacrifice, and the tranſgreſſion of deſolation, to give both the ſanctuary and the hoſt to be trodden under foot? that is, how long will this viſion laſt? or when will this prophecy be at an end, and have its full and final accompliſhment? how long will the ſacrifice be taken away, or made to ceaſe? how long will that tranſgreſſion, that abomination, making the temple deſolate, the image of Jupiter Olympius ſet up by Antiochus, continue in it? how long ſhall it be given to him, or he be permitted to tread under foot, and uſe in the moſt contemptuous manner the temple of the Lord and his people?

℣. 14. And he ſaid unto me, &c.] That is, Palmoni the wonderful perſon, to whom the angel put the above queſtion, gave the anſwer to it; not unto the angel that aſked it, but unto Daniel that ſtood by; knowing that it was for his and his people's ſake the queſtion was aſked, and therefore gave the anſwer to him, as follows: unto two thouſand and three hundred days; or ſo many mornings and evenings [h]; which ſhows that not ſo many years, as Jacchiades, and others, are meant; but natural days, conſiſting of twenty-four hours, and which make ſix years, three months, and eighteen days; and reckoning from the 15th day of the month Ciſleu, in the year 145 of the Seleucidæ, in which Antiochus ſet up the abomination of deſolation upon the altar, 1 Maccab. i. 57. to the victory obtained over Nicanor by Judas, on the 13th day of the month Adar, Anno 151, are juſt 2300 days; which day the Jews kept as an annual feaſt, in commemoration of that victory; and from that time enjoyed peace and reſt from war [i]: this way goes L'Empereur after Capellus; but others begin from the defection of the people from the pure religion by Menelaus, Anno 141; tho' Antiochus did not enter on his impieties till the following year; and reckoning from the 6th day of the 6th month in that year, to the 25th day of Ciſleu in the year 148, when the Jews offered the daily ſacrifice on the new altar of burnt-offerings, 1 Maccab. iv. 52. were juſt ſix years, three months, and eighteen days: and ſo it follows, and then ſhall the ſanctuary be cleanſed; as it was by Judas Maccabeus at the time above-mentioned; when he purified the holy places, ſanctified the courts, rebuilt the altar, renewed the veſſels of the ſanctuary, and put all in their proper places; ſee 1 Maccab. iv. 41—51. Indeed, as Antiochus was a type of antichriſt, and his perſecution, of that deſolation made by antichriſt in the church; theſe 2300 days may be conſidered as ſo many years, which will bring it down to the end of the ſixth millennium, or thereabout; when it may be hoped there will be a new face of things upon the ſanctuary and church of God, and a cleanſing of it from all corruption in doctrine, diſcipline, worſhip and converſation.

ỳ. 15. And it came to paſs when I, even I Daniel had ſeen the viſion, &c.] The whole of the preceding viſion, concerning the ram, he-goat, and little horn, and what were done by them; the prophet not only affirms he ſaw this viſion, but repeats the affirmation, expreſſing his own name, partly for the ſake of emphaſis, and partly for the greater confirmation of his words; wherefore it was a moſt impudent thing in Porphyry to ſay, that the true Daniel never ſaw this viſion; but what is here related, was written after Antiochus's reign, and falſly aſcribed to him. It being ſo clear a prophecy concerning Alexander, and the deſtruction of the Perſian empire by him; this acute, ſpiteful heathen had no other way of evading the evidence of it in favour of true religion, but by this falſe and lying aſſertion: and I ſought for the meaning; that is, of the viſion; for a more perfect, clear and explicit meaning of it; ſomething he had learnt concerning the latter part of it, relating to the deſolation of the temple, and the continuance of it, from what paſſed between the two ſaints or angels; but he was deſirous of knowing more; which he either ſignified by making application to the angel that ſtood near him; or rather by ſecret ejaculations in prayer to God; and he, who is afterwards deſcribed as a man, tho' the eternal God that knows all things, knew the ſecret deſires of his ſoul, and immediately took care they ſhould be anſwered: then behold, there ſtood before me as the appearance of a man; not really a man, but in form and appearance; not Gabriel, or any created angel in human form, in which angels ſometimes appeared; but the eternal Son of God, who was to be incarnate, and was often ſeen in the form of a man before his incarnation; in like manner he was now ſeen by Daniel, right over-againſt [k] whom he ſtood: this is the ſame with the ſpeaking ſaint, or Palmoni the wonderful one in ỳ. 13. Jacchiades ſays, this is the holy bleſſed God; as it is indeed the Immanuel, God that was to be manifeſted in the fleſh.

ỳ. 16. And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, &c.] Near to which Daniel was, ỳ. 2. and it ſeemed to him as if the appearance of the man was in the midſt of the river, between the banks of it, from whence the voice came; or between the arms of it, it bending and winding about; or rather between Shuſhan and the river; or between the prophet and that: this voice was the voice of the perſon that appeared as a man in the preceding verſe: which called, and ſaid, Gabriel; the voice was loud, audible and commanding; even to an angel, one of great note, Gabriel, the man of God, the mighty one; and ſhows, that the perſon that made this appearance, and ſpoke in this authoritative way, was the Lord, and head of angels, even of all principalities and power, at whoſe beck and command they are: make this man to underſtand the viſion; the above viſion of the ram, he-goat, and little horn; give him a full explanation of it; tell him what the ſeveral figures mean, repreſented in it; that he may have a clear underſtanding of all things contained in it: the ſaints and people of God are ſometimes inſtructed by angels, and particularly the prophets of old were; and which was more common in the times of the former diſpenſation, than now; for God has not put in ſubjection to angels the world to come, or the goſpel-diſpenſation, Heb. ii. 5.

ỳ. 17. So he came near where I ſtood, &c.] The angel immediately obeyed the divine perſon in human form, and came near the prophet, in order to inſtruct him, and carry on a familiar converſation with him: and when he came, I was afraid, and fell upon my face; not being able to bear the glory that attended him; and eſpecially when he conſidered him as the meſſenger of a divine perſon ſent to inſtruct him, and being conſcious of his own frailty and weakneſs: but he ſaid unto me, underſtand, O ſon of man; give attention in order to underſtand the viſion, which the angel, by a divine command, was about to give him the full meaning of; and which he could not ſo well attend unto in his preſent circumſtance and poſture; and therefore ſuggeſts he ſhould ſhake off his fear, and ſtand on his feet, and liſten to what he was about to ſay: he calls him, ſon of man, a title only given to him and Ezekiel; and ſo may be conſidered as a mark of honour and reſpect, as being one greatly beloved and honoured by the Lord; or to expreſs his tender regard to him, and accommodating himſelf to him, conſidering he was a frail mortal man; or to put him in mind that he ſhould ſo conſider himſelf, tho' now among angels, and favoured with revelations of ſecrets, that ſo he might not be exalted with them above meaſure: for at the time of the end ſhall be the viſion; or rather, for a time is the end of the viſion [l]; there is a ſet, fixed and determined time, when the viſion ſhall end, and have its full accompliſhment; namely, when the 2300 days are expired.

ỳ. 18. Now as he was ſpeaking with me, &c.] Addreſſing him in the above manner: I was in a deep ſleep on my face toward the ground; thro' fear he fell proſtrate to the ground, and ſwooned away, which iſſued in a deep ſleep; and ſo was unfit to attend to the explanation of the viſion the angel was ſent to give him; and which was not thro' indifferency to it, or neglect of it; but thro' human weakneſs, his nature not being able to bear up under ſuch circumſtances, which ſtruck him with ſuch fear and dread: but he touched me, and ſet me upright; he jogged him out of his ſleep, and took him, and raiſed him up, and ſet him on his feet; or, on his ſtanding [m]; which Ben Melech explains, as he was ſtanding at firſt; and ſo in a better poſture to attend to what was about to be revealed unto him.

[k] לנגדי ex adverſo mei, Michaelis.

℣. 19. And he ſaid, behold, I will make thee know, &c.] Or, make known unto thee [n]; what he knew not, even things future: particularly what ſhall be in the laſt end of the indignation; the indignation of God againſt the people of Iſrael, in the ſore affliction and perſecution of them by Antiochus, which he ſuffered to be; here the angel ſuggeſts that that ſhould not remain always, but ſhould have an end; and he would inform the prophet what ſhould be at the cloſe; or rather, as Noldius [o] renders it, what ſhall be unto the laſt end of the indignation; all that ſhould come to paſs from the beginning of the Perſian monarchy, ſignified by the ram, quite thro' the Grecian monarchy, deſigned by the he-goat, unto the end of the perſecution by Antiochus; for certain it is, the angel informed the prophet of more things than what concerned the laſt part, and cloſing ſcene of theſe ſorrowful times; even of all the above-ſaid things, which intervened between the ſetting up of the Perſian monarchy, and the ſufferings of the Jews in the times of Antiochus; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it, here "is declared the wrath of God "upon Iſrael in the days of wicked Greece, and "in the days of Antiochus, until the Haſmonæans "cleanſed the temple:" for at the time appointed the end ſhall be; the end of that indignation or affliction, and ſo of this viſion or prophecy: there was a time appointed by God for the fulfilment of the whole; and when that time was come, all would be accompliſhed; the indignation would ceaſe, and the perſecution be at an end.

℣. 20. The ram which thou ſaweſt having two horns, &c.] Here begins the particular explanation of the above viſion, and of the firſt thing which the prophet ſaw in it, a ram with two horns: which two horns, he ſays, are the kings of Media and Perſia; Darius the firſt king was a Mede, and Cyrus that ſucceeded him, or rather reigned with him, was a Perſian: or rather the ram with two horns ſignifies the two kingdoms of the Medes and Perſians united in one monarchy, of which the ram was an emblem; ſee the note on ℣. 3. for Darius and Cyrus were dead many years before the time of Alexander; and therefore could not perſonally be the two horns of the ram broken by him; nor is it to be underſtood of the kings of two different families, as the one of Cyrus, and the other of Darius Hyſtaſpes, in whoſe ſucceſſors the Perſian monarchy continued till deſtroyed by Alexander, as Theodoret.

℣. 21. And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, &c.] Including all the kings of it, from Alexander to the end of the Grecian monarchy; or rather the kingdom of Greece, which began in him, and continued until it was deſtroyed by the Romans: this was ſignified by the rough or hairy goat, eſpecially when Alexander was at the head of it, for his ſtrength and proweſs, his ſwiftneſs in his marches over rocks and mountains, his majeſty and grandeur, and alſo his luſt and uncleanneſs; ſee the note on ℣. 5: and the great horn that is between his eyes, is the firſt king; this is Alexander, who, tho' he was not the firſt king of Macedon, his father Philip, and others were kings before him; yet was the firſt king of the Grecian monarchy, which took place on the Perſian monarchy being deſtroyed by him.

℣. 22. Now that being broken, &c.] That is, the great horn Alexander, the firſt king of the Grecian monarchy; whoſe death, either by drunkenneſs, or by poiſon, is here expreſſed by being broken. The ſenſe is, he being dead, or upon his death, whereas four ſtood up for it; four horns roſe up in the room and ſtead of the great one broken; ſee ℣. 8. theſe ſignified that four kingdoms ſhall ſtand up out of the nation; which were the kingdoms of Egypt, Aſia, Macedonia and Syria, into which the Grecian monarchy was divided after the death of Alexander; and the firſt kings of them were all of the Grecian or Macedonian nation, and not Egyptians, Armenians, Syrians, &c. but not in his power; they did not riſe and ſtand up in the power and ſtrength, in the grandeur and magnificence of Alexander; they were not equal, but greatly inferior to him, tho' they were notable horns, or famous kingdoms, as in ℣. 8. Saadiah interprets it, not of his ſeed or offſpring; theſe were not his ſons that were the heads of theſe kingdoms, but his captains or generals.

℣. 23. And in the latter time of their kingdom, &c.] Toward the cloſe of the kingdom of the four kings that divided Alexander's kingdom; for tho' they were four diſtinct kings, and had four ſeparate kingdoms, yet theſe all belonged to one kingdom or monarchy, the Grecian empire; and when that was decreaſing, and coming into the hands of the Romans, there roſe up, ſtood and flouriſhed a while, king Antiochus, afterwards deſcribed, who began to reign in the hundred and thirty-ſeventh year of the Seleucidæ, 1 Mac. i. 11. and above a hundred and ſixty-ſix years before Chriſt; and the ſame year that he ſet up the abomination of deſolation in the temple at Jeruſalem, as Mr. Mede [p] has obſerved, Æmilius the Roman conſul conquered Perſeus king of Macedon, whereby all Greece came into the hands of the Romans; ſo that this king may be truly ſaid to ariſe and ſtand in the latter part of the Grecian empire, when that was declining, and the Roman empire was taking place: when the tranſgreſſors are come to the full; many among the Jews who apoſtatized from their religion turned heathens, even ſome of the prieſts, when their number was completed, and they had filled up the meaſure of their iniquities; ſee 1 Mac. i. 12, &c. a king of fierce countenance, and underſtanding dark ſentences, ſhall ſtand up; meaning Antiochus, as is generally agreed, both by Jewiſh and Chriſtian interpreters, and to whom theſe characters agree: he was hard of face [q], as it may be rendered; an impudent brazen-faced man, who had no ſhame nor fear in him; regarded neither God nor man; committed the moſt atrocious crimes, in the moſt public manner; and particularly was daring and impudent in his blaſphemy againſt God, and the true religion; and it may alſo ſignify that he was cruel, barbarous and inhuman, eſpecially to the Jews, as his perſecution of them abundantly proves: and his underſtanding dark ſentences, or riddles [r], which he could both propoſe and anſwer, ſhews him to be ſagacious and cunning, well verſed in wicked craft and policy; he had the art of inveigling and deceiving men; it was by deceit and cunning he got the kingdom from his nephew; and by the wicked art of perſuaſion he was maſter of, he ſeduced many of the Jews to relinquiſh their religion, and embrace heatheniſm; and ſo well ſkilled he was in wicked politicks, that he could cover his own deſigns, and penetrate into the ſecrets of others; according to Jacchiades, he was ſkilful in the art of magic and aſtrology. This is the little horn that was to riſe out of one of the four horns or kingdoms; as Antiochus did from that of Seleucus, and ſtood and reigned above 12 years.

ỷ. 24. And his power ſhall be mighty, but not by his own power, &c.] He ſhould poſſeſs a large kingdom, and that ſhould be increaſed by conqueſts; but not in his power [s], the power of Alexander; he ſhould not arrive to that greatneſs he did, as in ỷ. 22. ſo Jacchiades: or, in his own power [t]; for it was not ſo much by his own courage and valour, by any heroic actions of Antiochus, he became ſo great, as by craft and deceit: through ſedition he procured the death of his father and elder brother; and by fraud got the kingdom from his nephew; and thro' the perfidy of Menelaus and Jaſon, the high-prieſts of the Jews, and other apoſtates, he obtained what dominion he had over the Jews; and it was by the aſſiſtance of Eumenes king of Pergamus, and his brother Attalus, that he kept the kingdom he had uſurped, who ſtood by him, in order to check the growing power of the Romans; and more eſpecially it was by a power given him from above, or by the permiſſion and providence of God, who ſuffered him to be ſo great, and to prevail particularly over the Jews; becauſe of their ſins, as Aben Ezra and Saadiah obſerve, to chaſtiſe them for them: ſo his antitype, antichriſt, became great and powerful, thro' craft and policy, and by the help of the ten kings that gave their kingdoms to him: and he ſhall deſtroy wonderfully; or beyond all credit, countries, cities, towns, and their inhabitants; he ſlew fourſcore thouſand Jews in three days time, bound forty thouſand, and ſold as many, 2 Maccab. v. 14. or, he ſhall deſtroy wonderful things [u]; the temple, and the wonderful things, the things of worth and value in it, ſo Saadiah and Jacchiades; he took away the veſſels of the temple, the golden lamps, the ark, and table of gold, &c: and ſhall proſper and practiſe; for a while do what he pleaſed, none being able to oppoſe and hinder him; ſee ỷ. 12: and ſhall deſtroy the mighty, and the holy people; by the mighty may be meant the Egyptians, Parthians, and other nations he made war with; and by the holy people the Jews, who were ſanctified and ſeparated from other people by the Lord, to be a peculiar people; among whom were his holy temple, his holy prieſts, his holy word, ordinances, and worſhip; multitudes of theſe he deſtroyed, as before obſerved. Jacchiades interprets this of the ſons of Aaron, the holy prieſts of the Lord, whom he ſlew.

ỷ. 25. And through his policy alſo he ſhall cauſe craft to proſper in his hand, &c.] His ſchemes were laid in ſuch deep policy, and he managed ſo artfully and craftily in the execution of them, that he commonly ſucceeded; as in getting the kingdom of Syria from his nephew; and under a pretence of peace and friendſhip, and to defend Philometer king of Egypt, a minor, and by large promiſes to the nobles of the land, made himſelf maſter of it; and by deceitful methods he prevailed in Judea; ſee ch. xi. 21, 23, 24: and he ſhall magnify himſelf in his heart; ſwell with pride, on account of ſucceſs, thro' his policy, craft, and cunning, and think himſelf above all mortals, and equal to God himſelf; yea, as his antitype antichriſt, exalt himſelf above all that is called God; fanſy that he could command the ſeas, weigh the mountains in ſcales, and reach heaven itſelf, 2 Maccab. ix. 8: and by peace ſhall deſtroy many; under a pretence of peace enter into countries, and deſtroy the inhabitants of them, as in Egypt and Judea; or by leagues and treaties of peace, outwitting thoſe he made peace with; ſo ſome politick princes do themſelves more ſervice, and their enemies more hurt by treaties, than by battels: or, in peace [w]; when at peace with them, or while they are in peace and tranquillity; coming upon them unexpectedly, at an unawares, when they did not ſo much as dream of war: he ſhall alſo ſtand up againſt the prince of princes; not the high-prieſt, as Grotius; nor Michael, as Aben Ezra; but God himſelf, as Saadiah and Jacchiades; who is King of kings, and Lord of lords, the only potentate, to whom all the princes above and below are ſubject; him Antiochus ſtood up againſt, when he profaned his temple at Jeruſalem, forbid his worſhip, perſecuted and deſtroyed his people, and ſet up the image of Jupiter in his houſe: but he ſhall be broken without hand; alluding to his being a horn; it is expreſſive of his death, and the manner of it; that he ſhould not die by the hand of an enemy in battel, nor be aſſaſſinated by the hand of a ruffian, but be cut off by the immediate hand of God. Jacchiades ſays, that by the providence of God he fell ill of a bad diſeaſe, and at the cry of one of his elephants, his chariot was over-turned, and he fell on the ground, and his bones were broken. Of his death, and the manner of it, ſee 1 Maccab. vi. 8. 2 Maccab. ix. 5, 9. which was much like that of Herod's, Acts xii. 24. being ſtricken with a violent diſorder in his bowels; his body covered with worms; his fleſh flaked off, and emitted ſuch a ſtench, as was intolerable to his army. Aben Ezra ſays, he fell from the roof of a houſe, and was broken, and died.

ỷ. 26. And the viſion of the evening and the morning which was told, is true, &c.] That is, of the 2300 evenings and mornings, or natural days; unto which time the daily ſacrifice was to ceaſe, and the ſanctuary and hoſt trodden under foot; and then the ſanctuary would be cleanſed. This account is true, and not only to be believed, but is clear and plain, and to be literally underſtood of ſo many days, or ſuch a term of time exactly, having no obſcurity in it: wherefore ſhut thou up the viſion; the whole viſion of the ram and he-goat, and the little horn: the meaning is, that he ſhould keep it to himſelf, and conceal it from men; not from his own people, for whoſe ſake it was given, but from the Chaldeans, whoſe deſtruction was near; and who would be ſucceeded by the Perſians, who might be diſguſted with this prophecy, ſhould they ſee it, it foretelling the deſtruction of their empire: or this order was given to ſuggeſt to Daniel, that the fulfilment of it would be deferred ſome time, during which it would not be ſo eaſy to be underſtood, as when it was near accompliſhing and accompliſhed; and then prophecy and facts might be compared together: for it ſhall be for many days; it were three hundred years or more, from the reign of Belſhazzar to the death of Antiochus, in which this viſion ends.

℣. 27. And I Daniel fainted and was ſick certain days, &c.] Or, then I Daniel fainted [x]; after he had ſeen the viſion, and had thought upon it, and conſidered the afflictions that were to come upon the people of God, and the condition the temple, and the worſhip of it, would be in; theſe ſo affected his mind, that he not only fainted away, and was ſtruck with a kind of ſtupor and amazement, but had a fit of illneſs upon him, which continued ſome days; ſuch a nearneſs and ſympathy there are between the ſoul and body: afterwards I roſe up; from the bed in which he had laid ſome days ill: and did the king's buſineſs; by which it appears, that upon the death of Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel was as yet continued in the ſervice of the king of Babylon, tho' perhaps not in the ſame poſts as before, and was not a favourite at court, and ſo much known as he had been; and alſo that he was not in reality at Shuſhan, when he had this viſion, but at Babylon: and I was aſtoniſhed at the viſion; at the things contained in it, which were of ſo much importance, reſpecting the kingdoms of the earth, eſpecially the Perſian and Grecian empires, and the ſtate of his own people the Jews: but none underſtood it; to whom he ſhewed it; none but himſelf, who was made to underſtand it by the angel, ℣. 16, 17.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter contains a prayer of Daniel, and the anſwer to it. The time, occaſion, and manner of his prayer, or circumſtances of it, are obſerved, ℣. 1, 2, 3. the parts of it, an addreſs unto God under various ſuitable epithets and characters, ℣. 4. confeſſion of ſin, of his own, of the inhabitants of the land, kings, princes, and people, which are largely dwelt upon and exaggerated, ℣. 5—15. and petitions for mercy, ℣. 16, 17, 18, 19. then the anſwer follows; the time when it was ordered and given, and the perſon by whom it was ſent, are expreſſed, ℣. 20, 21, 22, 23. who delivered to him the viſion of the ſeventy weeks to be conſidered by him; in which both the work of the Meſſiah, and the time of his coming, are clearly pointed out, ℣. 24, 25, 26, 27.

℣. 1. In the firſt year of Darius the ſon of Ahaſuerus, of the ſeed of the Medes, &c.] This is the ſame with Darius the Median, that took the kingdom after the death of Belſhazzar; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from Darius the Perſian; and yet Porphyry has the face to aſſert, that this was Darius the Perſian, under whom the temple was built, that Daniel might appear to live later than he did: Ahaſuerus, whoſe ſon he was, is not he that was the huſband of Eſther, and was many years later than this; but the ſame with Aſtyages king of the Medes, and who is called Ahaſuerus, Tobit xiv. 15. the father of Cyaxares, the ſame with this Darius, who was uncle to Cyrus that conquered Babylon, and made him king of it, and of the whole empire; for this was not the firſt year of his reign over Media, where he had reigned many years before, but over Chaldea, as follows: which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans; by Cyrus his nephew; who having taken Babylon, and ſettled his affairs, undertook a journey to Perſia, and made Media in his way; where he met with his uncle Cyaxares, the ſame with this Darius, and delivered the kingdom of Babylon to him, and married his daughter, with whom he had for her dowry the kingdom of Media, as Xenophon [y] relates. Now it was in the firſt year of his reign over the Chaldeans, that Daniel had the following viſion of the ſeventy weeks; which, according to Biſhop Uſher [z] and Mr. Whiſton [a], was in the year of the Julian period 4177, and before Chriſt 537. Dean Prideaux [b] places it in the year 538; and Mr. Bedford [c] in the year 536.

℣. 2. In the firſt year of his reign, &c.] Which was alſo the firſt of Cyrus, who was partner with him in the kingdom; in which year ended the ſeventy years captivity of the Jews, and proclamation was made to have their liberty to go up to Jeruſalem, and build the temple, Ezra i. 1, 2. reckoning from the third, or the beginning of the fourth, of Jehoiakim king of Judah, when the deſolation of the land began, and Daniel himſelf was carried captive; and which was the firſt year of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, during whoſe reign, and that of his ſon, and ſon's ſon, the Jews were to be detained captives, Dan. i. 1. Jer. xxv. 1. and xxvii. 7. I Daniel underſtood by books; the ſacred ſcriptures, which, tho' a prophet, he was not above reading; and tho' a prime miniſter of ſtate, yet found time to look into theſe divine oracles; which he read, ſtudied, thoroughly conſidered, and well weighed in his mind; whereby he came to have knowledge of the number of the years whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accompliſh ſeventy years in the deſolations of Jeruſalem; Daniel might poſſibly have heard this prophecy of Jeremiah from his own mouth, before he went to Babylon; ſince the firſt intimation of it was in the firſt year of Jehoiakim, Jer. xxvii. 1, 7. and after this the prophecy might be ſent to Babylon for the uſe of the captive Jews there; and indeed, a copy of all his prophecies was no doubt brought thither at the laſt captivity of the people; ſo that it is eaſy to account for it, how Daniel came by it; and it is plain it was now before him; for he uſes the very word חרבות deſolations, which Jeremiah does, ch. xxv. 9, 11. the prophecy of the ſeventy years captivity, and of deliverance from it at the expiration of that term, ſtands in ch. xxv. 12. and xxix. 10. which Daniel carefully read over, thoroughly conſidered, and as he full well knew what was the epocha of them, or when they begun, he found that they were juſt ready to expire; and this ſet him to the work of prayer, as in the following verſes. From hence it is manifeſt, that the law was not burnt, nor the ſcriptures loſt, in the Babyloniſh captivity; ſo that none knew what were or would be done by the Lord, as is falſely aſſerted in 4 Eſdr. xiv. 21, &c.

℣. 3. And I ſet my face unto the Lord God to ſeek by prayer and ſupplications, &c.] He ſet apart ſome time on purpoſe for this ſervice, diſtinct from his uſual ſtated times of prayer, as well as from his civil buſineſs and employment; and he not only ſet his face toward Jeruſalem, as he uſed to do, ch. vi. 10. the more to affect his mind with the deſolations the city and temple lay in; but towards the Lord God, the ſovereign Lord of all, who does according to his will in heaven and in earth, the governor of the univerſe, the one true God, Father, Son, and Spirit: and this denotes the intenſeneſs of his ſpirit in prayer; the fixedneſs of his heart; the ardour of his mind; the fervency of his ſoul; his holy confidence in God; the freedom and boldneſs he uſed in prayer, and his conſtancy and continuance in it; which is a principal means, and a proper manner of ſeeking God. The Septuagint verſion, agreeable to the Hebrew text[d], renders it, to ſeek prayer and ſupplications; ſuch as were ſuitable and pertinent to the preſent caſe; moſt beneficial and intereſting to him and his people, and moſt acceptable to the Lord: with faſting, and ſackcloth, and aſhes; as was uſual on extraordinary occaſions, in times of public mourning; and this he did, to ſhew his ſenſe of the divine Being, and of his own unworthineſs to aſk or receive any thing of him; his great humiliation for the ſins of the people; and to diſtinguiſh this prayer of his from ordinary ones, and to affect his own heart in it, with the ſad condition his nation, city, and temple were in; and therefore abſtained from food for a time, put ſackcloth on his loins, and aſhes on his head, or ſat in them.

℣. 4. And I prayed unto the Lord my God, &c.] Not to idols, nor to angels or ſaints departed; but to the Lord God of heaven and earth, who is omniſcient, omnipotent, omnipreſent, &c. a God hearing and anſwering prayer; and to whom he directed his prayer, not only as the God of nature and providence, but as his own covenant-God and Father; thereby encouraging his faith in him, and uſing his intereſt with him: and made my confeſſion; of his own ſins, and of the ſins of his people; of the favours beſtowed on him and them; of his juſtice in afflicting them, and his mercy in appointing a time for their deliverance; of his own faith in him, love to him, and ſubmiſſion to his will: and ſaid, O Lord, the great and dreadful God; great in his being and perfections, and in all his works of nature, providence, and grace; and dreadful in his threatnings and judgments, in his wrath and vengeance: or, to be feared[e]; and reverenced by all men, eſpecially by his ſaints; and particularly when they draw near unto him, as Daniel now did; and that becauſe of his greatneſs and goodneſs: this Daniel obſerves, to raiſe in his mind a proper awe and reverence of God, whoſe preſence he was now approaching: keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments; faithful to his word of promiſe; large and liberal in the diſtribution of his grace and mercy to ſuch that love him ſincerely and heartily; and as an evidence of it, obſerve his precepts from a principle of love, and with a view to his glory: reſpect ſeems to be had to Exod. xx. 6. this is obſerved by the prophet, to encourage his own faith, and that of others, as to the fulfilment of the promiſe of their deliverance from captivity at the end of the ſeventy years; and to raiſe in his mind and theirs, love to God, who was thus merciful; and to ſhew the obligations they lay under, in gratitude to keep his commandments.

℣. 5. We have ſinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, &c.] Some think there is a gradation in theſe words; that they had committed ſome ſins thro' error and ignorance; others thro' infirmity and obliquity, or in the perverſeneſs of their ſpirits, and the crookedneſs of their ways; and others wilfully and in malice, in the wickedneſs of their hearts; and others were open acts of hoſtility againſt God, caſting off his yoke, and refuſing obedience to him, and obſtinately perſiſting therein. Jacchiades refers them to ſins of actions, words, and thoughts, which they proudly and preſumptuouſly committed. This heap of phraſes ſeems to be uſed to take in all kind of ſin committed by them, and rather to exaggerate than to extenuate them, and to confeſs them with all their aggravated circumſtances; and Daniel puts in himſelf among the body of the people, as being a member of it, and as well knowing he was not without ſin; and therefore willingly took his part in the blame of it, in confeſſion of it, and confuſion for it: even by departing from thy precepts, and from thy judgments; both of a moral and poſitive nature, which were enjoined by the law of Moſes, as the rule of their conduct; but from this they ſwerved.

℣. 6. Neither have we hearkened unto thy ſervants the prophets, &c.] To their explanations of the laws and judgments of God; to their admonitions, reproofs, and counſels; theſe they did not attentively liſten to, nor give credit to them, nor yield obedience to them; but deſpiſed and rejected them, tho' they were the true prophets and ſervants of the Lord; ſuch as Hoſea, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and others: which ſpake in thy name; they came by the authority of God, being ſent by him; they delivered their meſſage in his name, being his ambaſſadors; and which as it was an honour done to this people to have ſuch men ſent unto them, ſo it was an aggravation of their ſin that they ſhewed no reſpect to them; ſince their words were not their own, but the Lord's, which they ſpake to all ſorts of perſons: to our kings; one after another, as to Ahaz, Manaſſeh, Jehoiakim, Jechoniah, and Zedekiah; kings of the houſe of David, and over the land of Judah: our princes; princes of the blood, nobles, and courtiers: and our fathers; meaning not only their immediate anceſtors, but their ſubordinate rulers, civil magiſtrates, judges or elders of the people, as Jacchiades interprets it: and to all the people of the land; of Judea; the common people, as diſtinguiſhed from perſons of rank and figure before expreſſed. Theſe ſeveral perſons are named, partly to obſerve how faithful the prophets were in delivering their meſſage to all ſorts of perſons, high and low, not fearing the faces of any; and partly to ſhew that none could plead ignorance, or excuſe themſelves with that, ſince all had had ſufficient warning and inſtruction; as alſo to obſerve, that the ſin of rejecting the true prophets of the Lord was univerſal among them, all were guilty of it.

℣. 7. O Lord, righteouſneſs belongeth unto thee, &c.] It is eſſential to him, it is his nature, and appears in all his works; he is perfectly pure, holy and righteous; he is juſt, and without iniquity; and there is no unrighteouſneſs in him, nor any to be charged upon him, on account of any thing done by him: punitive juſtice belongs to him; nor is he to be complained of becauſe of his judgments, which are righteous altogether; nor had the prophet, or any of his countrymen, juſt reaſon to complain of the evils brought on them; the deſolations of their land, city, and temple, and their captivity in a ſtrange land; by all which no injuſtice was done, nor could they charge the Lord with any: and with him alſo is righteouſneſs wrought out by his Son, to juſtify ſinners that believe in him; he has accepted of it, and imputes it without works. But unto us confuſion of face, as at this day; both on account of their ſins, which ſtared them in the face, loaded their conſciences with guilt, and filled them with ſhame; and on account of their puniſhment, the miſerable condition in which their country was, and they themſelves were at that day; which declared to all the world what ſinners they had been, and what ſins they had committed, which had brought this ruin upon them, and them into ſuch ſad circumſtances: to the men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jeruſalem; or, man of Judah[r]; to every man of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; who once dwelt in that land flowing with milk and honey, and now in a ſtrange land for their ſins; and to every inhabitant of that renowned city of Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the nation, the ſeat of the kings of Judah; yea, the city of the great king, where the temple ſtood, and divine worſhip was performed, but now lay in ruins, through the iniquity of its inhabitants, and therefore had juſt reaſon to be aſhamed: and unto all Iſrael that are near, and that are afar off, through all the countries whither thou haſt driven them, becauſe of the treſpaſs that they have treſpaſſed againſt thee; ſhame and confuſion of face alſo belonged to the ten tribes of Iſrael; to ſuch of them as were mixed with the Jews in Babylon, or were in thoſe parts of Aſſyria that lay neareſt to it; and to thoſe that were at a greater diſtance, in Media, Iberia, Colchis, and other places; yea, in all kingdoms and countries where they were diſperſed for their treſpaſs againſt the Lord; particularly in worſhipping the calves at Dan and Bethel, and other acts of idolatry and impiety.

℣. 8. O Lord, to us belongeth confuſion of face, &c.] Which is repeated, to ſhew how much the mind of the prophet was affected with it, and to fix a ſenſe of it in the minds of others; as well as to ſuggeſt, that he wanted words fully to expreſs that ſhame that every one ought to take to themſelves; and alſo in order to introduce what follows, and that to obſerve that all ranks and degrees of men were concerned in it: to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, becauſe we have ſinned againſt thee; theſe had each of them ſinned againſt the Lord, by not hearkening to his prophets, who reproved them for their ſins, and warned them of their danger, ℣. 6. and therefore had reaſon to be aſhamed of them before him; as well as to obſerve the low eſtate in which the royal family, princes, elders, and people in Babylon were, being expoſed to ſhame and reproach before all the world.

℣. 9. To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgiveneſſes, &c.] Mercy is his nature, and what he delights in; it is abundant, and he is plenteous in it; the fountain of mercy is with him, and numerous are the ſtreams which flow from it, called the multitude of his tender mercies; all temporal favours ſpring from hence, and ſo do all ſpiritual bleſſings, the ſure mercies of David; and particularly the forgiveneſs of ſin, which is the Lord's prerogative, and is according to the tender mercies of our God, and the riches of his grace; and is of all ſins, and of all ſorts of ſinners; he doth abundantly pardon all that apply to him for it, and forgives all treſpaſſes; ſee Pſ. cxxx. 4, 7: tho' we have rebelled againſt him; there is mercy with the Lord, and forgiveneſs with him, even for rebellious ones; which is an exaggeration and illuſtration of his pardoning grace and mercy: or, for we have ſinned againſt him[s]; ſo that it is a plain caſe that he is merciful, and has forgiven our iniquities, ſince he has ſpared us, and not deſtroyed us, and now is about to put an end to our captivity, according to his promiſe; and if he had not mercy on us, and did not forgive our ſins, we muſt periſh in them, and there would be no hope of ſalvation for us.

℣. 10. Neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, &c.] Speaking in the law, and by his prophets; for what was ſpoken there, and by them, ſhould have been conſidered, not as the word of man, but as the word of God, and ſhould have been attended to and obeyed; for deſpiſing that and them, was interpreted a deſpiſing the Lord, and refuſing to hearken to him, and obey his voice; which was a ſin highly provoking to him, and reſented by him: to walk in his laws, which he ſet before us by his ſervants the prophets; by Moſes and others; for it ſeems to include the ſyſtem of laws which were delivered by Moſes, and were many; and the doctrines of the prophets, which were explications and enforcements of them: and theſe the Lord ſet before them by both, as a rule to walk by, and a path to walk in; and not to do this was very ſinful in them, and greatly diſpleaſing to him.

℣. 11. Yea, all Iſrael have tranſgreſſed thy law, &c.] Even God's profeſſing people, on whom he had beſtowed diſtinguiſhing favours and bleſſings, and gave them ſuch a law as no other people had, and yet they tranſgreſſed it; not a few, or the greateſt part only, but the whole body of them: and indeed, there is no man that lives without ſin, or the tranſgreſſion of the law, in thought, word, or deed, no not a juſt man; but theſe tranſgreſſed the law in a very hainous manner, both the firſt as well as the ſecond table of it, committing idolatry, and all manner of impiety, in which they continued: even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; by departing from the law, and the precepts of it; from God and his worſhip; from the temple of God, and the ſervice of it; and from the tribes of Judah and Benjamin: it ſeems to have ſome reſpect to the ſeparation of the ten tribes under Jeroboam, who ſet up the calves at Dan and Bethel, that the people might not obey the voice of the Lord, in going to worſhip at the ſolemn feaſts in Jeruſalem: therefore the curſe is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moſes the ſervant of God; that is, the juſt puniſhment of their ſins was inflicted on them; or the curſe the law threatened the tranſgreſſors of it with, was come upon them in its large extent, and overflowed them like a flood; which God ſwore he would bring upon them, if they tranſgreſſed his law; or which they by an oath imprecated and pronounced upon themſelves, ſhould they not hearken to it, but tranſgreſs and diſobey it: becauſe we have ſinned againſt him; and therefore this curſe was not a cauſeleſs one; ſin, the tranſgreſſion of the law, was the cauſe of it.

[r] לאיש יהודה viro Judæ, Cocceius. So Montanus. [s] כי מרדנו quia rebellavimus; Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Polanus, Cocceius, Michaelis.

℣. 12. And he hath confirmed his words which he ſpake againſt us, &c.] That is, he hath made good his threatenings of wrath and vengeance, in caſe of diſobedience to his law: and againſt our judges that judged us; kings, and inferior governors, that ruled over them, who perverted juſtice, and did not execute righteous judgment; and againſt them the Lord performed what he threatened: by bringing upon us a great evil; the deſolation of the whole land, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; the death of many by the ſword, famine, and peſtilence, and the captivity of the reſt; all which was a great puniſhment conſidered in itſelf, but when compared with their offenees, was leſs than they deſerved: for under the whole heaven hath not been done, as hath been done upon Jeruſalem; its walls broken down, its houſes burnt with fire, even the palaces of the king and nobles, and the temple of the Lord itſelf; and all its inhabitants deſtroyed, diſperſed, or carried captive; ſee Lam. i. 12. Ezek. v. 9, 10.

℣. 13. As it is written in the law of Moſes, all this evil is come upon us, &c.] As it is there threatned it ſhould, and as it is there foretold it would come upon them, ſo it has; even the ſelf-ſame things, in the ſame manner, and with the ſame circumſtances, as there foretold; which is a proof of the omniſcience, omnipotence, and faithfulneſs of God, and an evidence of the truth of divine revelation; ſee Lev. xxvi. Deut. xxviii: yet made we not our prayer before the Lord our God; during the ſeventy years captivity, they might have prayed, and doubtleſs did, in a lifeleſs, formal manner; but not ſincerely and heartily, in faith and with fervency, under a ſenſe of ſin, with confeſſion of it, and true repentance for it, and ſo as to forſake it, as follows: that we might turn from our iniquities; for ſince they did not pray againſt ſin, and intreat the Lord to enable them to turn from it, and forſake it, but continued in a courſe of diſobedience, their prayer was not reckoned prayer: and underſtand thy truth; either the truth and faithfulneſs of God, in fulfilling both his promiſes and his threatnings; or his law, which is truth, as Jacchiades interprets it; for had they prayed aright, they would have had an underſtanding given them of divine truths, both with reſpect to doctrine and practice; of which they were ignorant, as prayerleſs perſons uſually are.

℣. 14. Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us, &c.] The evil of puniſhment; he watched the fit and proper time, to bring it upon them; indeed, he watches over the evil of ſin, to bring upon men the evil of chaſtiſement or puniſhment, Job xiv. 16. but the latter is here meant; ſee Jer. xxxi. 28. and xliv. 27. the word uſed has the ſignification of haſtening; and ſo Jarchi and Saadiah explain it, he hath haſtened[h]: the almond-tree, as the latter obſerves, has its name from hence, becauſe it prevents other trees, and is quicker in putting out its bloſſom than they, Jer. i. 11, 12. and ſo this may denote the purity of the Lord; his diſplicency at ſin; his ſtrict juſtice in puniſhing it; and his diligence and activity in executing judgment for it, which ſlumbers not, as ſome imagine: for the Lord our God is righteous in all his works which he doth; the prophet is all along careful to clear God from any imputation of injuſtice in any of his works, even in his ſtrange work, punitive juſtice; tho' he watches over the evil to bring it, yet he is righteous in ſo doing; no charge of unrighteouſneſs is to be exhibited againſt him on this account: for we obey not his voice; neither in his word, nor in his providences; neither by his prophets, nor by his judgments; and being guilty of the evil of fault, it was but juſt they ſhould bear the evil of puniſhment.

℣. 15. And now, O Lord our God, &c.] The Lord of the whole earth in general, the ſovereign ruler of the univerſe, and the God of Iſrael in a ſpecial and peculiar manner; which is uſed to encourage faith in prayer, and carries in it a tacit argument or plea with God to be heard, in what he was about to ſay in behalf of Iſrael; and to which purpoſe alſo is the following deſcription of God, from an ancient benefit he had granted to that people: that haſt brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand; which tho' it may be conſidered as an aggravation of their ſin, that after this they ſhould behave ſo wickedly, as to be carried captive for their ſins, out of the land they were brought into; yet it ſeems to be mentioned, to put the Lord in mind of his former favours to them, and of his promiſe, that he would bring them out of Babylon, as he had brought them out of Egypt, Jer. xvi. 14, 15. and xxiii. 7, 8: and has gotten thee renown, as at this day; by the many wonders wrought in Egypt, and at the Red-ſea, when Iſrael was brought from thence; as particularly by ſlaying the firſt-born of Egypt, dividing the waters of the ſea, and deſtroying the Egyptians in it, as Saadiah obſerves; the memory and fame of which continued to that day, and will continue throughout all ages: and the prophet ſuggeſts, that he would alſo get a name or renown in the world, and among his people, ſhould he deliver them from their preſent captivity; but for this they had nothing to plead, but his promiſe and mercy; for as for them, they were obliged to confeſs themſelves ſinners, and unworthy of ſuch a favour: we have ſinned, we have done wickedly; the prophet knows not how to leave off confeſſing ſin; there had been ſo much committed, and there was ſo much need of confeſſing it.

℣. 16. O Lord, according to all thy righteouſneſs, &c.] Or righteouſneſſes[i]; which he had been uſed to exerciſe in the world, in all ages of it; either in puniſhing wicked men according to their deſerts, to which reſpect may be had here; ſince turning away wrath from his people, would iſſue in turning it upon their enemies, which would be in righteous judgment: or in fulfilling his promiſes; and ſo it ſignifies his faithfulneſs, of which there had been ſo many inſtances in times paſt, and gave encouragement to believe the performance of thoſe not yet accompliſhed: or this may be underſtood of his goodneſs and kindneſs, which is ſometimes meant by his righteouſneſs; ſee Pſ. xxxi. 1. and cxliii. 1. and ſo the Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, in all thy mercy; and Jacchiades paraphraſes the words thus, "O Lord, according to "all the multitude of thy righteouſneſs, and of thy "kindneſs, which thou doſt in the world:" I beſeech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from the city Jeruſalem; the city of the great king, which he choſe for his reſidence, in which the temple was, and where he was worſhipped; and the prophet earneſtly intreats, that the marks of divine diſpleaſure, which were upon it, might be removed; that the puniſhments or judgments inflicted, as the effects of the anger and wrath of God, might ceaſe, and the city be rebuilt, and reſtored to its former glory: thy holy mountain; the temple, devoted to the worſhip and ſervice of God; or mount Moriah, on which it ſtood: becauſe for our ſins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jeruſalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us; their neighbours, the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, Tyrians, and Philiſtines; who rejoiced at their deſtruction, and jeered at them and their religion, and ſcoffingly ſaid, where were their temple of which they boaſted, and their God in whom they truſted? the cauſe of all this is owned to be their own ſins, and the ſins of their anceſtors, which they their poſterity continued in; and therefore don't lay the fault wholly upon them, but take the blame to themſelves.

℣. 17. Now therefore, O our God, &c.] This being our miſerable caſe, and the ſeventy years captivity being at an end, and thou ſtill our covenant-God, whom we profeſs and worſhip: hear the prayer of thy ſervant, and his ſupplications; which he had put up in an humble manner, conſiſting of various petitions for grace and mercy before expreſſed: and cauſe thy face to ſhine upon thy ſanctuary that is deſolate; the temple; its walls demoliſhed, its altars thrown down, and the whole in ruins; a melancholy ſcene! the Lord ſuffering theſe things, ſeemed to frown upon it, and upon his people, that uſed to ſerve him there; wherefore it is intreated, that he would ſmile upon it again, and upon them, and cauſe it to be rebuilt, and his worſhip reſtored in it: and this is aſked for the Lord's ſake; that is, for Chriſt's ſake, who is Lord of all, eſpecially of his choſen people, by creation, redemption, and marriage, as well as by their own conſent and profeſſion; and for whoſe ſake, and in whoſe name, all requeſts are to be made to God, he being the only Mediator between God and man; and for the ſake of whoſe blood, righteouſneſs, and mediation, all the bleſſings of goodneſs are given unto men; and who alſo was Lord and proprietor of the temple, and was to come into it, as well as was the antitype of it.

℣. 18. O my God, incline thine ear, and hear, &c.] The petitions now put up, for Chriſt's ſake: open thine eyes, and behold our deſolations; the city and temple an heap of rubbiſh, and the whole land forſaken of its inhabitants, and lying waſte and uncultivated, or however at moſt poſſeſſed by enemies; and things being thus, it ſeemed as if the Lord ſhut his eyes to them, and therefore is deſired to open them, and look with pity and compaſſion on the caſe of his people, and deliver them out of all their troubles: and the city which is called by thy name; or, on which thy name is called[k]; as Jeruſalem was, being called the city of our God, the city of the great king, Pſ. xlviii. 1, 2. and in which alſo his name was called upon, both by the inhabitants of it in their private houſes, and by the prieſts, and Levites, and others, in the temple, which ſtood in it: for we do not preſent our ſupplications before thee; or, cauſe them to fall before thee[l]; expreſſing the humble and lowly manner in which they preſented their petitions to God, and reſpecting the geſture they uſed in prayer, bowing themſelves to the ground, and falling proſtrate upon it; and as was the cuſtom of the eaſtern people when they ſupplicated their princes: and this Daniel, in the name of his people, did; not, ſays he, for our righteouſneſſes, but for thy great mercies; not pleading their good works and righteous actions, and the merits of them, which had none in them, and were no other than as filthy rags, and could not recommend them to God, or be uſed as a plea and argument to obtain any good thing from him; but throwing themſelves upon the abundant grace and mercy of God in Chriſt, mercy they pleaded, and not merit; and made mention of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and not their own; as all good men, who are truly ſenſible of themſelves, and of the grace of God, will do.

℣. 19. O Lord hear, O Lord forgive, &c.] That is, hear the prayers and ſupplications that have been preſented, and forgive the ſins that have been confeſſed; ſhew both, by removing preſent calamities, and reſtoring to former proſperity and privileges: O Lord hearken and do; not only liſten to what has been ſaid, and give an anſwer by ſpeaking, but work ſalvation and deliverance: defer not for thine own ſake, O my God; theſe words ſeem to be directed to Chriſt the Son of God, and who is the true God, and the God of his people; who is three times in this verſe before called Adonai, for whoſe ſake prayer and ſupplication were made, ℣. 17, and here again, for his own ſake, he is intreated not to defer the fulfilment of the promiſe of delivering the Jews from their captivity in Babylon, the ſeventy years being now up, or juſt expiring; and alſo that he would not defer his own coming for the redemption of his people, which no doubt Daniel had in his mind, and was wiſhing and waiting for: for thy city, and thy people are called by thy name; Jeruſalem, the city of the great king, Chriſt, and a type of his church and people, who are alſo called by his name, and call upon him.

℣. 20. And whilſt I was ſpeaking and praying, &c.] Speaking to God in prayer; for it ſeems his prayer was vocal, and not mental only: and confeſſing my ſin, and the ſin of my people Iſrael; Daniel, tho' ſo holy and good a man, was not without ſin, and thought it his duty to confeſs it before the Lord; and which he did in the firſt place, and then the ſin of his people; which is the way to ſucceed with the Lord for the application of pardoning grace, and the enjoyment of other mercies and bleſſings: and preſenting my ſupplication before the Lord my God, for the holy mountain of my God; for the temple, and the ſervice of God in it; which was the firſt and principal thing that lay upon the heart of the prophet, and he was moſt importunate and ſolicitous for.

℣. 21. Yea, whiles I was ſpeaking in prayer, &c.] Which is repeated, that it might be obſerved, that while he was in prayer, before he had finiſhed it, or got off of his knees, an anſwer was ſent him; ſee Iſ. lxv. 24: even the man Gabriel, whom I had ſeen in the viſion at the beginning; either at the beginning of Belſhazzar's reign, in the third year of it, ch. viii. 1. or rather before, as the Syriac verſion renders it; before this time, in the viſion of the ram and he-goat, ch. viii. 16. when he ſaw this angel Gabriel that appeared in an human form, and he knew this to be his name, by a man's voice calling him by it; and now he knew him to be the ſame angel by his appearance and voice; at the ſight of whom he does not ſeem to be terrified, as before, having had free converſation with him, and being made acquainted by him with many ſecrets; and no doubt inwardly rejoiced to ſee him again, as hoping and believing he had ſomething to communicate to him: being cauſed to fly ſwiftly; having an order from the Lord, and being ſtrengthened by him to make quick diſpatch to Daniel, which is ſignified by flying ſwiftly; and for which reaſon angels are repreſented as having wings, to denote their celerity and quick diſpatch of buſineſs: or flying with wearineſs[m], as ſome render it; he made ſuch haſte as to be weary with it; as he appeared in the form of a man, he looked like one out of breath, and panting for it, occaſioned by his ſwift flight; and which expreſſes the haſte he made, according to his orders, and his eagerneſs to bring to Daniel the welcome tidings of the coming of the Meſſiah, and the time of it, which angels deſired to look into: touched me about the time of the evening-oblation; the time of offering the evening-ſacrifice; which, tho' not now offered, the altar being deſtroyed, and the Lord's people in a foreign land; yet the time was obſerved by them, and which was the time of prayer, being about the ninth hour of the day, or three o'clock in the afternoon; ſee Acts iii. 1. and x. 3. as the time of the morning-ſacrifice was another hour of prayer; at which time very likely Daniel began, and continued till now, ſince he was faſting, ỿ. 3. and this was the time when Chriſt the antitype of the daily ſacrifice was offered up; of the time of whoſe coming, ſufferings and death, the angel here brings an account: and, in order to excite the attention of Daniel to it, touched him; for he being on his knees, and intent in prayer, might not at firſt obſerve him; and therefore gives him a gentle touch, to let him know he was preſent, and had ſomething to ſay to him; and to ſuggeſt to him to break off his prayer, to which he had brought an anſwer, as well as to lift him up, and encourage familiarity with him.

[l] מפילים nos cadere facientes, Montanus; nos cadere facimus, Gejerus, Michaelis.

ỿ. 22. And he informed me, and talked with me, &c.] He informed him by talking with him, of the will of God, to reſtore the captivity of his people, to rebuild Jeruſalem and the temple, and of the coming of the Meſſiah: or, he cauſed me to attend[n], and talked with me; he excited his attention to what he had to ſay, and cauſed him to advert to his diſcourſe, in order to underſtand it: and ſaid, O Daniel, I am now come forth; juſt now come from heaven, from the preſence of God, and by his order: to give thee ſkill and underſtanding; or, to inſtruct thee in underſtanding[o]; to teach thee the knowledge, and give thee the underſtanding of ſecret things, which otherwiſe could not be known; ſuch as particularly the time of the coming of Chriſt, which the angels themſelves knew not, till it was revealed; and being made acquainted with it, one of them is employed to make it known to Daniel; who is the only prophet that fixes the exact time of it, and was favoured with this divine and heavenly ſkill of knowing it, and of being the publiſher of it to others.

ỿ. 23. At the beginning of thy ſupplications, &c.] As ſoon as ever he began to pray. This circumſtance ſhows how ready the Lord is to hear the prayers of his people; and yet it was not owing to the prayers of the prophet, and to any intrinſic virtue or merit in them, that the Lord did what he afterwards declares ſhould be done; and beſides, more is revealed and promiſed than Daniel aſked for: the commandment came forth; either the order from the Lord to the angel, diſpatching him on this errand to the prophet, to acquaint him with his mind and will; or the proclamation of Cyrus, to let the people of the Jews go free, and go up to Jeruſalem to build their city and temple, publiſhed that morning, juſt about the time Daniel began to pray, the ſeventy years captivity being completely finiſhed; ſee ỿ. 25: and I am come to ſhew thee: for thou art greatly beloved; or, art deſires[p], all deſire, exceedingly deſired; very lovely, amiable and delightful in the ſight of God, and all good men: or, that thou art greatly beloved[q]; thus the angel came from God, out of heaven, to ſhew it to him, to make it appear that he was highly in the favour of God, in that he made known his ſecrets to him: therefore underſtand the matter; or word[r]; attend to the word; advert to the form of ſpeaking uſed, and labour to get the knowledge of it: and conſider the viſion; this viſion, as Japhet; the following viſion or prophecy of the ſeventy weeks; think of it well, as being a matter of great importance and conſequence.

ỿ. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, &c.] Or, concerning thy people, and concerning thy holy city[s]; that is, ſuch a ſpace of time is fixed upon; cut out[t], as the word ſignifies; or appointed of God for the accompliſhment of certain events, relative to the temporal good of the city and people of the Jews; as the rebuilding of their city and temple; the continuance of them as a people, and of their city; the coming of the Meſſiah to them, to obtain ſpiritual bleſſings for them, and for all the people of God; who alſo were Daniel's people and city in a ſpiritual ſenſe, to which he belonged; and likewiſe what was relative to the utter ruin and deſtruction of the Jews as a people, and of their city: and this ſpace of ſeventy weeks is not to be underſtood of weeks of days; which is too ſhort a time for the fulfilment of ſo many events as are mentioned; nor were they fulfilled within ſuch a ſpace of time; but of weeks of years, and make up four hundred and ninety years; within which time, beginning from a date after-mentioned, all the things propheſied of were accompliſhed; and this way of reckoning of years by days is not unuſual in the ſacred writings; ſee Gen. xxix. 27. Lev. xxv. 8. Ezek.

Ezek. iv. 4, 5. Rev. xii. 6. and xiii. 5. The verb uſed is ſingular, and joined with the noun plural, ſhews that every week was cut out and appointed for ſome event or another; and the word, as it ſignifies to cut, aptly expreſſes the diviſion or ſection of theſe weeks into diſtinct periods, as 7, 62, 1. The firſt events mentioned are ſpiritual ones, and are not aſcribed to any particular period; but are what ſhould be done within this compaſs of time in general, and were done toward the cloſe of it; and are firſt obſerved, becauſe of the greateſt importance, and are as follow: to finiſh the tranſgreſſion; not the tranſgreſſion of Adam, or original ſin, which, tho' took away by Chriſt from his people, yet not from all men; nor the actual tranſgreſſion of man in general, which never more abounded than in the age in which Chriſt lived; but rather the tranſgreſſions of his people he undertook to ſatisfy for, and which were laid on him, and bore by him, and carried away, ſo as not to be ſeen more, or to have no damning power over them. The word uſed ſignifies to reſtrain[u]: now, tho' ſin greatly abounded, both among Jews and Gentiles, in the age of the Meſſiah; yet there never was an age in which greater reſtraints were laid on it, than in this, by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and of Chriſt in Judea, and by the apoſtles in the Gentile world: and to make an end of ſins; ſo that they ſhall be no more, but put away and aboliſhed by the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of Chriſt for them, as to guilt and puniſhment; ſo that thoſe, for whoſe ſins ſatisfaction is made, no charge can be brought againſt them, nor the curſe of the law reach them, nor any ſentence of it be executed, or any puniſhment inflicted on them; but are entirely and completely ſaved from all their ſins, and the ſad effects of them. Our verſion follows the marginal reading; but the textual writing is, to ſeal up ſins[w]; which is expreſſive of the pardon of them procured by Chriſt; for things ſealed are hid and covered, and ſo are ſins forgiven, Pſ. xxxii. 1: and to make reconciliation for iniquity; to expiate it, and make atonement for it; which was made by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, by his ſufferings and death; whereby the law and juſtice of God were fully ſatisfied, full reparation being made for the injury done by ſin; and this was made for all kind of ſin, expreſſed here by ſeveral words; and for all the ſins, iniquities and tranſgreſſions of the Lord's people; to do which was the grand end of Chriſt's coming into the world; ſee Heb. ii. 17: and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs; which is true only of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by which the law is magnified and made honourable, juſtice ſatisfied, and all that believe in him juſtified from all their ſins: this Chriſt by his obedience, ſufferings and death has wrought out, and brought into the world; and which phraſe deſigns, not the manifeſtation of it in the goſpel; nor the act of imputation of it, which is Jehovah the Father's act; nor the application of it, which is by the Spirit of God; but Chriſt's actual working of it out by obeying the precept, and bearing the penalty of the law: and this may be truly called everlaſting, or the righteouſneſs of ages[x], of ages paſt; the righteouſneſs by which the ſaints in all ages from the beginning of the world are juſtified; and which endures, and will endure throughout all ages, to the juſtification of all that believe; it is a robe of righteouſneſs that will never wear out; its virtue to juſtify will ever continue, being perfect; it will anſwer for the juſtified ones in a time to come, and has eternal life connected with it: and to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy; not to ſhut it up out of ſight; rather to ſet a mark on it, by which it might be more clearly known; but to conſummate and fulfil it: all prophecy is ſealed up in Chriſt, and by him; he is the ſum and ſubſtance of it; the viſions and prophecies of the Old Teſtament relate to him, and have their accompliſhment in him; ſome relate to his perſon and office; others to his coming into the world, the time, place, and manner of it; others to the great work of redemption and ſalvation he came about; and others to his miracles, ſufferings and death, and the glory that ſhould follow; all which have been fulfilled: or, to ſeal up the viſion and prophet[y]; the prophets were until John, and then to ceaſe, and have ceaſed ever ſince the times of Jeſus; there has been no prophet among the Jews, they themſelves do not deny it; Chriſt is come, the laſt and great prophet of all, with a full revelation of the divine will, and no other is to be expected; all that pretend to ſet up a new ſcheme of things, either as to doctrine or worſhip, thro' pretended viſion or prophecy, are to be diſregarded: and to anoint the Moſt Holy; not literally the moſt holy place in the temple; but figuratively, either heaven itſelf, anointed, perfumed and prepared for his people by the Meſſiah's aſcenſion thither, and entrance into it; or rather moſt holy perſons, the church and people of God, typified by the ſanctuary, the temple of God; and in a comparative ſenſe are moſt holy, and abſolutely ſo as waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, clothed with his righteouſneſs, and ſanctified by his Spirit; and by whom they are anointed, ſome in an extraordinary, and others in an ordinary way, and all by the grace of Chriſt: or it may be beſt of all to underſtand this of the Meſſiah, as Aben Ezra, and others do; who is holy in his perſon, in both his natures, human and divine; ſanctified and ſet apart to his office, and holy in the execution of it; equal in holineſs to the Father and the Spirit; ſuperior in it to angels and men, who have all their holineſs from him, and by whom they are ſanctified; and of whom the ſanctuary or temple was a type; and who was anointed with the Holy Ghoſt as man, at his incarnation, baptiſm, and aſcenſion to heaven; and Abarbinel owns it may be interpreted of the Meſſiah, who may be called the holy of holies, becauſe he is holier than all other Iſraelites.

℣. 25. Know therefore, and underſtand, &c.] Take notice and obſerve, for the clearer underſtanding of theſe ſeventy weeks, and the events to be fulfilled in them, what will be further ſaid concerning them, the beginning of them, their diſtinct periods, and what ſhall be accompliſhed in them: that from the time of the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and to build Jeruſalem; this commandment is the beginning of the ſeventy weeks or 490 years, and from it they are to be reckoned; and which deſigns not the proclamation of Cyrus in the firſt year of his reign, which was only to rebuild the temple, and not the city of Jeruſalem, Ezra i. 1, 2, 3. nor the decree of Darius Hyſtaſpes, which alſo only regards the temple, and is only a confirmation of the decree of Cyrus, Ezra vi. and for the ſame reaſons it cannot be the decree in the ſeventh year of the reign of Artaxerxes; which only confirmed what his predeceſſors had granted concerning the temple, and proviſion for ſacrifices, and exemption of the prieſts from toll, tribute, or cuſtom, Ezra vii. 7, 13, 31. but has not a word of building the wall and ſtreets of Jeruſalem, as that has, which was made in the twentieth year of his reign; and ſeems therefore to be the commandment or decree here referred to, Neh. ii. 1, 6, 7, 8. and this is the general epoch of the ſeventy weeks, and where the firſt ſeven begin; tho' Guſſetius[a] thinks, that the word דבר does not ſignify any edict or decree, but a thing; and deſigns the thing itſelf, reſtoring and rebuilding Jeruſalem; and that the following date is to be reckoned, not from any order to rebuild that city, but from the thing itſelf, from the moment when it firſt began to be rebuilt: and as ſingular is the notion of Tirinus[b], who is of opinion, that this is to be underſtood of the going out, or the end of the word; not whereby the holy city was ordered to be built, but when it was really built; and ſo begins the account from the dedication of the new city, in the twenty-third year of Artaxerxes, Neh. xii. 27. There are others who ſuppoſe, that not any human word, decree, commandment or order is here meant, but a divine one; either the word of the Lord to Jeremiah, foretelling the ſeventy years captivity of the Jews, and their deliverance from it; and reckon theſe 490 years from the deſtruction of the firſt temple, to the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, as Jarchi, Saadiah, Jacchiades, and others; but between theſe two deſtructions was a courſe of 656 or 657 years: others take the beginning of the ſeventy weeks to be from the going forth of the commandment to the angel, at the beginning of Daniel's prayers, as Aben Ezra; and to end at the deſtruction of the ſecond temple; but for a like reaſon, this muſt be rejected as the other; ſince this ſpace of time will out-run the ſeventy weeks near one hundred and twenty years: it is beſt therefore to interpret this of a royal edict, the order or commandment of a king of Perſia to rebuild Jeruſalem; and it ſeems righteſt to reckon the number given, either from the ſeventh, or rather from the twentieth of Artaxerxes Longimanus before-mentioned; and either of theſe reckonings, as Biſhop Chandler[c] obſerves, are ſufficient for our purpoſe, to ſhew the completion of the prophecy in Chriſt: "the commencement of the weeks (as he remarks) muſt be either from the ſeventh of Artaxerxes, which falls on the 457th year before A. D. or from the twentieth of Artaxerxes; (add to 457 years before Chriſt, 26 years after Chriſt, which is the number that 483 years, or 69 weeks exceeds 457 years) and you are brought to the beginning of John the Baptiſt's preaching up the advent of the Meſſiah; add ſeven years or one week to the former, and you come to the 33d year of A. D. which was the year of Jeſus Chriſt's death; or elſe compute 490 years, the whole ſeventy weeks, from the ſeventh of Artaxerxes, by ſubſtracting 457 years (the ſpace of time between that year, and the beginning of A. D.) from 490, and there remains 33, the year of our Lord's death. Let the 20th of Artaxerxes be the date of the 70 weeks, which is the 445th year before A. D. and reckon 69 weeks of Chaldean years; 70 Chaldee years being equal to 69 Julian; and ſo 478 Julian years making 483 Chaldee years, and they end in the 33d year after Chriſt, or the paſſover following[d];" the ſeveral particulars into which theſe 70 weeks are divided: unto the Meſſiah the prince, ſhall be ſeven weeks, and threeſcore and two weeks; by whom is meant, not Cyrus, as Jarchi and Jacchiades; who, tho' called Meſſiah or anointed, Iſ. xliv. 28. and xlv. 1. cannot be intended; for this prince was to be cut off after ſeven, and 62 weeks, or 483 years; whereas Cyrus died ages before this, and even died before the expiration of the ſeven weeks, or 49 years; nor Joſhuah the high-prieſt, or Zerubbabel, as Ben Gerſom, and others; nor Nehemiah, as Aben Ezra; nor Artaxerxes, which R. Azariah[e] thinks probable; for to none of theſe will this character agree, which denotes ſome eminent perſon known by this name; nor the work aſcribed to him, ℣. 24. nor can it be ſaid of either of them, that they were cut off, and much leſs at ſuch a period as is here fixed: it is right to interpret it of the promiſed and expected Saviour, whom the Pſalmiſt David had frequently ſpoken of under the name of the Meſſiah, and as a king and prince; ſee Pſ. ii. 2, 6, 12. and xviii. 50. and lxxxix. 27, 51. and cxxxii. 17. and who is David, the prince Ezekiel before this had propheſied of, Ezek. xxxiv. 24. and xxxvii. 25. and is the ſame with the prince of peace in the famous prophecy of him in Iſ. ix. 6. The Syriac verſion, tho' not a literal one, gives the true ſenſe of the paſſage, rendring it, "unto the coming of the king Meſſiah;" unto which there were to be ſeven, and 62 weeks, or 69 weeks, which make 483 years; and theſe being underſtood of eaſtern years, uſed by the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Perſians, conſiſting of 360 days, reckoning 30 days to a month, and 12 months to a year, there were juſt 483 of theſe from the 20th year of Artaxerxes to the 33d of the vulgar æra of Chriſt, and the 19th of Tiberius Cæſar in which he ſuffered. Sir Iſaac Newton[f] thinks the ſeven weeks unto Meſſiah, which he detaches from the ſixty-two, reſpects the ſecond coming of Chriſt, when he ſhall come as a prince, and deſtroy antichriſt, and that it takes in the compaſs of a jubilee; but when it will begin and end he does not pretend to ſay; but the true reaſon of the 69 weeks being divided into ſeven, and 62, is on account of the particular and diſtinct events aſſigned to each period, as follows: the ſtreet ſhall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times; that is, within the ſpace of ſeven weeks or 49 years, reckoning from the 20th of Artaxerxes; when the Jews had a grant to rebuild their city and wall, and were furniſhed with materials for it; and which was done in very troubleſome times; Nehemiah and the Jews with him met with much trouble from Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geſhem the Arabian, whilſt they were ſetting up the wall of the city, and filling the ſtreets with ranges of houſes, Neh. iv. and vi. for which the ſpace of ſeven weeks or 49 years were cut out and appointed; and that this event belongs ſolely to this period is clear from the Meſſiah's coming being appropriated to the period of the 62 weeks; which leaves this entirely where it is fixed.

[f] Obſervations on Daniel, p. 132, 133, 134.

℣. 26. And after threeſcore and two weeks, &c.] To be reckoned from the end of the ſeven weeks or 49 years, which added to them make 483 years: ſhall Meſſiah be cut off, but not for himſelf; by whom is deſigned the ſame with Meſſiah the prince in ℣. 25. not Onias the high-prieſt, as a late writer [g] would have it, an upright perſon, and of great holineſs, taken off by an unjuſt death; ſince he was dead many years before the expiration of theſe weeks: nor Hyrcanus the high-prieſt ſlain by Herod, as Euſebius [h] thinks; in whom the ſucceſſion of the ancient prieſts terminated, and with whom the prieſtly unction periſhed; which indeed bids fairer than the former; but he was not a perſon of ſo much note as to be pointed at in ſuch a prophecy, beſides the prieſthood continued much longer: nor is king Agrippa intended, as Jarchi and Abarbinel, who, they ſay, was the laſt king of the Jews, and was ſlain by Veſpaſian at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; which is not true; he was not properly king of the Jews, having only Galilee for his juriſdiction; was not ſlain by Veſpaſian; was a confederate of the Romans, lived ſome years after the deſtruction of the city, and at laſt died in peace; but Jeſus the true Meſſiah is intended, with whom the character, dates and death, and the manner of it, entirely agree: now to his death were to be 483 years; which years ended, as we have obſerved, in the 33d year of the vulgar æra of Chriſt, and the 19th of Tiberius; when Jeſus the true Meſſiah was cut off in a judicial way; not for any ſins of his own, but for the ſins of his people, to make ſatisfaction for them, and to obtain their redemption and ſalvation; ſee Iſ. liii. 8: or, he is not, as Jarchi, no more in the land of the living, is dead; ſee Jer. xxxi. 15. or there is, or will be, none for him, or with him [i], to help and aſſiſt him in his great work, Iſ. lxiii. 5. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, they ſhall not be his people; the Jews rejecting him, ſhall have a Loammi upon them, and be no more the people of God. Guſſetius [k] better renders it, he hath not, or he has nothing, ſo Cocceius; all things were wanted by him, that is, by Chriſt; he had neither riches, nor cloaths, nor any to ſtand by him, or to accompany him: and the people of the prince that ſhall come, ſhall deſtroy the city, and the ſanctuary; that is, the people of the Romans, under Veſpaſian their prince, emperor and general, ſhould in a little time after the cutting off of the Meſſiah, enter into the land of Judea, and deſtroy the city of Jeruſalem, and the temple that ſtood in it; tho' ſome underſtand this of Meſſiah the prince that ſhould come in his power, and in a way of judgment upon the Jewiſh nation, and deſtroy them for their rejection of him; whoſe people the Romans would be, and under whoſe direction, and by whoſe orders all theſe judgments ſhould be brought upon the Jews; but many of the Jewiſh writers themſelves interpret it of Veſpaſian, as Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Abarbinel, and Jacchiades: and the end thereof ſhall be with a flood; the end of the city and temple, and of the whole nation ſhould be by the Roman army, which, like a flood, would overſpread the land, and carry all before it. It denotes the number, power, and irreſiſtible force of the enemy, and the ſad devaſtation made by them: and unto the end of the war deſolations are determined; from the beginning of the war by the Romans with the Jews, to the end of it, there would be nothing but continual deſolations; a dreadful havock and ruin every where; and all this appointed and determined by the Lord, as a juſt puniſhment for their ſins.

℣. 27. And he ſhall confirm the covenant with many for one week, &c.] Sixty-nine of the ſeventy weeks being accounted for, and the ſeveral events obſerved to be fulfilled in them; the angel proceeds to take notice of the remaining one week, or ſeven years, and what ſhould be done within that ſpace of time: a covenant ſhould be confirmed with many; which is not to be underſtood of the Meſſiah's confirming the covenant of grace with many, or on account of all his people, by fulfilling the conditions of it, and by his blood and ſacrifice, thro' which all the bleſſings of it come to them; for this is not for one week only, but for ever: but this is to be interpreted of the Roman people, ſpoken of in the latter part of the preceding verſe; who, in order to accompliſh their deſign to deſtroy the city and temple of Jeruſalem, made peace with many nations, entered into covenant and alliance with them, particularly the Medes, Parthians and Armenians, for the ſpace of one week or ſeven years; as it appears they did at the beginning of this week [l]: and in the midſt of the week he ſhall cauſe the ſacrifice and the oblation to ceaſe; the daily ſacrifice of the Jews, and all their other offerings; and which was literally fulfilled in the half part [m] of this week, as it may be rendered; towards the cloſe of the latter half of it, when the city of Jeruſalem being cloſely beſieged by Titus, what thro' the cloſeneſs of the ſiege, the diviſions of the people, and the want both of time and men, and beaſts to offer, the daily ſacrifice ceaſed, as Joſephus [n] ſays, to the great grief of the people; nor have the Jews ever ſince the deſtruction of their city and temple offered any ſacrifice, eſteeming it unlawful ſo to do in a ſtrange land: and at the ſame time, in the ſame half part of the week, for the overſpreading of abominations, he ſhall make it deſolate; that is, the Roman people ſhall make the land of Judea deſolate, for the overſpreading of their abominations or idolatries in it. The words may be rendered, as by ſome, upon the wing, the battlements of the temple, ſhall be the abominations, or idols of the deſolator, or of him that makes deſolate [o]; ſo Biſhop Lloyd; meaning either the enſigns of the Roman army, which had upon them the images of their gods or emperors; and being ſet up in the holy place, and ſacrificed to, nothing could be a greater abomination to the Jews; or elſe the blood of the zealots ſlain on theſe battlements, by which the holy place was polluted; ſee Matt. xxiv. 15. Luke xxi. 20: even until the conſummation, and that determined ſhall be poured upon the deſolate; that is, either theſe abominations ſhall continue in the place where they are ſet, until the utter deſtruction of the city and temple; or the deſolation made there ſhould continue until the conſummation of God's wrath and vengeance upon them, them; until the whole he has determined is poured out on this deſolate people; and which continues unto this day, and will till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, Luke xxi. 24. Some, as Biſhop Lloyd, render it, upon the deſolator[p]; meaning the Romans; and the ſenſe they take to be is, that this vengeance ſhall continue upon the Jews until it is turned upon the head of thoſe who have made them deſolate: now this one week, according to the ſenſe given, muſt begin in the 63d year of the vulgar æra of Chriſt, about 30 years after the expiration of the 69 weeks; ſince it ends in the 70th year of the ſame æra, in which was the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the grand event aſſigned to it in this famous prophecy; when it might have been expected it ſhould have begun at the end of the 69 weeks, and run on in a direct line from them. The true reaſon of its being thus ſeparated from them, is, the long-ſuffering and forbearance of God to the people of the Jews, who gave them, as to the old world, ſpace to repent; but his grace and goodneſs being ſlighted, things began to work at the beginning of this week towards their final ruin, which, in the cloſe of it, was fully accompliſhed: from the whole of this prophecy it clearly appears, that the Meſſiah muſt be come many hundred years ago. The Jews are ſenſible of the force of this reaſoning; ſo that to terrify perſons from conſidering this prophecy, they denounce the following curſe, let them burſt, or their bones rot, that compute the times[q]. R. Nehemiah, who lived about fifty years before the coming of Chriſt, declared the time of the Meſſiah, as ſignified by Daniel, could not be protracted longer than thoſe fifty years[r]. The Jews alſo ſay, the world is divided into ſix parts, and the laſt part is from Daniel to the Meſſiah[s].

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter is an introduction to the prophecies contained in the two following chapters; and begins with an account of Daniel's mourning and faſting, preparatory to the viſion he had, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and of the appearance of Chriſt to him, with the time and place of it; who is deſcribed by his clothing, and the ſeveral parts of his body, which were very glorious, he appearing in an human form, ℣. 4, 5, 6. then follows an account of the effects it had upon him, ℣. 7, 8, 9. and of what encouragement and ſtrength he received from him by words and touches, to liſten to what he ſaid; and to expect a diſcovery and an underſtanding of things of moment and importance, which ſhould be in future times, ℣. 10—21.

℣. 1. In the third year of Cyrus king of Perſia, &c.] Not of his being king of Perſia only, but of the Medo-Perſian empire, after he had ſubdued the Babylonian empire, and annexed it to his dominions; and this is not to be reckoned from the time of his taking Babylon, and putting the government of it into the hands of his uncle Darius, with whom he jointly reigned; but from the time of his uncle's death, when he was ſole monarch of the whole empire: he reigned thirty years, as Cicero[t], from a Perſian writer, relates; which is to be reckoned from the time of his being appointed by his uncle commander in chief of the Perſian and Median armies; for from his taking of Babylon to his death were but nine years; and ſo many years the canon of Ptolemy aſſigns to his reign, taking in the two years he reigned with his uncle; for from his being ſole monarch, after the death of Cyaxares, or Darius the Mede his uncle, were but ſeven years; which, according to Xenophon[u], is the whole of his reign, who reckons it from thence; and it was in the third of theſe that Daniel had the viſions contained in this and the two following chapters; which, according to Biſhop Uſher[w], and Dean Prideaux[x], was in the year of the Julian period 4180, and before Chriſt 534. Mr. Bedford[y] places it in the year 533: how long Daniel lived after this is not certain, very probably he died quickly after, ſince he muſt be in a very advanced age; for the third year of Cyrus being the ſeventy-third of his captivity, as Dean Prideaux[z] obſerves; and if he was eighteen years of age, as that learned man thinks is the leaſt that can be ſuppoſed at the time of his carrying into Babylon, he muſt have been in the ninety-firſt year of his age at this time; or if he was but fifteen years of age at that time, which is the opinion of Aben Ezra on ch. i. 4. he muſt be in the third year of Cyrus eighty-eight years of age. The Dutch annotators obſerve, that Daniel lived in the court of Babylon above ſeventy-ſeven years, which will carry his age to a greater length ſtill. Jarchi on Dan. i. 21. aſſerts Daniel to be the ſame with Hatach in Eſth. iv. 5. and ſo the Targum on that place, who lived in the times of Ahaſuerus, ſuppoſed to be Xerxes: now between the third of Cyrus, and the beginning of Xerxes's reign, is mentioned a ſpace of ſeventy-one years, which added to the leaſt number eighty-eight before given, will make Daniel now to be one hundred and fifty-nine years old, when Ahaſuerus or Xerxes began his reign; which is not only an age unfit for ſuch buſineſs Hatach was employed in; but agrees not with the period in which Daniel lived, when it was not uſual for men to live ſo long, and muſt be exploded as fabulous: a thing was revealed unto Daniel; a ſecret, which he otherwiſe could never have known; and which was a ſingular favour to him, and ſhewed him to be a friend of God, a favourite of his; and this reſpected the Perſian and Grecian monarchies; the ſeveral kings of Egypt and Syria, and what ſhould befal them; and the times of Antiochus, and the troubles the Jews would have thro' him: (whoſe name was called Belteſhazzar); a name given him by the prince of the eunuchs; ſee ch. i. 7: and the thing was true; was not a falſe viſion, a mere fanſy of the brain, an empty conjecture, a deluſion of the mind, like the divination and ſoothſaying of the Gentiles; but a real thing, that was ſure and certain, and would be fulfilled, and might be depended upon: but the time appointed was long; ere the whole would be accompliſhed; for it reached to the times of Antiochus, three hundred years after this, yea to the reſurrection of the dead, and the end of all things: or, a great hoſt, or army [a]; a vaſt appearance of things were repreſented to him; not an hoſt of angels, as Saadiah; but a vaſt number of facts, like an army of them, and which reſpected armies and battels; or it may denote the force, power and efficacy of the word that was true, which ſhould not fail, but be certainly fulfilled: and he underſtood the thing, and had underſtanding of the viſion; that is, Daniel underſtood the word [b], or words of the prophecy, in which it was expreſſed; they were clear and plain, and not obſcure, dark and doubtful; and he had a clear view of the ſeveral parts of it, of the whole ſeries of things, the connexion of facts, and their dependence on one another, and their certain accompliſhment; he ſaw them in their order, as they were preſented to him in viſion and prophecy; and was not at any loſs about the meaning of any part of them, or the words by which they were ſignified.

℣. 2. In thoſe days I Daniel was mourning, &c.] Either on account of what had been revealed to him in the laſt viſion or prophecy of the ſeventy weeks; by which it appeared what wickedneſs the people of the Jews would be guilty of in cutting off the Meſſiah; and what deſolations would come upon their land, city and temple for ſuch uſage of him: as alſo becauſe of the preſent caſe of his people; many of them continuing in the country of Babylon, when they had liberty to return to their land: or becauſe of the hindrance the Jews met with in rebuilding their city and temple, who had returned thither; of which Daniel had an account, and which cauſed him to mourn in ſecret: and ſo he continued three full weeks; or, three weeks of days [c]; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh them from weeks of years, mentioned in the preceding chapter.

℣. 3. I ate no pleaſant bread, &c.] Or, bread of deſires [d]; ſuch as was made of the fineſt of the wheat, and was ate in the courts of princes where Daniel was: according to ſome Jewiſh Rabbins in Ben Melech, hot bread is meant; but in general it means the beſt of bread, ſuch as had good qualities to make it deſirable; and this Daniel refrained from, whilſt he was humbling and afflicting himſelf on this ſorrowful occaſion, but ate coarſe bread, black and branny: neither came fleſh nor wine in my mouth; not delicate meat, as of fiſh, fowl, deer, and the like, as Saadiah obſerves; but contented himſelf with meaner fare; nor did he drink generous wine, as he had uſed to do, living in a king's court, and which his old age made neceſſary for him, ſince he could come at it; but he abſtained from it, and other lawful pleaſures of nature, the more to give himſelf up to acts of devotion and contemplation: neither did I anoint myſelf at all, until three whole weeks were fulfilled; which was wont to be frequently done by the Jews, eſpecially at feaſts; and by the Perſians every day, among whom he now was; but this he refrained from, as was uſual in times of faſting and humiliation; ſee Matt. vi. 17.

℣. 4. And in the four and twentieth day of the firſt month, &c.] Of the third year of Cyrus, as Jacchiades; or rather of the Jewiſh year, the month Ab or Niſan, which anſwers to part of our March and April; ſo that Daniel's faſt began on the third day of the month, and laſted to the twenty-fourth, in which time was the Jewiſh paſſover; and by this it ſeems it was not now kept; and perhaps in thoſe times was not uſed to be obſerved by the Jews in a foreign land: as I was by the ſide of the great river, which is Hiddekel; the ſame with the Tigris, called by both names from the ſwiftneſs and rapidity of its motion, Hiddekel ſignifying both ſharp and ſwift; and Tigris in the Perſian language, a dart; ſee Gen. ii. 14. This is the ſame river, the Targum of Jonathan on Gen. ii. 14. calls Diglath; and is by Pliny [e] called Diglito, who obſerves that it has the name of Tigris from its ſwiftneſs; ſo he ſays the Medes call an arrow; likewiſe Curtius [f] takes notice of the ſame, and ſays that it is named Tigris from the celerity with which it flows; for in the Perſian language they call a dart Tigris: ſo חד ſignifies in the Hebrew language ſharp or poliſhed, as an arrow is; and קל ſwift, as an arrow flies, and both make Hiddekel: now this river was near Shuſhan, where Daniel reſided; nay, Benjamin of Tudela [g] ſays, that the river Hiddekel divides the city of Shuſhan, over which is a bridge, on one ſide of which Jews dwelt at the time he was there; unleſs he means that it cuts and divides the province of Elam in Perſia, he had before been ſpeaking of; and ſo Diodorus Siculus [h] ſays, that both Euphrates and Tigris paſs thro' Media into Meſopotamia; wherefore it is no wonder to hear of Daniel by the ſide of the river Hiddekel or Tigris: here Daniel was, not in viſion, but in perſon, having others with him, as appears from a following verſe; by it he was walking, contemplating, praying or converſing.

℣. 5. Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, &c.] Being excited to it, by an object preſented, of an unuſual appearance, which engaged his attention, and cauſed him to look wiſhly at it: and behold, a certain man clothed in linen; not Gabriel, but the Son of God, the Meſſiah; who, tho' not as yet incarnate, yet was ſo in the counſel and purpoſe of God; had agreed in covenant to be man, was promiſed and propheſied of as ſuch; and now appeared in an human form, as he frequently did before his incarnation, as a pledge of it, and ſhewing his readineſs to aſſume human nature: he appears here clothed in linen, in the habit of a prieſt; which office he ſuſtains, and executes by the ſacrifice of himſelf, and by his prevalent interceſſion; and may denote his purity and innocence, as well as direct us to his ſpotleſs righteouſneſs he is the author of, which is like fine linen, clean and white, Rev. xix. 8: whoſe loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz; or of Fez, which is the beſt gold. Some take it to be the ſame with the gold of Ophir, often ſpoken of in ſcripture; ſo the Targum on Jer. x. 9. renders Uphaz by Ophir. Ptolemy [i] makes mention of a river called Phaſis in the iſland of Taprobane or Zeilan, where Bochart [k] ſeems to think Ophir was, from whence the gold of that name came; and the ſame geographer [l] takes notice of a city and river of the ſame name in Colchis; perhaps the ſame with Piſon, which encompaſſed Havilah, where was good gold, Gen. ii. 11, 12. and both Strabo [m] and Pliny [n] ſay, that much gold was found in that country, and taken out of rivers there; and was ſo plentiful, that even chambers were made of gold. Some think that this was an iſland in India called Paz or Topaz, and might with the Jews go by all three names, Paz, Topaz, and Uphaz [o]; however it is certain, that very fine gold, even the fineſt gold, is here deſigned: and the loins of this illuſtrious perſon being girded with a girdle made of it, as it may be expreſſive of his royal dignity, ſo likewiſe of his readineſs to do any ſervice he was employed in, as man and Mediator; and eſpecially the great work of man's redemption and ſalvation, for the ſake of which he would really become man, as he has, as well as now he appeared as one; ſee Rev. i. 13. where Chriſt is ſaid to be girt with a golden girdle, and ſuch an one was this; and which is to be underſtood, not of his girdle as a king, which is a girdle of faithfulneſs and righteouſneſs, Iſ. xi. 5. all his adminiſtrations of government being juſt and true; tho' ſuch a girdle well ſuits him, and his character in the diſcharge of every office, as well as his kingly office; nor of his girdle as a prophet, which is the girdle of truth, which all his faithful miniſters are girt with, Eph. vi. 14. and he, in a more eminent manner, who is full of grace and truth, and by whom both came, and who is truth itſelf; but of his girdle as a prieſt; for as ſuch is he here habited, and ſuch a girdle the prieſts uſed to wear, even the girdle of the ephod, made of gold, blue, purple, and fine twined linen, Exod. xxviii. 8. and this is the girdle of love, which conſtrained Chriſt to become the ſurety and ſubſtitute of his people; to take upon him their nature, and their ſins; to offer himſelf a ſacrifice for them, and to be their advocate with the Father; and the form and matter of this girdle being round about him, and of gold, may denote the perfection, duration and eternity of his love.

[l] Ptolem. Geograph. l. 5. c. 10.

℣. 6. His body alſo was like the beryl, &c.] That is, that part of it which was not covered with the linen garment, and was ſeen, was like ſuch a precious ſtone, ſaid to be of an azure and ſky colour, ſignifying he was the Lord from heaven; tho', according to its name, it ſhould be of a ſea colour, greeniſh; and ſo, according to ſome, the beryl is. Cocceius thinks the ſardonyx is meant, which is of a fleſh colour, and ſo more fit to expreſs the comelineſs of an human body; the beryl being of a different colour, ſeems not ſo apt to ſet forth the agreeable colour of a man. Braunius [p] is of opinion, that the chryſolite is meant, a ſtone of a golden colour; and takes the ſenſe to be, that ſuch was the luſtre of the golden girdle about his loins, that the reſt of the parts of the body about it, appeared as if all of gold: and his face the appearance of lightening; exceeding bright, very dazzling to the eye, and ſtriking terror to the mind; expreſſive of ſomething very awful and majeſtic; and agrees well with Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs, whoſe face or countenance at his transfiguration on the mount, and when John ſaw him in a viſionary way, was as the ſun ſhineth in his ſtrength, in the ſummer-ſolſtice, or at noonday, Matt. xvii. 2. Rev. i. 16. from whom is all the light of knowledge and truth, of joy, peace and comfort, of grace and glory; and which darts as ſwiftly and as powerfully from him as the rays of the ſun, or as lightening from one end of the heaven to the other; and irradiates and illuminates as brightly and clearly: and his eyes as lamps of fire; denoting his omniſcience of all perſons and things; and how piercing and penetrating his eyes are into the affairs of men and ſtates, by whom they are clearly ſeen, and to whom they are exactly known; and how fierce and terrible his wrath is towards his enemies, and whoſe looks muſt inject dread and terror into them; ſee Rev. xix. 12: and his arms and his feet like in colour to poliſhed braſs; denoting his great ſtrength for action, his ſtability and firmneſs, and the glory of his power, in trampling upon his enemies, and ſubduing them; eſpecially as diſplayed in the redemption of his people, when his own arm wrought ſalvation for them; when he came travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, and trod the wine-preſs of his Father's wrath alone; when he ſet his feet on the necks of his and his peoples enemies, and got an entire victory over ſin, ſatan, and the world, under whoſe feet they are, and ever will be ſubject: and the voice of his words; not of the law, which was a voice of words, which they that heard intreated they might hear no more, and were very ſonorous and dreadful; but rather of the goſpel, of the words and doctrines of grace and truth, which proceeded out of the mouth of Chriſt, and were ſuch as were wondered at; which is a voice of love, grace and mercy, ſweet, charming and alluring, powerful and efficacious; and the words of it are the words of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life and ſalvation; yea, this voice of Chriſt may take in his voice and words of commands, his ordinances and inſtitutions, which he requires an obedience unto; and even his threatnings of wrath and ruin to wicked men, as well as his gracious and precious promiſes to his people: and this voice of his is ſaid to be like the voice of a multitude; of a great many men together; whoſe voice is heard a long way off, and is very ſtrong and powerful: or, as the voice of noiſe [q]; which may be underſtood, either of the noiſe of a multitude of men, or of the ſea, or of many waters; ſee Rev. i. 15. and may intend the power and efficacy of his words, whether in his doctrines, or in his judgments, in a way of grace and comfort, or of wrath and vengeance.

℣. 7. And I Daniel alone ſaw the viſion, &c.] The object or perſon deſcribed; tho' he was not alone when he ſaw it, yet he alone ſaw it; the eyes of his body and mind being quicker than the reſt, the Lord ſtrengthening and enlightening both; for this was a peculiar and diſtinguiſhing favour granted to him: for the men that were with me ſaw not the viſion; at leaſt not ſo clearly and diſtinctly as Daniel did; they might have ſome confuſed ſight of an object that appeared very terrible, but being ſtruck with conſternation, they had not preſence of mind to look at it; and ſo could neither form nor retain ſcarce any idea of it: or their eyes might be held, and their ſight clouded; or be ſtricken with a kind of blindneſs, or want of ſight for a time, as the men of Sodom were; or the object was of ſuch a nature, that without ſpecial illumination it could not be ſeen: the like happened to Eliſha's young man, who ſaw not the chariots and horſes of fire the prophet did, and to the men that were with the apoſtle Paul, 2 Kings vi. 17. Acts ix. 7. who theſe men were, that were with Daniel, is not material to know; whether they were his three companions, who had been caſt into the fiery furnace; or the prophets Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, as Jarchi and Saadiah ſay from their Rabbins [r]; neither of which are likely, ſince theſe being good men and prophets, would doubtleſs have been favoured with the ſame viſion: but rather they were the ſervants of Daniel, who waited upon him, he being now a great man in the Perſian court; and theſe men being very likely heathens, profane and unregenerate men, were not fit and prepared to ſee ſuch a viſion: but a great quaking fell upon them; or for, ſo Noldius; giving a reaſon why they ſaw not, becauſe of the great fear and trembling upon them; either at the glimmering ſight of this ſtrange appearance, which they knew not what to make of; or rather at the ſound of his voice, which was ſo very loud and terrible: ſo that they fled to hide themſelves; among the trees that grew upon the banks of the Tigris, as Adam among the trees of the garden; or in ſome wood or foreſt hard by; or in ſome caves and dens, which might be near at hand: this not only ſhows the confuſion and conſternation they were in, as the Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, they fled with terror; or thro' it, as the Syriac verſion; but ſerves to confirm the truth of the viſion, that it was not a mere fancy and imagination of Daniel.

℣. 8. Therefore I was left alone, and ſaw this great viſion, &c.] Which was great indeed, both with reſpect to the object now ſeen, and with reſpect to the ſubject-matter, the things afterwards revealed, the nature, uſe, and importance of them; and it was ſo wiſely ordered by the Lord, that the men with Daniel ſhould be ſeized with a pannic, and flee and leave him alone; that they being removed from him, he might have the ſecrets of the Lord revealed to him as a peculiar favourite of his, and hear and ſee the things he did: and there remained no ſtrength in me; either thro' the intenſeneſs of his mind upon the object before him, and to what he ſaid; or thro' the awe he was ſtruck with at the ſight of him; his blood running back to the heart to ſecure that; his nerves looſened; his hands weak and hanging down; his knees feeble, and ſpirits faint, juſt ready to ſink and ſwoon away: for my comelineſs was turned in me into corruption; the form of his countenance was marred; his forehead wrinkled; his eyes ſunk; the ſprightlineſs and vivacity of them gone; his cheeks turned pale; his lips quivering; his joints trembling; his vigour and health impaired; all nature convulſed; and he lifeleſs and ſpiritleſs, like a dead carcaſs: and I retained no ſtrength; or, reſtrained [s] it not; his ſtrength; could not keep it from going out of him, either of body or mind; he could not rally the powers of nature, ſo depreſſed was he with the viſion: all which is obſerved, both to exaggerate the greatneſs of the viſion, and the favour and goodneſs of God after ſhown him; as well as to obſerve the weakneſs of human nature, not being able to bear the ſight of a divine perſon, or ſuch diſcoveries the Lord is ſometimes pleaſed to make, without being ſtrengthened and ſupported in an extraordinary manner.

℣. 9. Yet heard I the voice of his words, &c.] Tho' he was ſtruck with ſo much awe, and his ſpirits ſo greatly depreſſed, and his body reduced to ſo low a condition; yet he was capable of attending to the voice, and of hearing the articulate ſounds pronounced, and of underſtanding what was ſaid: and when I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep ſleep on my face, and my face toward the ground; as ſoon as he heard his words, he fell upon his face to the ground, either in a way of worſhip and adoration, of prayer and ſupplication, as the Arabic verſion ſuggeſts; or thro' awe and reverence of the ſpeaker, as well as thro' faintneſs of ſpirits; and theſe being quite exhauſted as it were, might be the reaſon of his falling into a deep ſleep; unleſs it can be thought he was lulled into it, thro' the ſweetneſs of the voice he heard.

℣. 10. And behold, an hand touched me, &c.] Not the hand of the man clothed with linen, whoſe voice he heard, and whoſe hand was like poliſhed braſs, ℣. 6. but the hand of one diſtinct from him, one of his attendants, ch. xii. 5, 6. that had the ſimilitude of the ſons of men, ℣. 16. and whoſe hand was ſofter, and nearer an human one; very probably the hand of the angel Gabriel in human form, who had touched him before, when in the like circumſtances, ch. viii. 16, 18: which ſet me upon my knees, and upon the palms of my hands; or, which cauſed him to move [t]; from the proſtrate condition in which he was, and raiſed him up a little, upon his hands and knees; ſo that with a little difficulty he might be able to raiſe himſelf to ſtand upright.

℣. 11. And he ſaid unto me, O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, &c.] Or, a man of deſires [u]; a moſt deſirable man, lovely to God and men; the ſame epithet Gabriel gives him, ch. ix. 22, 23. which confirms the ſentiment, that it is he that touched Daniel, and is here ſpeaking, diſtinct from the glorious perſon before deſcribed: underſtand the words that I ſpeak unto thee; attend unto them, in order to underſtand them; and which he was ſent to give him an underſtanding of, as in ch. viii. 16. which is a further confirmation that this is Gabriel: and ſtand upright; being upon his hands and knees, ℣. 10. but now is bid to ſtand on his ſtanding [w], or his ſtation; upon his feet, in an erect poſture, which was fitteſt for attention, and moſt decent and becoming a hearer and learner of the mind of God, from one of his meſſengers: and therefore, the more to excite him to ſuch a poſture, he adds, for unto thee am I now ſent; of God, and particularly to the prophet, and that after three weeks faſting and mourning: this is another proof, that not the glorious perſon before deſcribed, but an angel of his, is meant, ſince he is ſaid to be ſent to Daniel: and when he had ſpoken this word unto me, I ſtood trembling; he got up and ſtood upon his feet, as the angel had bid him, but trembling and tottering, not yet recovered from his fainting fit; like a man that has been ill, and got upon his legs again, trembles and totters as he goes or ſtands: and alſo, tho' the angel was kind and ſerviceable to him, ſet him on his knees and hands, and ſpoke to him in a tender manner; yet the appearance of ſuch a divine meſſenger had ſuch an effect upon him, as we find ſuch appearances uſed to have on good men.

ỷ. 12. Then ſaid he unto me, fear not, Daniel, &c.] Perceiving him to ſhake and tremble, and to be intimidated at his preſence, he ſpeaks comfortably to him, and encourages him to lay aſide his fears, that he might be more capable of attending to what he was about to ſay to him; and which had a tendency of themſelves to remove his fears, and increaſe his confidence in the Lord: for from the firſt day thou didſt ſet thine heart to underſtand; not ſo much the former viſions which he had an underſtanding of, as the future ſtate of his people; or rather, the reaſon of their preſent diſtreſſed condition, being hindered by their enemies in rebuilding their city and temple: and to chaſten thyſelf before thy God; to humble himſelf in prayer, and to afflict himſelf by faſting: thy words were heard; his prayers were heard, and an anſwer ordered to be given, the very firſt day he began to pray, and faſt, and mourn, tho' it was now full three weeks ſince; juſt as at the beginning of his former ſupplications, Gabriel had a commandment to go and ſhew him that they were heard, ch. ix. 23: and I am come forth for thy words; on account of his prayers, to bring an anſwer to them; the reaſo why he came no ſooner, when it was three weeks ſince he received his order, is as follows:

ỷ. 13. But the prince of the kingdom of Perſia withſtood me one and twenty days, &c.] Which was juſt the time Daniel had been mourning and faſting, ỷ. 2. and the angel had had his inſtructions to acquaint him with the Lord's anſwer to his prayers: by the prince of the kingdom of Perſia, is not to be underſtood the then reigning king of Perſia, Cyrus, or his ſon Cambyſes; who either of them would have been called rather king of Perſia; nor were they able to withſtand an angel, and ſuch an one as Gabriel; nor is a good angel meant, the tutelar one of this kingdom; for it cannot be reaſonably thought that good angels ſhould militate againſt one another; but an evil angel, either ſatan, the prince and god of this world, or one of his principal angels under him, employed by him to do what miſchief he could in the court of Perſia, againſt the people of God the Jews; and with this ſenſe agree the conteſts aſcribed to ſatan and the angel of the Lord concerning Joſhua, Zech. iii. 1, 2, 3. and to Michael and the devil diſputing about the body of Moſes, Jude ỷ. 9. and to Michael and his angels, and the devil and his angels, warring in heaven, Rev. xii. 7, 8. now Gabriel's buſineſs in the court of Perſia, was to work upon the minds of the king of Perſia and his nobles, and to influence their counſels, and put them on ſuch meaſures as would be in favour of the Jews, and be encouraging to them to go on in the rebuilding of their city and temple: in this he was withſtood and oppoſed by an evil ſpirit that counter-worked him; by exaſperating the ſpirit of Cambyſes againſt them; by ſtirring up the Samaritans to corrupt the Perſian courtiers with gifts, to take their part againſt the Jews; and by influencing them to accept of their gifts, and act in their favour; and this buſineſs on the angel's hands, to oppoſe theſe meaſures, detained him at the Perſian court for the three weeks Daniel had been faſting and praying: but lo, Michael one of the chief princes came to help me; called in the New Teſtament an arch-angel, the prince of angels, the head of all principality and power; and is no other than Chriſt the Son of God, an increated angel; who is one, or the firſt of the chief princes[x], ſuperior to angels, in nature, name, and office; he came to help Gabriel, not as a fellow-creature, but as the Lord of hoſts; not as a fellow-ſoldier, but as general of the armies in heaven and earth, as ſuperior to him in wiſdom and ſtrength; and he helped him, by giving him freſh counſels, orders, and inſtructions, which he following ſucceeded: and I remained there with the kings of Perſia; with the king of Perſia and his nobles, putting into execution the orders Michael had given him, and ſo baffled the deſigns of the evil ſpirit; and this retarded him from being with the prophet one and twenty days. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions very wrongly render the words, and I left him there with the kings of Perſia; as if Michael was left there by Gabriel, whereas it was juſt the reverſe.

ỷ. 14. Now I am come to make thee to underſtand what ſhall befal thy people in the latter days, &c.] The conteſt being over with the prince of Perſia, and having got an advantage, and carried his point in favour of the Jews; he came directly to Daniel, to inform him of what ſhould befal the people of the Jews in the ſucceeding monarchies, eſpecially in the times of Antiochus; and even of all that ſhould befal them until the Meſſiah came, as Aben Ezra rightly interprets it; for the laſt days generally deſign the days of the Meſſiah; ſee Gen. xlix. 1. Iſ. ii. 2: for yet the viſion is for many days; before it will be accompliſhed; reaching not only to the times of Antiochus, three hundred years after this, but even to the times of antichriſt, of whom he was a type; and to the reſurrection of the dead, and the end of time, as the two next chapters ſhew; ſee Hab. ii. 3.

ỷ. 15. And when he had ſpoken ſuch words unto me, &c.] As before related, concerning the conteſt between him and the prince of Perſia; and eſpecially concerning what would befal the people of the Jews in the latter day: I ſet my face toward the ground; not being able to look up; his eyes were fixed upon the earth like one confounded and thunder-ſtruck, filled with amazement and wonder: and I became dumb; not able to ſpeak a word, as is the caſe of perſons ſometimes in ſurprize, or thro' exceſs of any of the paſſions: this aroſe either from the majeſty of the angel; or rather from the nature and importance of the things he ſaid; or from a conſciouſneſs of his own impurity, and ſo of his unworthineſs to converſe with ſo exalted a creature, and to be favoured with ſuch ſecrets. The Arabic verſion is, and I ſupplicated; very wrongly.

ỷ. 16. And behold, one like the ſimilitude of the ſons of men, &c.] Not the man clothed with linen, or Chriſt; but either the ſame angel Gabriel, who appeared more manifeſtly to him in an human form; or another of the attendants of Chriſt, who alſo had the ſimilitude of a man: touched my lips; with his hand, as the prophet Iſaiah's were by a ſeraph, with a live coal from the altar, Iſ. vi. 7. thereby reſtoring him to his ſpeech, and giving him freedom and boldneſs to make uſe of it; and removing from him his impurity, and a ſenſe of it, which occaſioned his ſilence: then I opened my mouth, and ſpake; freely, and yet with all becoming modeſty: and ſaid unto him that ſtood before me, O Lord; the angel that appeared in the likeneſs of a man, and ſtood before the prophet, and touched his lips, whom he calls Lord; not becauſe of ſo-vereignty and dominion over him, which belong to Chriſt, as the creator of all things, and head of the church; but for honour's ſake, being a noble and exalted creature: by the viſion my ſorrows are turned upon me; on ſight of the glorious object repreſented to him in the viſion, pains ſeized his body in all parts of it, ſharp and pungent, like thoſe of a woman in travail. Guſſetius[y] interprets it of the knuckle-bones, which turned in the pan of them, like the hinges of a door, of which the word is uſed, Prov. xxvi. 14. and this thro' the tendons being looſed by the diſſipation of the ſpirits; and this ſenſe the Vulgate Latin verſion gives countenance to, my joints are diſſolved; the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions are, my inward parts or bowels are turned in me: and I have retained no ſtrength; ſee the note on ℣. 8.

℣. 17. For how can the ſervant of this my Lord, talk with this my Lord? &c.] Or, talk with that my Lord[z]? pointing to the man clothed in linen, who appeared ſo glorious, and whom Daniel knew to be more than a man; and therefore he who was a mere mortal, ſinful man, and reckoned himſelf a ſervant of the angel of the Lord that was now before him, and had touched him, and was converſing with him, and to whom he was greatly inferior; muſt be very unfit and unworthy to have converſation with one that was infinitely above him; with ſuch an one, his Lord, as Noldius[a] renders it, as Chriſt the ſon of God, the head of angels, King of kings, and Lord of lords; what was he, duſt and aſhes, that he ſhould ſpeak unto him, or be admitted to any diſcourſe with him? ſo ſenſible was he of the greatneſs of Chriſt, and of his own frailty, ſinfulneſs, and nothingneſs: for as for me ſtraightway, there remained no ſtrength in me; as ſoon as ever he ſaw this great and glorious perſon; ſee the note on ℣. 8: neither is there breath left in me; when he fainted away, and became like a dead man; and tho' he was raiſed up again, and ſet upon his feet, and had a little recovered his ſpeech, yet it was with great difficulty that he breathed and ſpoke; as it is with men when their ſpirits are greatly oppreſſed, it is as if their life and ſoul were gone out of them, and they move more like dead than living men.

℣. 18. Then there came again and touched me, one like the appearance of a man, &c.] Or one like a man again touched him; the ſame that touched him before, ℣. 16. perhaps Gabriel, ſince he uſes the ſame language in the following verſe, as he does ℣. 11: and he ſtrengthened me; both in body and mind, by his free and familiar converſation with him, and the comfortable words he ſpoke to him, a divine power accompanying them for that purpoſe.

℣. 19. And ſaid, O man, greatly beloved, &c.] Or, man of deſires, as before, ℣. 11. which ſhews it to be the ſame here ſpeaking as there, and probably Gabriel: fear not; for a man has nothing to fear from men or devils, that is beloved of the Lord; and eſpecially from good angels, how glorious and majeſtic ſoever they are: peace be unto thee; all proſperity of body and ſoul; inward peace of mind, a freedom from all hurry of thought, and commotion of the paſſions, and eternal peace and joy in the world to come: be ſtrong, yea be ſtrong; take heart, pull up the ſpirits, be of good courage, play the man; be ſtrong in the Lord, and in his grace, and fear nothing: the word is repeated for the greater encouragement: and when he had ſpoken unto me, I was ſtrengthened; divine power going along with his word; the prophet found his bodily ſtrength renewed, his ſpirits revived, his heart chearful, and his ſoul comforted, and all fear and dread removed from him; which was owing to the energy of divine grace; for otherwiſe not only men, but angels too, would ſpeak in vain: and ſaid, let my Lord ſpeak, for thou haſt ſtrengthened me; and ſo was able to bear the ſight of him, ſupport in his preſence, and hear his words, and take in what he ſaid, which before he was unfit for; ſo an angel may be an inſtrument of ſtrengthening a ſaint, yea a prophet, and even our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf as man, Luke xxii. 43.

℣. 20. Then ſaid he, knoweſt thou wherefore I come unto thee? &c.] He had told him before, ℣. 12, 14. that it was on account of his prayers, and to bring an anſwer to them; and particularly to inform him what would befal his people in the latter day; and now leſt, thro' the hurry of his ſpirits, he had not obſerved it, or had forgot it, he reminds him of it, to ſtir up his deſire the more after the knowledge of particulars, which he was now about to relate unto him: and now will I return to fight with the prince of Perſia; the evil ſpirit in the court of Perſia, he had been conteſting with before, and had got the better of by the help of Michael; but ſince this good angel had been with Daniel, the evil one had been working upon the king and counſellors of Perſia, and had wrought them up to an indifference unto, or careleſſneſs about, the affairs of the people of the Jews, and to liſten to their adverſaries, whereby the building of the city and temple went on heavily and ſlowly; and ſo things were, thro' the evil influence of ſatan, more or leſs, until the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus: and indeed, ſatan was continually ſoliciting miſchief againſt the Jews, and ſtirring up enemies to them in the court of Perſia, as long as that monarchy laſted, tho' he had not always the wiſhed-for ſucceſs; the times of Eſther and Mordecai are a proof of this: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia ſhall come; meaning, when he was gone forth from the court of Perſia, having done his buſineſs he was ſent about; confounded the ſchemes, and baffled the deſigns of the evil ſpirit, conquered him, and obliged him to give way, and ceaſe from being troubleſome any more, and obtained peace and reſt for the Jews, and ſettled their affairs: the Perſian monarchy being tranſlated to the Grecians, the evil ſpirit began to work among them, to put them on doing miſchief to the people of God; as in Alexander himſelf, who ſet out againſt them, but was pacified by the meeting of the high-prieſt; and more eſpecially in his ſucceſſors; and above all in Antiochus, who was a violent perſecutor of them; which this clauſe, as well as the following prophecy, has a reſpect unto.

℣. 21. But I will ſhew that which is noted in the ſcripture of truth, &c.] Not in the written word, tho' there are many things relating to what ſhould befal the Jews in the latter day, eſpecially in Deut. xxviii. but in the decrees and purpoſes of God, which are ſometimes ſignified by a book, and things written in it; becauſe ſo particular and diſtinct, and ſo ſure and certain, and which will be moſt truly, infallibly, and punctually performed: theſe are noted, marked, engraven, in the eternal mind of God; they are in writing, and they are truth [b], as it may be rendered, ſince there is a diſtinguiſhing accent between ſcripture and truth; they are written in the book of God's decrees, and are his true and faithful words and ſayings, and will moſt ſurely be accompliſhed: now theſe are the deep things of God, which angels themſelves know nothing of, till they are revealed unto them: the angel here having a revelation of ſuch of them as concerned the future monarchies of the earth, and the caſe of the Jews under them, promiſes to ſhew them to Daniel; which was the work he was appointed to do: and there is none that holdeth with me in theſe things, but Michael your prince; Chriſt, the prince of the kings of the earth, he was the prince, protector, and guardian of the people of the Jews; he is the angel that went before them in the wilderneſs, and guarded them in it, and guided them into the land of Canaan; he is the angel of God's preſence, that bore, carried, and ſaved them all the days of old, and was their king and their God, their defender and deliverer ſtill; he took their part, and was on their ſide; yea he was on the ſide of, and took part with them that were for them, the holy angels; and there was none but him that exerted his power, and ſtrengthened Gabriel to act for them, in theſe things relating to their peace and proſperity: or, againſt theſe [c], as it may be rendered; againſt the princes of Perſia and Greece, the evil ſpirits that worked in theſe kingdoms, in the children of diſobedience there; and had it not been for him, and the exertion of his mighty power, it would have been ſoon all over with the people of the Jews; as it would be now with the church of Chriſt, of which they were typical, but the Lord is on their ſide; Michael the arch-angel, and his angels under him, fight for it, protect and defend it; and ſince he is for his people, who ſhall be againſt them? or to what purpoſe will an oppoſition be? the gates of hell cannot prevail againſt the church of God, the ſaints of the Moſt High.

CHAP. XI.

IN this chapter the angel makes good his promiſe to Daniel, that he would ſhew him what was written in the ſcripture of truth, concerning the monarchies of the earth, and what would befal his people the Jews in the latter days; and after he had obſerved, that he had ſtrengthened and confirmed Darius the Mede, who was the firſt king of the then preſent flouriſhing monarchy, ℣. 1. he foretels the number of the kings of Perſia, and particularly deſcribes the fourth, ℣. 2. predicts the riſe of the Grecian monarchy under Alexander the Great, and the diſpoſition of it after his death, ℣. 3, 4. and then proceeds to give an account of the two principal kingdoms of that monarchy, into which it was divided, the Seleucidæ and Lagidæ; and of their kings, the king of Egypt, and the king of Syria, under the names of the king of the ſouth, and the king of the north, and of their power and agreement, ℣. 5, 6. and then of their various wars between themſelves and others, and the ſucceſs of them, ℣. 7—20. and particularly of Antiochus, his character and manner of coming to the kingdom, and of his wars with the king of Egypt, and the iſſue of them, ℣. 21—29. and of his perſecution of the Jews, and the diſtreſs he ſhould bring on them, and the uſe it ſhould be of to the godly among them, ℣. 30—35. and then his antitype, antichriſt, is deſcribed; the weſtern antichriſt, his character and actions, ℣. 36—39. then the eaſtern, his power, wealth and riches, fall and ruin, ℣. 40—45.

℣. 1. Alſo I, in the firſt year of Darius the Mede, &c.] Theſe words more properly belong to the preceding chapter, and ſhould have concluded that, and the eleventh chapter ſhould have begun in the next verſe; and they are not the words of Daniel, as Jerom and others; but of the angel telling Daniel, not only what he had been lately doing, and would do in the court of Perſia for his people; but what he had done in the beginning of that monarchy, the very firſt year that Darius the Mede became king of Babylon, and head of the whole monarchy; ſee ch. v. 30, 31. the Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, in the firſt year of Cyrus; which was the ſame time; for Darius and Cyrus reigned together. Even I ſtood to confirm, and to ſtrengthen him; not Michael your prince, as Jarchi; for he being no other than the Son of God, an increated angel, needed not the help and aſſiſtance of a created one, nor could receive any ſtrength and confirmation from ſuch an one; unleſs this is to be underſtood, not with reſpect to Michael himſelf abſtractly conſidered, but as in relation to the people of the Jews, on whoſe ſide Michael was; and ſo this angel took part with him and them, and as his miniſter ſerved them both, in defending them, and taking care of their affairs at this time; ſo Jacchiades paraphraſes it, to confirm and ſtrengthen Iſrael: but it ſeems rather to deſign Darius, and the ſenſe to be, that this angel ſtrengthned Darius and Cyrus in their good intentions, to let the people of Iſrael go free, and give them full liberty and encouragement to go into their own land, and rebuild their city and temple; about which ſome doubts and heſitations might ariſe in their minds, and objections be made by ſome of their nobles and courtiers to it, being moved and influenced by an evil ſpirit, the adverſary of this good angel; but he attended them ſo cloſely, and ſo ſtrongly ſuggeſted to them what they ſhould do in this caſe, that he carried his point on behalf of the Jews; for this reſpects not ſo much the deſtruction of the Chaldean monarchy, and the eſtabliſhing the Perſian monarchy on the ruins of it, and ſettling Darius on the throne, and ſtrengthening his kingdom and intereſt, as the confirmation of him and Cyrus in their deſigns in favour of the Jews. The Syriac verſion is, from the firſt year of Darius the Mede, he roſe up to help me, and aſſiſt me; as if the angel was ſtill ſpeaking of Michael, who came to his help againſt the prince of Perſia, and was the only one that held with him, and had done ſo from the beginning of the Perſian empire; but the Hebrew text will not admit of ſuch a tranſlation.

℣. 2. And now will I ſhew thee the truth, &c.] And nothing but the truth; what will moſt certainly come to paſs, and may be depended on, even what is written in the book of God's decrees, the ſcripture of truth, and which would appear in providence in after-times; and this he propoſed to deliver to him, not in figurative, dark, and obſcure expreſſions, but clearly and plainly, in language eaſy to be underſtood: behold, there ſhall ſtand up yet three kings in Perſia; which were Cyrus, who reigned alone after the death of Darius the Mede, his uncle; Cambyſes, the ſon of Cyrus; and Darius Hyſtaſpis. There was another between Cambyſes and Darius, called Smerdis the magician, who reigned but ſeven months, and being an impoſtor is left out, as he is in Ptolemy's canon; not that theſe were all the kings of Perſia after Darius the Mede; for, according to the above canon, there reigned ſix more after them; but becauſe theſe kings had a connexion with the Jews, and under them their affairs had different turns and changes, reſpecting their reſtoration and ſettlement, and the building of their city and temple; as alſo becauſe theſe kings ſtood, and the monarchy under them was ſtrong and flouriſhing, whereas afterwards it began to decline; and chiefly it is for the ſake of the fourth king that theſe are obſerved, who laid the foundation of the deſtruction of the Perſian monarchy by the Grecians. And the fourth ſhall be far richer than they all; this is Xerxes, who exceeded his predeceſſors in wealth and riches; enjoying what they by their conqueſts, or otherwiſe, had amaſſed together, to which he greatly added: Cyrus had collected a vaſt deal of riches from various nations, eſpecially from Babylon; God gave him the treaſures of darkneſs, and hidden riches of ſecret places, If. xlv. 3. Cambyſes increaſed the ſtore by his victories, and the plunder of temples wherever he came; out of the flames of which were ſaved 300 talents of gold, and 2300 talents of ſilver, which he carried away, together with the famous circle of gold that encompaſſed the tomb of king Ozymandias[d]: and Darius, the father of Xerxes, laid heavy taxes upon the people, and hoarded up his money; hence he was called by the Perſians καπηλος[e], the huckſter or hoarder: and Xerxes came into it all, and ſo became richer than them all; of whom Juſtin ſays[f], "ſi regem "ſpectes; divitias, non ducem laudes: quarum tanta "copia in regno ejus fuit, ut cum flumina multi"tudine conſumerentur, opes tamen regiæ ſuper"eſſent." And by his ſtrength thro' his riches, he ſhall ſtir up all againſt the realm of Grecia; thro' his vaſt riches, which are the ſinews of war, he collected a prodigious army out of all provinces, which he raiſed to make war againſt the Grecians; being moved to it by Mardonius, a relation of his, who was very ambitious of being at the head of a large army[g]; three years were ſpent in preparing for this expedition, and forces were gathered out of all parts of the then known habitable world; out of all the weſt, under Hamilcar general of the Carthaginians, with whom he made a league; and out of all the eaſt under his own command: his army, according to Juſtin[h], conſiſted of ſeven hundred thouſand of his own, and three hundred thouſand auxiliaries; Diodorus Siculus[i] makes it much leſs, to be about three hundred thouſand men; but Dr. Prideaux[k], from Herodotus and others, computes, that putting all his forces together by ſea and land, by the time he came to the ſtreights of Thermopylæ, the number of them were two millions, ſix hundred forty-one thouſand, ſix hundred and ten men; and Grotius, from the ſame writer, reckons them five millions, two hundred and eighty-three thouſand, to which others add two hundred and twenty[l]; with theſe he marched into Greece, where after having done much miſchief, he was ſhamefully defeated, and obliged to retire, and was murdered by Artabanus the captain of his guards. The words may be rendered[m], he ſhall ſtir up all, even the realm of Grecia; by the preparation he made, and the vaſt army he brought into the field, he raiſed all the cities and ſtates of Greece to combine together to withſtand him; and this ſtep of his, is what irritated the Grecians, and put them upon after-attempts, to avenge themſelves on the Perſians for this attack upon them; and which they never deſiſted from, till they had ruined the Perſian empire, which they did under Alexander; and ſo he, in his letter to Darius, ſays[n], "your anceſtors "entered into Macedonia, and the other parts of "Greece, and did us damage, when they had re"ceived no affront from us as the cauſe of it; "and now I, created general of the Grecians, pro"voked by you, and deſirous of avenging the in"jury done by the Perſians, have paſſed over into "Aſia." And it is for the ſake of this, the deſtruction of the Perſian empire by Alexander, that this expedition of Xerxes is here hinted at; and to pave the way for the account of Alexander and his ſucceſſors, in the following part of this prophecy.

℣. 3. And a mighty king ſhall ſtand up, &c.] Not in Perſia, but in Greece; Alexander the Great, who roſe up a hundred years after the above expedition of Xerxes, and ſtood and flouriſhed, and conquered all he attacked, none being able to reſiſt him; and is rightly called a mighty king, a very powerful one: this is the notable horn in the he-goat, which being exaſperated by the ram, the Perſians, and their invaſion of Greece, puſhed at them, and deſtroyed them, ch. viii. 5, 6, 7: that ſhall rule with great dominion; not in Greece only, but in the whole world, at leaſt as he thought, and really did over a very great part of it; for, as Jerom ſays, having conquered the Illyrians, Thracians, Greece, and Thebes, he paſſed into Aſia, and having put to flight the generals of Darius, he took the city of Sardis, and afterwards India. And do according to his will; not only in his own army, ſacrificing his beſt friends at his pleaſure; but with his enemies, conquering whom he would, none being able to withſtand him; all things ſucceeded to his wiſh; whatever he attempted he performed. His hiſtorian[o] ſays of him, "that it muſt be owned, he "owed much to virtue, but more to fortune, "which alone of all mortals he had in his power;" ſince, by the benefit of it, he ſeemed to do with nations whatever he pleaſed; he was ſovereign in all things, and ſet himſelf to be worſhipped as a deity.

℣. 4 And when he ſhall ſtand up, his kingdom ſhall be broken, &c.] When Alexander was riſen up to his higheſt pitch of grandeur, was ſole monarch of the world, in the height of his ambition, in the prime of his days, he was cut off by death; his kingdom remained no more one, but became many, was ſeized by different perſons, his generals, and ſo broke to pieces: and ſhall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; which ſeem to have reſpect to the four horns or kings, which came up in his room, ch. viii. 8. and among whom his kingdom was parted; Ptolemy reigned in Egypt to the ſouth; Antigonus in Aſia to the north; Seleucus in Babylon and Syria to the eaſt; and Caſſander in Macedonia to the weſt: and not to his poſterity; for tho' he had two ſons, one by Barſine, whoſe name was Hercules, who was living at his death; and another by Roxane, born after his death, whoſe name was Alexander; yet they were both deſtroyed by Caſſander, or his means, that he might enjoy Macedonia [p]: nor according to his dominion, which he ruled; their dominion was not ſo large and powerful as Alexander's was, being divided into ſeveral parts; ſee ch. viii. 22: for his kingdom ſhall be plucked up, even for others beſides thoſe; either beſides his poſterity, who had no ſhare in it, and ſo with reſpect to his family, was like a tree plucked up by the roots, and as to their concern in it, withered away at once; or beſides the four governors before-mentioned, there were others that had, at leaſt for a while, ſome leſſer ſhares in the kingdom, as Eumenes, Philotas, Leonnatus, and others; but, at length, all were reduced to the kings of Egypt and Syria, the Lagidæ and Seleucidæ, which the following part of the prophecy chiefly concerns; and beſides theſe, for the Romans alſo, to whom this kingdom came.

℣. 5. And the king of the ſouth ſhall be ſtrong, &c.] That is, the king of Egypt, which lay ſouth to Syria, as Syria lay north to Egypt; and therefore the king of the one is called the king of the ſouth, and the other the king of the north, throughout this prophecy; and by the king of the ſouth or Egypt, is here meant Ptolemy Lagus, one of Alexander's generals, who had Egypt for his ſhare; and a very powerful king he was; for he reigned over Egypt, Lybia, Cyrene, Ethiopia, Arabia, Phœnicia, Cæleſyria, Cyprus, and ſeveral iſles in the Ægean ſea, and many cities in Greece: and one of his princes; not of Ptolemy king of Egypt, but of Alexander the Great; and this is Seleucus Nicator, afterwards called king of the north, having Syria for his part, which lay to the north of Egypt, as before obſerved: and he ſhall be ſtrong above him, and have dominion; that is, be a greater and more powerful prince than Ptolemy king of Egypt: his dominion ſhall be a great dominion; even greater than the other's; for he reigned over Macedonia, Greece, Thrace, Aſia, Syria, Babylonia, Media, and all the eaſtern countries as far as India; even from Taurus to the river Indus, and ſo likewiſe from Taurus to the Ægean ſea: theſe two are only mentioned, who ſhared the Perſian monarchy, becauſe the Jews were only affected by them, for the ſake of whom this prophecy is delivered.

℣. 6. And in the end of years they ſhall join themſelves together, &c.] The two kings of Egypt and Syria; not the two former kings, but their ſucceſſors: the king of Egypt was Ptolemy Philadelphus, the ſecond king of Egypt, the ſon of Ptolemy Lagus; this is the king of Egypt, who collected ſuch a vaſt number of books into his library at Alexandria, and got the law of Moſes tranſlated into Greek: the king of Syria was Antiochus, ſurnamed Theos; this name was firſt given him by the Mileſians, upon his delivering them from the tyranny of Timarchus governor of Caria; he was the third king of Syria; Seleucus Nicator the firſt, Antiochus Soter the ſecond, and this the third: there had been very great wars between theſe kings for many years; and now being weary of them, they entered into confederacies and alliances with each other, and which were deſigned to be ſtrengthened by a marriage next mentioned; this is thought to be about ſeventy years after the death of Alexander [q]: for the king's daughter of the ſouth ſhall come to the king of the north to make an agreement; this was Berenice, daughter of Ptolemy Philadelphus king of Egypt, who carried her to Peluſium, and from thence ſailed with her to Seleucia in Syria; where he met with Antiochus king of Syria, to whom he gave her in marriage, with a vaſt dowry of gold and ſilver; hence ſhe was called Φερνοφορος; and the marriage was celebrated with great ſolemnity [r]: and this was to make agreement, or to make things right or ſtrait [s]; that were wrong and crooked before; to put an end to wars and diſcords; to make peace, and cultivate friendſhip; to ſtrengthen alliances, and confirm each other in their kingdoms: but ſhe ſhall not retain the power of the arm; unite the two kingdoms, and ſecure the peace of them, which was the thing in view; nor retain her intereſt in her huſband, nor her power at court; for as ſoon as her father was dead, Antiochus diſmiſſed Berenice from his bed, and took Laodice his former wife again, by whom he had had two ſons, Seleucus Callinicus, and Antiochus Hierax [t]: neither ſhall he ſtand, nor his arm; neither Antiochus; for Laodice knowing that by the late treaty, the crown was ſettled upon the children of Berenice, who already had a ſon by him, and ſenſible of his fickleneſs, and fearing he might divorce her again, and take to Berenice, got him poiſoned by his ſervants: nor Berenice his queen, called his arm; who fleeing to Daphne for ſhelter, on hearing what was done, was there ſlain; or it may be his ſon he had by her, ſo it follows: but ſhe ſhall be given up; into the hands of Seleucus Callinicus, the ſon of Laodice; whom ſhe placed on the throne after the death of his father; and who ſent to Daphne to ſlay Berenice, which was accordingly done [u]: and they that brought her; into Syria; that attended her from Egypt at her marriage, and continued with her in the court of Syria, and fled with her to Daphne: and he that begat her; or, whom ſhe brought forth, as in the margin; her little ſon, who was murdered at the ſame time with her; for her father died before: and he that ſtrengthened her in theſe times; either her huſband, or her father, who were both dead before, and ſo ſtood not, and could not help her; unleſs this is to be underſtood of her brother, and the cities of the leſſer Aſia, who hearing of her diſtreſs at Daphne, ſet out for her relief, but came too late; ſhe and her ſon were both ſlain firſt [w].

℣. 7. But out of a branch of her roots ſhall one ſtand up in his eſtate, &c.] Or, out of a branch of her roots a ſhoot thereof ſhall ſtand or riſe up [x]; by her roots are meant her anceſtors, particularly Ptolemy Lagus; by a branch from thence, Ptolemy Philadelphus her father; and by the ſhoot out of that, or its plantation, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, is deſigned her brother, Ptolemy Euergetes; who ſucceeded her father in the kingdom, and ſtood firm in it; upon his baſis [y], as ſome render it: which ſhall come with an army; or, to an army [z]; as ſoon as he heard of his ſiſter's caſe, he put himſelf at the head of an army, and marched to her relief; but coming too late, he, and the forces of the leſſer Aſia, which came for the ſame purpoſe, joining him, reſolved to revenge the death of his ſiſter and her ſon, went with his army into Syria, as next foretold: and ſhall enter into the fortreſs of the king of the north; the king of Syria, Seleucus Callinicus: Ptolemy entered into Syria itſelf, as Polybius [a] ſays, into the fortified cities of it, and took them, the ſingular being put for the plural; unleſs Seleucia itſelf is particularly deſigned, which Ptolemy ſeized, and put a garriſon of Egyptians in it, which held it twenty ſeven years [b]: and ſhall deal againſt them; beſiege and take them at his pleaſure; the king of Syria not being able to ſtand againſt him and defend them: and ſhall prevail; over the king of Syria, and conquer great part of his dominions, as he did: he took Syria and Cilicia, and the ſuperior parts beyond Euphrates, and almoſt all Aſia, as Jerom relates; and had it not been for a ſedition in his own kingdom, which called him home, he had made himſelf maſter of the whole kingdom of Seleucus, as Juſtin [c] ſays.

℣. 8. And ſhall alſo carry captive into Egypt their gods, with their princes, &c.] Jerom relates, from the hiſtorians he converſed with, that Ptolemy carried captive with him into Egypt two thouſand five hundred images; among which were many of the idols which Cambyſes, when he conquered Egypt, carried from thence; and Ptolemy replacing them in their proper temples, gained him the affection of his people the Egyptians, who were much addicted to idolatry; hence they gave him the name of Euergetes, that is, the benefactor: and with their precious veſſels of ſilver and of gold; the ſame writer reports, that he brought with him out of Syria, and the places he conquered, forty thouſand talents of ſilver, and precious veſſels; veſſels of gold and ſilver, a prodigious number: and he ſhall continue more years than the king of the north; according to the canon of Ptolemy, this king of Egypt reigned twenty-five years; and, as Dr. Prideaux [d] obſerves, out-lived Seleucus king of Syria four years.

℣. 9. So the king of the ſouth ſhall come into his kingdom, &c.] Into his own kingdom, the kingdom of Egypt; or into the kingdom of Syria, the kingdom of Seleucus, and conquer great part of it, and ravage and ſpoil it: and ſhall return into his own land; the land of Egypt; he ſhall go and come with eaſe, and as he pleaſes, none to hinder him; and come back with a great ſpoil, as before related: Cocceius renders it, and ſomething ſhall come in the kingdom of the king of the ſouth, and he ſhall return to his own land; and thinks this refers to the ſedition raiſed there, before-mentioned, which obliged him to return ſooner than he intended. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, and he ſhall enter into the kingdom of the king of the ſouth, and he ſhall return to his own land; that is, Seleucus ſhould attempt to enter into the kingdom of Ptolemy king of Egypt, in revenge of his having entered into his country and ſpoiled it; but ſhall be obliged to return to his own land without any ſucceſs: and ſo Juſtin [e] ſays, that he fitted out a great fleet, which was deſtroyed by a violent ſtorm; and after this he raiſed a great army to recover his dominion, but was defeated by Ptolemy, and fled in great terror and trembling to Antioch; and this ſuits well with what follows.

℣. 10. But his ſons ſhall be ſtirred up, &c.] Not of the king of the ſouth or Egypt, but of the king of the north or Syria; the ſons of Seleucus Callinicus, who died, as Juſtin [f] ſays, by a fall from his horſe; theſe were Seleucus Ceraunus and Antiochus, who was afterwards called the Great: theſe being irritated and provoked by what Ptolemy Euergetes had done in revenge of his ſiſter, taking part of their father's kingdom from him, and carrying off ſo rich a booty, joined together, and exerted themſelves to recover their dominions from him: and ſhall aſſemble a multitude of great forces; or, a multitude of men, even large armies [g]; which they put themſelves at the head of, in order to make war with the king of Egypt: and one ſhall certainly come, and overflow, and paſs thro'; this is to be underſtood of Antiochus; for Seleucus dying in the third year of his reign, being ſlain in Phrygia, thro' the treachery of Nicator and Apaturius, as Jerom relates; or, as others, poiſoned; Antiochus ſucceeded him, and alone headed the armies they had collected; and with which, like an inundation of water, to which armies are ſometimes compared, he attacked Seleucia, and took it; and entered into Cœleſyria, and over-ran it, being delivered into his hands by the treachery of Theodotus, who governed there for Ptolemy, whom he had offended: after this he came to Berytus, entered the province by a place which the countrymen called the face of God; and which Grotius, not improbably, takes to be Phanuel; took the town of Botris, and ſet fire to Trieres and Calamus, or Calene: he next invaded Paleſtine, and took ſeveral places in it; went as far as Rabata Maſſane, or Rabatamana, a city in Arabia, the ſame with Rabbath Ammon, which ſurrendered to him [h]: then ſhall he return, and be ſtirred up even to his fortreſs; the ſpring following he returned with a numerous army, and came to Raphia, a fortified city in Egypt, which lay between that and Paleſtine; where, as Strabo [i] ſays, Ptolemy the fourth (i. e. Philopator) fought with Antiochus the Great.

℣. 11. And the king of the ſouth ſhall be moved with choler, &c.] This is Ptolemy Philopator, who ſucceeded Ptolemy Euergetes in the kingdom of Egypt; ſo called ironically, becauſe of his murder of his father and mother, as Juſtin [k] relates; the ſame, tho' naturally ſluggiſh and ſlothful, was provoked and exaſperated at the proceedings of Antiochus, retaking Cœleſyria, invading Paleſtine, and coming up to the borders of his kingdom: and ſhall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north; he aſſembled an army, and marched with them, from the interior part of his kingdom, to the border of it, to Raphia, a city between Rhinocorura and Gaza; where he met with Antiochus, and a battel was fought, as before obſerved: and he ſhall ſet forth a great multitude; this is true of both kings, their armies were very large; that of Ptolemy king of Egypt conſiſted, according to Polybius [l], of ſeventy thouſand foot, five thouſand horſe, and ſeventy-three elephants; and that of Antiochus king of Syria conſiſted of ſixty-two, ſome ſay ſeventy-two, thouſand foot, ſix thouſand horſe, and a hundred and two elephants: the former army, that of the king of Egypt, ſeems rather deſigned, if the preceding clauſe is conſulted; tho' the latter, that of Antiochus, beſt agrees with what follows: but the multitude ſhall be given into his hand; that is, the multitude of the army of Antiochus ſhould be delivered into the hands of Ptolemy Philopator, and ſo it was; for Antiochus loſt ten thouſand foot, and three hundred horſe; four thouſand foot were taken, three elephants ſlain, and two wounded, which afterwards died, and moſt of the reſt were taken [k]: this victory is aſcribed to Arſinoe the ſiſter and wife of Ptolemy, who ran about the army with her hair diſhevelled, and by intreaties and promiſes greatly encouraged the ſoldiers to fight; of which ſee 3 Maccab. i. and with which Polybius [l] agrees.

ỷ. 12. And when he hath taken away the multitude, &c.] That is, when Ptolemy king of Egypt had defeated the large army of Antiochus, killed great numbers of them, and taken many: his heart ſhall be lifted up; with pride, thro' the victory he obtained; and ſo he gave himſelf up to ſenſuality and luxury, judging himſelf now ſafe and ſecure in the poſſeſſion of his kingdom: or this may refer to his inſolence, when he entered into Judea, went to Jeruſalem, and forced his way into the holieſt of all to offer ſacrifice upon his victory; of which ſee 3 Maccab. i: and he ſhall caſt down many ten thouſands; or, many thouſands, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; or rather ten thouſand [m], either of the Jews, when he went into their country; or of the army of Antiochus the king of the north, as Jacchiades: and it may be rendered, tho' he ſhall caſt down many thouſands [n]; that is, caſt them down to the earth, ſlay them, as he did, even ten thouſand of them, the number here mentioned: yet he ſhall not be ſtrengthened by it; for Antiochus eſcaped out of his hands, nor did he purſue his victory, and take all the advantages of it as he might have done; for, as the hiſtorian [o] ſays, had he added valour to his fortune, he might have ſpoiled Antiochus of his kingdom; but, content with the recovery of the cities he loſt, made peace, and greedily took the advantage of eaſe, and rolled himſelf in luxury, uncleanneſs and intemperance.

ỷ. 13. For the king of the north ſhall return, &c.] As Antiochus king of Syria did, upon the death of Ptolemy Philopator, who was ſucceded by his ſon Ptolemy Epiphanes, a minor of five years of age: Antiochus took the advantage of this minority, and entered into a league with Philip king of Macedon, to divide the kingdom of Egypt between them; and marched an army into Cœleſyria and Paleſtine, and made himſelf maſter of thoſe countries: and ſhall ſet forth a multitude greater than the former; bring a larger army into the field than he had done before, which Jerom ſays he brought out of the upper parts of Babylon; ſome ſay it conſiſted of three hundred thouſand foot, beſides horſe and elephants: and ſhall certainly come (after certain years) with a great army, and with much riches; with all manner of proviſions to ſupply his numerous army, and all proper accommodations for it; money to pay his ſoldiers, and beaſts of burden to carry their baggage from place to place: this was about fourteen years after the former battel, as Dr. Prideaux [p] obſerves; and according to Biſhop Uſher's annals, thirteen years.

ỷ. 14. And in thoſe times there ſhall many ſtand up againſt the king of the ſouth, &c.] The king of Egypt, Ptolemy Epiphanes being a minor; and while he was ſuch, Antiochus king of Syria, and Philip king of Macedon, joined in alliance together, as before obſerved, to ſeize upon his kingdom, and divide it between them; and accordingly Antiochus began the war in Cœleſyria and Phœnicia, and Philip went againſt Egypt and Samos, or Caria, according to Polybius [q]. Agathocles and Agathoclea, favourites of the former king of Egypt, laid a ſcheme of taking the regency into their hands during the minority of the young king; and theſe being perſons of diſſolute lives, were hated by the Egyptians, which cauſed inſurrections and ſeditions among themſelves; and Scopas, a principal general in the army of the king of Egypt, formed a deſign of taking the government to himſelf: alſo the robbers of thy people ſhall exalt themſelves to eſtabliſh the viſion; this is directed to the prophet Daniel, and reſpects the Jews his countrymen, at leaſt ſome of them, refractory perſons that broke thro' all laws of God and men; ſeditious men, diſturbers of the public peace, and who lived upon the ſpoil and plunder of others; theſe either took the advantage of the diſturbances in Egypt, and went thither, and plundered what they could, in a bold and audacious manner, and ſo helped to fulfil this prophecy; or during the troubles in their own land, thro' the kings of Egypt and Syria, took the opportunity of committing thefts and robberies in a very daring manner, whereby they brought upon them thoſe evils threatened in the law to ſuch perſons; and particularly when the Egyptians prevailed, they ſided with them againſt Antiochus, eſpecially ſuch who apoſtatized from their religion to pleaſe the king of Egypt; but were aftewards puniſhed by Antiochus, as it follows: but they ſhall fall; be cut off and deſtroyed, as thoſe apoſtates that were of Ptolemy's party were by Antiochus, when he invaded Judea, and became maſter of Jeruſalem, ; ſee 3 Maccab. i. Some underſtand this of the apoſtate Jews, who fled with Onias the high-prieſt to Egypt, and were there honourably received by Ptolemy, and obtained leave to build a temple there, under pretence of fulfilling the viſion or prophecy in Iſ. xix. 19. which continued many years to the times of the Romans, by whom it was deſtroyed; but this does not agree with the reign of this king of Egypt; for it was in the times of Ptolemy Philometor that this affair happened, as Joſephus [r] relates. Sir Iſaac Newton interprets it, of the Samaritans [s].

ỷ. 15. So the king of the north ſhall come, and caſt up a mount, and take the moſt fenced cities, &c.] That is, Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, ſhould come into Cœleſyria and Phœnicia, which was the part of the kingdom of Egypt he was to have by the league with Philip king of Macedon; and this is a prophecy of his expedition into thoſe parts, and the ſucceſs of it. Scopas a general of Ptolemy being ſent by him into Cœleſyria, had took many of the cities of it, and the land of Judea; but Antiochus coming into thoſe parts with his army, beat Scopas at the fountains of Jordan, and deſtroyed great part of his forces, and retook the cities of Cæleſyria, Scopas had made himſelf maſter of, and ſubdued Samaria; upon which the Jews voluntarily ſubmitted to him, and received him into their city, as Joſephus [t] relates; and Polybius [u], as quoted by him, ſays, that Scopas being conquered by Antiochus, he took Batanea, Samaria, Abila and Gadara, and that the Jews in a little time ſurrendered to him; and ſo Livy ſays [w], that Antiochus reduced all the cities that Ptolemy had in Cæleſyria into ſubjection to him; and theſe are the moſt fenced cities pointed at in this prophecy, againſt which the king of Syria caſt up mounts, in order to take them; or placed battering engines before them, as the word alſo ſignifies, as Kimchi obſerves [x], by which ſtones were caſt into the beſieged cities: and the arms of the ſouth ſhall not withſtand, neither his choſen people; neither ſhall there be any ſtrength to withſtand; all the forces of the king of Egypt muſtered together would not be able to withſtand the power of Antiochus, who would, as he did, carry all before him; not their moſt powerful armies, nor moſt courageous generals, nor valiant ſoldiers, the choiceſt of them, nor any auxiliaries called in to their aſſiſtance; for when Scopas was beat by Antiochus at Jordan, he fled to Sidon with ten thouſand ſoldiers, where he was ſhut up in a cloſe ſiege; and tho' Ptolemy ſent his famous and choiceſt commanders to his relief, Eropus, Menocles, and Damoxenus, as Jerom relates; yet they were not able to raiſe the ſiege, but by famine were forced to ſurrender; and he and his men were diſmiſſed naked.

℣. 16. But he that cometh againſt him ſhall do according to his own will, and none ſhall ſtand before him, &c.] Antiochus the Great, who came againſt Ptolemy king of Egypt, would do in thoſe parts where he came as he pleaſed; take cities, and diſpoſe of them at his pleaſure; the army of the king of Egypt not being able to oppoſe him, and ſtop his conqueſts in Cæleſyria and Phænicia; nor ſhould they hinder his entrance into Judea: and he ſhall ſtand in the glorious land; Judea ſo called, not only becauſe of its fertility, but chiefly becauſe of the worſhip of God in it; here Antiochus ſtood as a victorious conqueror; the Jews readily ſubmitting to him, and received him into their city, and aſſiſted him in reducing the caſtle where Scopas had placed a garriſon of ſoldiers: which by his hand ſhall be conſumed; by his numerous army, and the foraging of his ſoldiers, eating up and deſtroying the fruits of the earth wherever they came; otherwiſe the land of Judea, and the inhabitants of it were not conſumed and deſtroyed by him at this time; but rather brought into more flouriſhing circumſtances, having many favours and privileges beſtowed on them by him, on account of the reſpect they ſhowed him; for on his coming to Jeruſalem, the prieſts and elders went out to meet him, and gladly received him and his army, and furniſhed him with horſes and elephants, and helped him in reducing the garriſon Scopas had left [y], as before obſerved: hence ſome render the words, which by his hand was perfected [z]; reſtored to perfect peace and proſperity, which had been for ſome years harraſſed and diſtreſſed by the Egyptians and Syrians, in their turns being maſters of it; the elders, prieſts and Levites he freed from tribute, gave them leave to live according to their own laws, granted them cattel and other things for ſacrifice, and wood for the repairing and perfecting of their temple. The letters he wrote on this account are to be ſeen in Joſephus [a].

℣. 17. He ſhall alſo ſet his face to enter with the ſtrength of his whole kingdom, &c.] Antiochus having conquered Cæleſyria, Phænicia and Judea, ſhould ſet his face towards the land of Egypt, having a greedy deſire after it, and bend his mind and forces that way; form a deſign of invading it, and for that purpoſe determine to bring all the forces he could muſter together throughout his dominions. So Juſtin [b] ſays, that upon the death of Ptolemy Philopator, Antiochus king of Syria determined to ſeize on Egypt. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, that he might come to lay hold on his whole kingdom; to ſeize the whole kingdom of the king of Egypt: and upright ones with him; meaning, as many think, the Jews ſo called, to diſtinguiſh them from the heathens, and even from thoſe Jews who had took on the ſide of Ptolemy, and had changed their religion; but theſe perſevered in it, which Antiochus approved of; and had now a great opinion of them, and had beſtowed many favours upon them, as before obſerved; wherefore he might take ſome of them, and they might chooſe to go with him on this expedition, and eſpecially to aſſiſt in his intended agreement with the king of Egypt, and the marriage of his daughter to him; in bringing about which they were to have a concern, as being reckoned men of probity and uprightneſs: or rather the ſenſe is according to the Vulgate Latin verſion, and he ſhall do right things; in ſhow and appearance: or, he ſhall make agreement, or peace, as Aben Ezra; enter into covenants of alliance and marriage, upon ſeeming juſt conditions, with a great ſhow of ſincerity and uprightneſs: thus ſhall he do; in the following manner: or, and he ſhall do [c]; that is, ſucceed in his propoſals: and he ſhall give him the daughter of women corrupting her; this was the ſtratagem he uſed, finding he could not obtain the kingdom of Egypt by force of arms, for fear of the Romans, who were the guardians of the king of Egypt, he propoſed to give his daughter Cleopatra to him in marriage, a beautiful virgin; and therefore called the daughter of women; or rather becauſe ſhe was as yet under the care of the women ſhe was firſt committed to, as Guſſetius [d] obſerves; and ſo he did marry her, and gave for her dowry Cæleſyria, Samaria, Judea and Phænicia [e]: this was done at Raphia [f], a fortified city of Egypt, where the famous battel had been fought between him and Ptolemy Philopator; ſee ℣. 10. and if the former clauſe is rendered, as I think it may, he ſhall alſo ſet his face to enter into the fortreſs of the whole kingdom; this is the place intended, where he was deſirous of going to meet the king of Egypt, and execute this ſcheme of his; which, tho' done under a plauſible pretence of peace, and of putting an end to their quarrels, was with a view to get his kingdom into his hands; corrupting his daughter to betray the counſels of her huſband; or to put him to death by poiſon, or otherwiſe, that he might ſeize the kingdom on her behalf: or it may be rendered, to corrupt or deſtroy it [g], the kingdom; he married his daughter to the king of Egypt with this view, to obtain the kingdom from him: but ſhe ſhall not ſtand on his ſide, neither be for him; being married, ſhe forgot her own people, and her father's houſe, and cleaved to her huſband; took his part, and not her father's, yea took part with her huſband againſt her father; for embaſſadors were ſent out of Egypt by both her huſband and herſelf, congratulating the Romans on the victory Acilius gained over Antiochus her father, and that he had drove him out of Greece, exhorting them to carry their army into Aſia[h]; and thus he was diſappointed of his deſign in this marriage: and this may be the meaning of the expreſſion here; for it may be rendered, it ſhall not ſtand[i]; his counſel ſhall not ſtand, his ſcheme ſhall not take place, but fall to the ground, and come to nothing: and it ſhall not be for him; the kingdom ſhall not be his, he ſhall never poſſeſs it, as he did not.

ỳ. 18. After this he ſhall turn his face unto the iſles, and ſhall take many, &c.] Finding himſelf diſappointed in his deſign on the kingdom of Egypt, he turned his face, and ſteered his courſe another way, and with a large fleet ſailed into the Ægean ſea; and, as Jerom relates, took Rhodes, Samos, Colophon and Phocea, and many other iſlands; and alſo ſeveral cities of Greece and Aſia, which lay on the ſea-coaſts; it being uſual with the Jews to call ſuch maritime places, iſlands: but a prince for his own behalf ſhall cauſe the reproach offered by him to ceaſe; the reproach that Antiochus caſt upon the Romans, by ſeizing on their provinces, taking their cities, doing injuries to their allies, and treating their embaſſadors with contempt: this the Romans wiped off by taking up arms againſt him, and gaining victories over him both by ſea and land. The prince here may deſign the Romans in general, who, on their own behalf, or for their own honour, ſent out armies and fleets againſt him, to put a ſtop to his inſults over them; or ſome particular leader and commander of theirs, not a king, but a general or admiral, as Marcus Acilius, who beat him at the ſtreights of Thermopylæ; alſo Livius Salinator, who got the victory over his fleet about Phocea, where he ſunk ten of his ſhips, and took thirteen; likewiſe Æmilius Regillus, who got the better of his fleet at Myonneſus near Epheſus; and eſpecially Lucius Scipio, who, in a land-fight, beat him at mount Siphylus, with an army of thirty thouſand againſt ſeventy thouſand, killed fifty thouſand foot of Antiochus's army, and four thouſand horſe, and took fourteen hundred priſoners, with fifteen elephants and their commanders[k], and ſo drove him out of Leſſer Aſia: without his own reproach he ſhall cauſe it to turn upon him; without any reproach to the Roman general; the reproach which Antiochus caſt upon the Roman nation was turned upon his own head, by the many victories obtained over him by ſea and land, and eſpecially by the laſt and total defeat of him; for no other terms of peace could he obtain, but to pay all the expences of the war, quit all Aſia on that ſide Taurus, and give hoſtages, and his own ſon was one, 1 Maccab. i. 11.

ỳ. 19. Then he ſhall turn his face towards the fort of his own land, &c.] After his defeat he fled with a few to Sardis, and from thence to Apamea, ſo Livy; and to Suſa, and to the further parts of his dominions, as Jerom; or rather he betook himſelf to Antioch his capital city, called here the fort of his own land, where he was obliged to continue: but he ſhall ſtumble and fall, and not be found; the expences of the war which Antiochus agreed to pay being reckoned at fifteen thouſand Eubœan talents, five hundred talents were to be paid down; two thouſand five hundred at the ratification of the treaty by the ſenate of Rome; and the other twelve thouſand to be paid yearly, at a thouſand talents each year: now, being either in want of money, or thro' covetouſneſs, he attempted to rob the temple of Jupiter Elymæus, and went by night thither with his army for that purpoſe; but the thing being betrayed, the inhabitants got together, and ſlew him with all his ſoldiers, as Juſtin[l] relates. Strabo[m] ſays, that Antiochus the Great endeavouring to rob the temple of Bel, the barbarians near to (Elymais) roſe of themſelves, and ſlew him; and ſo never returned to Syria any more, but died in the province of Elymais, being ſlain by the Perſians there as related, and was never found more, or was buried; and this was the end of this great man, of whom ſo many things are ſaid in this prophecy, and others follow concerning his ſucceſſors. He died in the thirty-ſeventh year of his reign, and the fifty-ſecond of his age[n].

ỳ. 20. Then ſhall ſtand up in his eſtate a raiſer of taxes in the glory of the kingdom, &c.] This was not Antiochus Epiphanes, as Theodoret, he is deſigned in the next verſe; nor Ptolemy Epiphanes, as Porphyry, for he did not ſucceed Antiochus the Great; nor Tryphon tutor to Antiochus, as ſome Jewiſh writers; but Seleucus Philopator, the eldeſt ſon of Antiochus the Great; who ſucceeded him, and was ſettled in his kingdom in his father's room, and ſtood upon his baſis; and might well be called a raiſer of taxes, being not only a covetous man, and a lover of money above all things; and therefore laid heavy taxes on his ſubjects to gratify his avarice; but was indeed obliged to it, to raiſe the thouſand talents yearly to pay the Romans, which his father had laid himſelf under obligation to do; and this took up the whole life of this his ſucceſſor; for as there were twelve thouſand talents to pay, a thouſand each year, and Seleucus reigned in all but twelve years at moſt, he did nothing but raiſe taxes yearly to pay this tribute. It may be rendered, then ſhall ſtand upon his baſis; or, in his room, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, in the room of Antiochus the Great, one that cauſes the exactors to paſs thro' the glory of the kingdom[o]; that cauſes tax-gatherers to go thro' the kingdom, and collect the tax of the people, who are the glory of the kingdom, eſpecially the rich, the nobility, and gentry; or money, which is the glory of a nation: or, ſhall cauſe the exactors to paſs over to the glory of the kingdom; that is, cauſe a tax-gatherer to go over from Syria to the glorious land, or the glorious part of his dominion, the land of Judea; and ſo may have reſpect particularly to Heliodorus his treaſurer, whom he ſent to Jeruſalem to demand the treaſure of money he heard was laid up in the temple there; ſee 2 Maccab. iii. 7: but within few days he ſhall be deſtroyed, neither in anger, nor in battel; or, within a few years, as Grotius and Prideaux render it; days being often put for years.

[o] ועמד על כנו מעביר נוגש הדר מלכות ſtabit autem ſuper baſi illius, qui tranſire faciet exactorem per decus regni, Michaelis.

Seleucus reigned but twelve years at moſt, which were but few in compariſon of the long reign of his father, which was a reign of thirty-ſeven years; and he died not thro' the rage of the populace, or thro' the ſedition and rebellion of his ſubjects, nor in war with a foreign enemy; but thro' the treachery of Heliodorus his treaſurer, by whom he was poiſoned, as is ſuppoſed; either for the ſake of Antiochus Epiphanes, who was at that very time returning from Rome, where he had been an hoſtage ever ſince the defeat of his father, the money being now paid, which was ſtipulated; or rather on his own account, having a deſign to ſeize the kingdom for himſelf.

℣. 21. And in his eſtate ſhall ſtand up a vile perſon, &c.] Upon his baſis or ſtand, in the ſame place where Seleucus Philopator ſtood, ſucceeded Antiochus Epiphanes his brother; called vile, being a very immoral man, given to drunkenneſs, laſciviouſneſs, uncleanneſs and unnatural luſts, and a violent perſecutor of the church of God. The word ſignifies deſpicable [p]; he was a vile perſon, and juſtly contemned for his vices, and alſo for that mean and ignoble life he had lived at Rome, having been an hoſtage there for eleven or twelve years; and tho' the other hoſtages were changed at three years end, yet he remained; which ſhows what little account he was of even with his father; and was in no eſteem with the people, among whom, by his freaks and frolicks, he made himſelf very ridiculous; by rambling about ſtreets with a ſervant or two; converſing with tradeſmen about their trades; drinking with ſtrangers, and people of low life; revelling at merry bouts with young people; putting on ſtrange habits; throwing away his money among the rabble, and ſtones at thoſe that followed him; waſhing at public baths among the common people; all which, and many others, are reported [q] of him by hiſtorians; hence he was called by ſome Epimanes the madman; tho' he took to himſelf the title of Epiphanes the illuſtrious, the reverſe of his character. This is the little horn in ch. viii. 9. and who was an eminent type of antichriſt, with whom his character agrees, as well as other things: to whom they ſhall not give the honour of the kingdom; neither his father, nor his brother, nor the peers and people of the land of the kingdom of Syria; they never once thought of making him king; they neither choſe him, nor called him, nor crowned him: but he ſhall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries; pretending to take it, not for himſelf, but for his nephew Demetrius, the ſon of his brother Seleucus, now an hoſtage at Rome, in his ſtead; ſo that the ſtates oppoſed him not, but quietly admitted him, thinking all was ſafe for the rightful heir and ſucceſſor; and when he had got poſſeſſion for his nephew, he obtained it for himſelf by his flattering ſpeeches to the nobles, and his gifts among the citizens, and his great pretenſions to clemency and humanity; or theſe flatteries may refer to the artifices he uſed to gain Eumenes king of Pergamus, and Attalus his brother, to aſſiſt him againſt Heliodorus the uſurper; and the promiſes of friendſhip and aſſiſtance againſt the Romans he made to them, and by whoſe help he came peaceably to the kingdom.

℣. 22. And with the arms of a flood ſhall they be overflown from before him, and ſhall be broken, &c.] That is, by the help of the forces of Eumenes and Attalus, which were like an inundation of water, the party that were on the ſide of Heliodorus the uſurper, were bore down, cruſhed and deſtroyed; and thereby Antiochus had a peaceable ſettlement in the kingdom: or, the arms of a flood ſhall be overflowed from before him, and be broken [r]; either the arms of Heliodorus, the forces he had got together; or the armies of the Egyptians, which, like an overflowing flood, had uſed to run over Judea, Cœleſyria, Phœnicia, and other places, and carry all before them, now ſhould be overflowed, and bore down themſelves; of which ſee more on ℣. 25: yea, alſo the prince of the covenant; which ſome underſtand of Judas Maccabæus, as Jerom and Jacchiades; others more probably of Onias the high-prieſt, whom Antiochus depoſed in the firſt year of his reign, and ſold the prieſthood to Jaſon his younger brother for 440 talents of ſilver; and who alſo promiſed to give him 150 more for a licenſe to erect a place of exerciſe for the training up of youth, according to the faſhion of the Greeks; which Antiochus greedily embraced, the public treaſury being empty thro' the large tribute paid to the Romans the laſt twelve years; ſee 2 Maccab. iv. 7, 8, 9, 34, 35. Others think Seleucus Philopator his brother is meant, which is not probable, his death being before deſcribed; rather Demetrius his nephew, with whom he covenanted to hold the kingdom for him, or thro' whom the covenant and peace with the Romans was continued ſo long, he being an hoſtage at Rome; tho' others are of opinion, that Trypho a peer of the realm of Egypt is deſigned, who was the principal perſon concerned in a covenant made between Antiochus and Ptolemy Philometor king of Egypt; tho' it is more likely that Ptolemy himſelf is the perſon pointed at.

℣. 23. And after the league made with him, &c.] The prince of the covenant; either Demetrius his nephew, or Ptolemy Philometor king of Egypt, with whom a league was made in the life-time of Cleopatra the ſiſter of Antiochus, and mother of Ptolemy: he ſhall work deceitfully; either with the princes and people of Syria, by good words and fair ſpeeches, and by gifts and preſents to get the kingdom for himſelf, tho' he had covenanted with his nephew to hold it for him, and reſign it to him at his return; and with the Romans, and among his friends in the ſenate, he artfully worked to detain him at Rome: or elſe with the king of Egypt, pretending great friendſhip to him, and to take the care and tuition of him during his minority; and at his coronation he ſent one Apollonius to be preſent at it, and to congratulate him upon it; ſee 2 Maccab. iv. 21: for he ſhall come up, and ſhall become ſtrong with a ſmall people; either he went into the heart of Syria with a ſmall number of men at firſt, and gathered together a large army; or into Phœnicia with a handful of men, where he ingratiated himſelf into the affections of the people by words and gifts, and became ſtrong; or he went up into Egypt accompanied only with a few, leſt the Egyptians ſhould be ſuſpicious of him; but theſe 'tis ſaid were valiant men, whom he placed in the forts of Egypt, and ſo became maſter of it, which is an inſtance of his deceitful working; and Sutorius an ancient hiſtorian, as quoted by Jerom, ſays that he ſubdued Egypt to himſelf with a very ſmall number of people.

℣. 24. He ſhall enter peaceably even upon the fatteſt places of the province, &c.] Or, into tranquillity, and the fatteſt places of the province [s]; that is, into ſuch places as were in great tranquillity, and men thought themſelves ſafe and ſecure, and had no ſuſpicion of his deſigns upon them, and which abounded in wealth and riches: theſe were either the principal cities in the kingdom of Syria, which he viſited in order to eſtabliſh himſelf in their good opinion of him; or the chief places of the province of Phœnicia, where he endeavoured to make himſelf acceptable by his munificence; or it may be, the beſt parts of the kingdom of Egypt are meant, the richeſt of them, ſuch as Memphis, and the places about it; where, as Sutorius in Jerom ſays, he went; and which places being fat, producing a large increaſe, and abounding in wealth, invited him thither; and which wealth he took, and ſcattered among his friends and ſoldiers, as in a following clauſe: and he ſhall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers fathers; none of his anceſtors more near, or more remote; not Antiochus the Great, nor Seleucus Ceraunus, nor Seleucus Callinicus, nor Antiochus Theos, nor Antiochus Soter, nor Seleucus Nicator, the founder of the Syrian empire; for however greater theſe might be in power or riches, they were inferior to him in ſucceſs; tho' they all, or moſt of them however, had their eye upon Egypt, and would gladly have been maſters of it; yet none of the kings of Syria prevailed over it, as Antiochus did; and this may alſo refer to what follows: he ſhall ſcatter among them the prey, and ſpoil, and riches; which he took from the fat places or rich cities he entered into; and theſe he plentifully and liberally diſperſed among his followers, his ſoldiers, the ſmall people he became ſtrong with, ℣. 23. whereby he gained their affections, and attached them to his intereſt; and in this his liberality and munificence he is ſaid to abound above all the kings that were before him, 1 Mac. iii. 30. and the character Joſephus [t] gives of him is, that he was a man of a large and liberal heart: yea, and he ſhall forecaſt his devices againſt the ſtrong holds; the fortreſſes of Egypt; as he got into the fat and richeſt parts of it, and diſtributed the wealth of them among his favourites and followers, which anſwered a good purpoſe; ſo he had his eye upon the fortified places of the kingdom, and contrived ways and means to get them into his poſſeſſion, as Peluſium, and other places; and how to keep them when he had got them, which he did: even for a time; till Ptolemy Philometor was at age, and freed himſelf from him; or till the Romans [u] put a ſtop to his power.

℣. 25. And he ſhall ſtir up his power, and his courage againſt the king of the ſouth, with a great army, &c.] That is, Antiochus ſhall arouſe himſelf, and exert his courage, and gather a large and powerful army, and ſet out with them to fight with Ptolemy Philometor king of Egypt: this is his ſecond expedition into Egypt, as is obſerved, 2 Mac. v. 1. before he went into Egypt more privately, with a few men, under a pretence of friendſhip; but now more openly as an enemy, with a large army; ſo it is ſaid in 1 Mac. i. 18. and he entered into Egypt with a great multitude, with chariots and with elephants, and with horſes, and with a great fleet; which account exactly agrees with this prophecy, and ſerves to illuſtrate it: and the king of the ſouth ſhall be ſtirred up to battel with a very great and mighty army; this is Ptolemy Philometor king of Egypt, who, hearing of the preparations of Antiochus, and of his deſign to enter his kingdom, gathered a large army together to give him battel: but he ſhall not ſtand; the king of Egypt could not ſtand againſt Antiochus; the two armies met between mount Caſius and Peluſium, where they came to a battel, and Antiochus got the victory: upon his ſecond victory over the forces of Ptolemy, he took Peluſium, and led his army into the very heart of the kingdom, and had it in his power to have cut off all the Egyptians to a man; he made himſelf maſter of Memphis, and all the reſt of Egypt, except Alexandria, which held out againſt him [w]: for they ſhall forecaſt devices againſt him; Antiochus, and thoſe that aſſiſted him with their counſels, formed ſchemes againſt Ptolemy, which ſucceeded: the loſs of the battel was not owing to want of the neceſſary preparations for it; or to an inſufficient number of men; or to a defect of military ſkill and courage; but to the treachery of his own courtiers and commanders, particularly Eulæus and Lennæus, to whom the blame was laid, and to the deſertion of Ptolemy Macron; which is more clearly expreſſed in the following verſe.

℣. 26. Yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat ſhall deſtroy him, &c.] Thoſe of his own houſhold, his familiar friends, his courtiers and counſellors, and the generals of his army; his deſtruction, or the loſs of the battel, was owing either to the bad counſels they gave him, or to their deſertion of him, being corrupted by Antiochus: and his army ſhall overflow; that is, the army of Antiochus, like a mighty inundation of water, which carries all before it, ſhould overflow, or bear down and deſtroy the army of Ptolemy, and overrun all Egypt, as it did, as before related; no more reſiſtance being to be made to it, than to a rapid flood of water: and many ſhall fall down ſlain; of the army of the king of Egypt. The account given of this affair in 1 Mac. i. 19. is, that Ptolemy was afraid of him (Antiochus) and fled, and many wounded fell; and they ſeized the fortified cities in the land of Egypt, and took the ſpoils of the land of Egypt. Joſephus ſays [x], that Antiochus "being "with a great army at Peluſium, and circumventing Ptolemy Philometor by fraud, ſeized on Egypt; "and being in the parts near to Memphis, and "taking it, he haſtened to Alexandria to beſiege "it, and got Ptolemy, reigning there, into his "hands."

℣. 27. And both theſe kings hearts ſhall be to do miſchief, &c.] Antiochus Epiphanes king of Syria, and Ptolemy Philometor king of Egypt, the latter being now in the hands of the former; whether he was taken by him, or voluntarily came to him, is not certain; but tho' they ſeemed to carry it very friendly to one another, yet at the ſame time they were contriving in their minds to do as much miſchief to each other as they could: and they ſhall ſpeak lies at one table; at an entertainment at Memphis, where they met to eat food together, which ſhows great familiarity; or at the council-table, where they pretended to conſult each other's good, and to ſecure the peace of both kingdoms, but impoſed on each other with lies. Antiochus pretended a great reſpect for Ptolemy, and that he had nothing more at heart than to take care of his affairs, and defend him againſt his brother Euergetes, whom the Alexandrians had ſet up for king; when his deſign was no other than to ſeize the kingdom of Egypt for himſelf: on the other hand, Ptolemy ſeemed greatly ſatisfied with his uncle's protection, and to place great confidence in him; when his view was to diſappoint his ſcheme, and come to an agreement with his brother; neither of them meant what they ſaid: but it ſhall not proſper; the conſultations they held, the ſchemes they laid, ſucceeded not; the peace made between them did not laſt: for yet the end ſhall be at the time appointed; by the Lord, by whom all events are pre-determined; whoſe counſel ſhall ſtand, notwithſtanding all the devices in the hearts of men, and of kings themſelves: the end of this peace between theſe two kings, and the end of the wars between them, yea the end of the two kingdoms, when they ſhould ceaſe, and come into other hands; all was fixed to a time appointed of God, and ſhould ſurely come to paſs, as he had decreed.

℣. 28. Then ſhall he return into his land with great riches, &c.] That is, Antiochus, with the ſpoils of Egypt, and the gifts and preſents he had received there; ſo the author of the firſt book of Maccabees ſays, ch. i. 20, 21. he took the ſpoils of the land of Egypt, and Antiochus returned after he had ſmote Egypt, in the hundred and forty-third year; that is, of the æra of the Seleucidæ, and the fifth or ſixth year of his reign: and his heart ſhall be againſt the holy covenant; not the covenant he had made with Ptolemy, which was a fraudulent one; but the covenant between God and the Jews; whereby they became a diſtinct and peculiar people, having a religion, laws, and ordinances different from all others; for which reaſon they were hated by other nations, and particularly by Antiochus; and his heart was the more enraged againſt them at this time, for the following reaſon; a falſe rumour being ſpread in Judea that Antiochus was dead, Jaſon took the opportunity to recover the office of high-prieſt from his brother Menelaus; and with a thouſand men took the city of Jeruſalem, drove his brother into the caſtle, and ſlew many he took for his enemies. Antiochus hearing of this, concluded the whole nation of the Jews had revolted from him; and therefore took Judea in his way from Egypt, in order to ſuppreſs this rebellion; ſee 2 Maccab. v. 5, 6, 11: and he ſhall do exploits; in Jeruſalem, very wicked ones indeed! he ordered his ſoldiers to ſlay all they met without mercy, old and young, women and children, virgins and young men; and in three days time eighty thouſand were ſlain, forty thouſand bound, and no leſs ſold: he went into the temple, and took all the veſſels in it, and all the gold and ſilver, and hidden treaſures of it, to the value of a thouſand and eight hundred talents, 2 Maccab. v. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 21. 1 Maccab. i. 23, 24, 25: and return to his own land; having done theſe exploits, he made what haſte he could to Antioch with the ſpoils of Egypt, and the plunder of the temple at Jeruſalem, 1 Maccab. i. 24. 2 Maccab. v. 21.

℣. 29. At the time appointed he ſhall return, and come toward the ſouth, &c.] At the time appointed of God, he ſhould return from Syria again to Egypt; which was his third expedition thither, and was occaſioned by the Alexandrians ſetting up the brother of Ptolemy Philometor for king; wherefore he haſtened to Egypt with a large army, under a pretence of reſtoring the depoſed king; but in reality to ſeize the kingdom for himſelf [y]: but it ſhall not be as the former, or as the latter; this expedition ſhould not ſucceed ſo well as the two former, as it did not; he could not carry his point, neither ſubdue Egypt, nor get any of the two brothers into his hands, as he had done before; the reaſon of which follows:

℣. 30. For the ſhips of Chittim ſhall come againſt him, &c.] Ptolemy king of Egypt, and his brother being come to an agreement, ſent an embaſſy to the ſenate of Rome to implore their help and aſſiſtance againſt Antiochus, who was preparing to beſiege them in Alexandria; upon which they ſent their embaſſadors Caius Popillius Lænas, Caius Decimus, and Caius Hoſtilius in ſhips from Macedonia [z] or Greece, to Antiochus, to require him to deſiſt from making war upon Ptolemy, and that he quit the land of Egypt; ſee Numb. xxiv. 24. Macedonia is called the land of Cittim, 1 Maccab. i. 1. and viii. 5. Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Saadiah, and Jacchiades interpret it, of the Romans; and according to Gorionides [a], Cittim are the Romans; and Jerom here interprets them of them; and Bochart has proved at large [b], that they are meant. The word ſeems to be uſed both of Grecians and Romans, and here of Romans in Grecian ſhips: therefore he ſhall be grieved and return; being obliged to it ſore againſt his will: as ſoon as he ſaw Popillius, with whom he had contracted a friendſhip whilſt he was an hoſtage at Rome, he offered his hand to kiſs; but Popillius refuſed it, and obſerved that private friendſhip ſhould give way to public intereſt; and then produced the decree of the ſenate, and delivered it to him, and required his anſwer; but Antiochus delaying, telling him he would conſult his friends; Popillius with a rod in his hand drew a circle round him, and bid him conſult his friends directly; adding that he ſhould not ſtir from that circle till he had given a poſitive anſwer; which roughneſs ſtruck him, and heſitating a little, he replied he would obey the ſenate, as Juſtin [c], Livy [d], Velleius Paterculus [e], and other hiſtorians, relate; and upon which he at once departed with his army, tho' fretted and vexed to the laſt degree: and have indignation againſt the holy covenant; the Jews, God's covenant-people; on whom he gratified his revenge, ſending Apollonius with an army of twenty-two thouſand men, to whom he gave orders to ſlay the men, and ſell women and children; and who committed many outrages in the city and temple: now it was, the daily ſacrifice was made to ceaſe, and the abomination of deſolation ſet up, as in the following verſe, and all that done predicted ch. viii. 10, 11, 12. this was two years after his former expedition into Egypt, and the havock he made upon his return from thence, and in the eighth year of his reign, and 145th of the Seleucidæ; ſee 1 Mac. i. 30. 2 Mac. v. 24: ſo ſhall he do; ſuch wicked deeds as before declared, in his wrath and fury againſt the Jews, being provoked at his diſappointment in Egypt: he ſhall even return, and have intelligence with them that forſake the holy covenant; apoſtate Jews, who had renounced their religion, forſook the law of God, and the ordinances of his worſhip, and turned heathens; of whom it is ſaid, agreeably to the language of this prophecy, and ſeemingly with a view to it, that they made themſelves uncircumciſed, and departed from the holy covenant, 1 Maccab. i. 16. with theſe Antiochus kept an intelligence, and held a correſpondence, in order not only to know the affairs of the Jews from time to time, but to draw them off from their religion, and propagate heatheniſm among them; ſuch as Jaſon, Menelaus, and others; ſee 1 Maccab. i. 12, 13, 14, 15, 43, 44, 45.

℣. 31. And arms ſhall ſtand on his part, &c.] Powerful armies ſent by him into Judea; garriſons of ſoldiers placed in Jeruſalem; mighty generals and commanders who fought for him, as Lyſias, Philip the Phrygian, Andronicus, Apollonius, Bacchides, and others: and they ſhall pollute the ſanctuary of ſtrength; the temple, which ſtood in Jeruſalem, a fortified city, and was itſelf a building ſtrong and ſtable; and eſpecially it was ſo called, becauſe here the mighty God had his reſidence, the ſymbol of which was the ark of his ſtrength, and here he gave ſtrength unto his people: this holy place, ſacred to his worſhip and ſervice, the commanders and ſoldiers of Antiochus defiled, by entring into it, who were men unholy and unclean; by making it a place of luxury and rioting, of whoredom, and all manner of uncleanneſs; by bringing things into it which were not lawful, and filling the altar with what was abominable, 2 Maccab. vi. 4, 5. particularly by erecting an high place upon the altar, and ſacrificing ſwine upon it, as Joſephus [f] relates; with which agrees what is ſaid of Antiochus, 1 Maccab. i. 49, 50. he ordered "the holy place and holy "people to be defiled, and to build altars, tem- "ples, and places for idolatry, and to offer ſwine's "fleſh and unclean cattel:" and ſhall take away the daily ſacrifice; the ſacrifice of the lamb in the morning, and in the evening, which the prieſts were hindered from offering, by the crouds of heathens in the temple; or prohibited by the order of Antiochus; for he forbad burnt-offerings, ſacrifice, and libation to be made in the temple, 1 Maccab. i. 47. and Joſephus [g] expreſsly ſays, that he forbad the daily ſacrifices to be offered, which were uſed to be offered to God, according to the law: and they ſhall place the abomination that maketh deſolate; either a garriſon of heathen ſoldiers in the temple, which drove the prieſts and people from it, and made it deſolate; or rather an idol in it, it being uſual in ſcripture to call idols abominations, as they are to God and all good men; the image of Jupiter Olympius, as is thought, which was placed upon the altar of God by Antiochus, on the fifteenth day of the month Ciſleu, in the hundred and forty-fifth year of the Seleucidæ, and is called the abomination of deſolation, 1 Maccab. i. 57. and the temple itſelf was ordered to be called the temple of Jupiter Olympius, 2 Maccab. vi. 2. and what with this and other things that were done, the temple and city were left deſolate; for it is ſaid, "Jeruſalem was uninhabited as a deſert; there were "none that went in or out, of its children; and "the holy place was trodden down; and the ſons "of ſtrangers were in the tower, and it became "an habitation for Gentiles," 1 Maccab. iii. 45. it may be rendered, the abomination that maketh aſtoniſhed [h]; for it ſtruck the people of the Jews with aſtoniſhment; it amazed and ſtupified them, when they ſaw ſuch an idol placed in their temple. The Karaite Jews, who by the others are called Sadducees, give a very foreign interpretation of this paſſage, which Aben Ezra obſerves: "it is mar- "vellous, ſays he, that the wiſe men of the Sad- "ducees ſhould explain this of future time, and ſay "that this ſanctuary is Mecca, where the Iſhmaelites "or Turks keep a feaſt; the daily ſacrifice, to be re- "moved, their five prayers; and the abomination ſet "up, is their idolatrous worſhip." Sir Iſaac Newton underſtands all this of the Romans, and their building a temple to Jupiter Capitolinus, where the temple in Jeruſalem had ſtood.

℣. 32. And ſuch as do wickedly againſt the covenant, ſhall be corrupted by flatteries, &c.] That forſook the law of God, the book of the covenant, and did things contrary to it; and particularly violated the covenant of circumciſion, drawing on the foreſkin, and becoming uncircumciſed; as well as rejected other ordinances of religious worſhip, the Jews by covenant were obliged to obſerve: theſe apoſtates Antiochus corrupted by good words and fair ſpeeches, by gifts and preſents; and they became his tools, to do his pleaſure, and were his inſtruments to ſeduce the Jews to renounce their religion, and give in to his idolatry; ſuch as Jaſon, Menelaus, and others; ſee 1 Maccab. i. 16. 2 Maccab. iv. 13. and v. 15. and vi. 21: but the people that do know their God, ſhall be ſtrong, and do exploits; ſuch who knew the Lord God of Iſrael to be the true God, and owned and acknowledged him as ſuch; and not only profeſſed him, but ſerved and worſhipped him, having a ſpiritual knowledge of him, and communion with him; and therefore could not be drawn off from him and his worſhip, by flatteries or frowns, by promiſes or menaces: theſe were ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; they held faſt their religion, and the profeſſion of it, and were proof againſt all allurements or threatenings, and endured racks and tortures, all ſorts of puniſhment, and death in every ſhape, with the greateſt conſtancy and courage; ſuch as Eleazar, the mother and her ſeven ſons, and others; as well as others did many valiant actions in the defence of themſelves and country, as Mattathias, Judas Maccabæus, and his brethren; to which heroic actions the apoſtle refers in Heb. xi. 34—37. ſo Joſephus [i] ſays, "that many "of the Jews indeed, ſome willingly, and others "through fear of puniſhment, obeyed the king's "commands; but the more approved, and thoſe "of generous minds, had a greater regard to the "cuſtoms of their country, than to the puniſh- "ment threatened to the diſobedient; and for this "being continually haraſſed, and enduring grievous "puniſhments, died; ſome were ſcourged, and "their bodies mutilated, and being yet alive and "breathing, were crucified; women and their "children, whom they crucified, were by the "king's orders ſtrangled, and hanged about the "necks of their parents that were crucified;" ſee 1 Maccab. i. 63, 64, 65, 66.

℣. 33. And they that underſtand among the people ſhall inſtruct many, &c.] Such as had a better underſtanding of divine things than others, had more light and knowledge in the ſacred ſcriptures, in the law of God, and in his mind and will, and were capable of teaching others; and ſuch as theſe the Lord raiſes up among his people in the worſt of times, in the times of the greateſt apoſtacy and declenſion; and theſe are enabled to perform their duty, to inſtruct the people in their's, teach them what they ſhould do, and how they ſhould behave; exhort them to retain the doctrines and ordinances of their holy religion, and not embrace the doctrines and inventions of men, will-worſhip, ſuperſtition and idolatry; and ſo they inſtructed the ignorant, ſtrengthened the weak, and eſtabliſhed the wavering; ſuch were Mattathias the prieſt of Modin, and Eleazar one of the chief ſcribes, 1 Maccab. ii. 1. 2 Maccab. vi. 18. Cocceius applies this to the times of the apoſtles, who he thinks are here meant; ſo Sir Iſaac Newton: yet they ſhall fall by the ſword; by the ſword of Antiochus and his ſoldiers; as multitudes of the Jews did, even both the inſtructors and the inſtructed, who would not comply with his orders: and by flame; ſome were burnt alive in caves, where they fled for ſhelter; and others, as the mother and her ſeven ſons, were caſt into heated caldrons of braſs; ſee 2 Maccab. vi. 11. and vii. 3, 5: by captivity; ſo it is expreſsly ſaid of Antiochus, that he carried captive women and children; and at another time ordered the women and children to be ſold for ſlaves, 1 Maccab. i. 33. 2 Maccab. v. 24: and by ſpoil many days; being plundered of their ſubſtance, their houſes rifled, and their goods carried away; and this diſtreſs laſted days, a ſhort time only; Joſephus[k] reckons it at three years and a half. All this Cocceius interprets of the perſecutions of the chriſtians by the Romans; and likewiſe Sir Iſaac Newton.

[i] Antiqu. l. 12. c. 5. §. 4.

℣. 34. Now when they ſhall fall, they ſhall be holpen with a little help, &c.] When the Jews ſhall be thus harraſſed and diſtreſſed by Antiochus and his armies, to the ruin of many, by the ſeveral ſorts of puniſhments inflicted on them; they ſhould be helped and eaſed a little by Mattathias, a prieſt of Modin, and his five ſons, commonly called the Maccabees; Porphyry himſelf interprets this of Mattathias: now the help and aſſiſtance which he and his ſons gave to the Jews was but little; if we conſider they were perſons of a ſmall figure, began with a handful of men, and could do but little, eſpecially at firſt; and tho' great exploits were done by them, conſidering their number and ſtrength, yet they were not able to reſtore the land to its former glory and liberty; nor did this help of theirs laſt long, but the enemy returned with great fierceneſs and cruelty, and ſadly afflicted the people of the Jews. Cocceius underſtands this of the help the chriſtians had under Conſtantius Chlorus, and Conſtantine the Great; and ſo does Sir Iſaac Newton, who agrees with him in interpreting this and the preceding verſe: he interprets arms in ℣. 31. of the Romans, and ſo Jacchiades; and makes this to be the beginning of the fourth kingdom that ſhould ſtand, ממנו after him; that is, after Antiochus; ſo the particle, he obſerves, is uſed in ℣. 8. and it muſt be owned, this is the ſenſe in which it is ſometimes uſed, of which Noldius[l] has given inſtances: and this ſeems to agree with the thread of hiſtory, and introduces the Romans, who muſt have a place in this prophecy, in a very proper manner; and carries on the account of things, through the times of Chriſt, his apoſtles, the firſt ages of chriſtianity under perſecution, until the riſe of antichriſt, ℣. 36. and throws light upon the text in Matt. xxiv. 15. the language of which ſeems beſt to agree with ℣. 31. and if ſo, muſt reſpect ſomething to be done, not in the times of Antiochus, but after the times of Chriſt. But many ſhall cleave to them with flatteries; ſeeing Mattathias and his ſons ſucceed, ſome of thoſe, who had been apoſtates from their religion, or not heartily friends to it, joined them, but not ſincerely; pretended to be on their ſide, and commended their bravery and courage; and being ambitious of honour and fame, took with them, in order to ſhare the glory of their actions; ſuch were Joſeph the ſon of Zachariah, and Azarias, 1 Maccab. v. 56, 57. and thoſe under whoſe cloaths were found idols, or what belonged to them, at Jamnia, when they were ſlain, 2 Maccab. xii. 40. and Rhodocus, a ſoldier of the Jewiſh army, who betrayed their ſecrets, 2 Maccab. xiii. 21. Cocceius applies this to antichriſt and his followers, pretending to be for Chriſt and his church, but were not.

℣. 35. And ſome of them of underſtanding ſhall fall, &c.] Not into ſin, or from the religion they profeſs, and the doctrines they have an underſtanding of, and have inſtructed others in; but into diſtreſſes and calamities for their ſtedfaſt adherence to the word, worſhip, and ordinances of God: to try them, and purge and make them white; to try their faith, patience, and other graces, and whether they would hold faſt their profeſſion, and perſevere in the good ways of God; and to purge and ſeparate them from others, that were like chaff, hypocrites, that ſo they might be manifeſt, both the one and the other; and theſe good men appear to be ſincere and upright: moreover, the beſt of men have their droſs, and chaff, and ſpots, to be removed from them; and this is one way of doing it, even by afflictions: the alluſion, in the firſt word, is to the melting, purifying, and refining of metals, gold and ſilver; the ſecond to the winnowing of a corn-floor, and ſeparating the chaff from the wheat; and the third to the cleanſing and whitening of cloths, and taking the ſpots out of them by the fuller. Afflictions are the furnace in which the Lord refines and purifies his people; the fan with which he purges his floor; and the fuller's ſoap with which he makes his people white; by all this the iniquity of Jacob is purged, and the fruit of it is to take away ſin, Iſ. xxvii. 9. ſo that afflictions are not hurtful, but beneficial to the ſaints, even thoſe more violent ones, ſevere perſecutions. Even to the time of the end, becauſe it is yet for a time appointed; theſe diſtreſſes, calamities and perſecutions, would have an end, and the time for it was appointed of God; as yet it was not come, but quickly would, and then an end would be put to the third or Grecian monarchy; an hint of the Roman power over that being given, ℣. 30. hence we have no further account of Antiochus or his ſons. Very remarkable are the words of Æmilius Sura[m], "the Aſſyrians firſt were poſſeſſors of "monarchy; then the Medes; afterwards the Perſians; then the Macedonians; from that time the "kings, Philip and Antiochus, who ſprung from "the Macedonians, being conquered, not long "after Carthage was ſubdued, the ſupreme power "of empire came to the Roman people;" of whom, under one character or another, the following part of the prophecy is chiefly to be underſtood. So another hiſtorian ſays[n], Antiochus being drove out of Aſia, the Romans firſt ſet footing there: and another[o] obſerves, that Antiochus being defeated by L. Cornelius Scipio, he took the name of Aſiaticus, becauſe he had conquered Aſia; as his brother was called Africanus, from his ſubduing Africa: wherefore Aſia and Africa being now in the hands of the Romans, the ſupreme power might well be ſaid to be with them; and therefore, hence forward, are only ſpoken of, and particularly the Roman antichriſt.

ỳ. 36. And the king ſhall do according to his will, &c.] Not Antiochus, for he could not do as he would, being curbed by the Romans, as has been obſerved; and there are many things which follow, that cannot be applied to him: rather the Roman people, under the name of a king or kingdom, riſing up to univerſal monarchy, upon the decline of the Grecian empire, are meant; and who did what they would, ſubdued kingdoms at pleaſure, and gave laws to the whole world; and particularly in the little horn or Rome papal, antichriſt, ch. vii. 8, 20, 24, 25. of which Antiochus was a type, and is called by the ſame name, ch. viii. 9. and the tranſition is eaſy, from the type to the antitype, with whom every thing ſaid agrees: for the pope of Rome claiming infallibility, does, or has done, whatſoever he pleaſes; regarding neither the laws of God or man, but diſpenſing with both at his pleaſure; coining new doctrines; appointing new ordinances; ſetting himſelf up above councils and princes; taking upon him a power to depoſe kings, and ſet them up as he pleaſes; with many other things done by him in an arbitrary and deſpotic way, both civil and religious; and with none does the character agree as with him, as well as what follows: and magnify himſelf above every God; that is ſo called, whether angels whom he commands, or the kings of the earth he claims an authority over, thoſe gods in heaven, and gods on earth; which is the exact deſcription of antichriſt, as given by the apoſtle, who has manifeſtly a reference to this paſſage, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. ſee the note there: and ſhall ſpeak marvellous things againſt the God of gods; the true God, to whom angels and civil magiſtrates are ſubject, being his creatures, and acting under him; but ſuch is the arrogance of the man of ſin, that he takes upon him to ſpeak againſt God, and ſuch things as are aſtoniſhing; and it may be extremely wondered at, that he ſhould dare to ſpeak them, as to call himſelf God on earth; to take ſuch things to himſelf, which only belong to God, as by claiming all power in heaven, earth, and hell; power to bind the conſciences of men, and impoſe what he pleaſes on them; to make new articles of faith; to pardon the ſins of men; to open and ſhut the gates of heaven when he pleaſes; with other blaſphemies againſt God, his mouth, given him to ſpeak, utters; ſee Rev. xiii. 5, 6: and ſhall proſper until the indignation be accompliſhed; the wrath of God upon the Jewiſh nation for their rejection of the Meſſiah; until the time of their converſion is come; and then antichriſt ſhall be deſtroyed, to make way for it; till that time he ſhall proſper and flouriſh, more or leſs, until the 1260 days or years are ended, the date of his reign, Rev. xi. 2, 3. and xiii. 5: for that that is determined ſhall be done; all the decrees and purpoſes of God ſhall be accompliſhed; all reſpecting the ſtate and condition of the people of God under antichriſt, particularly the people of the Jews, and concerning the reign and ruin of antichriſt.

ỳ. 37. Neither ſhall he regard the God of his fathers, &c.] Of the apoſtles of Chriſt, from whom he pretends to deſcend, and whoſe ſucceſſor he would be thought to be: now their God was the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whom they worſhipped and adored, believed in, embraced, profeſſed, and preached; but whom antichriſt diſregards, tho' he would be thought to be his vicar on earth; yet ſlights him, yea oppoſes and acts contrary to him, in his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king, and therefore is rightly called antichriſt: nor the deſire of women; or wives [p]; not deſirous of having wives, or enjoying women in lawful marriage; but forbidding his prieſts to marry, as is notoriouſly a tenet of antichriſt, and foretold by the apoſtle in agreement to this prophecy, 1 Tim. iv. 3. otherwiſe, none more luſtful or deſirous of women in an unlawful way than the Romiſh prieſts: nor regard any god; either the true God and his laws, or any god in a metaphorical ſenſe, any king or potentate on earth; ſhewing no reſpect to any authority, or to any laws divine or human: for he ſhall magnify himſelf above all; above all gods, real or nominal, as in 2 Theſſ. ii. 4.

ỳ. 38. But in his eſtate ſhall he honour the god of forces, &c.] Or god Mahuzzim [q]; departed ſaints and their images, whom the papiſts make their protectors, defenders, and guardians: the word ſignifies towers, ſtrong-holds, fortreſſes; and by theſe titles the martyrs, ſaints departed, are called by the ancient fathers, who firſt introduced the worſhip of them. So Baſil [r], ſpeaking of the forty martyrs, ſays, "theſe are they, who obtaining "our country, like certain towers, afford us a re-"fuge againſt the incurſion of enemies:"—and a little after thus addreſſes them, "O ye common "keepers of mankind, the beſt companions of our "cares, the ſuffragans of our prayers and wiſhes, "moſt powerful ambaſſadors with God, &c." and elſewhere [s] he prays, "that God would keep the "church unmoved, and fortified with the great "towers of the martyrs;" ſo Chryſoſtom [t] calls them patrons and protectors. Or, with God he ſhall honour [u]; theſe along with him, or beſides him; theſe ſhall be the objects of religious worſhip and honour, as they are: and that in his eſtate; or in his room and ſtead, that is, of the true God, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the only Mediator between God and man; and yet angels and departed ſaints are ſet up as mediators in his ſtead: and a god whom his fathers knew not ſhall he honour; the hoſt, the wafer, the breaden god, made a god by the words of a muttering prieſt; this is ſuch a god as the apoſtles, and Peter particularly, from whom the popes of Rome pretend to derive their ſucceſſion, never knew, nor once dreamed of; and yet this is received as a god, bowed unto, and worſhipped, and honoured: with gold and ſilver, and with precious ſtones, and pleaſant things; with rich and coſtly ornaments, with which the pyxis or box, in which it is carried in proceſſion, is adorned.

ỳ. 39. Thus ſhall he do in the moſt ſtrong holds with a ſtrange god, &c.] Or, in the ſtrong holds of Mahuzzim [w]; that is, in the temples, churches, and chapels, dedicated to angels and departed ſaints; deck and adorn their images with gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, and with deſirable things, which is notorious; as well as commit the groſſeſt idolatries with this ſtrange breaden god; which they hold up in ſuch places, cringe and bow to, and pay all religious worſhip and adoration to it: whom he ſhall acknowledge, and increaſe with glory; as really God; the wafer being tranſubſtantiated into the very body and blood of Chriſt, as is ſaid; and own it as ſuch, as very God, and heap religious honour and glory upon it, which is due to Chriſt: he ſhall cauſe them to rule over many; that is, the Mahuzzim, the departed ſaints; one ſhall rule over England, and be the patron and defender of it, as St. George; another over Scotland, as St. Andrew; another over Ireland, as St. Patrick; another over France, as St. Dennis; another over Spain, as St. James: and ſhall divide the land for gain; or price[x]; the whole Romiſh juriſdiction, all antichriſtian ſtates, which are divided among thoſe tutelar ſaints; each of them have their proper country aſſigned them they are to defend; but this is not done without gain, ariſing to the pope of Rome from thoſe countries, as by firſt-fruits, annates, Peter's pence, &c.

℣. 40. And at the time of the end, &c.] At the end of the time appointed of God, when antichriſt is arrived to the height of his power and authority: ſhall the king of the ſouth puſh at him; not Philometor king of Egypt; nor is Antiochus meant in the next clauſe by the king of the north; for after he was required by the Romans to quit the land of Egypt, there was no more war between him and the king of Egypt; rather therefore the Saracens are meant by the king of the ſouth, as Mr. Mede[y] and Cocceius think, who came from the ſouth, from Arabia Felix: and ſo Gravius interprets it of the king or Caliph of the Saracens, and his ſucceſſors; who extending their empire thro' Aſia and Africa, repreſſed the attempts of the Roman antichriſt affecting primacy in the eaſt; and this way goes Mr. Mede, who takes them to be the ſame with the locuſts in Rev. ix. 3. that diſtreſſed antichriſt: and the king of the north ſhall come againſt him like a whirlwind; not Antiochus, as before obſerved; but either emperors, kings, and chriſtian princes, the chief of which was Godfrey of Bullain, who was crowned king of Jeruſalem, as Cocceius: or the Turks, as Jacchiades, ſo Mr. Brightman on the place, and Mr. Mede; who were originally Tartars or Scythians, and came from the north, the ſame with the horſemen at Euphrates, Rev. ix. 15, 16. who alſo came againſt antichriſt; for he ſeems to be the him they both came againſt; both the king of the ſouth, and the king of the north, the two woes that came upon Chriſtendom; the Saracens are the firſt wo, and the Turks the ſecond; and who chiefly afflicted the antichriſtian ſtates, and came like a whirlwind upon them, ſuddenly, ſwiftly, and with great rapidity and force: with chariots, and with horſeman, and with many ſhips; which well agrees with the Turks, whoſe armies chiefly conſiſt of horſe: and he ſhall enter into the countries, and ſhall overflow, and paſs over; into the countries belonging to antichriſt; particularly the Greek or eaſtern empire; which they over-ran like a flood, ſeized it for themſelves, and ſet up an empire for themſelves, which ſtill continues; as well as entered into ſome parts of Europe, and did much damage.

℣. 41. He ſhall enter alſo into the glorious land, &c.] The land of Iſrael, as the Syriac verſion expreſſes it; or the land of Judea, which the Turk entered into, and got poſſeſſion of, and ſtill retains, notwithſtanding all the attempts made by the European princes to get it out of his hand: and many countries ſhall be overthrown; of which the eaſtern empire conſiſted, as Bithynia, Myſia, Lycaonia, Phrygia and Caria, and to the Helleſpont and the Euxine ſea, conquered by Ottoman and his ſon, Urchenes; Callipolis, Hadrianople, by Amurath; Theſſalia, Macedonia, Phocis, Myſia, and Bulgaria, by Bajazet; and at laſt Conſtantinople itſelf by Mahomet the Second, which put an end to the eaſtern empire: tho' perhaps thoſe countries and places may be here more eſpecially meant, which lay near Judea, and fell into the hands of the Turk when that did; as Comagene of Syria, Antioch, Damaſcus, Tripolis, Berytus, Sidon, and all Paleſtine, and all the ſea-coaſt to Egypt: but theſe ſhall eſcape out of his hand, even Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon; by which, according to Jerom, is meant Arabia, left untouched by him; ſo Mr. Mede interprets them of Arabia and Petræa, which ſome of the above people formerly inhabited, as Jacchiades obſerves; and which Arabians were never ſubdued by the Turks, but are independent of them to this day; yea, the Turks pay a yearly tribute to them for the paſſage of their pilgrims to Mecca, as well as pay for the caravans that paſs thro' their country, as is affirmed[z] by modern travellers; and yet it may be obſerved, that theſe countries did not eſcape Antiochus, who particularly took Rabbath the metropolis of Ammon.

℣. 42. He ſhall ſtretch forth his hand alſo upon the countries, &c.] Before-mentioned, and take poſſeſſion of them, and rule over them, as the Turk does to this day: and the land of Egypt ſhall not eſcape; the hands of the Turk, by whom it was taken from the Mamalucs; and is now a province of the Turkiſh empire, and governed by a Turkiſh Baſha, with twenty-four princes under him[a]. This was not true of Antiochus, who after he had been checked by the Romans, never entered into Egypt, and much leſs became maſter of it, as the Turk now is.

℣. 43. But he ſhall have power over the treaſures of gold and ſilver, and over all the precious things of Egypt, &c.] The land of Egypt, as it is a very large, ſo a very rich country, abounding with gold, ſilver, and precious things; all which came into the hands of the Turk along with it; for when Selim, the ninth emperor of the Turks, conquered the Mamalucs, he cauſed five hundred of the chiefeſt Egyptian families to be tranſported to Conſtantinople; as likewiſe a great number of Mamalucs wives and children, beſides the Sultan's treaſure, and other immenſe riches[b]. And the Lybians, and the Ethiopians ſhall be at his ſteps; at his command and pleaſure; ſhall follow him, being taken captive, or go where he orders them; that is, in all things ſhall be obedient to him. So we find that theſe very people will be in the army of Gog or the Turk, when he ſhall march againſt the land of Judea, to recover it from the Jews, when poſſeſſed of it, Ezek. xxxviii. 5. Theſe people, the Africans and Ethiopians, are near to Egypt, and therefore mentioned with it, and never were under the power of Antiochus, as Jerom obſerves; but are now ſubject to the Ottoman empire, and make a part of it; which is a very ſtrong evidence of the Turk being the king of the north here ſpoken of.

℣. 44. But tidings out of the eaſt, and out of the north ſhall trouble him, &c.] This, and the following verſe, reſpect times and things yet to come, and the interpretation of them is not ſo certain: perhaps this clauſe may have a regard to the news brought to the Turk of the Jews, upon their converſion, being about to return to their own land, from the eaſtern and northern parts of the world, where they chiefly are at this day; which will greatly alarm him, ſince their land is part of his dominions: or it may be, out of the eaſt may come tidings of ſome commotions and diſturbances in the eaſtern part of the world, as Tartary, &c. which he may fear would be of bad conſequence to the Ottoman empire; and news out of the north, of the northern chriſtian princes preparing to aſſiſt the Jews in the repoſſeſſion of their country; all which may give him great uneaſineſs. Therefore he ſhall go forth with great fury to deſtroy, and utterly to make away many; hearing the Jews are preparing to return to their own country, or that they have got poſſeſſion of it; he will be enraged and provoked to the laſt degree, and raiſe a prodigious army, and march out of his own land with them to Judea; and will come like a ſtorm with the utmoſt rage and fury, and like a cloud for number, and threaten utter ruin and deſtruction to the nation of the Jews; this will be his end in view in coming out, but he will not be able to accompliſh it; of all which ſee Ezek. xxxviii. 2—12. where the Turk, and this expedition of his, are propheſied of, and where he goes by the name of Gog.

℣. 45. And he ſhall plant the tabernacles of his palace, &c.] Or pavilion[c]; the tents for his princes and generals that come with him; which ſhall be placed about his own, and where he will think himſelf ſafe and ſecure, and ſure of victory. Symmachus renders the words, the tents of his cavalry[d]; or the ſtables of his horſes; which agrees well enough with the Turks, whoſe cavalry is uſually very large, their armies chiefly conſiſting of horſe; ſuch he ſhall bring into the land of Judea, and place them as after-mentioned, as if he had got the day, and had obtained a ſettlement. The word uſed has the ſignification of covering and clothing; hence ſome tranſlate it, the tents of his curtain[e]; tents covered with curtains or veils, ſuch as the tents of kings, generals, and principal officers were covered with, diſtinguiſhed from others by the ſplendor and magnificence of them. It ſeems to be derived from the ſame root as the ephod, a curious garment wore by the high-prieſt among the Jews; hence Saadiah interprets it here, a covering figured and wrought very artificially; and it is by ſome rendered, the tents or tabernacles of his tunick or clothing[f]. And it is an ingenious conjecture of a learned man of our own country[g], that it may refer to an ancient cuſtom of the Roman emperors, who uſed before a battel to have a ſcarlet coat ſpread over their tents, or hung up upon a ſpear, to give notice of it, as appears from Plutarch, Iſidore, and others; and ſo this furious enemy of the church of God, is here repreſented as ſetting up his bloody flag or enſign, and preparing for battel, threatening with utter deſolation and deſtruction. And this will be between the ſeas, in the glorious holy mountain; in the mountain or mountains of the land of Iſrael, upon which it is certain Gog or the Turk ſhall come, and there he ſhall fall, Ezek. xxxix. 2, 3, 4, 5. particularly the mountains about Jeruſalem, and more eſpecially mount Zion, or Moriah, as Jacchiades; on which the temple was built formerly, and was glorious and holy on that account, and for which reaſon the epithets may be retained; tho' it will now be glorious and holy, thro' a glorious and holy people the Jews, become chriſtian, reſiding and worſhipping in Jeruſalem; whoſe ſituation is between two ſeas, the Mediterranean ſea to the weſt, and the ſea of Sodom, or the Syrian or Perſian ſea, to the eaſt, called the hinder and the former ſeas in Zech. xiv. 8. Some take the word אפדנו Apadno, tranſlated palace, for the proper name of a place. Theodoret takes it to be a place near Jeruſalem; and Jerom ſays it was near Nicopolis, which was formerly called Emmaus; where the mountainous parts of Judea begin to riſe, and lay between the dead ſea on the eaſt, and the great ſea on the weſt, where he ſuppoſes antichriſt will pitch his tent: and Porphyry, as he relates, who interprets the whole of Antiochus, places it between the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates; he ſays, that Antiochus went on an expedition againſt Artaxias king of Armenia, and having ſlain many of his army, pitched his tent in the place Apadno, which is ſituated between two large rivers, Tigris and Euphrates; and that he afterwards went to the top of a mountain, in the province of Elymais, the further part of Perſia to the eaſt, with a deſign to rob the temple of Diana; but being diſcovered by the people was obliged to flee, and that he died with grief in Tabes, a town in Perſia: and Father Calmet is of opinion, that a place between thoſe two rivers before-mentioned is meant, and tranſlates the words thus, "he ſhall "pitch his tents in Apadno of the two ſeas;" or in Padan of two rivers, Meſopotamia, ſituated between the Euphrates and the Tigris, two large rivers, and juſtly compared with the ſea, particularly for their inundations. Dr. Goodwin[h] expreſſes his fears, that our Britiſh iſles are here intended, which ſo eminently ſtand between the ſeas, and which God has made the eminent ſeat of the church in theſe latter days; and his fears would ſeem to be too well grounded, were the Romiſh or weſtern antichriſt here deſigned; but the Turk, or the eaſtern antichriſt, is manifeſtly ſpoken of, as appears by the context: and the reaſon why he is ſo much obſerved, and ſo many things ſaid of him is, becauſe the Jews have, and will have, the greateſt concern with him, their country being in his hands; and it is for their ſakes chiefly, that the whole of this prophecy is delivered out; however, both antichriſts, the one and the other, ſhall come to utter deſtruction, as follows: yet he ſhall come to his end, and none ſhall help him; he ſhall fall upon the mountains of Iſrael, he and his princes, his generals, and captains, and mighty men; the whole Ottoman empire ſhall be deſtroyed, ſignified by the drying up of the river Euphrates, which is in his dominions, Rev. xvi. 12. and of the vaſt multitudes that ſhall come with him, Perſia, Ethiopia, Lybia, Gomer, and Togarmah, Ezek. xxxviii. 5, 6. and the numerous provinces he is maſter of; none ſhall be able to help him, or ſave him from ruin: of the deſtruction of the Turk, under the name of Gog, ſee Ezek. xxxix.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter begins with an account of a time of exceeding great trouble to the people of God, who are comforted with the conſideration of Michael the great prince being on their ſide, and with a promiſe of deliverance, with the reſurrection of the dead, and the glorious ſtate of wiſe and good men upon that, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and Daniel is ordered to ſhut up and ſeal the book of the prophecy, until a time when it ſhould be better underſtood, ℣. 4. next follows a queſtion put by an angel to Chriſt, and his anſwer to it, with reſpect to the time of the fulfilment of thoſe wonderful events, ℣. 5, 6, 7. Daniel not underſtanding what he heard, aſks what would be the end of thoſe things, ℣. 8. in anſwer to which he is bid to be content with what he knew; no alteration would be among men; things would be neither better nor worſe with them, ℣. 9, 10. a time is fixed for the accompliſhment of all, ℣. 11, 12. and it is promiſed him, that he ſhould have reſt after death, and riſe again, and have his lot and ſhare with the bleſſed, ℣. 13.

℣. 1. And at that time ſhall Michael ſtand up, &c.] The arch-angel, who has all the angels of heaven under him, and at his command, the Son of God, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who is as God, as the name ſignifies, truly and really God, and equal in nature, power, and glory, to his divine Father: he ſhall ſtand up; which is not to be underſtood of his incarnation, or manifeſtation in the fleſh, for this refers to times long after that; yet neither of his perſonal appearance in the clouds of heaven, and ſtanding upon the earth in the latter day; but of his ſpiritual preſence among his people, and protection of them, and continuance with them: this reſpects the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, the Lamb's ſtanding upon mount Zion, and the 144,000 with him, Rev. xiv. 1. and this will be at that time, when the eaſtern antichriſt, the Turk, will be deſtroyed; for the words are cloſely connected with the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter; and when alſo the weſtern antichriſt, the pope of Rome, will come to his end; for as they roſe, ſo they will fall, much about the ſame time; and then Chriſt will riſe and ſtand up, as the glorious head of the church, and as a triumphant conqueror over all his enemies, and take to himſelf his great power and reign, and that kingdom which of right belongs to him. The great prince which ſtandeth for the children of thy people; the King of kings, and Lord of lords, the prince of the kings of the earth; great in his perſon, and in his office; great in dignity, power, and authority; who always did, and ever will, ſtand on the ſide of the true Iſrael of God: he eſpouſed their cauſe very early; he wrought out ſalvation for them in time; he intercedes for them now in heaven, and will appear to be their patron and defender againſt all their enemies in the latter day: here it ſeems to have ſpecial regard to the people of the Jews, Daniel's people; whom Chriſt ſhall appear unto, and for, in an eminent manner, to convert and ſave them, help and aſſiſt them, protect and defend them. And there ſhall be a time of trouble, ſuch as never was ſince there was a nation, even to the ſame time; that is, ever ſince the world was, from the beginning of it, from the creation of the world; not only from the time that the Jews became a people, which was at their coming out of Egypt, as ſome underſtand it, but from the beginning of time; and ſo our Lord interprets it, who ſeems to have this paſſage in view in Matt. xxiv. 21. there have been many great and ſore troubles in the world, great confuſions in it, and convulſions of it, ſtrange and amazing changes in it; very afflictive and diſtreſſing times have been to ſeveral kingdoms, nations, and cities, which have been entirely overthrown; but never was any like to this; which reſpects not the diſtreſſes of the Jews in the times of Antiochus, or at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans; nor does it ſeem to reſpect them at all, at leaſt they will have no further ſhare and concern in it, than as they will be in connexion with other people, among whom they will be at this time; and it will be to them rather a time of deliverance and ſalvation, than of diſtreſs; but it is that time of trial, and hour of temptation, that ſhall come upon all the world, Rev. iii. 10. as it may concern the church and people of God, it is the laſt ſtruggle of the beaſt, of antichriſt, at the time of his downfal and ruin, when he'll make his laſt effort; this will be the laſt perſecution of the ſaints, which will be ſhort and ſharp; the ſlaying of the witneſſes, which will affect the whole intereſt of Chriſt every where: and as this concerns others, it deſigns the pouring out of the vials of God's wrath upon all the antichriſtian ſtates, and all thoſe judgments and calamities which will come upon the nations of the world, ſignified by the harveſt and vintage; ſee Rev. xiv. 14—20. and xv. 1. and xvi. 1, &c. and this time of trouble, for the nature, quality, and extent of it, will exceed any and all that ever were in the world. And at that time thy people ſhall be delivered; the Jews, the people of Daniel; theſe ſhall be delivered not only from the then preſent outward troubles, not only from their preſent captivity and afflictions, but from their ſpiritual evils; from the bondage of ſin, and the captivity of ſatan; their diſbelief of the Meſſiah; their confidence in their own righteouſneſs, and attachment to the traditions of their fathers; they ſhall be turned from their tranſgreſſions, and return to the Lord their God, and David their king, and ſhall be truly converted, and ſpiritually and eternally ſaved, Rom. xi. 25, 26. Every one that ſhall be found written in the book; in the book of life, as Jacchiades; in the book of God's eternal purpoſes and decrees, concerning the ſalvation of his people by Chriſt; for it is according to theſe that God ſaves and calls men, whether Jews or Gentiles, 2 Tim. i. 9. ſee Phil. iv. 3. Heb. xii. 23. Rev. xx. 12, 15. and xxi. 27.

℣. 2. And many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe, as by R. Jeſhuah the Jew, Porphyry the heathen, and by ſome chriſtian writers; neither of the deliverance of the Jews from the troubles of Antiochus, or their preſent captivity; nor of the ſpiritual reſurrection of them, or others, from their ſtate of infidelity to a profeſſion of the goſpel, which in ſome is real, in others only hypocritical; but in a literal ſenſe, of the reſurrection of the dead at the laſt day, which, with reſpect to the righteous, will take place upon the perſonal appearance of Chriſt at firſt, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. for, as death is oftentimes compared to ſleep, in which the ſenſes are bound up, and the body is in a ſtate of inactivity; ſee John xi. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 20. 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. ſo the reſurrection from the dead is expreſſed by awaking out of ſleep, when the body ſhall riſe freſh and vigorous, in full health and ſtrength, as a man out of a comfortable ſleep; ſee Pſ. xvii. 15. Iſ. xxvi. 19. The word many is uſed, either becauſe as all will not ſleep, ſo all will not be awaked; there will be ſome that will be alive and awake at Chriſt's coming, 1 Cor. xv. 51. 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. or, as it ſignifies, a multitude, Pſ. xcvii. 1. and ſo here the innumerable multitude of the dead, who are afterwards diſtributively conſidered; and indeed the word is ſometimes uſed for all; ſee Rom. v. 15, 19: ſome to everlaſting life; to the enjoyment of everlaſting life and happineſs with Chriſt in the world to come; a phraſe often uſed in the New Teſtament, tho' never before in the Old; expreſſive of that felicity and bliſs which the ſaints enjoy in heaven after this life is over, firſt in the ſeparate ſtate of the ſoul, and then at the reſurrection in ſoul and body, and of the everlaſting continuance of it; they that ſhall enjoy this, are thoſe that are written in the Lamb's book of life, or are ordained unto eternal life; who are redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, regenerated by his Spirit and grace, juſtified by his righteouſneſs, adopted into the family of God, are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt; theſe are the dead in Chriſt, which riſe firſt: and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt; wicked men, who lived in a courſe of ſin in this world, without any remorſe or ſhame; but when they ſhall riſe from the dead, they'll riſe with all their ſins upon them, and with a full conviction of them in their conſciences; and will be aſhamed of them, and to appear before God the judge of all; and will be had in contempt by the Lord, by elect angels, and all good men; and this reproach ſhall never be wiped off; ſee Iſ. lxvi. 24. Our Lord ſeems manifeſtly to have reſpect to this paſſage, when he ſpeaks of men coming out of their graves at the laſt day, ſome unto the reſurrection of life, and others unto the reſurrection of damnation, John v. 28, 29. and upon theſe words it may well be thought the apoſtle Paul grounded his faith of the reſurrection of the dead, both juſt and unjuſt, Acts xxiv. 15. and tho' the reſurrection of both is ſpoken of here and elſewhere together, yet it will be at diſtinct periods of time; the reſurrection of the juſt at the beginning of the thouſand years, and that of the wicked at the end of them, Rev. xx. 5, 6. between which will be the intermediate ſtate of the ſaints dwelling with Chriſt on earth; where they will be favoured with his preſence, and the rewards of his grace, to which the following verſe has reſpect.

℣. 3. And they that be wiſe ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, &c.] That are wiſe, not in things natural and civil, but in things ſpiritual; who are wiſe unto ſalvation; that are wiſe to know themſelves, their ſtate and condition by nature; their impurity and impotence; the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs; the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, and the dangerous circumſtances they are in; that are wiſe to know Chriſt, and him crucified; to believe in him, and truſt in him for everlaſting life and ſalvation: theſe at the reſurrection ſhall ſhine, both in body and ſoul; their bodies ſhall be faſhioned like to the glorious body of Chriſt; their ſouls ſhall be filled with perfect light and knowledge, and be completely holy, without any ſin upon them; and this light and glory that will be upon both ſoul and body, will be like the brightneſs of the heavens when the ſun is riſen; yea, it will be like the brightneſs and glory of the ſun itſelf, as our Lord affirms; having, as it ſeems, reſpect to this paſſage, Matt. xiii. 43. Some render it, they that inſtruct [i]; or make others wiſe, and ſo reſtrain it to miniſters of the word; but the more general ſenſe is beſt; and beſides, they are more particularly deſcribed in the next clauſe: and they that turn many to righteouſneſs, as the ſtars for ever and ever; or, that juſtify many [k]; that teach the doctrine of a ſinner's free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; that lead and direct ſouls ſenſible of ſin, and of the weakneſs of their own righteouſneſs, to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as being that only which juſtifies before God; otherwiſe it is God alone that juſtifies men, by imputing the righteouſneſs of his ſon unto them: but theſe ſhew men the way of juſtification, or that which God takes to juſtify ſinners; and this being the principal doctrine of the goſpel, they are denominated from it; and no man deſerves the name of a goſpel-miniſter, that does not preach it, tho' this is not all that they preach; they preach all other doctrines of the goſpel in connexion with it, and alſo inſtruct men thus juſtified to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly: now, as theſe are ſtars in the church of Chriſt below, who receive their light from Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs, and communicate it to his people; ſo they will continue ſtars in the millennium-ſtate, and appear exceeding glorious, having the glory of God and Chriſt upon them, and not only then, but to all eternity. Theſe words are applied to the days of the Meſſiah by the Jews [l].

℣. 4. But thou, O Daniel, ſhut up the words, &c.] Of the book, in which he had wrote the viſions and prophecies delivered to him: this he is bid to ſhut up, to keep it from the common and profane people, who would only burleſque it; and to keep it to himſelf as a peculiar treaſure committed to his care; and tho' it was not kept from the ſaints and people of God, from their reading it, yet he was not to interpret and explain it to them; it was to remain a ſecret until the time of its accompliſhment was come, or however near at hand; ſo that this denotes the obſcurity of the prophecy, and the great difficulty of underſtanding it; it being like a book that is ſhut and ſealed, as follows; ſee Rev. v. 1—5: and ſeal the book, even to the time of the end; till the time comes appointed for the fulfilment of it, which ſhows that it reached to times at a great diſtance; that till theſe times were come, or near, it would be as a ſealed book, and yet the accompliſhment of it would be ſure and certain, as what is ſealed is: many ſhall run to and fro, and knowledge ſhall be increaſed; that is, towards the end of the time appointed, many perſons will be ſtirred up to inquire into theſe things delivered in this book, and will ſpare no pains or coſt to get knowledge of them; will read and ſtudy the ſcriptures, and meditate on them; compare one paſſage with another; ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, in order to obtain the mind of Chriſt; will peruſe carefully the writings of ſuch who have gone before them, who have attempted any thing of this kind; and will go far and near to converſe with perſons that have any underſtanding of ſuch things: and by ſuch means, with the bleſſing of God upon them, the knowledge of this book of prophecy will be increaſed; and things will appear plainer the nearer the accompliſhment of them is; and eſpecially when accompliſhed, when prophecy and facts can be compared together: and not only this kind of knowledge, but knowledge of all ſpiritual things, of all evangelic truths and doctrines, will be abundantly enlarged at this time; and the earth will be filled and covered with it, as the ſea with its waters; ſee Iſ. xi. 9. Hab. ii. 14.

[l] Shemot Rabba, §. 15. fol. 102. 4.

℣. 5. Then I Daniel looked, and behold, there ſtood other two, &c.] Other two angels, beſides the man clothed with linen, ℣. 6. or rather, beſides the angel who had given Daniel the long account of things that were to come to paſs, in the preceding chapter, and the beginning of this; whom Daniel, being attentive to that account, had not obſerved before; but now that being finiſhed, he looks about him, and takes notice of thoſe other two who were ſtanding, being miniſtring ſpirits to Chriſt, and ready to execute his orders: the one on this ſide of the bank of the river, and the other on that ſide of the bank of the river; Hiddekel or Tigris, as appears from ch. x. 4. The reaſon of this poſition was chiefly on account of Chriſt, the man clothed with linen, who ſtood upon or above the water of the river, in the midſt of it; and to ſhew that they were waiting upon him, and ready to go every way he ſhould ſend them to do his will; and alſo on account of Daniel, that he might hear what was ſaid, whether to Chriſt, or to one another; ſince being at ſuch a diſtance, their voice muſt be loud; and indeed the deſign of all that follows to the end of the chapter is to inform him, and by him the church and people of God in all future ages, of the time and end of all theſe things before delivered in the prophecy.

℣. 6. And one ſaid to the man clothed with linen, &c.] One of the angels on one ſide of the bank of the river ſpoke to Chriſt, who appeared in an human form, as a preſage of his future incarnation; and as clothed in linen, expreſſive of his prieſtly office, and of his purity and holineſs, which qualified him for it; ſee the note on ch. x. 6. Which of the angels it was that ſpake is not ſaid, or on which ſide of the river he ſtood; very probably each of them ſpake in their turn, and joined in the ſame requeſt to Chriſt: which was upon the waters of the river; or above [m] them; denoting his power and dominion over men, kingdoms and nations, ſometimes ſignified by waters, and even over thoſe the moſt tumultuous and raging: how long ſhall it be to the end of theſe wonders? theſe wonderful things before predicted, concerning the ſtate and condition of the people of God, their troubles and afflictions, the fall and ruin of antichriſt, and the glorious things that ſhall follow upon that: angels, as they are inquiſitive creatures, and pry into the myſteries of grace, ſo into thoſe of providence; eſpecially ſuch as concern the church of God, for whom they have a great regard; of the ſecrets of which they have no knowledge until revealed unto them; tho' this queſtion ſeems to be put not ſo much for their own ſakes, as for the ſake of Daniel, who was preſent, but had not that courage and preſence of mind as they had; nor could uſe that freedom with Chriſt as they did, at leaſt at firſt, till encouraged by their example.

℣. 7. And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, &c.] Chriſt, as he appeared in an human form, and as the high-prieſt of our profeſſion, and as the Mediator that has power over all fleſh; ſo he pronounced articulate ſounds with an human voice, and ſo loud, clear and diſtinct, that Daniel could hear every word he ſaid, and for whoſe ſake it was ſaid: when he held up his right-hand, and his left-hand unto heaven; the lifting up of the right-hand is a geſture uſed in ſwearing, and the lifting up of both hands is either for the greater ſolemnity of the action, or with reſpect to the two angels that ſtood one on one ſide of him, and the other on the other, that both might be eye-witneſſes of this ſolemn affair; tho' lifting up both hands is often a prayer-geſture, and there may be a mixture of both in this action, of both praying and ſwearing; Chriſt, as the high-prieſt, intercedes for his church and people, that their faith fail not till the end of their troubles comes: and ſware by him that liveth for ever; by the living God, the immortal one, who only hath immortality. Maimonides [n] interprets it, by the life of the world; that is, by God, who is the life of the world, that gives life and being to all creatures; all live, and move, and have their being in him, and ſo is greater than all, and by whom an oath is only to be taken. Chriſt, as man, ſwears by his divine Father, who, as ſuch, was greater than he; tho', if we underſtand it of God, Father, Son and Spirit, the one, only, true and living God, there is no impropriety in Chriſt's ſwearing by himſelf the living God, which is a character he ſometimes bears; ſee Heb. iii. 12. and vi. 13. what he here ſwears to is, that it ſhall be for a time, times, and an half; that it would be ſo long to the end of theſe wonderful things; or that the troubles of the church would laſt ſo long, and at the end of that date here fixed, a glorious ſcene would open, and amazing things appear, to the great joy and comfort of the ſaints. Time ſignifies a prophetic year, or 360 years; and times two prophetic years, or 720 years; and half a time half a prophetic year, or 180 years, in all 1260 years; which is the exact date and duration of the reign of antichriſt, of the church's being in the wilderneſs, and of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, and of the treading

℣. 8. And I heard, but underſtood not, &c.] Daniel heard what Chriſt ſaid, in anſwer to the angel, but he did not underſtand the meaning of it, which he ingenuouſly confeſſes; he did not underſtand what was meant by time, and times, and half a time; what kind of time this was, and when and how it would end, and which he was very deſirous of knowing: then ſaid I, O my Lord, what ſhall be the end of theſe things? he applied not to the angel that put the above queſtion, but to the man clothed with linen; to Chriſt, whom he perceived to be a divine perſon, a perſon of dominion, power, and authority, ſuperior to angels, and his Lord and God; and who only could reſolve the queſtion he puts, which is ſomewhat different from that of the angel's, ℣. 6. that reſpects the length of time, to the accompliſhment of theſe things; this the quality of the end of them, what kind of end they ſhould have; or what the ſigns, ſymptoms, and evidences of the end of them, by which the true end of them might be known. Mr. Mede renders it, what are theſe latter times? perhaps it might be rendered better, what is the laſt of theſe things[*]? what is the laſt thing that will be done, that ſo it may be known when all is over?

℣. 9. And he ſaid, go thy way, Daniel, &c.] About thy buſineſs; attend to civil affairs, the affairs in which he was concerned in the king's court, and aſk no more queſtions concerning this matter; but be content with the prophecies that have been delivered to thee, and with what knowledge thou haſt of them: or he is bid to go and write in a book the ſeveral viſions he had ſeen, and the predictions related to him; that he might read them, and meditate on them, at his leiſure, and tranſmit them to future poſterity, for their uſe: or go the way of all fleſh, prepare for death and eternity; for in the preſent ſtate he was not to expect a full revelation of theſe things; but ſhould reſt ſatisfied with what he knew, and aſſure himſelf of the full performance of them, and that he ſhould have his ſhare of the bleſſed times in the millennium, and of the ultimate glory, as in ℣. 13. For the words are cloſed up, and ſealed till the time of the end; that is, till the time comes, or draws near, that they ſhall be accompliſhed; till then they would not be clearly underſtood, but remain in a great meaſure dark and obſcure, tho' ſure and certain: it is ſuggeſted they would not always remain ſo; time is the beſt interpreter of prophecy, and the nearer the time of the accompliſhment of it is, the clearer it appears, things leading the way to it being gradually fulfilled; but cleareſt of all when it is accompliſhed; then it is no more ſhut and ſealed, but open and manifeſt; ſee the note on ℣. 4.

℣. 10. Many ſhall be purged, and made white, and tried, &c.] Though Chriſt does not give in plain, clear, and explicit terms, an anſwer to the above queſtion, when, and how, and what would be the end of the church's troubles and afflictions; yet he here points out the uſe of them, which for the preſent ſhould be chiefly attended to; and when duly conſidered, would be a means of cauſing the ſaints to endure them with more patience and chearfulneſs: many ſhould be hereby made more pure and holy, and more free from their ſpots, their chaff, and their droſs; their corruptions, and the power of them, weakened; their graces tried, and become more bright and ſhining, and they themſelves a greater ornament to the religion they profeſs: hereby they ſhould be purified, or cleanſed from the chaff of their ſins; or be ſeparated as the chaff is by the fan, from hypocrites and ungodly men, who would not be able to endure perſecution for the ſake of the goſpel: and be made white, as cloth is by the fuller; freed both from their own ſpots in their garments, being led to the blood of Chriſt to waſh their garments, and make them white therein; which afflictions may be the means of guiding them to, under the direction of the bleſſed Spirit; and from ſuch perſons who were ſpots in their feaſts of love: and be tried, as gold and ſilver in the furnace, and ſo be rid of their own droſs, and of the wicked of the earth, who are like unto it; ſee the note on ch. xi. 35. But the wicked ſhall do wickedly; go on in a courſe of ſin, and be never the better for the afflictive diſpenſations of providence; theſe either mean, formal profeſſors, that turn apoſtates from the faith, and become openly wicked livers; or the profane world in common; and particularly furious perſecutors of the ſaints: ſuch as each of theſe, there will be till the end of things come; ſee Rev. xxii. 11: and none of the wicked ſhall underſtand; neither the doctrines of the goſpel ſpiritually and experimentally; nor the providences of God, and what he is doing in the world; and particularly not the prophecy of this book, and eſpecially what has been juſt delivered: but the wiſe ſhall underſtand; more or leſs of each of theſe things, ſuch as are wiſe unto ſalvation; that ſearch the ſcriptures, ſeek to God by prayer, and are much in meditation, and make uſe of every help for the underſtanding of divine things, and even of theſe prophecies; and eſpecially towards the cloſe of time, as the accompliſhment of them draws near.

[*] מה אחרית אלה quid erit noviſſimum horum? Munſter; poſtremum horum? Calvin.

ℽ. 11. And from the time that the daily ſacrifice ſhall be taken away, &c.] This is in part an anſwer to the above queſtions, as they relate to the end of things: ſome dates are given, by which it might in general be known, when and how theſe things would end: and theſe dates begin with the removal of the daily ſacrifice; that is, the doctrine of atonement and ſatisfaction for ſin by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, the antitype of the daily ſacrifice under the law; this was taken away by antichriſt, when he got to his height; when he eſtabliſhed the doctrine of works, and oppoſed the merits of men to the merits of Chriſt, and his own pardons, indulgences, penances, &c. to the ſatisfaction of Chriſt: and the abomination that maketh deſolate; image-worſhip; the abomination of the maſs, and other acts of idolatry and ſuperſtition: there ſhall be a thouſand two hundred and ninety days; from the beginning of the reign of antichriſt, to the end of it, are one thouſand two hundred and ſixty days or years, or forty-two months, which is the ſame, according to Rev. xiii. 5. here thirty days or years are added, which begin where the other end, and is the time allotted for the converſion of the Jews, and other things, making way for the kingdom of Chriſt; and which the reign of antichriſt was an hindrance of, but ſhould now immediately take place.

ℽ. 12. Bleſſed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the one thouſand three hundred five and thirty days.] Which is an addition of forty-five days or years more, beginning at the end of one thouſand two hundred and ninety, and make up this ſum; during which time the vials will be poured out upon all the antichriſtian ſtates, and the Turkiſh empire be deſtroyed, and all the enemies of Chriſt and his church removed, and clear way made for the ſetting up of his kingdom in the world in a more viſible and glorious manner; and therefore happy is the man that will be found waiting for theſe times, and live to enjoy them. There are various ways taken in the computation and application of theſe one thouſand three hundred and thirty-five days by Jews and Chriſtians. Lipman[p] the Jew makes them to be the ſame with time, and times, and half a time, ℽ. 7. time, he ſuppoſes, deſigns the ſpace of four hundred and eighty years, from the Iſraelites going out of Egypt, to the building of the firſt temple; times the ſpace of four hundred and ten years, which is as long as that temple ſtood; and half a time, half of theſe two ſpaces, that is, four hundred and forty-five years; all which make up one thouſand three hundred and thirty-five; but ſtrange it is, that time ſhould ſignify a larger ſpace than times. Much more ingenious is the computation of Jacchiades on the text, who makes the account to deſcribe the ſpace of time from the days of Daniel, to the end of the world. He ſuppoſes there were three thouſand three hundred and ninety-one years, from the beginning of the world to Daniel; he then takes and joins the one thouſand two hundred and ninety days in the preceding verſe, which he underſtands of years, with the one thouſand three hundred and thirty-five days or years in this, which make together two thouſand ſix hundred and twenty-five; and added to the above, the whole is ſix thouſand and ſixteen years; which agrees with the opinion of Elias in the Talmud[q], that the world ſhall ſtand ſix thouſand years. Many chriſtian interpreters[r] apply it to the times of Antiochus, and reckon them thus, underſtanding them of days, and not years; from the time of his taking away the daily ſacrifice, to the reſtoration of it by Judas Maccabæus, were three years and a half and ſome days, in all one thouſand two hundred and ninety, as in the preceding verſe; during which time the temple was profaned by idolatrous worſhip, the altar demoliſhed, and the daily ſacrifice ceaſed, and was a time of great diſtreſs with the Jews; and which tho' greatly alleviated by the ſucceſs of Judas, yet their calamities were not over until the death of Antiochus, which happened forty-five days after; and theſe added to the above number, make one thouſand three hundred and thirty-five days; at the cloſe of which it was happy times with them, being delivered from ſo cruel and powerful an enemy; and therefore bleſſed were they that waited and came to this time. This paſſage Mr. Brightman applies to the Turkiſh empire; and thinks that time, and times, and half a time, ℽ. 7. meaſure the ſpace of the power of that empire; time ſignifying one hundred years; times, two hundred years; half a time, fifty years; in all three hundred and fifty years; which added to one thouſand three hundred, when that empire began, the date ends in one thouſand ſix hundred and fifty, when he ſuppoſes it would begin to decline; to which, if you add forty-five days or years, as here, it will bring it down to one thouſand ſix hundred and ninety-five, when he thought it would be utterly extinct; but time has ſhewn this to be a miſtake. Mr. Mede[s] thinks theſe numbers are to be reckoned from the profanation of the temple by Antiochus; and that the firſt number, one thouſand two hundred and ninety, ended in the year of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred and twenty-three, when antichriſt was come to his height, and was diſcerned by many to be the perſon that was propheſied of as ſuch; and the latter number, one thouſand three hundred and thirty-five, ended in the year of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred and ſixty-eight, when the Waldenſes, Albigenſes, and others, ſeparated from the church of Rome as antichriſtian, upon which violent perſecutions were raiſed upon them: but then not happy, but miſerable times, followed on theſe; unleſs this bleſſedneſs ſpoken of, is to be applied to the martyrs that died for the ſake of Chriſt, as in Rev. xiv. 13. Another learned man[t] was of opinion, that theſe numbers are to be counted from the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus Veſpaſian, A. D. 71. from whence the firſt number fell on the year 1361, at which time the ſchool at Prague was founded by Charles king of Bohemia, and the errors and tyranny of antichriſt began to be openly oppoſed by the ſame; and the ſecond number ended in the year 1406, when the light of the goſpel broke out more clearly; ſo that the angel here pronounces thoſe bleſſed, who overlived theſe firſt ſeeds of the goſpel being brought to light; but ſomething of great importance, and cauſe of more joy, is here intended. Wherefore upon the whole, it ſeems beſt to interpret theſe numbers as at firſt, of the date of the reign of antichriſt, and as ſhewing the full and certain end of it; when there will be bleſſed times, Halcyon days indeed!

H O S E A.

THIS Book in the Hebrew Bibles, at leaſt in ſome copies, is called Sepher Hoſea, the book of Hoſea; and in the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, the prophecy of Hoſea; and in the Syriac verſion, the prophecy of Hoſea the prophet. It is the firſt of the twelve leſſer prophets, ſo called, not becauſe they were of leſs value, credit and authority than the other prophets; but becauſe of their ſmalneſs in bulk; and which, as Kimchi ſays, upon the authority of their Rabbins, were put together in one book, that no one of them might be loſt, becauſe of their ſmalneſs; and Joſephus [a] reckons them but as one book; and they are quoted in the New Teſtament under the name of the book of the prophets [b]. This prophet was one of them, and therefore placed here; tho', as Kimchi in his preface to this book, and R. David Ganz [c], obſerve, his prophecy was before the prophecy of Iſaiah; and yet he was not the firſt of theſe minor prophets, as to order of time; not only Jonas, but Joel and Amos were before him; and ſo they are placed by ſome writers; according to Mr. Whiſton [d], he began to propheſy about 3906 of the Julian period, and 808 before Chriſt. Mr. Bedford [e] places him in 804. His name is the ſame with Joſhua and Jeſus, and ſignifies a Saviour; and he was not only, as all the true prophets of the Lord, and faithful miniſters of the word are, the means and inſtruments in the hand of God of ſaving people; but he was a type of Chriſt the Saviour, as well as propheſied concerning him, and ſalvation by him. Of his parentage, and the time of his propheſying, ſee ch. i. 1. by which it appears that he lived in ſeveral reigns, and to a very great age. He chiefly propheſied againſt the ten tribes of Iſrael; reproved them for their ſins; exhorted them to repentance; threatened them with deſtruction in caſe of impenitence; and comforted the truly godly with the promiſe of the Meſſiah, and of the happy ſtate of the church in the latter day. His ſtile is ſhort and conciſe; in ſome places ſententious, and without connexion, obſcure and difficult of interpretation; and in others very pathetic and moving. Of the divine inſpiration and authority of this book, there is no room to doubt; ſince paſſages out of it are quoted and referred to by Chriſt and his apoſtles; by Chriſt himſelf, Matt. ix. 13. and xii. 7. out of ch. vi. 6. by the evangeliſt Matthew, Matt. ii. 15. out of ch. xi. 1. and by the apoſtle Paul, Rom. ix. 25, 26. out of ch. i. 10. and ii. 23. 1 Cor. xv. 55. from ch. xiii. 14. and by the apoſtle Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 10. from ch. ii. 23. There are ſome things ſaid of the deſcent, death and burial of this prophet, not to be depended on. Pſeudo-Epiphanius [f] and Iſidorus [g] ſay, he was of the tribe of Iſſachar, and born in Belomoth or Bethlemoth; and that he died in peace, and was buried in his own country; but according to a tradition of the Jews [h], he died in Babylon, and was buried in Tzapheth, a city in upper Galilee; but all this is uncertain, and not very probable, and is of no importance to be known.

CHAP. I.

AFTER the general inſcription of the book, in which the author, pen-man, and time of this prophecy are expreſſed, ℣. 1. The people of Iſrael are reproved for their idolatry, under the repreſentation of an harlot the prophet is bid to marry, which he is ſaid to do, ℣. 2, 3. and their ruin and deſtruction are foretold in the names of the children he had by her, and by what is ſaid on the occaſion of the birth of each, ℣. 4, 5, 6, 8, 9. but mercy and ſalvation are promiſed to Judah, ℣. 7. and the chapter is concluded with a glorious prophecy of the converſion of the Gentiles, and the calling of the Jews in the latter day; and of the union of Judah and Iſrael under one head and Saviour, Chriſt; and of the greatneſs and glory of that day, ℣. 10, 11.

℣. 1. The word of the Lord, that came unto Hoſea, &c.] Whoſe name is the ſame with Joſhua and Jeſus, and ſignifies a Saviour; he was in ſome things a type of Chriſt the Saviour, and propheſied of him, and ſalvation by him; and was the inſtrument and means of ſaving men, as all true prophets were, and faithful miniſters of the word are: to him the word of the Lord, revealing his mind and will, was brought by the Spirit of God, and impreſſed upon his mind; and it was committed to him to be delivered unto others. This is the general title of the whole book, ſhewing the divine original and authority of it: the ſon of Beeri; which is added to diſtinguiſh him from another of the ſame name; and perhaps his father's name was famous in Iſrael, and therefore mentioned. The Jews have a rule, that where a prophet's father's name is mentioned, it ſhews that he was the ſon of a prophet; but this is not to be depended upon; and ſome of them ſay, that this is the ſame with Beerah a prince of the Reubenites, who was carried captive by Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, 1 Chron. v. 6. but the name is different; nor does the chronology ſeem ſo well to agree with him; and eſpecially he can't be the father of Hoſea, if he was of the tribe of Iſſachar, as ſome have affirmed: in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah kings of Judah; and in the days of Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh king of Iſrael; from whence it appears, that Hoſea propheſied long, and lived to a great age; for from the laſt year of Jeroboam, which was the fifteenth of Uzziah, to the firſt of Hezekiah, muſt be ſixty-nine years; for Jeroboam reigned forty-one years, and in the twenty-ſeventh of his reign began Uzziah or Azariah to reign over Judah, and he reigned fifty-two years, 2 Kings xiv. 23. and xv. 1, 2. ſo that Uzziah reigned thirty-ſeven years after the death of Jeroboam, thro' which time Hoſea propheſied; Jotham after him reigned ſixteen years, and ſo many reigned Ahaz, 2 Kings xv. 23. and xvi. 2. ſo that without reckoning any part, either of Jeroboam's reign, or Hezekiah's, he muſt propheſy ſixty-nine years, and no doubt did upwards of ſeventy, very probably eighty, the Jews ſay ninety; and allowing him to be twenty-four or five years of age when he began to propheſy, or only twenty; for it is certain he was at an age fit to marry, as appears by the prophecy, he muſt live to be upwards of an hundred years; and in all probability he lived to ſee, not only part of Iſrael carried captive by Tiglath-Pileſer, which is certain; but the entire deſtruction of the ten tribes by Salmaneſer, which he propheſied of. Jeroboam king of Iſrael is mentioned laſt, tho' prior to theſe kings of Judah; becauſe Hoſea's prophecy is chiefly againſt Iſrael, and began in his reign, when they were in a flouriſhing condition. It appears from hence, that Iſaiah, Amos and Micah were cotemporary with him; ſee Iſ. i. 1. Amos i. 1. Mic. i. 1. within this compaſs of time Hoſea propheſied, lived Lycurgus the famous law-giver of the Lacedemonians, and Heſiod the Greek poet; and Rome began to be built.

℣. 2. The beginning of the word of the Lord by Hoſea, &c.] Or, in Hoſea [i]; which was internally revealed to him, and was inſpired into him by the Holy Ghoſt, who firſt ſpake in him, and then by him; not that Hoſea was the firſt of the prophets to whom the word of the Lord came; for there were Moſes, Samuel, David, and others, before him; nor the firſt of the minor prophets, for Jonah, Joel and Amos are by ſome thought to be before him; nor the firſt of thoſe cotemporary with him, as the Jewiſh writers interpret it, which is not certain, at leaſt not all of them; but the meaning is, that what follows is the firſt part of his prophecy, or what it began with; by which it appears he was put upon hard ſervice at firſt, to propheſy againſt Iſrael an idolatrous people, and to do it in ſuch a manner as muſt be diſagreeable to a young man: and the Lord ſaid to Hoſea, go take unto thee a wife of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms; a woman given to whoredom, a notorious ſtrumpet, one taken out of the ſtews, and children that were ſpurious and illegitimate, not born in lawful wedlock. Some think this was really done; that the prophet took a whore, and cohabited with her, or married her; which, tho' forbidden an high-prieſt, was not forbid to a prophet; and had it been againſt a law, yet the Lord commanding it, made it lawful, as in the caſes of Abraham's ſlaying his ſon, and the Iſraelites borrowing jewels of the Egyptians; but this ſeems not likely, ſince it would not only look like countenancing whoredom, which is contrary to the holy law of God; but muſt be very diſhonourable to the prophet, and render him contemptible to the people; and beſides, would not anſwer the end propoſed, to reprove the ſpiritual adultery or idolatry of Iſrael, but rather ſerve to confirm in it; for how ſhould that appear criminal and abominable to them, which was commanded the prophet by the Lord? others think that the woman he is bid to marry, tho' before marriage an harlot, was afterwards reformed; but this is directly contrary to ch. iii. 1. and beſides, the children born of her, whether reformed or not, yet in lawful wedlock, could not be called children of whoredom; nor would the above end be anſwered by it, ſince ſuch a perſon would be no fit repreſentative of Iſrael committing ſpiritual adultery or idolatry, and continuing in it; and moreover, whether this or the former was the caſe, the prophecy muſt be many years delivering; it muſt be near a year before the firſt child was born, and the ſame ſpace muſt be between the birth of each; ſo that here muſt be a long and frequent interruption of the prophecy, which does not ſeem likely: nor is it probable, that he took his own wife, which is the opinion of others, and gave her the character of a whore, and his children with her, and called them children of whoredom, in order to repreſent and reprove the idolatry of Iſrael: what Maimonides [k] and the Jewiſh writers in general give into is more agreeable, that this was all done in the viſion of prophecy; that it ſo ſeemed to the prophet in viſion to be really done, and ſo he related it to the people; but this is liable to objection, that ſuch an impure ſcene of things ſhould be repreſented to the mind of the prophet by the Holy Spirit of God; nor can the relation of it be thought to have any good effect upon the people, who would be ready to mock at him, and reproach him for it. It ſeems beſt therefore to underſtand the whole as a parable, and that the prophet in a parabolical way is bid to repreſent the treachery, unfaithfulneſs, and ſpiritual adultery of the people of Iſrael, under the feigned name of an unchaſte woman, and of children begotten in fornication; and to ſhew unto them, that their caſe was as if he had taken a woman out of the ſtews, and her baſtards with her; or, as if a wife married by him had defiled his bed, and brought him a ſpurious brood of children. So the Targum interprets it, "go propheſy a prophecy againſt the inhabitants of the idolatrous city, who add to ſin:" for the land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lord; or, "for the inhabitants of the land erring, erred from the worſhip of the Lord," as the Targum; that is, the inhabitants of the land of Iſrael had committed idolatry, which is often in ſcripture ſignified by adultery and whoredom; as an adulterous woman deals treacherouſly with her huſband, ſo theſe people had dealt with God, who ſtood in ſuch a relation to them; ſee Jer. iii. 1, 6, 9. Ezek. xvi. 17, 26, 28, 29. this interprets the parable, and ſhews the reaſon of uſing the following ſymbols and emblems.

℣. 3. So he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim, &c.] In the courſe of propheſying he made mention of this perſon, who was a notorious common ſtrumpet; and ſuggeſted hereby, that they were juſt like her; or theſe were fictitious names he uſed to repreſent their caſe by. Gomer ſignifies both conſummation and conſumption [l]; and this harlot is ſo called, becauſe of her conſummate beauty, and her being completely miſtreſs of all the tricks of one; or being conſummately wicked, a perfect whore, common to all; and becauſe her ruin and deſtruction, perſiſting in ſuch practices, were inevitable, and ſo a fit emblem of the preſent and future condition of Iſrael. Diblaim may be conſidered, either as the name of a man, a word of the ſame form with Ephraim; or of a woman, the mother of Gomer; or elſe of a place, the wilderneſs of Diblath, Ezek. vi. 14. and ſignifies a cake of dried figs [m]; which, in that country, was reckoned delicious eating; and ſo denotes, either, that both the ſin and ruin of this people were owing to their luxury or indulging themſelves in carnal pleaſures, thro' the great affluence they were poſſeſſed of; or that their original was from a wilderneſs, and for their ſins ſhould be reduced to a deſolate ſtate again: which conceived and bare him a ſon; whoſe name, and what he was an emblem of, are declared in the following verſe. The Targum is, " and he went and propheſied over them, that if " they returned, it ſhould be forgiven them; but " if not, as fig-tree leaves drop off, ſo ſhould " they; but they added, and did evil works."

℣. 4. And the Lord ſaid unto him, call his name Jezreel, &c.] Which ſome interpret the ſeed of God, as Jerom; or arm of God, as others; and Kimchi applies it to Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh, who was ſtrong and proſpered in his kingdom; but it rather ſignifies, God will ſow, or ſcatter [n]; denoting either their diſſenſions among themſelves; or their diſperſion among the nations, which afterwards came to paſs; and ſo the Targum, " call their " name ſcattered;" and alluding alſo to the city of Jezreel, where ſome of the idolatrous kings of Iſrael lived, and where much blood had been ſhed, which ſhould be avenged, as follows: for yet a little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the houſe of Jehu; not the blood of Naboth the Jezreelite, that was ſhed by Ahab; but the blood of Joram the ſon of Ahab, and ſeventy other ſons of his, and all his great men, kinſfolks and prieſts, ſhed by Jehu in this place; and tho' this was done according to the will of God, and for which he received the kingdom, and it was continued in his family to the fourth generation; yet inaſmuch as this was not done by him from a pure and hearty zeal for the Lord and his worſhip, and with a ſincere view to his glory, but in order to gain the kingdom, increaſe his power, and ſatiate his tyranny and luſt; and becauſe, tho' he deſtroyed one ſpecies of idolatry, the worſhip of Baal, yet he continued another, the worſhipping of the calves at Dan and Bethel, and regarded not the law of the Lord, and ſo his ſucceſſors after him; and were the means of cauſing many to ſin, and ſo conſequently of the ruin of many ſouls, whoſe blood would be required of them, which ſome take to be the meaning here; this is threatened, ſee 2 Kings ix. 24, 25. and x. 1—7, 11, 16, 28, 29, 30, 31. It may be obſerved, that God ſometimes puniſhes the inſtruments he makes uſe of in doing his work; they either over doing it, exerciſing too much cruelty; and not doing it upon right principles, and with right views, as the kings of Aſſyria and Babylon, Iſ. x. 5, 7. Zech. i. 15. It is here ſaid to be but a little while ere this vengeance would be taken, it being at the latter end of Jeroboam's reign when this prophecy was delivered out; and his ſon Zachariah, in whom the kingdom as in his family ceaſed, reigned but ſix months, being conſpired againſt and ſlain by Shallum, who reigned in his ſtead, 2 Kings xv. 8, 9, 10. The Targum is, " for " yet a little while I will avenge the blood of thoſe " that worſhip idols, which Jehu ſhed in Jezreel, " whom he ſlew becauſe they ſerved Baal; but " they turned to err after the calves which were " in Bethel; therefore I will reckon that innocent " blood upon the houſe of Jehu:" and will cauſe to ceaſe the kingdom of the houſe of Iſrael; that is, in the family of Jehu; Zachariah the ſon of the then reigning prince being the laſt, and his reign only the ſhort reign of ſix months; unleſs this has reference to the utter ceſſation of this kingdom as ſuch in the times of Hoſhea by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xvii. 6—23.

℣. 5. And it ſhall come to paſs at that day, &c.] When the Lord ſhall take vengeance on the family of Jehu, and deprive them of the kingdom of Iſrael, and ſhall puniſh the idolatrous kings that ſucceed: that I will break the bow of Iſrael in the valley of Jezreel; of which valley ſee Joſh. xvii. 16. Judg. vi. 33. It is now called the plain of Eſdraelon; as it is in Judith i. 8. the great plain of Eſdrelom; according to Adrichomius [o], it is two miles broad, and ten miles long; its ſoil exceeding fat and fruitful, and abounding with corn, wine and oil; all travellers agree they never ſaw the like: one ſays [p] of this plain or valley, formerly the lot of the tribe of Iſſachar, this is the moſt fertile portion of the land of Canaan, where that tribe might well be ſuppoſed to have rejoiced in their tents, Deut. xxxiii. 18. at preſent indeed it is not manured, as another traveller [q] obſerves, and yet very fruitful; who ſays, it is of a vaſt extent, and very fertile, but uncultivated, only ſerving the Arabs for paſturage; and according to the ſame writer, the ancient river Kiſhon runs thro' the middle of it: from the largeneſs of it, it is frequently called by writers the great plain or valley; and ſometimes from the places near it, or on it, the great plain of Legio, the great plain of Samaria, the great plain or valley of Megiddo, 2 Chron. xxxv. 22. and the great plain of Eſdraelon, and here the valley of Jezreel; Jezreel or Eſdraela being ſituated in this great plain or valley between Scythopolis and Legio, a very large village, as Jerom ſays [r] it was in his days; and who alſo on this paſſage obſerves, that Jezreel, from whence this valley had its name, is now near Maximianopolis, and was the metropolis of the kingdom of Samaria, near which were very large plains, and a valley of a very great length, extending more than ten miles: here Ahab had a palace in his days, near to which was Naboth's vineyard, and where God revenged his blood: this city is called by Joſephus [s], Azare and Azarus, or Izarus; and in the times of Gulielmus Tyrius [t], it went by the name of little Gerinum. The bow is put for all inſtruments of war, and every thing in which confidence was put, which was weakened or removed from them: this refers either to Menachem's ſlaughter of Shallum, and waſting ſome parts of the land of Iſrael, 2 Kings xv. 14, 16. or rather it may be to a battel fought between Hoſhea king of Iſrael and Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria in this valley, which was not far from Samaria; in which the former was defeated, and the latter having ing the victory, proceeded to Samaria, beſieged and took it, 2 Kings xvii. 6. tho' of the action the ſcripture is ſilent; but it is not improbable. The Targum is, "I will break the ſtrength of the warriors of Iſrael in the valley of Jezreel;" which ſeems to confirm the ſame conjecture. Some render it, becauſe of the valley of Jezreel [u]; that is, becauſe of the idolatry, bloodſhed, and other ſins committed there.

℣. 6. And ſhe conceived again, and bare a daughter, &c.] One of the weaker ſex; denoting the weaker ſtate of the kingdom of Iſrael after Jeroboam, as Kimchi thinks; Zachariah his ſon reigning but ſix months, and Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh his ſucceſſor, reigned but one month, 2 Kings xv. 8, 13: and God ſaid unto him, call her name Lo-ruhamah; which ſignifies, ſhe hath not obtained mercy; and what follows, explains it to the ſame ſenſe. The Targum is, "and they added and did evil works; and he ſaid unto him call their name, who obtained not mercy by their works:" for I will no more have mercy upon the houſe of Iſrael; as he had heretofore, ſparing them time after time, though they continued to ſin againſt him; but now he would ſpare them no longer, but deliver them up into the hands of their enemies, as he did a part of them, firſt into the hands of Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, and then to Salmaneſer, 2 Kings xv. 29. and xvii. 6. otherwiſe in the latter day, mercy will be ſhewn them again, eſpecially in a ſpiritual way, when they ſhall be converted, and believe in Chriſt, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, as well as poſſeſs their own land again; ſee ℣. 10, 11. Rom. 11, 26: but I will utterly take them away; out of their land, from being a kingdom and nation, which was done by Salmaneſer, another king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xvii. 6. or, bringing I will bring into them, or againſt them [w]; that is, an enemy, the ſame king of Aſſyria: or, but forgetting I will forget them [x], as ſome render it, and remember them no more, till the fulneſs of time comes: or, thro' pardoning I have pardoned, or ſpared them [y]; that is, in times paſt. The Targum is, "but if they return, pardoning I will pardon them;" which will be done in the latter day.

℣. 7. But I will have mercy on the houſe of Judah, &c.] The two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which retained the true worſhip of God among them; ſee ch. xi. 12. and tho' they often ſinned againſt the Lord, he ſhewed them mercy, and ſpared them longer than the ten tribes; and tho' he ſuffered them to be carried captive into Babylon, he returned them again after ſeventy years: this is mentioned as an aggravation of the puniſhment of Iſrael, that Judah was ſpared, when they were not; and to ſhew that God will have a people to ſeek and ſerve him, and when he rejects ſome, he'll make a reſerve of others: and will ſave them by the Lord their God; by his own arm and power, and not theirs, or any creatures; nor by any warlike means or inſtruments whatever, as follows: and will not ſave them by bow, nor by ſword, nor by battel, by horſes, nor by horſemen; which may reſpect either the deliverance of the Jews from the invaſion and ſiege of Sennacherib's army; which was done without ſhooting an arrow, or drawing the ſword, or engaging in a pitched battel, or by a cavalry ruſhing into his camp, diſcomfiting his army; and purſuing them; but by an angel ſent from heaven, which in one night deſtroyed an hundred and fourſcore and five thouſand, 2 Kings xix. 35. or elſe refers to Cyrus being ſtirred up by the Lord to iſſue forth a proclamation, giving liberty to the Jewiſh captives to go free, without price or reward; and ſo was brought about, not by the might and power of man, but by the Spirit of the Lord; ſee Ezra i. 1. Iſ. xlv. 13: Zech. iv. 6, tho' a greater ſalvation is pointed at, or at leaſt ſhadowed forth by this, even the ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation of God's elect by Chriſt; which is the fruit of mercy, and not the effect of the merits of men; is obtained not by human power, or by man's righteouſneſs; but by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is Jehovah our righteouſneſs, the Lord God of his people; who ſtands in a relation to them prior to his being the Saviour of them; to which work and office he is equal, being the eternal Jehovah, and the true and living God. So the Targum, "and I will ſave them by the word of the Lord their God;" the eternal word, that was with God, is God, and became incarnate, God in our nature.

℣. 8. Now when ſhe had weaned Lo-ruhamah, &c.] That is, when Gomer had weaned her daughter of this name, ℣. 6. This ſome interpret of the people of Iſrael being deprived of the word and ordinances, compared to milk and breaſts, having a famine of them; and ſo were like children weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breaſt; tho' others think, this is expreſſive of the patience of God in bearing with this people, after he had before threatened them with the ſubverſion of their kingdom and ſtate; and even after the prophecy had took place in part, in cauſing the kingdom to ceaſe in the houſe of Jehu, he bore with them about forty years before they were entirely carried captive; ſuckling and weaning before the conception and birth of another child, denoting ſome ſtop and ſtay; but rather this intends the taking away ſome part of the land of Iſrael, as a child when weaning is taken away from its mother; and may reſpect the carrying captive many of the Iſraelites in divers parts, particularly out of Gilead, Galilee and Naphtali, by Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xv. 29. This cannot be underſtood of the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, as Cocceius; for this is a reſumption and continuation of the prophecy concerning the ten tribes, after inſerting a promiſe of the ſalvation of Judah in the preceding verſe: ſhe conceived and bare a ſon; according to Kimchi, as the weaning of Lo-ruhamah points at the times of weakneſs, from Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam to the times of Pekahiah, when the reigns were ſhort and troubleſome; ſo this ſon conceived and born repreſents the ſtate of the nation in the times of Pekah; who reigned twenty years, and was too powerful for the kingdom of Judah, ſlew multitudes of them, and carried others captive, and aſſiſted Rezin king of Syria againſt Ahaz king of Judah: but according to the ſeries of the prophecy, it ſeems beſt to agree with the times of Hoſhea king of Iſrael, who was not ſo bad as ſome of his predeceſſors; was a man of ſpirit and courage; caſt off the Aſſyrian yoke, and neglected to give preſents to the king of Aſſyria; and Samaria in his time held out a three years ſiege againſt that king, 2 Kings xvii. 1—5. The Targum gum is, “and the generation of them who are carried captive among the nations, are found not to have obtained mercy by their works, but they added and did evil works.”

℣. 9. Then ſaid God, call his name Lo-ammi, &c.] Which Aben Ezra interprets of the children of the ten tribes born in captivity, who never returned; but it rather ſignifies the ten tribes themſelves, who were carried captive, and had this name given them for the reaſon following: for ye are not my people; tho' he had choſen them to be his people above all people, and had diſtinguiſhed them from others by various bleſſings and privileges; yet they did not behave as ſuch to him; they did not ſerve, obey and worſhip him, but the calves at Dan and Bethel; and therefore did not deſerve the name of his people: hence he ſays, and I will not be your, or yours [a]; that is, as we ſupply it, and ſo Aben Ezra, your God; will not behave toward you as ſuch; will not take you under my care and protection, or continue you in your land, and in the enjoyment of the bleſſings of it; will not be your king, patron and defender, but give you up into the hands of your enemies. This reſpects the captivity of the ten tribes by Salmaneſer, 2 Kings xvii. 6. The Targum is, “for ye are not my people; becauſe ye do not confirm the words of my law, my word ſhall not be your help.”

℣. 10. Yet the number of the children of Iſrael ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be meaſured nor numbered, &c.] Tho' called Lo-ammi, and rejected from being the people of God; yet there is a time when their number, according to the promiſe made to Abraham, ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, and the ſtars of heaven; which, as the one cannot be meaſured, the other cannot be numbered; which was to be, not at the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, when ſome of the ten tribes of Iſrael returned with them, as Theodoret, and others think; for they were but few that then returned: but rather at the firſt times of the goſpel, when multitudes that came from ſeveral parts of the world were converted at the day of Pentecoſt, and greater numbers, who were met with in the miniſtry of the word, in the ſeveral parts of the world, where they were diſperſed, and the goſpel came, to whom Peter and James wrote their epiſtles; and not theſe only are meant, but the vaſt numbers of Gentiles, who were effectually called by grace every where, and were true Iſraelites, the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham; and to whom the apoſtle Paul applies theſe words, producing them as a teſtimony of the election and calling, not of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles alſo, Rom. ix. 24, 25, 26. and which will have a further accompliſhment in the latter day, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles will be brought in, the Jews will be converted, and all Iſrael ſaved, Rom. xi. 25, 26. then the numbers of the Iſrael of God, both of Jews and Gentiles, will be as the ſand of the ſea indeed! and it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, ye are not my people, there it ſhall be ſaid unto them, ye are the ſons of the living God; that is, in ſuch places where it uſed to be ſaid, here live Pagans, Turks, or Jews, who worſhip not the true God, or at leaſt not aright, nor believe in Chriſt, and profeſs his name; there it ſhall be ſaid to them, by the Lord himſelf, by his Spirit witneſſing their relation to them, and by all good men, and even by the world in general; not only that they are the people of God, but have a ſuperior privilege, a greater character, and an higher relation, the ſons of the living God; the ſons of God, not by nature, as Chriſt; nor by creation, as angels; nor by office, as civil magiſtrates; or by profeſſion merely, as nominal chriſtians; but by adopting grace; which exceeds all other bleſſings, even of ſanctification and juſtification; makes men honourable; is attended with various privileges, and always continues. The epithet of the living God, is not without cauſe put; it ſtands in oppoſition to dead idols before worſhipped by ſome, who will now be the children of God; and who, as he has life in himſelf, gives it to others; to all natural life and breath, and to his children ſpiritual and eternal life; and as he lives for ever, ſo ſhall they his ſons likewiſe. The Targum is, “and it ſhall be in the place where they have been carried captive, when they tranſgreſſed the law; and it was ſaid to them, ye are not my people; there they ſhall be converted and increaſed (or made great); and it ſhall be ſaid to them, O ye people of the living God.”

℣. 11. Then ſhall the children of Judah, and the children of Iſrael be gathered together, &c.] Not at the return from the Babyloniſh captivity; for tho' ſome of the ten tribes might be mixed with the Jews when they went into captivity, and came out with them, and others might join them from the ſeveral nations where they had been diſperſed; yet they did not gather together with them in a body, only the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, thoſe were the chief; of the children of Iſrael, but few, Ezra i. 5. Some refer this to the firſt times of the goſpel, when the Galileans were gathered to Chriſt by his miniſtry, who inhabited the countries where ſome of the tribes of Iſrael dwelt; and who might, at leaſt ſome of them, deſcend from them: and when thoſe in Jeruſalem and in Judea, who alſo believed in Chriſt, united with them in their profeſſion of him, and in affection to one another; or to the time of Chriſt's death, by which the whole Iſrael of God, who were ſcattered abroad, were gathered together in one; and even Jews and Gentiles were made one body, and one new man in Chriſt, the partition-wall being broken down: or to the times of the apoſtles, who were ſucceſsful in the converſion and gathering of many of the Jewiſh nation, and alſo of the Samaritans; and of forming churches in Judea and Samaria under one head, in whom they agreed; and likewiſe of many others, both Jews and Iſraelites, in the ſeveral parts of the world, where they carried the goſpel; and who coaleſced with the believing Gentiles in one church-ſtate, under Chriſt their head: tho' it ſeems beſt to interpret this of the latter day, when the children of Iſrael and Judah ſhall join together in ſeeking the Lord their God, and the true Meſſiah, and ſhall be turned, and gathered to him; when they ſhall be no more two kingdoms, or two nations, but be one under the Meſſiah, who ſhall be their king and prince; when all their animoſities ſhall be laid aſide, and they ſhall no more envy or vex one another; but ſhall meet together in the ſame church-ſtate, and worſhip the Lord with one ſhoulder and conſent, being of one mind and ſentiment in religious things, and when all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Jer. l. 4, 5. Ezek. xxxvii. 19—22. Iſ. xi. 13. Zeph. iii. 9: and appoint themſelves one head; not Sennacherib, as Aben Ezra, very abſurdly; nor Hezekiah, nor Joſiah, as others; nor Elijah the prophet, as ſome in Kimchi; nor Zerubbabel, to which the Targum ſeems to incline, paraphraſing it, "one head of the houſe of David;" but better as Jarchi, David their king; that is, the Meſſiah, as Kimchi and Ben Melech expreſsly interpret it; and ſo Abarbinel[b], tho' he underſtands it of the Meſſiah the ſon of Joſeph; and undoubtedly the ſame is meant by the one head, as David their king and prince, ch. iii. 5. Ezek. xxxvii. 24, 25. even Chriſt, who is the head of angels, yea the head of every man, but in a ſpecial and peculiar ſenſe the head of the body, the church; he is the federal and repreſentative head of his people, both in eternity, and in time; and in ſuch ſenſe an head to them, as a king is head of his ſubjects, an huſband of his wife, a father of his family, and a maſter of his ſervants; and alſo as a natural head is to its body, of the ſame nature with it; in union to it; lives the ſame life; is above it, and more excellent than it: a perfect head Chriſt is, there being nothing wanting in him as ſuch; he has his eyes ſet upon his people; his ears are open to their cries; he ſmells a ſweet ſavour of reſt in their perſons and ſervices; he taſtes and eats their pleaſant fruits, and feels all their infirmities, troubles and afflictions; and has a tongue to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon for them: there are no vicious humours in this head to affect the body; no deformity in it, and all fulneſs therein to ſupply its wants; he is an everliving and everlaſting head, and the one, and only one; there is no other, neither the pope of Rome, nor any other; nor will true Iſraelites acknowledge any other: and tho' this head is of God the Father's appointing, who has given him to be the head; ſet him as king over Sion; raiſed him up to be a prince and a Saviour; yet he is alſo of the ſaints chooſing and appointing; they approve of him as ſuch, embrace him, own him, and ſubmit to him, as the Jews will at the laſt day, tho' their forefathers have rejected him: and they ſhall come up out of the land; not of Iſrael, as Schmidt, who interprets this of the apoſtles going out from thence, and ſpreading the goſpel in the world; but out of the ſeveral lands and countries where Iſrael and Judah have been diſperſed, and return to their own land; ſee Jer. iii. 18. Ezek. xxxiv. 13. and xxxvii. 21. So the Targum, "and they ſhall come "up out of the land of their captivity:" or it may be underſtood figuratively and ſpiritually, of their coming up out of their captivity to ſin, ſatan, the law and the world, as well as out of their preſent temporal captivity: and out of the earth[c], as it were, as it may be rendered; out of their earthly ſtate, from the graves of ſin; leaving their earthly affections, and becoming ſpiritual and heavenly-minded; willing to quit all that is dear unto them, even the country in which they were born and long lived, to follow Chriſt their head and king: for great ſhall be the day of Jezreel; or, tho' great has been or is the day of Jezreel[d]; tho' it has been a great and long day of trouble and affliction to them, ſignified by Jezreel; ſee ℣. 4, 5. yet all theſe good things promiſed ſhall ſurely be accompliſhed: indeed, the day of Jezreel may be taken in a good ſenſe, not for a time of diſperſion and diſtreſs, but of great comfort, joy, and happineſs; the word ſignifying, according to ſome, the ſeed of God, or the arm of God: and Jerom applies it to Chriſt, the ſeed of God; and the whole goſpel-diſpenſation may be called his day, the day of ſalvation, the joyful day the Lord has made: or rather by Jezreel, the ſeed of God, are meant his ſpritual offſpring, the children of Judah and Iſrael; who ſhall now be gathered, by the arm of God, his powerful and efficacious grace, and that in large numbers, ſo that great will be their day; ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "for great will be the day "of their gathering." It reſpects the latter day-glory, when will be the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles; when there will be great peace and proſperity; great love and unity; great holineſs and purity; great light and knowledge; great enjoyment of God, and of the preſence of the Redeemer; great glory upon the churches, and upon that a defence: in ſhort, all the great and glorious things ſpoken of will now be compleated; perfect deliverance from all afflictions and troubles; an entire deſtruction of all enemies; and a full enjoyment of the word and ordinances, in the purity of them, and large converſions every where.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter is an explanation of the former, proceeding upon the ſame argument in more expreſs words. The godly Iſraelites are here called upon to lay before the body of the people their idolatry, ingratitude, obſtinacy and ignorance of the God of their mercies; and to exhort them to repentance, leſt they ſhould be ſtripped of all their good things, and be brought into great diſtreſs and difficulties; all their joy and comfort ceaſe, and be expoſed to ſhame and contempt, ℣. 1—13. yet notwithſtanding, many gracious promiſes are made unto them, of their having the alluring and comfortable word of the goſpel; of a door of hope; of ſalvation being opened to them; of faith in the Lord, and affection to him as their huſband; of the removal of all idolatry from them; of ſafety from all enemies; of their open eſpouſal to Chriſt; of his hearing of their prayers, and giving them plenty of all good things; and of their multiplication, converſion, and covenant-relation to God, ℣. 14—23.

℣. 1. Say ye unto your brethren, Ammi, and to your ſiſters, Ruhamah.] Theſe words are to be conſidered either in connexion with the latter part of the preceding chapter, and as directed to the ſons of the living God, who had not been, but now were, Ammi, the Lord's people; and who had not, but now have, Ruhamah, obtained mercy; which grace and mercy ſhewn them, it became them to ſpeak of one to another, to affect their hearts mutually with it, and to glorify God for it, Mal. iii. 16. as alſo to ſpeak of it to their carnal relations, that ſo if it was the will of God, it might be of uſe to them, to ſhew them the ſtate they were in, the danger of it, their need of the grace and mercy of God, and the hope there was by their own inſtance and example of obtaining it; ſee Rom. ix. 1,

1, 2, 3. and x. 1. or as directed to the converted Jews that appointed Chriſt their head, and believed in him; exhorting them to own the believing Gentiles as their brethren and ſiſters, ſince they were the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham their father, and walked in the ſteps of his faith; and to call them Ammi and Ruhamah, ſince they who were not the people of God, now were, and who had not obtained mercy, now have obtained mercy, 1 Pet. ii. 10. or elſe they may be conſidered as in connexion with the following words, plead with your mother; and that either as ſpoken to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who were the people of God, retained the pure worſhip of God, and obtained mercy of the Lord, chap. i. 7. and xi. 12. "O "ye Ammi and Ruhamah, that are the Lord's people, and he has had mercy on; ſtir up and exhort your brethren and ſiſters of the ten tribes, "for ſo they were, notwithſtanding their ſeparation, 1 Kings xii. 24. to contend with their mother, the body of the nation, about idolatry "and departure from God;" or as ſpoken to the godly among the ten tribes, who were the real people of God, and ſharers in his grace and mercy; the remnant he reſerved for himſelf, who had not bowed their knees to idols; or as the command of God by the prophet, to the people of Iſrael, to exhort one another to contend with their mother, who were, as yet, the Lord's people, had mercy ſhown them, when this prophecy was delivered out; though, in caſe of obſtinacy and impenitence, they were threatened with a Lo-ammi and Lo-ruhamah; ſo Schmidt, who thinks, that Ammi and Ruhamah are put by way of appoſition to your brethren and ſiſters, in which he ſeems to be right. Aben Ezra thinks the words are ſpoken ironically, like thoſe in Eccl. xi. 9. and others, but without reaſon. The Targum is, "O ye prophets, ſay to "your brethren, and my people, and I will have "mercy on your congregation;" but rather the words are ſpoken to the Jewiſh converts who firſt believed in Chriſt, were his people, received grace and mercy from him, and ſtood in the relation of brethren and ſiſters to one another, both in a natural and ſpiritual ſenſe, to ſtir up one another to reprove their mother, the Jewiſh church, for rejecting Chriſt, ſaying, as follows:

ỳ. 2. Plead with your mother, plead, &c.] The congregation of Iſrael, as the Targum; the body of the Jewiſh nation, which, with reſpect to individuals, was as a mother to her children; ſee Matt. xxi. 37. that is, lay before her her ſin, in rejecting the Meſſiah, the head and huſband of his true church and people; endeavour to convince her of it; reprove her for it; expoſtulate with her about it; argue the caſe with her, and ſhew her the danger of perſiſting in ſuch an evil, as the apoſtles did, Acts ii. 23, 36. and iii. 14. and vii. 52. and xiii. 27, 40. for ſhe is not my wife, neither am I her huſband; for tho' there had been ſuch a relation between them, yet it was now diſſolved; ſhe had broken the marriage-covenant and contract, and God had given her a bill of divorce, Jer. xxxi. 32. Iſ. l. 1. or however, as ſhe behaved not as a wife towards him, ſhewing love and affection, honour and reverence, and performing duty, and yielding obedience; ſo he would not carry it as an huſband towards her, nouriſhing and cheriſhing her, providing for her, and protecting and defending her; but leave her to ſhift for herſelf, and to the inſults and abuſes of others; having been guilty of idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery, as the Iſraelites before the captivity were; and as the Jews in Chriſt's time were guilty of rejecting the word of God, and preferring their own traditions to it: hence it follows, let her therefore put away her whoredoms out of her ſight, or from her face[e], and her adulteries from between her breaſts; alluding to the cuſtom of harlots, who uſed to paint their faces, and to allure with their looks, words and actions, and to make bare their breaſts, or adorn them, or carry in them what were enticing and alluring. Theſe adulteries and whoredoms, which are the ſame thing, may ſignify the many idolatries of the people of Iſrael before their captivity, and which were the cauſe of it; or the ſins of the Jews before their diſperſion; or their evil works, as the Targum, by which they departed from God and the true Meſſiah, and went a whoring after other lovers: thus they rejected, tranſgreſſed, and made of none effect the commandments of God by their traditions; paid tithe of mint, anniſe and cummin, and neglected the weighty matters of the law; ſought not the honour of God, but that which comes from men; and therefore confeſſed not the true Meſſiah, though under convictions of him, and went about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, and ſubmitted not to his; theſe were the idols of their hearts, and the whoredoms and adulteries, the Jewiſh converts, that truly believed in Chriſt, are ordered to exhort them to put away. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions are, I will take away her whoredoms, &c.

ỳ. 3. Leſt I ſtrip her naked, and ſet her as in the day that ſhe was born, &c.] Alluding to the caſe of an infant when born, which comes naked into the world; and referring to the ſtate and condition of the Iſraelites in Egypt, which was the time of their nativity, as a people and church; ſee Zech. xvi. 4. and when they were in a ſtate of ſervitude and bondage, and had no wealth and ſubſtance, and without poſſeſſions and lands, and had no country of their own to inhabit; and ſignifying that this ſhould be their caſe again, if they perſiſted in their idolatry, impenitence, and unbelief; as has been the caſe of the ten tribes upon their captivity, when they were ſtripped of all their wealth and riches, carried away out of their own land, and ſcattered among the nations, and have never returned ſince; and as was the caſe of the Jews in their laſt deſtruction, for the rejection of Chriſt, they were ſtripped of their civil and religious privileges, of their temporal and ſpiritual mercies as a nation and church; what they feared is come upon them, that the Romans would come and take away their place and nation, John xi. 48. and make her as a wilderneſs, and ſet her like a dry land; having ſome reſpect to her former condition in the wilderneſs, where they had no food nor drink, but what they had from God, as Abarbinel thinks; or elſe to the deſtruction and conſumption of them in the wilderneſs, their carcaſes falling there, who ſinned againſt the Lord, as the Targum and Jarchi; and denoting the utter deſtruction of their commonwealth and church, when their land was laid waſte, their city deſtroyed, their houſe and temple left deſolate and burnt, and they deprived of all the neceſſaries of life, which was their caſe at their laſt deſtruction by the Romans; and to this day they are as they are deſcribed, ch. iii. 4: and ſlay her with thirſt; after their vainly expected Meſſiah, which has brought them to deſperation; or with a thirſt, not for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord, Amos viii. 11. the goſpel, and the ordinances of it, being taken away from them, and the clouds ordered to drop down no rain upon them; that is, the miniſters of the word not to preach the goſpel to them; and ſo are left deſtitute of the means of grace, and of ſpiritual life, and of eſcaping eternal death, Matt. xxi. 43. Iſ. v. 6. The Targum of the whole is, "leſt I remove my Shekinah from "her, and take away her glory, and ſet her for-"ſaken, as in the days of old, before ſhe came to "my worſhip; and my fury ſhall remain upon "her, as it remained upon the people of that ge-"neration that tranſgreſſed my law in the wilder-"neſs; and I will ſet the land deſolate, and kill "her with thirſt."

ỳ. 4. And I will not have mercy upon her children, &c.] The poſterity of the Jews in ſucceeding ages, until the time of their converſion comes; they perſiſting in the ſins of their forefathers, filling up the meaſure of their iniquities; remaining in their obſtinate rejection of the Meſſiah, and in the ſame impenitence and unbelief, and having his blood imprecated upon them: for they be the children of whoredoms; begotten and born in whoredom, ſpurious and illegitimate; or that commit whoredoms; imitate their parents; are guilty of the ſame vices; a generation of vipers. So the Targum, "for they "are children that commit idolatry;" retain the traditions of the elders; go about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, and reject the Meſſiah.

ỳ. 5. For their mother hath played the harlot, &c.] Or committed idolatry; which is the reaſon why ſhe is to be pleaded with, and why the Lord will not own her as his wife, or be an huſband to her; and why ſhe is to be exhorted to put away her whoredoms from her; and was in danger of all the above evils coming upon her, continuing in the ſame practice; and why her children were children of whoredoms. Tho' the connexion may be with the verſe following, for or becauſe their mother hath played the harlot, &c. therefore I will hedge up her way, &c. She that conceived them hath done ſhamefully; all ſin is ſhameful and ſcandalous, eſpecially adultery; it brings a reproach and a blot upon a perſon, that will not be wiped off; and ſo idolatry, worſhipping ſtocks and ſtones inſtead of the living God; and particularly the ſin of the Jewiſh church, in rejecting the true Meſſiah and his righteouſneſs, and ſetting up their own, and tenaciouſly adhering to the traditions of the elders; and ſo departing from the true God, and his word and worſhip, which is no other than ſpiritual adultery or idolatry. The Targum is, "becauſe their "congregation hath erred after the falſe prophets, "their teachers are confounded;" and which Jarchi interprets of the wiſe men that teach doctrines, who are aſhamed becauſe of the people of the earth; to whom they ſay, ye ſhall not ſteal, and yet they ſteal themſelves; ſee Rom. ii. 21—24. Or, ſhe hath made aſhamed[f]; her huſband, and her children: or, ſhe is confounded[g], and aſhamed herſelf, for what ſhe has done. For ſhe ſaid, I will go after my lovers; her idols, as the ten tribes did after the calves at Dan and Bethel. So Kimchi's father interprets it of the ſun, moon, and ſtars they worſhipped; tho' he himſelf underſtands it of the Aſſyrians and Egyptians they were in alliance with, and truſted in. Some join together the Gentile nations and their gods. Or elſe it may be underſtood of the Jews ſeeking to the Romans, and courting their favour and friendſhip; deſiring to be governed not by their own kings, but by the Romans[h]; declaring they had no king but Cæſar, and rejecting Chriſt as ſuch, John xix. 12, 15. Acts xvii. 7. or rather of their beloved tenets, concerning traditions, the rites and ceremonies of the law, ſelf-righteouſneſs, &c. the words are expreſſive of impudence, obſtinacy, and ſelf-will; reſolving to purſue their own fancies, and have their own wills, be it as it would. That give me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my drink; or drinks[i]; wine and other liquors, as Kimchi; theſe take in every thing belonging to food and raiment, and all the neceſſaries, and even delights and pleaſures of life: bread and water; all ſorts of food: wool and flax; all ſorts of clothing, both woollen and linen, for outward or inward covering: and oil, and drinks, or liquors; every thing for pleaſure and delight; all which ſhe aſcribed not to God, from whence all good things come; but, which was an aggravation of her ſin, to her lovers, her allies, or her idols; as the Jews did their plenty of victuals to the queen of heaven, and their worſhip of her, Jer. xliv. 17, 18. and as in the times of Chriſt, they aſcribed not only their enjoyment of temporal good things, but their righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, to their obſervance of traditions, rites, and ceremonies, and the externals of religion.

ỳ. 6. Therefore behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns, &c.] As fields and vineyards are fenced with thorn-hedges to keep out beaſts; or rather as cloſes and fields are fenced to keep cattel in, from going out and ſtraying elſewhere; which may be expreſſive of afflictions, and particularly wars among them, that they could not ſtir out and go from place to place: and make a wall that ſhe ſhall not find her paths; to go to Dan and Bethel, and worſhip the calves there, as ſome; or to go to the Egyptians and Aſſyrians for help, as Jarchi and Kimchi; tho' it was by the latter that they were hedged in, and walled and cooped up, when the city of Samaria was beſieged three years: rather this reſpects the ſtraits and difficulties the Jews have been reduced to by the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the continuance of them ever ſince; ſo that they are not able to offer their daily ſacrifice, kill and eat their paſſover-lamb, and perform other rites and ceremonies they uſed in their own land; which they would fain perform, tho' aboliſhed by Chriſt, but are reſtrained by this hedge and wall, the deſtruction of their temple and altar, and not being ſuffered to poſſeſs their land; hence they are ſaid to be without a ſacrifice and an ephod, ch. iii. 4. ſee Dan. ix. 27.

ỳ. 7. And ſhe ſhall follow after her lovers, &c.] Before-mentioned; that is, in her affections and deſires, with great eagerneſs and earneſtneſs, as men purſue what they are bent upon; otherwiſe, being hedged in and walled up, ſhe could not go after them in a proper ſenſe: but ſhe ſhall not overtake them; they fleeing from her, and ſhe pent up: ſhe ſhe ſhall ſeek them, but ſhall not find them; ſhall not be able to enjoy them, or act according to her wiſhes and deſires, with reſpect to the performance of ſacrifices, rites, and ceremonies, as before obſerved: then ſhall ſhe ſay; in her heart, finding all endeavours fruitleſs, and that the things ſought after were never to be had; the hedges and wall, the obſtructions in the way were never to be removed, whilſt in ſuch a purſuit; wherefore after a long time, many hundreds of years, even in the latter day, being convinced of her ſin and folly in rejecting Chriſt, and purſuing after other objects, ſhe will take up the following reſolution: I will go and return to my firſt huſband; either the God of Iſrael, whom the ten tribes departed from by worſhipping the calves Jeroboam ſet up; but in the latter day will ſeek the Lord their God again, who was an huſband to them, and ſhall cleave to him again, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: ſo the Targum, "I will go and return to the ſervice of my firſt "maſter, for it was well with me when I ſerved "him; henceforth I will not ſerve idols:" or Chriſt, who was promiſed and propheſied of as an huſband to the Jewiſh church, Iſ. liv. 5. and whom they believed in, and expected as ſuch, but when he came rejected him; but now being convinced of their error ſhall ſeek David their king, appoint themſelves one head, and embrace Chriſt as their huſband, and adhere to him; ſee ch. iii. 5: for then was it better with me than now; whilſt in the faith, and hope, and expectation of the true Meſſiah; having a ſpiritual apprehenſion of him, true faith in him, and comfort from him, as held forth in the promiſe; being then poſſeſſed of the good land, in the enjoyment of the word and ordinances, and of all religious and civil privileges, but now deprived of them. This may be applied to the caſe of true believers in Chriſt, having partially departed from him, and being reſtored. Chriſt is an huſband to them, who has betrothed them to himſelf, and they have given themſelves to him, and have been loved, nouriſhed, cheriſhed, and provided for by him, and for a while had much nearneſs, familiarity, and communion with him; but unbelief prevailing, firſt love waxing cold, and being got into a carnal and ſleepy frame, neglect both private and public worſhip, fall into ſin, and removed from church-communion, and ſo may be ſaid to have departed from Chriſt their huſband; but being recovered by divine grace, and ſenſible of their ſins, reſolve to return to him again by repentance and acknowledgment, by doing their firſt works, and by attendance on his word and ordinances; inſtigated hereunto very much by remembring how it has been with them when they kept cloſe to him, and obſerving the difference between thoſe times and the preſent; how they had then the preſence of God and Chriſt, and communion with them, and the ſecret diſcoveries of the love of God; in what lively exerciſe the graces of the Spirit were; what delight and profit they had in ordinances, and what peace, joy, and comfort in their ſouls; all which now they want; ſee Job xxix. 2, 3, 4, 5.

℣. 8. For ſhe did not know that I gave her corn, and wine, and oil, &c.] This is a reaſon, not of her reſolution to return to her firſt huſband, but to go after lovers, and of her aſcribing theſe things to them, ℣. 5. and why the Lord would behave towards her as he determined to do, ℣. 6, 7. this ignorance was wilful and affected, and therefore blameable; ſhe might have known, but ſhe would not; ſhe did not ſet her mind to know; ſhe did not conſider who gave her theſe things, nor behave as if ſhe knew, as Jarchi: or ſhe did not own and acknowledge God to be the author and giver of them, as ſhe ſhould have done; which was ingratitude, rather than ignorance, and is a hainous ſin, and to be reſented; ſince all good things temporal and ſpiritual, as daily bread, all the neceſſaries of life, ſignified by theſe things, ſo the word, and ordinances, and ſpiritual gifts, which they may be emblems of, come from God, and ſhould be acknowledged; but the Jews, as in the times of Iſaiah, did not know him, and acknowledge his benefits, Iſ. i. 2, 3. ſo in the times of Chriſt, they did not know him to be the God of Iſrael, God over all, bleſſed for ever; from whom, and for whoſe ſake, who was to be, and was born of them, they enjoyed the privileges they did, John i. 10, 11. Rom. ix. 4, 5. And multiplied her ſilver and gold, which they prepared for Baal; the relative which may refer to all that goes before; and the ſenſe be, that theſe gifts of God, and which ſhould have been owned as ſuch, and employed in his ſervice, and to his glory; ſome were made uſe of in meat and drink-offerings to Baal; and others in decking themſelves to appear in his worſhip to his honour; or in ornamenting the idol therewith, or in making it thereof, ſo the Targum and Syriac verſion: and all this may be ſaid to be done, when theſe things are ſpent in the ſervice of other lords than the Lord himſelf; when they are abuſed to ſinful purpoſes, and conſumed on the luſts of men, to gratify their ſenſuality, pride, and vanity, which the Jews did.

℣. 9. Therefore will I return and take away, &c.] Or, take away again[k]; an uſual Hebraiſm: my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the ſeaſon thereof; for tho' theſe are the gifts of God to men for their uſe, and to diſpoſe of for the good of others; yet he retains his property in them, and can and will call them to an account for their ſtewardſhip; and when he pleaſes, take away both their office, and the good things they were intruſted with, not making a right uſe of them; and this he does in his own appointed time and ſeaſon, or at ſuch a time when theſe are at the beſt, and the greateſt good is expected from them, and which therefore is the more afflictive; as in the time of harveſt and vintage, ſo Kimchi, when corn and grapes are fully ripe; or, as the Targum, in the time of the corn being on the floor, and of the preſſure of the wine: and will recover my wool, and my flax, given to cover her nakedneſs; or, I will take away; by force and violence, as out of the hands of thieves, and robbers, and uſurpers, who have no right to them, being forfeited; theſe were given to cover her nakedneſs, but not to deck herſelf with for the honour of her idols, or to cheriſh pride and ſuperſtition; ſee Matt. xxiii. 5. theſe were all taken away, when the Romans came and took away their place and nation, John xi. 48. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions give the ſenſe as if theſe were taken, that they might not cover her nakedneſs, or ſhame; but that it might be expoſed, as follows:

℣. 10. And now will I diſcover her lewdneſs in the ſight of her lovers, &c.] The people, her lovers, as the Targum; which is by many underſtood of the Egyptians and Aſſyrians; but rather means the Romans, whom the Jews courted as their friends: tho' it ſeems beſt to interpret it in a more general way, that the ſin and folly of the Jews in rejecting Chriſt, and adhering to their beloved tenets, ſhould be diſcovered and made manifeſt to all in the moſt public manner by their puniſhment; by being ſcattered among the nations, and becoming a taunt, reproach, and a curſe every where: and none ſhall deliver her out of my hand; none of her lovers, as Kimchi, nor any other: it denotes the utter, total, and final deſtruction of the Jews, wrath being come upon them to the uttermoſt; and which is irrecoverable by human help, has continued for many hundred years, and will until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, or till the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in, Luke xxi. 24. Rom. xi. 25.

[k] אשוב ולקחתי iterum capiam, Druſius; recipiam, Liveleus.

℣. 11. I will alſo cauſe all her mirth to ceaſe, &c.] As it muſt in courſe, this being her caſe, as before deſcribed, whether conſidered in individuals, or as a body politic, or in their church-ſtate, as follows: her feaſt-days; which the Jews underſtand of the three feaſts of tabernacles, paſſover, and pentecoſt; typical of Chriſt's tabernacling in human nature; of his being the paſſover ſacrificed for us; and of the firſt fruits of the Spirit; which being come, the ſhadows are gone and vaniſhed, and theſe feaſts are no more: her new moons, and her ſabbaths; the firſt day of every month, and the ſeventh day of every week, obſerved for religious exerciſes; typical of the light the church receives from Chriſt, and the reſt it has in him; and he, the body and ſubſtance of them, being come, theſe are no more, Col. ii. 16, 17: and all her ſolemn feaſts; all others, whether of God's appointment or their own; all are made to ceaſe of right, if not in fact; the law of commandments, contained in ordinances, being aboliſhed by Chriſt, and the Jews without a prieſt, ſacrifice, and ephod, Eph. ii. 14, 15, 16. Hoſ. iii. 4.

℣. 12. And I will deſtroy her vines, and her fig-trees, &c.] Which are mentioned for the reſt, being the moſt fruitful and beneficial: this was done when Judea was invaded, over-run and waſted, by the Roman army; and when many were cut down, as Joſephus obſerves, to build forts, and caſt up mounts againſt Jeruſalem; ſo that he ſays [l], the appearance of the earth was miſerable, for what before was adorned with trees and gardens, looked now like a wilderneſs: whereof ſhe hath ſaid, theſe are my rewards that my lovers have given me; alluding to the hire of harlots, given them by their gallants; theſe ſhe aſcribed, as ſhe did before, her bread, water, wool, flax, and oil, ℣. 5. not to God, the author and giver of them, but to the people her lovers, as the Targum; or to her idols, or to her beloved tenets, and doing according to them; and which is here mentioned as a reaſon of the divine reſentment, and why he deſtroyed theſe fruitful trees: and I will make them a foreſt, and the beaſts of the field ſhall eat them; make the vines and fig-trees like foreſt-trees, barren and unfruitful; the fruitful land of Judea ſhould be turned into a foreſt, or become like a deſert or wilderneſs, and all the fruits of it ſhould be eat up by wild beaſts; by their enemies, compared to the beaſts of the field, particularly the Romans, the fourth beaſt; ſee Iſ. lvi. 9. Dan. vii. 7.

℣. 13. And I will viſit upon her the days of Baalim, &c.] That is, puniſh them for all the idolatries committed by their forefathers, in the days that the ſeveral Baals, as Baal Peor, and Baal Berith, and others, were worſhipped by them; they their children, tho' not worſhipping theſe Baalim, yet other lords, luſts and idols, they ſet up of themſelves, and in their own hearts; ſee Matt. xxiii. 32—36: wherein ſhe burnt incenſe to them; to the Baalim; this one ſpecies of idolatrous worſhip being put for the reſt: and ſhe decked herſelf with her ear-rings, and her jewels; with her beſt and richeſt attire; the latter word ſignifying in the Arabic language, as Jarchi obſerves, the ornaments of women; this was done to grace the idolatrous worſhip, and for the honour of the idols: and ſhe went after her lovers; the traditions of the elders; the weak and beggarly elements of the ceremonial law now aboliſhed, and their own legal righteouſneſs: and forgot me, ſaith the Lord; or, "left my "worſhip," as the Targum; forgot and rejected the true Meſſiah, his word and ordinances.

℣. 14. Therefore behold, I will allure her, &c.] Since theſe rough ways will not do, I'll take another, a more mild and gentle way; inſtead of threatening, terrifying, and puniſhing, I'll allure, perſuade, and entice, giving loving words and winning language: or nevertheleſs, or notwithſtanding [m]; ſo Noldius and others render the particle; tho' they have thus behaved themſelves, and ſuch methods have been taken with them to no purpoſe, yet I'll do as follows: the words may be underſtood of the call and converſion of the people of God, the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, both Jews and Gentiles, in the firſt times of the goſpel, as ℣. 23. is quoted and applied by the apoſtle Paul, Rom. ix. 24, 25. and be underſtood alſo of the call of the believing Jews out of Jeruſalem, before the deſtruction of it, Luke xxi. 21. from whence they removed to Pella, as Euſebius [n] relates: and of the apoſtles out of the land of Judea, into the wilderneſs of the people, the Gentile world, to preach the goſpel there; where vineyards or churches were planted; the door of faith and hope were opened to the Gentiles, that had been without hope; and the converſions now made, both among Jews and Gentiles, opened a door of hope, or were a pledge of the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles in the latter day; to which times alſo theſe words may be applied, when the Jews ſhall be allured and perſuaded to ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, and join goſpel-churches in the wilderneſs of the people, and ſhall have abundance of ſpiritual conſolation and joy; and they may alſo be applied to the converſion of ſinners in common, and ſet forth the methods of God's grace in dealing with them: there is throughout an alluſion to Iſrael's coming out of Egypt, from whence the Lord allured and perſuaded them by Moſes and Aaron; and then brought them into the wilderneſs, where he fed and ſupplied them, and ſpoke comfortably to them, and gave them the lively oracles; and from whence, from the borders of it, they had and entered into the vineyards in the land of Canaan; and in the valley of Achor eat of the corn of the land, which was a door of hope to them they ſhould enjoy the whole land; and when they rejoiced exceedingly, particularly at the Red-ſea, at their firſt coming out. The word rendred allure, ſignifies to perſuade [o], as in Gen. ix. 27. and in converſion the Lord perſuades men, not merely by moral ſuaſion, or the outward miniſtry of the word, but by powerful and efficacious grace; opening the heart to attend to things ſpoken, and the eyes of the underſtanding to behold wondrous things in the word of God; working upon the heart, and removing the hardneſs and impenitence of it; quickening the ſoul, drawing it with the cords of love, and ſweetly operating upon the will; and on a ſudden and unawares making the ſoul, like the chariots of Amminadib, or a willing people; perſuading it to true repentance for ſin, to part with ſins and ſinful companions, and with its own righteouſneſs, and to come to Chriſt, and to look to him, and lay hold on him as the Saviour, and to ſubmit to his ordinances: moreover, the Lord perſuades men at converſion of his love to them, and of their intereſt in Chriſt, and all the bleſſings of grace in him. Kimchi's note is, "I "will put into her heart to return by repentance;" and compares with it Ezek. xxxvi. 26. The Targum is, "I will ſubject her to the law." And bring her into the wilderneſs; ſo in converſion the Lord calls and ſeparates his people from the world, as the Iſraelites were from the Egyptians, when brought into the wilderneſs; and when they are ſolitary and alone, as they were, and ſo in a fit circumſtance to be ſpoken unto, and to hear comfortable words, as follows; and when the Lord feeds them with the corn of heaven, with hidden manna, the food of the wilderneſs; and when they come into trouble and affliction for the ſake of Chriſt and his goſpel. Some underſtand this of the church into which they are brought, becauſe ſeparate from the world, and attended with trouble; but this is rather a garden than a wilderneſs. Some, as Noldius and others, render it, when or after I have brought her into the wilderneſs [p]; ſo after the Lord has ſhown men their ſin and danger, their wilderneſs, deſolate ſtate and condition, and ſtripped them of all ſuccour elſewhere; or has brought them under afflictive diſpenſations of providence; then he does what he ſaid before, and follows after. And ſpeak comfortably unto her; or, ſpeak to her heart [q], as in Iſ. xl. 2. as he does when he tells them their ſins are forgiven; that he has loved them with an everlaſting love; what exceeding great and precious promiſes he has made unto them; and when he ſpeaks to them by the Spirit and comforter, who takes his and the things of Chriſt, and ſhews them unto them; and in his word, written for their conſolation; and by his miniſters, who are Barnabaſes, ſons of comfort; and in the ordinances, thoſe breaſts of conſolation. The Targum is, "and I "will do for her wonders and great things, as I "did for her in the wilderneſs; and by the hand "of my ſervants the prophets, I will ſpeak com-"forts to her heart." The Jewiſh writers [r] interpret this of the Meſſiah's leading people into a wilderneſs in a literal ſenſe; they aſk where will he (the Meſſiah) lead them? the anſwer of ſome is, to the wilderneſs of Judea (ſee Matt. iii. 1, 13.) and of others is, to the wilderneſs of Sihon and Og (the wilderneſs the Iſraelites paſſed thro' when they came out of Egypt): they who are on the ſide of the firſt anſwer, urge in favour of it Hoſ. xii. 9. and they who are for the latter, produce this paſſage.

℣. 15 And I will give her vineyards from thence, &c.] Either from the wilderneſs into which ſhe is brought; or from the time of her being brought there, allured and ſpoke comfortably to; which are put for all temporal bleſſings, and as emblems of ſpiritual ones: and ſo from the time that the Lord deals thus graciouſly, as before expreſſed; he gives more grace, larger meaſures, and continual ſupplies of it, and withholds nothing good, comfortable, and uſeful to them: the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, her vine-dreſſers; and the Targum, her governors: and the valley of Achor for a door of hope; this valley was ſo named from Achan, who was ſtoned in it in the days of Joſhua; who is by Joſephus [s], Theodoret [t], and others, called Achar, and ſo in 1 Chron. ii. 7. and the ſignification of its name is the valley of trouble, becauſe that he both troubled Iſrael by his evil actions, which brought them into diſtreſs; and becauſe he was here troubled himſelf, being here puniſhed for his ſin, Joſh. vii. 24, 25, 26. Jerom [u] ſays it lies to the north of Jericho, and is ſtill called by its old name by the inhabitants of it. Some take it to be the ſame with the valley of Engedi, which 'tis certain was near Jericho. Now as the valley of Achor was at the entrance of the Iſraelites into the land of Canaan, and gave them hope of poſſeſſing the whole land; ſo what the people of God enjoy at firſt converſion, lays a foundation for hope of eternal glory and happineſs; as the Lord's being given them as their portion, Chriſt as their Saviour, and all things freely with him; the Spirit and his grace as the earneſt and pledge of the eternal inheritance: grace and glory are ſo ſtrictly connected, that the one is a door of hope to the other. And ſhe ſhall ſing there; either in the wilderneſs, where the Lord ſpeaks comfortably to her; or in the vineyards ſhe has from thence; alluding to the ſongs of joy at the time of vintage, or preſſing of the grapes: or in the valley of Achor, there rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, ſinging the ſongs of electing, redeeming, pardoning, and juſtifying grace: as in the days of her youth, as in the day when ſhe came up out of the land of Egypt; as when the people of Iſrael were firſt brought into their civil and eccleſiaſtic ſtate, which were the days of their youth as a people; and that was when they came out of Egypt, and had paſſed the Red-ſea, at the ſhore of which they ſung; and to which is the alluſion here; ſee Exod. xv. 1. Rev. xv. 3. this paſſage is applied to the times of the Meſſiah in the Talmud [w].

℣. 16. And it ſhall be at that day, ſaith the Lord, &c.] The goſpel-day, the times of the goſpel-diſpenſation, the latter part of them; at the time of the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles; at the time when God will allure and perſuade them to ſeek the Meſſiah, and they ſhall turn to him; when he ſhall ſpeak comfortably to them, and give them a door of hope, and all ſpiritual bleſſings, and cauſe them to ſing as when they came out of Egypt: that thou ſhalt call me Iſhi; or, my huſband [x]; returning to Chriſt their firſt huſband, and being received by him, ſhall have faith and intereſt in him, and full aſſurance of it; and ſhall not only be allowed to call him their huſband, but in the ſtrength of faith, and with great freedom of ſoul, ſhall call him ſo, and ſay as the church did, my beloved is mine, and I am his, Cant. ii. 16: or, my man [y]; the man the Lord, the man Jehovah's fellow, Immanuel manuel God with us, God in human nature; and ſo more manifeſtly points at Chriſt, who moſt properly ſpeaking, ſtands in the relation of an huſband to his people: or, my ſtrength, as ſome interpret it; the huſband being the ſtrength, protection, and defence of the wife, the weaker veſſel; ſo Chriſt is the ſtrength of his ſaints, in whom they have righteouſneſs and ſtrength, and thro' whoſe ſtrength they can do all things: and ſhalt call me no more Baali; which ſignifies my huſband too, and is uſed of God and Chriſt; he is called Baal, and the church is called Beulah, becauſe married together, Iſ. liv. 5. and lxii. 4, 5. Jer. xxxi. 32. but it ſignifies a lordly and imperious huſband; and the other word, Iſhi, a loving one: ſo Jarchi obſerves that the ſenſe is, that they ſhould ſerve the Lord from love, and not fear; Iſhi being a word expreſſive of marriage and love, and Baali of lordſhip and fear: hence ſome have thought this to be the reaſon, why the one ſhould be uſed, and the other not, under the goſpel-diſpenſation; becauſe ſaints now have not the ſpirit of bondage to fear, but the ſpirit of adoption, whereby they call God their father, and Chriſt their huſband: tho' rather the reaſon is, becauſe the word Baal, as R. Marinus obſerves, is of doubtful ſignification, an ambiguous word, uſed for the idol Baal, as well as ſignifies lord and huſband; and therefore to be laid aſide, leſt when they mentioned it, it ſhould be thought they ſpoke of Baal, and not of the Lord; or ſhould be led to think of that idol, and remember him.

ỳ. 17. For I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, &c.] Out of the mouth of Iſrael, as Saadiah; out of the mouth of the converted Jews, and even out of the mouth of the Gentiles, as Kimchi owns; the ſeveral Baals, as Baal-Peor, Baal-Berith, and Baal-Zebub, and others: the names of them ſhould be no more uſed, ſhould not be ſpoken of, unleſs with deteſtation and abhorrence; not with honour and reſpect, with love and affection, or ſo as to yield worſhip and homage to them; or otherwiſe their names may be lawfully mentioned, as in Rom. xi. 4. there ſeems to be ſome reference to the law in Exod. xxiii. 13. the ſenſe is, that idolatry ſhall be utterly aboliſhed, even of every kind; not the worſhip of Baalim only, but of all other idols: and ſo the Targum is, "and I "will take away the name of the idols of the "people out of their mouth;" and may deſign the idolatry of the church of Rome; their worſhip of images, of gold and ſilver, wood, braſs, and ſtone; in whoſe communion are many of the Jews at this time; but when the time of their converſion comes, all this will be aboliſhed among them, and among the Gentiles alſo: and they ſhall no more be remembred by their name; or made mention of by name; the ſame thing as before in other words, repeated for the confirmation of it.

ỳ. 18. And in that day will I make a covenant for them with the beaſts of the field, &c.] That is, ſo as to be at peace with them, as the Targum is; ſee Job v. 23. the ſenſe is, the Lord here promiſes this unto them, and that it ſhall be as ſure and firm, and to be as much depended upon as if it was eſtabliſhed and ſettled by covenant, and ſhould be enjoyed as a covenant-mercy and bleſſing; and the creatures ſhould as ſtrictly obſerve it, and anſwer to it, as if bound by covenant: and this ſhould reach not only to the beaſts of the field, the wild beaſts of prey, but the fowls of heaven; as the locuſts and others, as Kimchi obſerves, which ſhould not eat up the fruits and increaſe of the earth: and the creeping things of the ground; as ſerpents and ſcorpions, as the ſame writer ſuggeſts. Some think this was fulfilled in the firſt times of the goſpel, when the apoſtles took up ſerpents, and trod on ſcorpions, without any hurt; but then nothing was more common, than for the chriſtians to be thrown to the lions, and devoured by beaſts of prey. Others refer it to the laſt days, the times of the reſtitution of all things, when they ſuppoſe all creatures will be reſtored to their paradiſiacal eſtate, and be in entire ſubjection to men. Rather the ſenſe is, that whereas noiſome beaſts, and other things, were one of God's ſore judgments, with which he threatened his people, when they ſinned againſt him, now they ſhould no more be hurt by them in a way of judgment; and indeed, ſhould ceaſe from being among them, ſo that they ſhould be in no fear of them any more; ſee Lev. xxvi. 22. Ezek. xiv. 21. and xxxiv. 25, 28. Tho' the words may be underſtood figuratively and myſtically, either of deliverance from all ſpiritual enemies by Chriſt, as ſin, ſatan, and the world, and all others; or of freedom from all wicked men, cruel and crafty ones, open and ſecret perſecutors of the ſaints: perſecution will ceaſe at the time of the Jews converſion; antichriſt, and all the antichriſtian ſtates, will be deſtroyed; the beaſt and falſe prophet will be taken and caſt into the furnace of fire; the old ſerpent, the devil, will be bound, during the millennium; and there will be none to hurt in God's holy mountain, neither in the ſpiritual nor perſonal reign of Chriſt. And I will break the bow, and the ſword, and the battel out of the earth; all the inſtruments of war ſhall be no more, theſe mentioned being put for all the reſt; and there ſhall be no more battels fought after that at Armageddon; ſwords ſhall be beat into plowſhares, and ſpears into pruning-hooks; there ſhall be no more wars, nor rumours of wars, but perfect external peace from all enemies on all ſides, as well as ſpiritual and internal peace in the breaſt of the ſaints; and of both there ſhall be abundance, and without end, Pſ. lxxii. 7. Iſ. ii. 4. and ix. 7: and will make them to lie down ſafely; under the protection of the king Meſſiah, David their prince, who ſhall be over them, and whom they ſhall own, acknowledge, and ſerve, and ſo dwell in the utmoſt ſafety and ſecurity, not fearing any enemy whatever; they may lie down on their couches at meals, or on their beds at night for reſt, or as flocks of ſheep in their folds and paſtures, and none make them afraid; ſee Jer. xxiii. 5.

ỳ. 19. And I will betroth thee unto me for ever, &c.] Which is taking them into a marriage-relation with himſelf; and is to be underſtood not of the whole body of God's elect, who were ſecretly betrothed to Chriſt in the everlaſting covenant from eternity; for this reſpects what is yet to come; but of the people of the Jews when converted in the latter day, when will be the marriage of the Lamb with them, and with the fulneſs of the Gentiles then brought in; of which ſee Rev. xix. 7, 8, 9. who will then return to their firſt huſband; and tho' the Jews have been divorced, they will be received again, and be afreſh betrothed; a new covenant or contract will be made with them, and which ſhall laſt for ever, Jer. xxxi. 31, 32. and this may be applied to every particular ſoul at converſion, which is the day of their open eſpouſals to Chriſt; and they are viſibly brought into a marriage-relation with him, than which nothing is more near; they become fleſh of his fleſh, bone of his bone, yea one ſpirit with him, and are indulged with near communion with him; and hence is that ſympathy he has with them in all their afflictions, temptations, and exerciſes, and takes that as done to him, which is done to them, whether good or ill; hence all their debts or ſins become his, and he ſatisfies for them, and his righteouſneſs becomes theirs: this is a very endearing relation; there is a mutual delight and complacency they take in each other; and a moſt honourable one it is; hence they are called by his name, chriſtians, and partake of his honour; he is king, and they queen; and a very beneficial relation it is, for all that Chriſt is, and has, are theirs: and a moſt marvellous and wondrous thing it is, that he ſhould betroth them to himſelf, when he is the Son of the living God, himſelf the true God, God over all bleſſed for ever, the maker and governor of the world, and heir of all things; and tho' they in their ſecret betrothment were conſidered as ſinleſs creatures, yet in their open eſpouſals at converſion are fallen ſinners, in a very low eſtate indeed; under ſentence of condemnation and death; devoid of the image of God; depraved, polluted, and guilty creatures; in deep debt, and extreme poverty; it is as if a prince, heir apparent to the throne, ſhould take a convict or condemned malefactor out of her cell, or a common ſtrumpet out of the ſtews, or a bankrupt and beggar from the dunghil, and marry her: and this relation will continue for ever; the marriage-covenant or contract is an everlaſting one; the bond of union, which is everlaſting and unchangeable love, is indiſſoluble; death cannot take place in either party; both ſhall live for ever; and this is a ſtrong proof of the final perſeverance of the ſaints. Yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteouſneſs; either in truth, in ſincerity, heartily, and without any hypocriſy or diſſimulation; or conſiſtent with righteouſneſs, with his love of righteouſneſs and holineſs, and hatred of ſin: or rather in his own juſtifying righteouſneſs; not in their own righteouſneſs, which is as rags; for tho' he finds them in ſuch rags, he ſtrips them of them, and puts on the wedding-garment, the robe of his own righteouſneſs, and garment of ſalvation; when they become as a bride, adorned with ornaments, and ſo made ready for the nuptials, and in this he betroths them; ſee Iſ. lxi. 10. Matt. xxii. 12. Rev. xix. 7, 8: and in judgment; in ſanctification, according to ſome, the work being now begun by the Spirit of God, as a ſpirit of judgment; or in a judicious way, not raſhly and precipitantly, but with mature deliberation, and of choice ariſing from judgment; or rather abſolving them from the ſentence of condemnation and death by his righteouſneſs, and protecting and defending them from their enemies, for the ſake of which, and other things, he takes them into this relation: and in loving-kindneſs, and in mercies; denoting both the love, which is the ſpring and ſource of this relation, and not any merits of theirs; and the kind and tender manner in which he betroths them; as well as the numerous favours he beſtows upon them; as pardon of ſin; juſtification of life; ſpiritual peace; ſupplies of all grace, and eternal life; all the effects of free grace, unmerited love, and ſovereign mercy.

℣. 20. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulneſs, &c.] Which lies in keeping the marriage-contract inviolable; Chriſt will never ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail, nor break his covenant; as he is faithful to his Father that appointed him, ſo he is, and will be, to his church and people, and to every believer, to whom he is eſpouſed; and it is he that makes them faithful unto him, and gives them faith to believe in him, receive, embrace, own, and acknowledge him as their huſband: and in this ſenſe ſome underſtand it, rendering it, in faith [z]; ſo the Targum and others. This is the third time the word betroth is uſed, or this promiſe made; which, according to Jerom, refers to the eſpouſing of the Jews in Abraham, at mount Sinai, and in the times of Chriſt; and according to Kimchi, to the three captivities of the Jews, in Egypt, in Babylon, and that in which they now are: and ſome chriſtian writers think, the myſtery of the Trinity is here pointed at; and the ſenſe to be, that all the three divine perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit, would eſpouſe them; but rather it is ſo often repeated to confirm it, and expreſs the certainty of it, which might on many accounts ſeem a thing incredible. And thou ſhalt know the Lord; that the Meſſiah is Jehovah, and that he is their huſband; they ſhall all know him, from the leaſt to the greateſt; they ſhall have a ſaving knowledge of him, which will iſſue in eternal life; they ſhall own him, and acknowledge him, ſerve and obey him, as their Lord, head, and huſband, as well as love him, and believe in him. The Targum is, "and ye ſhall know to fear before "the Lord;" ſee Jer. xxxi. 34. Let it be obſerved, here are no conditions throughout, it is only I will, and thou ſhalt.

℣. 21. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, &c.] When theſe eſpouſals ſhall be made, when the marriage of the Lamb will be come, and his bride will be betrothed to him; then the whole creation, the heavens and the earth, ſhall contribute of their riches and plenty, to make a marriage-feaſt for them; or then ſhall the ſpouſe of Chriſt, in a very viſible and plentiful manner, by virtue of the marriage-union between them, partake of all his good things, both temporal and ſpiritual; and eſpecially the latter, as ſignified by the former; but yet in the uſe of means, and as the effect of prayer, as follows: I will hear, ſaith the Lord; the petitions of his new married bride, which he can't deny her: or, I will anſwer [a]; men oftentimes hear, and anſwer not; but when the Lord hears his people, he anſwers them, and grants them their requeſts; he is a God hearing and anſwering prayer. So the Targum, "I will receive your prayer, ſaith the "Lord." I will hear the heavens, and they ſhall hear the earth; in theſe and the following words, is an elegant proſopopeia, a figure by which inanimate creatures are repreſented as perſons ſpeaking, praying, aſking, and being heard and anſwered; and a beautiful climax, or a chain of ſecond cauſes linked together, and as depending upon the firſt cauſe, the Lord himſelf; the heavens are repreſented as deſiring the Lord of nature, the maker and ſupporter of them, having been like braſs and ſhut up, that they might have leave to let down their refreſhing dews, and gentle ſhowers of rain, upon the earth; and the earth as being dry and thirſty, as gaping, opening its mouth, and imploring theſe benign influences of the heavens; and both as anſwered: for ſo it may be rendered, I will anſwer the heavens, and they ſhall anſwer the earth; earth[b]; the Lord promiſes to anſwer the deſires of the heavens, and allow them to drop their dew, and diſtil their rain; and ſo they ſhall anſwer the cravings of the earth. The ſpiritual ſenſe may be according to Schmidt; Chriſt is he on whom all bleſſings depend; heaven may ſignify the Holy Spirit Chriſt gives, who intercedes with him for the ſaints; the earth the miniſtration of the word and ordinances, by which the Spirit is given, invoked by the miniſters of them. Or, as Cocceius, the heavens may deſign the miniſters of the church who govern in it, and who pray and plead for help, aſſiſtance, and ſucceſs; and the earth the audience, the common people, who alſo pray, and are heard and anſwered, when miniſters let down the dew and rain of evangelical doctrine upon them, and water them, and refreſh them with it; and ſuch precious ſeaſons as theſe, as the fruit of prayer, will the ſaints have in the latter day.

℣. 22. And the earth ſhall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil, &c.] Or anſwer; here the corn, and vines, and olive-trees, are repreſented as requeſting the earth to be let into it, and receive moiſture from it, that they may grow and increaſe, and bring forth fruit; by which may be meant the fruits and graces of the Spirit, and all ſpiritual gifts, communicated by means of the word and ordinances; or the fruits brought forth by the church, under the miniſtry of the word; which ſerves like corn to nouriſh and ſtrengthen; like wine to comfort, chear, and revive; and like oil to heal and ſoften, as well as make glad. And they ſhall hear Jezreel; or anſwer; that is, theſe trees and fruits ſhall anſwer to the requeſts and deſires of Jezreel, who ſhall be abundantly bleſſed with them. By Jezreel is not meant the name of a place, as Aben Ezra; but the people of Iſrael, who had before been ſignified by a ſon of the prophet of this name, ch. i. 4. and which name is here continued, to ſhew how unworthy they were of ſuch favours in themſelves, and the riches of God's grace in beſtowing them on them: or elſe the word here has a different ſignification; whereas before it ſignified their being ſcattered and diſperſed, here their being the ſeed of God; and which is confirmed by the following words, I will ſow her unto me, &c. the ſum of the whole is, that at the prayers of the Lord's people, abundance of ſpiritual bleſſings ſhall be beſtowed upon them from Chriſt by the Spirit, under the miniſtration of the word and ordinances. The Targum of both verſes is, "I "will command the heavens, and they ſhall let "down rain upon the earth; and the earth ſhall "produce corn, and wine, and oil, and they ſhall "be ſufficient for the captivity of the people." Kimchi ſays this belongs to the time of ſalvation; and Aben Ezra to time to come.

℣. 23. And I will ſow her unto me in the earth, &c.] That is Jezreel, or the people of God, the church betrothed; this is another bleſſing following upon the marriage-relation between Chriſt and his people, both Jews and Gentiles, in the latter day, a multiplication of a ſpiritual ſeed and offſpring. So Kimchi and Aben Ezra obſerve, that the words ſignify, that the people of Iſrael ſhall increaſe and be fruitful as the ſeed of the earth. Theſe now are good ſeed which the Lord ſows; ſuch as are born not of corruptible, but incorruptible ſeed; are quickened by the Spirit of God; have a good work of grace begun in them; and tho' they may lie for ſome time under the clouds in darkneſs and obſcurity, yet ſhall riſe up in the green blade of a lively profeſſion, and bring forth the fruits of righteouſneſs. Seed for ſowing is the choiceſt and moſt precious, and of greateſt eſteem and value, and is ſeparated from the reſt for that uſe, tho' but little and ſmall in quantity in compariſon of it; all which is applicable to the people of God. This is ſaid to be ſown in the earth or land; either in their own land, the land of Iſrael, into which they ſhall now be brought, Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22. Amos ix. 15. or in the field of the world, the nations and people of the earth, according to Zech. x. 9. or rather in the churches of Chriſt on earth, the churches in the Gentile world, into which the Jews, when converted, ſhall be brought, and increaſe and multiply; and this will be all the Lord's doing. I will ſow her; he will quicken and convert them, and place and plant them in goſpel-churches, tho' miniſters may be inſtruments in his hands; and all their fruitfulneſs and increaſe will be unto him, for his ſervice, the promotion of his intereſt, and for his honour and glory. The Targum is, "I will eſtabliſh you before me in the "land of my Shekinah or majeſty." And I will have mercy on her that had not obtained mercy; upon Lo-Ruhamah, or the people of Iſrael, ſignified by her, ch. i. 6. and alſo the Gentiles, for to both Jews and Gentiles the apoſtle applies the words in Rom. ix. 24, 25. and they were fulfilled in part in his time, by the converſion of ſome of the Jews, and by the calling of the Gentiles; but will have a larger accompliſhment in the latter day, when all Iſrael ſhall obtain mercy, and be ſaved; ſee Rom. xi. 26, 30, 31, 32. and are applicable to the people of God at all times, when called by grace; for tho' before converſion there is mercy for them in the heart of God, which is from everlaſting; and in his purpoſe and reſolution to beſtow; and which is diſplayed in his choice of them, conſidered in the decree of the means as fallen creatures, and ſo veſſels of mercy; and which is laid up in covenant for them, which is full of the ſure mercies of David; and appears in the miſſion of Chriſt, and their redemption by him; and in ſparing and ſaving them before calling; as well as in their regeneration, which is the fruit of abundant mercy; yet is not manifeſted to them till converted, when they openly obtain it: the Lord has mercy on them, and brings them out of the horrible pit of the ſtate of nature; plucks them as brands out of the burning; opens the priſon-doors, knocks off their fetters, and ſets them free; feeds their hungry, and clothes their naked ſouls; heals their diſeaſes, and pardons their iniquities, and ſaves them with an everlaſting ſalvation. And I will ſay to them which were not my people, thou art my people; or to Lo-ammi, the people of Iſrael, ſignified by the prophet's child of that name, ch. i. 9. who ſhould no more be called ſo, but Ammi, my people, ch. ii. 1. which, as before obſerved, was in part fulfilled in the firſt times of the goſpel; but will be more fully accompliſhed at the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in the fulneſs of the Gentiles; who tho' choſen to be the people of God, and are ſo federally, and were given in covenant to Chriſt as ſuch, and ſo redeemed and ſaved by him from their ſins; yet are not till converſion laid hold on by the Lord, and formed as his people for himſelf, and are without knowledge of him, and communion with him: nor are they called his people by themſelves or others; but when converted, they have the characters, and enjoy the privileges of God's people; they have the witneſs of the relation to themſelves by the Spirit of God, and are known and acknowledged by others; the Lord ſays this unto them, and avouches them for his people: and they ſhall ſay thou art my God; in the ſtrength of faith, under the teſtimony of the Spirit of God, they ſhall claim their intereſt in God, as their Covenant-God in Chriſt; which is made known in effectual vocation by the work of grace on their hearts; by the bleſſings of grace beſtowed on them; and by the Lord's dwelling among them, and his protection of them.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter is an order to the prophet to love an adulterous woman beloved of her friend, and by this parable to expreſs the love of God to Iſrael, and their ingratitude to him, ℣. 1. the prophet's execution of that order, making a purchaſe of her, and a covenant with her, which ſet forth the captive, ſervile, mean and abject ſtate of that people, ℣. 2, 3. which is explained of their being deprived for a long time of civil and eccleſiaſtic government, ℣. 4. and the chapter is concluded with a prophecy and promiſe of their converſion to Chriſt in the latter day, ℣. 5.

℣. 1. Then ſaid the Lord unto me, &c.] Or as the Targum, the Lord ſaid unto me again; for the word yet or again is to be joined to this, and not the following clauſe; and ſhews that this is a new viſion, prophecy, or parable, tho' reſpecting the ſame perſons and things: go, love a woman beloved of her friend, yet an adultereſs; not the prophet's wife, not Gomer, but ſome other feigned perſon; beloved either of her own huſband, as the Targum and Jarchi, notwithſtanding her unchaſtity and unfaithfulneſs to him; or of another man, as Aben Ezra, who had a very great reſpect for her, courted her, and perhaps had betrothed her, but had not yet conſummated the marriage; and tho' an harlot, loved her dearly, and could not get off his affections from her, but hankered after her; or of the prophet, as Kimchi, who paraphraſes it, "thou ſhalt love her, and be to her a friend;" to protect and defend her, as harlots uſed to have one in particular they called their friend, by whoſe name they were called, and was a cover to them. The ſenſe is, that the prophet was to go to the people of Iſrael, and deliver this parable to them, ſetting forth their ſtate and condition, and their behaviour towards God, and his great love to them, notwithſtanding all their baſeneſs and ingratitude; 'twas as if a woman that was either married or betrothed, or that either had a huſband or a ſuitor that ſo dearly loved her, that tho' ſhe was guilty of uncleanneſs, and continued in it, yet would not leave her; and which is thus expreſſed by the Targum, "go, deliver a prophecy againſt "the houſe of Iſrael, who are like a woman dear "to her huſband; and tho' ſhe commits fornica-"tion againſt him, yet he ſo loves her that he "will not put her away:" according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Iſrael; or ſuch is the love of the Lord to them; for tho' they were guilty of idolatry, intemperance, and other immoralities, yet ſtill he loved them, and formed deſigns of grace and goodneſs for them. And thus, tho' God does not love ſinners as ſuch; yet he loves them, tho' they are ſinners, and when and while they are ſuch; as appears by his choice of them, and covenant with them, by Chriſt's dying for them while ſinners, and by his quickening them when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins: who look to other gods; or tho' they look to other gods[c]; look to them and worſhip them, pray unto them, put their truſt in them, and expect good things from them: and love flagons of wine, or tubs of grapes[d]; or of wine made of them; or lumps of raiſins, cakes or junkets made of them and other things, as the Septuagint; and may reſpect either the drunkenneſs and intemperance of the ten tribes, ſee Iſ. xxviii. 1. they loved, as Kimchi ſays, the delights of the world, and not the law and commandments of God; or the feaſts that were made in the temples of their idols; they loved good eating and drinking, and that made them like idolatry the better for the ſake of thoſe things; ſee Exod. xxxii. 6. for the heathens uſed to eat and drink to exceſs at their ſacrifices: hence Diogenes[e] the philoſopher was very angry with thoſe who ſacrificed to the gods for their health, yet in their ſacrifices feaſted to the prejudice of their health.

℣. 2. So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of ſilver, &c.] Or fifteen ſhekels, which was about one pound ſeventeen ſhillings and ſix pence of our money, reckoning a ſhekel at two ſhillings and ſix pence; tho' ſome make it to be but two ſhillings and four pence; this was but half the price of a ſervant, Exod. xxi. 32. and alludes to the dowry which men uſed to give to women at their marriage; ſee 1 Sam. xviii. 25. The word here uſed has the ſignification of digging; hence the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, I dug her; and the abetters and defenders of it think it refers to the digging, or boring the ears of a ſervant that choſe to continue with his maſter, Exod. xxi. 6. but the word is uſed in the ſenſe of buying, Gen. l. 5. Deut. ii. 6. and ſo Jarchi ſays it has the ſenſe of merchandiſe or bargaining; and in the ſea-coaſts he obſerves, that they call מכירה a purchaſe, כירה. Perhaps the word is better rendred by the Septuagint and Arabic verſions, hired; and كرا cara in the Arabic language ſignifies to hire; ſo it is uſed in Acts xxviii. 30. So with the Turks, as Monſieur Thevenot[f] obſerves, a letter out of beaſts to hire is called moucre or moukir, which comes from the Arabic word kira, he ſays, which ſignifies to let or hire; and is here fitly uſed of an harlot. The Jews have many whims and fancies about theſe fifteen pieces of ſilver. The Targum and Peſikta in Jarchi, make them to reſpect the fifteenth day of Niſan, on which the Iſraelites were redeemed out of Egypt; according to Aben Ezra, they deſign the fifteen kings of Judah, from Rehoboam to the captivity, reckoning the ſons of Joſiah as one, being brethren; according to others, in Kimchi, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and the twelve tribes; and according to Abarbinel, the fifteen prophets that propheſied of the redemption: and for an homer of barley, and an half homer of barley; an homer held ten ephahs, and a lethec, or half homer, five ephahs, or ſo many buſhels, theſe making the number fifteen: again, according to Saadiah, they deſign Moſes, Aaron and Miriam, and the twelve tribes; and according to Aben Ezra, the number of the high-prieſts in the kingdom of Judah and Jeruſalem, a homer making thirty ſeahs, and an half homer fifteen, in all forty-five; but according to others, in Kimchi, theſe deſign the forty-five days between the coming of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, and their receiving the law: but leaving theſe fancies; as the number of ſhekels given for her was but a low price, and ſhows what an eſtimate was made of her; and barley being the coarſeſt of grain, and bread made of it, that of the worſt ſort, which the poorer people eat; may be expreſſive of the captive, ſervile, mean, and abject ſtate of the people of Iſrael, from the time of their captivity to their converſion to Chriſt, as is after more fully explained.

℣. 3. And I ſaid unto her, &c.] Having bought or hired her; this was the covenant or agreement he made with her, thou ſhalt abide for me many days; dwell alone in ſome ſolitary and ſeparate place, and have no converſation with any, eſpecially with men; live like a widow that has loſt her huſband, and ſo wait for a long time till the prophet ſhould think fit to take her to his houſe and bed: thou ſhalt not play the harlot, and thou ſhalt not be for another man; neither proſtitute herſelf, as ſhe had done to her lovers; nor marry another, but keep herſelf chaſte and ſingle: ſo will I alſo be for thee; wait for thee, and not take another wife; or will be thy huſband, after having made proper trial and full proof of thy conduct and behaviour: the Targum paraphraſes it thus, "Say, O prophet, to her, O congregation of "Iſrael, your ſins are the cauſe that you are carried captive many days; ye ſhall give yourſelves "to my worſhip and not err, nor ſerve idols, and "even I will have mercy on you." The whole is explained in the following words:

℣. 4. For the children of Iſrael ſhall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, &c.] Without any form of civil government, either regal or princely; without any civil magiſtrate, either ſuperior or ſubordinate, of their own; being ſubject to the kings and princes of other nations, as the ten tribes were from their captivity by Salmaneſer, to the coming of Chriſt, which was about ſeven hundred years; and from that time the tribes of Judah and Benjamin have had no kings and princes among them, for the ſpace of ſeventeen hundred years, which may very well be called many days. This anſwers to the harlot's abiding for the prophet many days, in the parable: and without a ſacrifice; the daily ſacrifice, which has ceaſed as long as before obſerved; and any other ſacrifice of ſlain beaſts, as the paſſover-lamb, &c. the Jews not thinking it lawful to offer ſacrifice in a ſtrange land, or any where but upon the altar in Jeruſalem; and to this day have no ſuch ſacrifices among them, tho' they have no notion of the abrogation of them, as the Chriſtians have; but ſo it is ordered in providence, that they ſhould be without them, being kept out of their own land, that this and other prophecies might be fulfilled: and without an image, or ſtatue; ſuch as were made for Baal, or as were the calves at Dan and Bethel; and tho' the people of Iſrael were very ſubject to idolatry, and ſet up images and ſtatues for worſhip before their captivities, yet ſince have nothing of image-worſhip among them, but ſtrictly obſerve the command. And without an ephod; a linen garment wore by the high-prieſts under the law, to which the breaſt-plate was faſtened, which had in it the Urim and Thummim; and which were wanting in the ſecond temple, and have been ever ſince; ſo that theſe people have been ſo long without this way and means of enquiry of God about future things, ſee Ezra ii. 63. this may be put for the whole prieſthood, now ceaſed in a proper ſenſe; and ſo the Septuagint render it, without a prieſthood; ſo that the Jews are without any form of government, civil or eccleſiaſtical; they have neither princely nor prieſtly power: and without teraphim; which ſome underſtand to be the ſame with the Urim and Thummim; and ſo the Septuagint render it, without manifeſtations; by which they are thought to mean the Urim, which according to them ſo ſignifies: but the word is generally thought to deſign ſome little images or idols, like the penates or houſhold gods of the Romans, which were conſulted about future things; and ſo the Jews commonly underſtand it, and ſome deſcribe them thus [s], "what are the teraphim? they ſlay the firſt-born "of a man, cut off his head, and pickle it with "ſalt and oil, and inſcribe on a plate of gold the "name of an unclean ſpirit, and put that under "his tongue; then they place it in a wall, and "light candles before it, and pray unto it, and "it talks with them." But now, according to this prophecy, the Jews in their captivity ſhould have no way and means of knowing future things, either in a lawful or unlawful manner; ſee Pſ. lxxiv. 9. How the whole of this prophecy is now fulfilled in them, hear what they themſelves ſay, particularly Kimchi; "theſe are the days of the "captivity in which we now are at this day; we "have no king nor prince out of Iſrael; for we "are in the power of the nations, and of their "kings and princes; and have no ſacrifice for "God, nor image for idols; no ephod for God, "that declares future things; and no teraphim for "idolatry, which ſhew things to come, according "to the mind of thoſe that believe in them;" and ſo Jarchi, "without a ſacrifice in the ſanctuary in "Judah; without an image of Baal in Samaria, "for the kings of Iſrael; without an ephod of "Urim and Thummim, that declares hidden things; "and Teraphim made for a time to ſpeak of, and "ſhew things, that are ſecret;" and to the ſame purpoſe Aben Ezra. The Targum is, "without a "king of the houſe of David, and without a ruler "over Iſrael; without ſacrifice for acceptance in "Jeruſalem; and without an high place in Samaria; and without an ephod, and him that ſhews;" i. e. what ſhall come to paſs. The Syriac verſion renders the laſt clauſe, without one that offers incenſe; and the Arabic verſion, without one that teaches.

℣. 5. Afterward ſhall the children of Iſrael return, &c.] The ten tribes of Iſrael, and alſo the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which are included in the name of Iſrael, as Aben Ezra interprets it; and theſe are joined together in parallel places; ſee Jer. xxx. 3, 9. and l. 4, 5. for tho' they did not go into captivity together, yet their return and converſion will be at the ſame time; and they are all ſpoken of under the name of Iſrael by the apoſtle Paul, when he foretels their converſion and ſalvation, Rom. xi. 26. The return of them, here propheſied of, does not barely mean their return to their own land, which will be at this time; ſee Jer. xxx. 3. Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22. Amos ix. 15. but their return to the Lord by repentance; when they ſhall repent of, and turn from their ſinful courſe of life, and particularly of their unbelief and rejection of the true Meſſiah, and embrace him; and of their traditions and falſe ways of worſhip which they ſhall diſcard; and of their own righteouſneſs they ſhall now renounce; and ſhall turn to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and believe in him for righteouſneſs, life and ſalvation: and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king; theſe may be conſidered either as two diſtinct perſons, Jehovah the Father, and the Meſſiah, as in Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. and xxxvii. 23, 24. and ſo the Targum, "and "ſeek the worſhip of the Lord their God, and "obey Meſſiah the ſon of David their king;" who will be both equally ſought after, and unto, by them; and which is a proof of the divinity of the Meſſiah, and of his equality with God his father; as well as points out the right way in which Jehovah is to be ſought, namely with Chriſt, or in him, in whom he is a God gracious and merciful; and to ſeek and know both the one and the other, is eternal life, John xvii. 3. or elſe all this is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah, rendering the words, and ſeek the Lord their God, even David their king; as alſo Jer. xxx. 9. Jud. 3. may be rendered; and ſo theſe are all epithets, titles, and characters of him: he is Jehovah, the everlaſting I AM; the true God, and eternal life; Immanuel, God with us; God in our nature, manifeſt in the fleſh; the ſon of David, and his antitype, often called David in ſcripture, Pſ. lxxxix. 3, 4. Ezek. xxxiv. 24 and xxxvii. 24. king of kings, king of the ſaints, of his church, and will be owned as ſuch by the Jews at the time of their converſion, though they have rejected him; but now they'll receive him, and be ſubject to him; they'll ſeek to him for ſalvation, for the pardon of their ſins, for righteouſneſs, for reſt, for food, for protection and ſafety, and to ſerve and obey him: and this ſeeking will not be out of curioſity, or in a carnal way, or for ſelfiſh ends; nor hypocritically, but with their whole hearts, and diligently, and in earneſt. Not only the Targum interprets this of Meſſiah the ſon of David, but Aben Ezra on the place ſays, this is the Meſſiah; and it is applied to him, and his times, by other Jewiſh writers, both antient and modern. In an antient book[h] of theirs, ſpeaking of David, it is ſaid, the holy bleſſed God is well pleaſed with him in this world, and in the world to come; in this world, as it is written, and I will defend this city for mine own ſake, and for my ſervant David's ſake, 2 Kings xx. 6. and in the world to come, as it is written, they ſhall ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, &c. David was king in this world, and David ſhall be king in the time to come. And in both Talmuds the words are applied to the Meſſiah; in one of them[i], after quoting this text, it is added, the Rabbins ſay this is the king Meſſiah; if of the living, David is his name; if of the dead, David is his name. And in the other[k], it is ſaid, when Jeruſalem is built, David comes; that is, the ſon of David, the Meſſiah; which is proved by this paſſage, afterwards the children of Iſrael ſhall return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king; that is, as the gloſs interprets it, after they ſhall return to the houſe of the ſanctuary, or the temple: ſo Abarbinel, both in his commentary upon this place, and elſewhere[l], as he interprets the one head in ch. i. 11. of Meſſiah ben Ephraim, whom he, with the reſt of his tribe, feign ſhall periſh in war; ſo he obſerves, that then Iſrael ſhall ſeek David their king, the rod out of the root of Jeſſe, whom the Lord ſhall chuſe, and cauſe to reign over them. And another of their later writers[m] interprets the paſſage of the Meſſiah, and produces it to prove againſt the Chriſtians, that he ſhould come in the end of days, or in the latter days; as it is plain and certain that our Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, came at the end of the Jewiſh world, in the laſt days of their civil and church-ſtate; ſee Heb. i. 1, 2. and ix. 26. and ſhall fear the Lord, and his goodneſs in the latter day; not man, but the Lord; not his wrath and vengeance, but his goodneſs; not with a ſervile, but with a godly, filial fear; a fear influenced by the bleſſings of goodneſs they ſhall now be partakers of, particularly pardoning grace and mercy, Pſ. cxxx. 3, 4. they ſhall fear the Lord who is good, and goodneſs itſelf, and Chriſt, in whom the goodneſs of God is diſplayed, and who is prevented with the bleſſings of goodneſs for his people: it may be rendred, they ſhall fear, or come fearing to the Lord, and his goodneſs[n], being ſenſible of their ſin, danger, and miſery; they ſhall flee to the Lord as to their city of refuge, and to the bleſſings of his goodneſs they ſee their need of; and this they ſhall do in haſte, as Aben Ezra interprets it, comparing it with ch. xi. 11. The Septuagint verſion is, they ſhall be amazed at the Lord, and his good things; the Syriac verſion, they ſhall know the Lord, and his goodneſs; the Arabic verſion, they ſhall confeſs the Lord, and his benefits; the Targum, "they ſhall "give themſelves to the ſervice of the Lord, and "his goodneſs ſhall be multiplied, which ſhall "come to them in the end of days;" or, as Aben Ezra, in the end of the prophecy of the prophets; in future time, in the times of the Meſſiah; which, as Kimchi obſerves, are always meant by the laſt days; and here it ſignifies the latter day of the laſt days, or of the goſpel-diſpenſation.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter contains a new ſermon or prophecy, delivered in proper and expreſs words, without types and figures, as before; in which the people of Iſrael are ſummoned to appear at the tribunal of God, to hear the charge brought againſt them, and the ſentence to be pronounced upon them, and which would be executed. They are charged with ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion; with want of truth and mercy to men, and with ignorance of God; with ſwearing, lying, murder, theft, and adultery, ℣. 1, 2. the puniſhment threatned, is the ſword, famine, and peſtilence; which ſhould affect the whole land, and all creatures in it, men, beaſts, fowls, and fiſhes, ℣. 3. then the prieſts and falſe prophets are threatened with falling into calamities along with the people, and with rejection from their office, and forgetfulneſs of their poſterity, and a taking away their glory from them, becauſe of their ſtriving with the true prophets; their rejection of knowledge; forgetfulneſs of the law of God; covetouſneſs, adultery, and drunkenneſs, ℣. 4—11. then the diſcourſe is turned to the people again, who are charged with divination and idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery; and therefore, by way of retaliation, their wives and daughters would be left to commit adultery and fornication, ℣. 12, 13, 14. and the chapter is concluded with advice to Iſrael, not to tempt Judah to ſin; or to Judah not to do the like, after the example of Iſrael, who were backſliders, idolaters, left of God and alone; guilty of bribery, and the like ſhameful things, and would be ſuddenly filled with ſhame, ℣. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19.

℣. 1. Hear the word of the Lord, ye children of Iſrael, &c.] The people of the ten tribes, as diſtinct from Judah, ℣. 15. the prophet having finiſhed his parables he was ordered to take up and deliver, and his explanations of them, and concluded with a gracious promiſe of the converſion of the Jews in the latter day; enters upon a new diſcourſe, which begins with reproof for various ſins; ſince what had been delivered in parables and types had had no effect upon them, they are called upon to hear what the Lord would ſay to them by the prophet, in more clear and expreſs terms; ſilence is ordered, and attention required to what follows: for the Lord hath a controverſy with the inhabitants of the land; the land of Iſrael; againſt him they had ſinned, before him they ſtood guilty; he had ſomething, yea many things againſt them; a charge is brought into open court, the indictment is read, an anſwer muſt be made: God is the antagoniſt, that moves and brings on the controverſy in a judicial way, and who can anſwer him for one of a thouſand? or ſtand before him, or in court with him, when he marks iniquity? the charge is as follows, becauſe there is no truth; none that do or ſpeak truth; that are true and faithful men, true to their word, and faithful to their truſt; no truth of grace in them, nor truth of doctrine held and received by them; truth failed from among them, and none were valiant for it; no truth or civil faith with reſpect to men, nor any truth of word or worſhip with reſpect to God: nor mercy; to poor and indigent creatures; no compaſſion ſhown them; no offices of humanity, or acts of beneficence exerciſed towards them; tho' theſe are more deſirable by the Lord than, and are preferred by him to, all ceremonial ſacrifices, ch. vi. 6. or no piety, religion, godlineſs, powerful godlineſs, which has the promiſe of this life, and that to come: nor knowledge of God in the land; in the land of Iſrael, where God was uſed to be known; where he had been worſhipped; where his word had been diſpenſed, and his prophets had been ſent, and his ſaints that knew him, and his mind, and will, formerly had dwelt; but now a company of atheiſts, at leaſt that lived as ſuch, and had no true ſpiritual ſaving knowledge of God, and communion with him; they had not true love to him, nor a godly reverence of him, which this implies; and that was the ſource of all the wickedneſs committed by them, afterwards expreſſed. The Targum is, "there are none that do truth, nor diſpenſe mercy, nor walk in the fear of the Lord, "in the land."

℣. 2. By ſwearing, and lying, &c.] Which ſome join together, and make but one ſin of it, falſe ſwearing, ſo Jarchi and Kimchi; but that ſwearing itſelf ſignifies, as the Targum interprets it; for it not only takes in all curſing and imprecations, profane oaths, and taking the name of God in vain, and ſwearing by the creatures, but may chiefly deſign perjury; which, tho' one kind of lying, may be diſtinguiſhed from it here; the latter intending lying in common, which the devil is the father of, mankind are incident unto, and which is abominable to God, whether in civil or in religious things: and killing, and ſtealing, and committing adultery; murders, thefts, and adulteries, were very common with them; ſins againſt the ſixth, eighth, and ſeventh commandments: they break out; thro' all the reſtraints of the laws of God and man, like an unruly horſe that breaks his bridle and runs away; or like wild beaſts, that break down the fences and incloſures about them, and break out, and get away; or like a torrent of water, that breaks down its dams and banks, and overflows the meads and plains; ſuch a flood and deluge of ſin abounded in the nation. Some render it, they thieve [°]; or act the part of thieves and robbers: and the Targum, "they beget ſons of "their neighbours wives;" and ſo Abarbinel interprets it, of breaking thro' the hedge of another man's wife; but theſe ſins are obſerved before: and blood toucheth blood; which ſome underſtand of ſins in general, ſo called, becauſe filthy and abominable; and of the addition and multiplication of them, there being as it were heaps of them, or rather a chain of them linked together. So the Targum, "and they add ſins to ſins." Others interpret it of impure mixtures, of inceſtuous luſts, or marriages contrary to the ties of blood, and laws of conſanguinity, Lev. xviii. 6. Ezek. xxii. 11. or rather it is to be underſtood of the great effuſion of blood, and frequency of murders; ſo that there was ſcarce any interval between them, but a continued ſeries of them. Some think reſpect is had to the frequent ſlaughter of their kings; Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam was ſlain by Shallum, when he had reigned but ſix months; and

and Shallum was ſlain by Menahem, when he had reigned but one month; and this Menahem was a murderer of many, ſmote many places, and ript up the women with child; Pekahiah his ſon was killed by Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, and he again by Hoſhea, 2 Kings xv. 8, 10, 13, 14, 16, 25, 30.

ỳ. 3. Therefore ſhall the land mourn, &c.] Becauſe of the calamities on it, the devaſtations made in it; nothing growing upon it through a violent drought; or the graſs and corn being trodden down, or eaten up, by a foreign army: and every one that dwelleth therein ſhall languiſh; that is, every man, an inhabitant thereof, ſhall become weak, languiſh away, and die thro' wounds received by the enemy; or for want of food, or being infected with the waſting and deſtroying peſtilence: with the beaſts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven; the one ſhall die in the field for want of graſs to eat, and the other ſhall drop to the earth thro' the infection of the air: yea, the fiſhes of the ſea alſo ſhall be taken away; or gathered [p]; to ſome other place, ſo as to diſappear; or they ſhall be conſumed and die, as Kimchi interprets it; and as all theſe creatures are for the good of men, for ſuſtenance, comfort, and delight, when they are taken away, it is by way of puniſhment for their ſins. So the Targum, "the fiſhes of the ſea ſhall be leſſened for their ſins."

ỳ. 4. Yet let no man ſtrive, nor reprove another, &c.] Or rather, let no man ſtrive, nor any man reprove us [q]; and are either the words of the people, forbidding the prophet, or any other man, to contend with them, or reprove them for their ſins, tho' guilty of ſo many, and their land in ſo much danger on that account: ſo the Targum, "but yet they ſay, let not the ſcribe teach, nor the prophet reprove:" or elſe they are the words of God to the prophet, reſtraining him from ſtriving with, and reproving ſuch a people, that were incorrigible, and deſpiſed all reproof; ſee Ezek. iii. 26. or of the prophet to other good men, to forbear any thing of this kind, ſince it was all to no purpoſe; it was but caſting pearls before ſwine; it was all labour loſt, and in vain: for thy people are as they that ſtrive with the prieſt; they are ſo far from receiving correction and reproof kindly from any good men, that they will riſe up againſt, and ſtrive with, the prieſts, to whom not to hearken was a capital crime, Deut. xvii. 12. Abarbinel interprets it, and ſome in Abendana, like the company of Korah, that contended with Aaron; ſuggeſting that this people were as impudent and wicked as they, and there was no dealing with them. So the Targum, "but thy people contend with their teachers;" and will ſubmit to no correction, and therefore it is in vain to give it them. Tho' ſome think the ſenſe is, that all ſorts of men were ſo corrupt, that there were none fit to be reprovers; the people were like the prieſts, and the prieſts like the people, ỳ. 9. ſo that when the prieſts reproved them, they contended with them, and ſaid, phyſician heal thyſelf; take the beam out of your own eye; look to yourſelves, and your own ſins, and don't reprove us.

ỳ. 5. Therefore ſhalt thou fall in the day, &c.] Either, O ye people, every one of you, being ſo refractory and incorrigible; or, O thou prieſt, being as bad as the people; for both, on account of their ſins, ſhould fall from their preſent proſperity and happineſs, into great evils and calamities; particularly into the hands of their enemies, and be carried captive into another land: and this ſhould be in the day, or to-day [r]; immediately, quickly, in a very ſhort time; or in the day-time, openly, publickly, in the ſight of all, of all the nations round about, who ſhall rejoice at it; or in the day of proſperity, while things go well, amidſt great plenty of all good things, and when ſuch a fall was leaſt expected: and the prophet alſo ſhall fall with thee in the night; or the falſe prophets that are with you, as the Targum, and ſo Jarchi; either with you, O people, that dwell with you, teach you, and cauſe you to err; or with thee, O prieſt, being of the ſame family, as the prophets, many of them, were prieſts; now theſe ſhould fall likewiſe into the ſame calamities, as it was but juſt they ſhould, being the occaſion of them: and this ſhould be in the night; in the night of adverſity and affliction, in the common calamity; or in the night of darkneſs, when they could not ſee at what they ſtumbled and fell, and ſo the more uncomfortable to them; or as the one falls in the day, the other falls in the night; as certainly as the one falls, ſo ſhall the other, and that very quickly, immediately, as the night follows the day: and I will deſtroy thy mother; either Samaria, the metropolis of the nation; or the whole body of the people, the congregation, as the Targum, and Kimchi, and Ben Melech, being as a mother with reſpect to individuals; and are threatened with deſtruction, becauſe the corruption was general among prophets, prieſts, and people, and therefore none could hope to eſcape.

ỳ. 6. My people are deſtroyed for lack of knowledge, &c.] This is not to be underſtood of thoſe who are the Lord's people by ſpecial grace; for they cannot be deſtroyed, at leaſt with everlaſting deſtruction; God's love to them, his choice of them, covenant with them, the redemption of them by Chriſt, and the grace of God in them, ſecure them from ſuch deſtruction: nor can they periſh thro' want of knowledge; for tho' they are by nature as ignorant as others, yet it is the determinate will of God to bring them to the knowledge of the truth, in order to ſalvation; and that ſame decree which fixes ſalvation as the end, ſecures the belief of the truth as the means; and the covenant of grace provides for their knowledge of ſpiritual things, as well as other ſpiritual bleſſings; in conſequence of which their minds are enlightened by the Spirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, and they have the knowledge of God and Chriſt given them, which is life eternal. But this is to be underſtood of the people of the ten tribes of Iſrael, who were nationally and nominally the people of God, were ſo by profeſſion; they called themſelves the people of God; and tho' they were idolaters, yet they profeſſed to worſhip God in their idols; and as yet God's Lo-ammi had not taken place upon them; he ſtill ſent his prophets among them, to reprove and reform them, and they were not as yet finally rejected by him, and caſt out of their land. Theſe may be ſaid to be deſtroyed, becauſe they were threatened with deſtruction, and it was near at hand, they were juſt upon the brink of it; and becauſe of the certainty of it, and this through lack of knowledge; either in the people, who were ignorant of God, his mind, and will, and worſhip, and without fear and reverence of him, which was the cauſe of all the abominations they ran into, for which they were threatened with ruin; or in the prieſts, whoſe buſineſs it was to teach and inſtruct the people; but inſtead of teaching them true doctrine, and the true manner of worſhip, taught them falſe doctrine, and led them into ſuperſtition and idolatry; and ſo they periſhed thro' the default of the prieſts in performing their office; which ſenſe is confirmed by what follows: becauſe thou haſt rejected knowledge, I will alſo reject thee, that thou ſhalt be no prieſt to me; the prieſts that Jeroboam made were of the loweſt of the people, ignorant and illiterate men, 1 Kings xii. 31. and xiii. 33. and they choſe to continue ſuch; they rejected with contempt and abhorrence, as the word ſignifies, the knowledge of God, and of all divine things; of the law of God, concerning what was to be done, or not to be done by the people; and of all ſtatutes and ordinances relating to divine worſhip, and the performance of the prieſtly office: and though there might be ſome of Aaron's line that continued in the land of Iſrael, and in their office; yet theſe affected the ſame ignorance, and therefore the Lord threatens them with a rejection from the prieſthood; or however, that they ſhould be no prieſts to him, or in his account, but ſhould be had in the utmoſt abhorrence and contempt. The word here uſed has a letter in it more than uſual [s], which may ſignify the utter rejection of them, and the great contempt they were had in by the Lord; this was to take place, and did, at the captivity by Salmaneſer. Seeing thou haſt forgotten the law of thy God; which he had given them, who was their God by profeſſion; and which they had forgot as if they never had read or learnt it; and ſo as not to obſerve and keep it themſelves, nor teach and inſtruct others in it: I will alſo forget thy children; have no regard to them, take no notice and care of them, as if they were never known by him; meaning either the people in general, their diſciples and ſpiritual children; or elſe their natural children, who ſhould be cut off, and not ſucceed them in the prieſthood. The words are very emphatical, I will forget them, even I [t]; which expreſſes the certainty of it more fully, as well as more clearly points at the juſtneſs of the retaliation.

℣. 7. As they were increaſed, ſo they ſinned againſt me, &c.] As the children of the prieſts increaſed and grew up, they ſinned againſt the Lord, imitating their parents; they were as many ſinners as they were perſons, not one to be excepted: this expreſſes their univerſal depravity and corruption. Some underſtand it of their increaſe as in number, ſo in riches, wealth, honour, dignity, and authority, and yet they ſinned more and more; which ſhews their ingratitude. So the Targum, "as I "have multiplied fruits unto them, &c." Therefore will I change their glory into ſhame; take away their prieſthood from them, ſo that they ſhall be no more prieſts, and as if they never had been; and reduce them to a ſtate of poverty, meanneſs, and diſgrace; and cauſe them to go into captivity with the meaneſt of the people; and be in no more honour, but ſubject to as much ſcorn and contempt as they.

℣. 8. They eat up the ſin of my people, &c.] That is, the prieſts did ſo, as the Targum, the prieſts of Jeroboam; they eat up the ſacrifices which the people brought for their ſins: and their fault was, either that they eat that which belonged to the true prieſts of the Lord, ſo Jarchi; or they did that, and had no concern to inſtruct the people in the right way; all that they regarded were good eating and drinking, and living voluptuouſly; and were altogether careleſs about inſtructing the people in the nature of ſacrifices, and in the way of their duty: or this may regard the Bacchanalian feaſts, as ſome think, which the people made in the temples of idols, and ſo ſinned; and of which the prieſts greatly partook, and encouraged them in, and ſo were partakers not only of their banquets, but of their ſins. They ſet their heart on their iniquity; either their offerings for their iniquity, or their iniquity itſelf: or, lift up their ſoul [u] to it; diligently looking after it, not caring how much they committed; ſince the more ſin-offerings would be brought, which would be to their advantage. Tho' ſome think the ſin of whoredom, frequently and impudently committed at theſe idol-feaſts, is meant, which the prieſts were much addicted to, and very greedy of; they committed uncleanneſs with greedineſs, Eph. iv. 19.

℣. 9. And there ſhall be like people like prieſt, &c.] No difference between them in their feſtivals, the one being as greedy of committing intemperance and uncleanneſs as the other, and in their common converſation of life; tho' the prieſts ought both to have given good inſtructions, and to have ſet good examples; but inſtead of that were equally guilty as the people, and ſo would be alike in their puniſhment, as it follows: and I will puniſh them for their ways; their evil ways, as the Targum; their wicked manner of life and converſation, both of the people and the prieſts; eſpecially the latter are meant: or, I will viſit upon him his ways [w]; upon every one of the prieſts, as well as the people; which viſit muſt be underſtood in a way of wrath and vengeance: and reward them their doings; reward them according to their doings, as their ſins deſerve, and as it is explained in the next verſe: or, I will return their doings to them [x]; bring them back again, when they ſeemed to be paſt and gone, and ſet them before them, and charge them with them, and puniſh for them.

℣. 10. For they ſhall eat, and not have enough, &c.] Namely, the prieſts; for of them the words are continued, who eat of the ſacrifices of the people, and of the feaſts made in honour of idols; and yet, either what they eat did not ſatisfy or nouriſh them, or elſe their appetites were ſtill greedy after more of the ſame kind: or this may reſpect a famine, either at the ſiege of Samaria, or in their captivity; when they who had lived ſo voluptuouſly ſhould have ſo little to eat, that it ſhould not ſatisfy them: or though, as others, they eat to the honour of their idols, expecting to be bleſſed with plenty by them, they ſhall not have it: they ſhall commit whoredom, and ſhall not increaſe; that is, their offſpring; they ſhall not beget children, ſo the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi; or the children they beget ſhall quickly die; yea, tho' they commit whoredom in the idols temple with that view, where the women proſtituted themſelves for that purpoſe: becauſe they have left off to take heed to the Lord; to his word, and worſhip, and ordinances, which they formerly had ſome regard unto, but now had relinquiſhed: or, the Lord they have forſaken, or left off to obſerve [y]; his ways, his word and worſhip. R. Saadiah connects this with the following words, they have forſaken the Lord to obſerve fornication and wine; but wrongly.

℣. 11. Whoredom and wine, and new wine, take away the heart.] Uncleanneſs and intemperance beſot men, deprive them of reaſon and judgment, and even of common ſenſe, make them downright fools, and ſo ſtupid as to do the following things; or they take away the heart from following the Lord, and taking heed to him, and lead to idolatry; or they occupy [z] the heart, and fill it up, and cauſe it to prefer ſenſual luſts and pleaſures to the fear and love of God: their ſtupidity brought on hereby is expoſed in the next verſe; though it ſeems chiefly to reſpect the prieſts, who erred in viſion thro' wine and ſtrong drink, and ſtumbled in judgment, Iſ. xxviii. 7.

℣. 12. My people aſk counſel at their ſtocks, &c.] Or at his wood [a], or ſtick; his wooden image, as the Targum; their wooden gods, their idols made of wood, mere ſtocks and blocks, without life or ſenſe, and much leſs reaſon and underſtanding, and ſtill leſs divinity. Reference is here had either to the matter of which an idol was made, being the trunk of a tree, or a block of wood; as the poet [b] introduces Priapus ſaying, olim truncus eram ficulnus, inutile lignum: or to ſticks of wood themſelves, without being put into any form or ſhape; for ſo it is reported [c], that the ancient idolaters uſed to receive for gods, with great veneration, trees or pieces of wood, having the bark taken off; particularly the Carians worſhipped for Diana a piece of wood, not hewed, ſquared, or planed [d]: tho' the firſt ſeems rather to be the ſenſe here; and either was extremely fooliſh. And yet ſuch was the ſtupidity of this people, whom God had formerly choſe for his people, and had diſtinguiſhed them by his favours from others, and they had profeſſed themſelves to be his people, and as yet were not utterly caſt off, as to forſake him and his divine oracles, and all methods of knowing his will; as to aſk counſel of ſuch wooden deities in matters of moment and difficulty, what ſhould be done by them, or concerning things to come. And their ſtaff declareth unto them; what methods are to be taken by them in the preſent caſe, or what ſhall come to paſs as they fanſy; that is, either their idol, made of a ſtaff or ſtick of wood, or a little image carried on a ſtaff; ſuch as probably were the teraphim they conſulted, inſtead of the Urim and Thummim; and imagined they declared to them what they ſhould do, or what would befal them. Kimchi's father interprets it of the falſe prophets on whom they depended, and whoſe declarations they received as oracles. Perhaps ſome reſpect is had to a ſort of divination uſed among the heathens by rods and ſtaves, called Rabdomancy, which the Jews had learnt of them; like that by arrows uſed by Nebuchadnezzar, Ezek. xxi. 21. This was performed by ſetting up a ſtick or ſtaff, and as that fell, ſo they judged and determined what was to be done. The manner, according to Theophylact, on the place, was this, "they ſet up two rods, and muttered ſome verſes "and enchantments; and then the rods falling "thro' the influence of dæmons, they conſidered "how they fell, whether forward or backward, to "the right or the left; and ſo gave anſwers to the "fooliſh people, uſing the fall of the rods for "ſigns." The Jews take this to be forbid by that negative precept, Deut. xviii. 10. there ſhall not be found among you any that uſeth divination. So Jarchi and Baal Hatturim on that text explain a diviner, by one that holds his ſtaff; and the former adds and ſays, ſhall I go, or ſhall I not go? as it is ſaid, my people aſk counſel at their ſtocks, &c. the manner of which they thus deſcribe [e], "when they "are about to go a journey, they enquire before "they ſet out, i. e. whether it will be proſperous "or no; and the diviner takes a branch of a tree, "and takes off the bark on one ſide, and leaves "it on the other, and then throws it out of his "hand; if, when it falls, the bark is uppermoſt, "he ſays this is a man; then he caſts it again, and "if the white is uppermoſt, this is a woman; to "a man, and after that a woman, this is a good "ſign, and he goes his journey, or does what he "deſires to do: but if the white appears firſt, and "after that the bark, then he ſays, to a woman, "and after that a man, and he forbears (that is, "to go his journey, or do what he deſired): but "if the bark is uppermoſt in both (throws), or "the white uppermoſt in both, to a man after a "man, and a woman after a woman, then his journey (as to the ſucceſs of it) is between both; "and ſo they ſay they do in the land of Slavonia." And from the Slavonians, Grotius ſays, the Germans took this way of divination, of which Tacitus [f] gives an account; and it ſeems by him, that the Chaldeans alſo had it, from whom the Jews might have it. This way of divination by the ſtaff, is a little differently given in Haſcuni [g]: the diviner meaſures his ſtaff with his finger, or with his hand; one time he ſays, I will go; another time, I will not go; but if it happens at the end of the ſtaff, I will not go, he goes not. For the ſpirit of whoredom hath cauſed them to err; a violent inclination and biaſs of mind to idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery, and a ſtrong affection for it, ſtirred up by an evil ſpirit, the devil; which ſo wrought upon them, and influenced them, as to cauſe them to wander from the true God, and his worſhip, as follows: and they have gone a whoring from under their God; or "erred from the worſhip of their "God," as the Targum; from the true God, who ſtood in the relation of an huſband to them; but led by a ſpirit of error, they departed from him, and committed ſpiritual adultery, that is, idolatry; which is explained and enlarged upon in the next verſe.

℣. 13. They ſacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, &c.] The higheſt part of them, neareſt to the heavens, where they built their altars to idols, and offered ſacrifice unto them, as we often read in ſcripture they did: and burn incenſe upon the hills; to their idols, which was one kind of ſacrifice put for all others: under oaks, and poplars, and elms; and and indeed under every green tree that grew upon them, where there were groves of them raiſed up for this purpoſe; ſee Jer. ii. 20. and iii. 6: becauſe the ſhadow thereof is good; the ſhadow of theſe trees, of each of them, was large, and preſerved them from the ſultry heat of the ſun, as well as hid them from the ſight of men; they could perform their idolatrous rites, as well as gratify their impure luſts, with more privacy and ſecrecy; and perhaps they thought the gods delighted in ſuch ſhady places, and that theſe were frequented by ſpirits, and the departed ſouls of men; in ſuch places the heathens, whom the Jews imitated, built their temples, and offered their ſacrifices [g]. The oak is a very ſpreading tree; its branches are large, and its ſhadow very great: hence the religious heathens in ancient times uſed to live under them, and worſhip them as gods, and dedicate temples to them, becauſe they furniſhed them with acorns for food, and a ſhelter from the rain, and other inclemencies of the heavens [h]; particularly the oak was conſecrated to Jupiter, as appears from what Virgil ſays [i]. The oak at Dodona is famous for its antiquity, where were a fountain and groves, and a temple dedicated to the ſame heathen deity; and from whence oracles were given forth [k]. The Druids here in Britain choſe to have their groves of oaks; nor did they perform any of their ſacred rites without the leaves of them: hence Pliny [l] ſays they had their name. The poplar mentioned, is the white poplar, as the word uſed ſignifies, and which affords a very hoſpitable ſhadow, as the poet [m] calls it; and this was a tree alſo with the heathens ſacred to their gods, particularly to Hercules [n]; becauſe it is ſaid he brought it firſt into Greece from the river Acheron, where it grew; and the wood of no other tree would the Eleans uſe, in preparing the ſacrifices for Jupiter Olympius [o]. The elm is alſo a very ſhady tree; hence Virgil [p] calls it, ulmus opaca, ingens; and under this tree ſacrifices uſed to be offered to idols, as is evident from Ezek. vi. 13. where the ſame word is uſed as here, tho' it is there rendered an oak; but that it is different from the oak, appears from theſe two words being read together, ſo that they cannot be names of one and the ſame tree, Iſ. vi. 13. where it is rendered the tey-tree, as diſtinct from the oak. Now theſe trees being very ſhady ones, and under which the Gentiles uſed to perform their religious rites, the Jews imitated them therein, which is here complained of. Therefore your daughters ſhall commit whoredoms, and your ſpouſes ſhall commit adultery; or their ſons wives [q]; either ſpiritually, that is, commit idolatry by the example of their parents and huſbands; or corporally, being left at home whilſt their parents and huſbands were worſhipping their idols upon the mountains, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi: and ſo this is to be conſidered as a puniſhment of the idolatry of their parents and huſbands; that as they commit ſpiritual adultery againſt God, or idolatry, their daughters and wives ſhall be given up to ſuch vile affections, or by force ſhall be made, to commit corporal adultery againſt them; or rather the ſenſe is, led by the example of their parents and huſbands, whom they ſee not only ſacrifice to idols in the above places, but commit uncleanneſs with harlots there, they will throw off all ſhame, and commit whoredom with men: for ſo the words may be rendered, hence your daughters, &c. ſo Abarbinel.

℣. 14. I will not puniſh your daughters when they commit whoredoms, nor your ſpouſes when they commit adultery, &c.] Either not puniſh them at all, ſo that they ſhall go on in ſin, and to a greater degree, to the diſgrace and reproach of their parents and huſbands; or not as yet, or not ſo ſeverely in them, becauſe it was by their example they were led into it. Jarchi's note is very impertinent, that God threatens them with the diſuſe of the bitter waters of jealouſy. The words are by ſome rendered interrogatively, ſhall I not puniſh your daughters, &c [r]. verily I will; and not them only, but their parents and huſbands too, who deſerve more ſevere corrections: for themſelves are ſeparated with whores, and ſacrifice with harlots; they ſeparated themſelves to Baal-Peor, that ſhameful idol, ch. ix. 10. the Priapus of the Gentiles, in whoſe idolatrous worſhip many obſcene rites were uſed; theſe men ſeparated themſelves from their wives, as well as from God and his worſhip, and from the company and converſation of men, and in private committed uncleanneſs with the women that attended, and with the ſhe-prieſts that officiated at the worſhip of idols; thoſe ſanctified ones, as the word may be rendered; and after that eat of things offered to idols with them. So the Targum, "they "aſſociated themſelves with whores, and eat and "drank with harlots." Some verſions underſtand the latter of catamites, or ſodomitical perſons, and of the wickedneſs practiſed by them in ſuch places. Therefore the people that doth not underſtand; the law, as the Targum; what is to be done, and what to be avoided; the difference between the true and falſe religion; have no knowledge of divine and ſpiritual things, at leaſt are very wavering and unſettled in their minds about religion, having thought little, and know leſs of the matter: ſhall fall; into idolatry and adultery, led by ſuch examples. So the Septuagint verſion, is implicated with a whore; or embraces a whore, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions; ſee Prov. vii. 22. and xxii. 14. or ſhall fall into calamities, ruin, and deſtruction; ſhall be daſhed, as the Targum; ſo the Arabic interpreter of Mark ix. 26. Luke ix. 42. uſes the word: tho' Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſay, that in the Arabic language it ſignifies to be perplexed and diſturbed, ſo as not to know what to do [s]. The firſt ſenſe ſeems to be beſt, of being ſcandalized, offended, and ſtumbling and falling into ſin; and which Abarbinel ſuggeſts, and it agrees with what follows concerning Judah.

℣. 15. Though thou Iſrael play the harlot, yet let not Judah offend, &c.] That is, tho' the Iſraelites, the people of the ten tribes, committed adultery, both corporal and ſpiritual, in their idolatrous worſhip, as before obſerved, to which they had been uſed ever ſince the times of Jeroboam the Firſt, and were hardened therein, and from which there were little hopes of reforming them; yet let not the men of Judah be guilty of the ſame crimes, who have as yet retained the pure worſhip of God among them; where the houſe of God is, and the prieſts of the Lord officiate, and ſacrifices are offered up to him according to his will, and all other parts of religious ſervice are performed: or the whole ſeems to be directed to Iſrael, as an exhortation to them, that tho' they had given into ſuch abominations, yet ſhould be careful not to offend Judah, or cauſe them to ſtumble and fall, and become guilty of the ſame ſins, and ſo be expoſed to the ſame puniſhment; and which would be an aggravation of Iſrael's ſin, to draw others into it with them: and come not ye unto Gilgal, neither go ye up to Bethaven; to worſhip idols in thoſe places; otherwiſe it might be lawful to go to them on any civil accounts: Gilgal was upon the borders of the ten tribes, between them and Judah, where Joſhua circumciſed the Iſraelites; kept the firſt paſſover in the land; and where the ark and tabernacle were for a time; and perhaps for theſe reaſons was choſen for a place of idolatrous worſhip: Bethaven is the ſame with Bethel, the name Jacob gave it, ſignifying the houſe of God; but when Jeroboam ſet up one of his calves here, the prophets, by way of contempt, called it Bethaven, the houſe of iniquity, or the houſe of an idol; though there was a place called Bethaven near Bethel, and Ai, as Kimchi obſerves, and as appears from Joſh. vii. 2. yet Bethel was ſometimes ſo called, as it ſeems to be here, becauſe of the idolatry in it; and ſo the Talmudiſts [u] ſay, the place called Bethel, is now called Bethaven. Now the queſtion is, whether Judah or Iſrael are here addreſſed; many interpreters carry it in the former ſenſe, as if the men of Judah were diſſuaded from going to theſe places for worſhip, when the temple, the proper place of worſhip, was in their own tribe; but the ſpeech ſeems rather to be directed to the Iſraelites, to leave off going to theſe places for worſhip; for being ſo near to Judah, they might be the means of enſnaring and drawing them into the ſame idolatrous practices: nor ſwear the Lord liveth; or ſwear by the living God, ſo long as they worſhipped idols; for it was not well pleaſing to God, to have his name uſed by idolaters, or joined with their idols; eſpecially as they meant their idol, when they ſwore by the Lord.

℣. 16. For Iſrael ſlideth back, as a backſliding heifer, &c.] A heifer or young cow Iſrael is compared unto; the rather, becauſe of the object of their idolatrous worſhip, the calves at Dan and Bethel: the Septuagint calls them heifers; which they are hereby put in mind of, and upbraided with; as alſo to expreſs their brutiſh ſtupidity in worſhipping ſuch idols, in which they obſtinately perſiſted; and ſo were like a refractory and untamed heifer, as ſome [w] render it, which will not be kept within bounds, either within doors or without, but breaks through, and paſſes over, all fences and incloſures; as they did, who tranſgreſſed the laws of God, and would not be reſtrained by them: or like an heifer unaccuſtomed to the yoke, which will not ſubmit to it, but wriggles its neck from under it; ſo the Iſraelites would not be ſubject to the yoke of the law of God, were ſons of Belial, children without a yoke; or like one tho' yoked, yet would not draw the plough, but ſlip back in the furrows, even tho' goaded; ſo they, tho' ſtimulated by the prophets, whoſe words were as goads and pricks to puſh them on, yet would not hearken to them, but pulled away the ſhoulder, and ſlid back from the ways and worſhip of God; hence called backſliding Iſrael, Jer. iii. 6. and this is either a reaſon why Judah ſhould not follow their example becauſe backſliders, or why they ſhould be puniſhed, as follows: now or therefore [x], the Lord will feed them as a lamb in a large place; not that they were like lambs for the good properties of them, innocence, harmleſſneſs, meekneſs, and patience; nor fed as the Lord feeds his lambs, and gathers them in his arms; but either as an heifer in ſheep-paſture, in ſhort commons, for that creature can't live where ſheep and lambs can; or rather as a lamb that is alone, ſeparate from the flock, not under the care of any ſhepherd; but expoſed to every beaſt of prey upon a large common, on a wild deſert and uncultivated place; afraid of every thing it hears and ſees; bleating after its dam, of whoſe ſuſtenance and nouriſhment it is deſtitute; and ſo is expreſſive of the ſtate and condition of Iſrael in captivity, in the large Aſſyrian empire; and diſperſed among the nations, where they were weak and helpleſs, deſtitute of all good things, and expoſed to all dangers, and to every enemy. Aben Ezra and Kimchi underſtand the words in a good ſenſe, that the Lord would have fed them as lambs in a large place, in an affluent manner, but that they rebelled and backſlided: and to this ſenſe the Targum ſeems to incline, which paraphraſes the whole verſe thus, "for as an ox which is fattened and kicks, ſo Iſrael rebels becauſe of the multitude of good things; now the Lord will lead them as a choice lamb in a valley," or plain: and ſo Noldius, though Iſrael is refractory, &c. notwithſtanding the Lord will feed them, &c. and indeed the phraſe is uſed in a good ſenſe in Iſ. xxx. 23. but there herds and flocks are ſpoken of, and not a ſingle lamb, as here; tho' Kimchi thinks the ſingular is put for the plural, lamb for lambs.

℣. 17. Ephraim is joined to idols, &c.] That is, the ten tribes of Iſrael, frequently ſo called after their ſeparation from the reſt, becauſe that Jeroboam, by whom the revolt was made, was of that tribe; and becauſe that tribe was the principal of them, and Samaria, the metropolis of their kingdom, was in it: and ſo the Targum here renders it, "the houſe of Iſrael are joined to idols;" to the calves at Dan and Bethel; to Baal, and other idols, they worſhipped: the phraſe expreſſes their ſtrong affection for them, their conſtant worſhip of them, and their obſtinate perſiſting therein, and the difficulty there was of bringing them off of it; they cleaved to their idols, were glued, and as it were wedded unto them, and there was no ſeparating of them; as men are, who are addicted to the luſts of the fleſh, to the mammon of unrighteouſneſs, or to their own ſelf-righteouſneſs, or to any idol they ſet up in their hearts as ſuch: hence it follows, let them alone; which are either the words of the Lord to the prophet, enjoining him to propheſy no more to them; to reprove them no more for their ſins, ſince it was all to no purpoſe, there was no reclaiming them, ſo Jarchi and Kimchi; and therefore let them alone, let them go on in their ſins, and in their errors, and in their ſuperſtition and idolatry; ſee Ezek. iii. 26. Matt. xv. 14. God was determined to let them alone himſelf, and therefore bids his prophet do ſo likewiſe: and ſad is the caſe with men when he lets them alone, and will not diſturb their conſciences any more by jogs and convictions, but gives them up to a ſeared conſcience, to hardneſs of heart, and to their own luſts; when he will not hedge up their way with thorns, or diſtreſs them with afflictive providences, and hinder them from going on in a courſe of ſin and wickedneſs; nor give them reſtraining grace, but ſuffer them to go on in the broad road, till they drop into hell; and ſays of them, let him that is filthy be filthy ſtill, Rev. xxii. 11. or elſe they are the words of the prophet to the men of Judah, to have nothing to do with Iſrael, ſince they were ſuch backſliders and idolaters; to have no communion and converſation with them, but let them be alone, and worſhip alone for them; ſince what fellowſhip has righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs, light with darkneſs, Chriſt with Belial, a believer with an infidel, or the temple of the living God with idols and idolaters? 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. Eph. v. 11. ſome take them to be the words of the prophet to God concerning Iſrael, approving of his righteous judgments, in threatening to feed them as a lamb in a large place; diſmiſs him thither, ſuffer and leave him to feed there. The Targum interprets it of their ſin, and not their puniſhment, "they have left their worſhip;" the ſervice of God.

℣. 18. Their drink is ſour, &c.] In their ſtomachs, having drank ſo much that they can't digeſt it; hence nauſeous eructations, with a filthy ſtench, are belched out; ſo it is a charge of drunkenneſs which Ephraim or the ten tribes were addicted to, and are accuſed of, Iſ. xxviii. 1. or, their drink is gone[y]; it has loſt its colour, brightneſs, ſmell and flavour, it is turned to vinegar; expreſſive of the general corruption and depravity of manners and religion among them; ſee Iſ. i. 22. or their drink departeth, or cauſeth to depart; or is refractory[z]; that is, it made them refractory, like a refractory heifer, as before; cauſed them to depart from God and his worſhip, and led them into all ſin and irreligion, particularly what follows: they have committed whoredom continually; corporal whoredom, which drunkenneſs leads to; and ſpiritual whoredom or idolatry, which they had committed, and continued in, ever ſince the days of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, and increaſed therein: her rulers with ſhame do love, give ye; or her ſhields[a]; thoſe that ſhould have been the protectors of Iſrael, compared before to an heifer, and preſerved them not only from their external enemies, but from all innovations in religion; and which we rightly enough render rulers, civil and eccleſiaſtic, kings, princes, and prieſts; ſee Pſ. xlvii. 9. theſe loved, give ye, which was a ſhame to them: the ſenſe is, either they loved gifts and bribes, and were continually ſaying, give, give, when cauſes were to be tried, and ſo perverted juſtice and judgment, which was very ſhameful; or they loved wine and ſtrong drink, and therefore required it to be continually given them, which was very ſcandalous in rulers more eſpecially, Prov. xxxi. 4. or they loved whoredom, both in a corporal and ſpiritual ſenſe, and deſired more harlots, and more idols, and added to their old ones, which was very abominable and ignominious. So the Targum, "they turned themſelves after fornication they loved, which brought ſhame unto them;" and theſe may be conſidered as ſo many reaſons why Judah ſhould have nothing to do with Iſrael.

℣. 19. The wind hath bound her up in her wings, &c.] That is, the wind in its wings hath bound up Ephraim, Iſrael or the ten tribes, compared to an heifer; meaning, that the wind of God's wrath and vengeance, or the enemy the Aſſyrian ſhould come like a whirlwind, and carry them ſwiftly, ſuddenly, and irreſiſtibly, out of their own land, into a foreign country: the paſt tenſe for the future, as is common in prophecy, becauſe of the certainty of it; ſo Jarchi and Joſeph Kimchi: but Aben Ezra, David Kimchi, Abarbinel, and Abendana, render it, ſhe, that is, Iſrael, hath bound up the wind in her wings[b]; meaning, that they had laboured in vain in their idolatrous worſhip; and it was all one as if a man ſhould attempt to gather the wind, and bind it up in the ſkirts of his garment, and when he opens them there is nothing to be found: and to this ſenſe is the Targum, "the works of their great men are not right, as it is impoſſible to bind the wind in a wing;" referring to the ſins of their rulers, as before: or rather the ſenſe is, the wind ſhall get into the looſe ſkirts of the garments of the Iſraelites, which ſhall be as a ſail to it, as Schmidt obſerves, and ſhall carry them into diſtant lands; which falls in with the firſt ſenſe of the words, and is beſt: and they ſhall be aſhamed becauſe of their ſacrifices; they of the ten tribes, the people of Iſrael; or their ſhields, their rulers, as Aben Ezra, ſhall be filled with ſhame, being diſappointed of the help they expected from their idols, to whom they offered ſacrifices; and the more, inaſmuch as they will find that theſe idolatrous ſacrifices are the cauſe of their ruin and deſtruction. The Targum is, "becauſe of the altars of their idols;" and ſo the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, becauſe of their altars.

CHAP. V.

THE deſign of this chapter is to expoſe the ſins of Iſrael and of Judah, and to declare the judgment of God upon them for them. Men of all ranks in Iſrael are ſummoned to attend to the charge brought againſt them, and the ſentence on them, ℣. 1. The charge exhibited is, that they were guilty of enſnaring men to the ſlaughter of idolatrous ſacrifices, tho' they had been ſufficiently rebuked and corrected, ℣. 1, 2. of both corporal and ſpiritual adultery, whereby they were defiled, and which was well known to the Lord, ℣. 3. of obſtinate perſiſtence in impenitence, owing to the efficacy of an unclean ſpirit in them, and their want of the knowledge of God, ℣. 4. of open pride, which ſtared them in the face, and for which they fell into calamities, and Judah with them, and ſhould not be able with all their ſacrifices to find favour with God, who had withdrawn himſelf from them, ℣. 5, 6. alſo of treacherous dealing with the Lord by their ſpiritual adultery, and begetting ſtrange children, ℣. 7. next their puniſhment is denounced, of which notice was to be given them by the ſound of the trumpet, as an alarm of war, or as calling for mourning, ℣. 8. ſince Ephraim would become deſolate, of which notification had been made among the tribes, ℣. 9. and wrath would be poured out in great abundance on the princes of Judah, who were very wicked men, ℣. 10. and Ephraim would be oppreſſed and broken by the judgment of God, who would be as a moth unto them, and alſo rottenneſs to Judah, becauſe they followed the commandments of men, ℣. 11, 12. and what was ſtill more provoking, when they were ſenſible of their calamities and diſtreſſes, they ſought not help from the Lord, but from men that could do them no good; and therefore he threatens to be as a devouring lion to them, ℣. 13, 14. and yet the chapter concludes with a promiſe of the converſion of theſe people, after the Lord had dealt with them in an angry manner, ℣. 15.

℣. 1. Hear ye this, O prieſts, &c.] Tho' idolatrous ones, who called themſelves prieſts, and were reckoned ſo by others, tho' not of the tribe of Levi, but ſuch as Jeroboam had made prieſts, or were their ſucceſſors; and there might be ſome of the family of Aaron and tribe of Levi, that might continue in the cities of Iſrael, and who gave in to the idolatrous worſhip of thoſe times. Some render it princes[c], and the word ſignifies both; and hearken ye houſe of Iſrael; not the kingdom of Judah, as Kimchi, for this is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from Iſrael in this chapter; nor the ſanhedrim, to which ſenſe Aben Ezra ſeems to incline; but the ten tribes, the whole kingdom of Iſrael, the common people in it: and give ye ear, O houſe of the king; of the king of Iſrael, who at this time is thought to be Menahem; the royal family, the princes of the blood, and all that belonged to the king's court; all of every office, prieſtly or kingly, of every rank, high and low, are called upon to hearken to what is about to be ſaid, both concerning their ſin and puniſhment: for judgment is toward you; either to know and do that which is juſt and right; it belonged to the prieſts to know and teach divine judgment, to inſtruct the people in the knowledge of the judgments, ſtatutes and laws of God; and it belonged to the king to execute human judgment, to do juſtice and judgment according to the laws of God, and of the realm; and it belonged to the people to attend to both: ſo the Targum, "does "it not belong to you to know judgments?" or rather this is to be underſtood of punitive juſtice and judgment, of the ſentence of condemnation, or denunciation of puniſhment for ſin: the reaſons of which follow, becauſe ye have been a ſnare on Mizpah, and a net ſpread upon Tabor; theſe were two high mountains in the land of Iſrael; the former was near Hermon and Lebanon, and the ſame with Gilead, Joſh. xi. 3. Judg. xi. 29. the latter was a mountain in Galilee, between Iſſachar and Zebulun, two leagues from Nazareth: it was, according to Joſeph ben Gorion[d], thirty furlongs high, had on the top of it a plain of twenty-three furlongs; the true Joſephus[e] ſays, twenty-ſix; ſee the note on Jer. xlvi. 18. the Jews[f] have a tradition, that Jeroboam ſet ſpies upon theſe mountains at the time of the ſolemn feaſts, to watch who went to them out of Iſrael, and to inform againſt them; but theſe could not command all the roads leading to Jeruſalem. It may be theſe mountains were much infeſted with hawkers and hunters, to which there may be an alluſion; and the ſenſe be, ye prieſts, people and king are like to thoſe that ſet ſnares and nets on thoſe hills, as they to enſnare and catch creatures, ſo ye to enſnare and draw men into idolatrous practices; or rather, ſince there is no note of compariſon, the meaning is, that they ſet up altars, and offered ſacrifices on theſe hills, and thereby enſnared not only thoſe of their own tribes, but drew and enticed many of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin to fall in with the ſame idolatrous practices.

℣. 2. And the revolters are profound to make ſlaughter, &c.] The revolters are the king, prieſts, and people, who had revolted from the true worſhip and ways of God unto idolatry. Theſe formed deep-laid ſchemes, and took crafty methods, like hawkers, who lay themſelves flat upon the ground to manage their ſnares and nets, and obſerve the creatures that fall into them, and take them, and whom they artfully decoy, to which the alluſion is; and that either to ſlay thoſe who would not comply with their falſe worſhip; or rather to multiply the ſacrifices of ſlain beaſts, and offer them with a great ſhow of devotion and religion, and thereby beguile, entice, and enſnare ſimple and unwary ſouls: ſo the Targum, "they "ſacrifice to idols abundantly;" and which, in the ſight of God, was mere ſlaughter and butchery: though I have been a rebuker of them all; king, prieſts and prophets; thoſe idolaters, revolters, or worſhippers of Baal, as Aben Ezra calls them: this is to be interpreted either of the prophet, who had freely, faithfully and openly reproved all orders of men for their departure from God, and his worſhip, and for their idolatrous practices; or of the Lord himſelf, which comes to the ſame ſenſe, who had rebuked them by his prophets, and corrected them by his judgments, but to no purpoſe; and therefore they could not plead ignorance, or excuſe themſelves upon that account.

℣. 3. I know Ephraim, and Iſrael is not hid from me, &c.] Though they may cover their deſigns from men, and ſeek deep to hide their counſel from the Lord, and make plauſible pretences for what they do, and put on an appearance of religion; yet God, who knows all men, and their hearts, cannot be deceived; he judges not according to outward appearance; all things are naked and open to him; nor can any hide themſelves from him, he knows their perſons, intentions and deſigns, as well as actions. Kimchi interprets Ephraim of Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat, who was of that tribe; others, of the tribe itſelf, and Iſrael of the other nine tribes; others take Ephraim for the ten tribes, and Iſrael for the two tribes: but it is beſt to underſtand Ephraim and Iſrael of the ſame, even of the ten tribes; whoſe works, as the Targum paraphraſes it, the Lord knew, particularly what follows: for now, O Ephraim, thou committeſt whoredom; both corporal and ſpiritual adultery, which frequently went together, as obſerved in the preceding chapter; the Lord knew their corporal whoredom, tho' ever ſo ſecretly committed, and their ſpiritual adultery or idolatry, under all the ſpecious pretences of worſhipping him; which was an abhorrence to him, as well as a pollution to them: and Iſrael is defiled; with the ſame ſins: for all ſin is of a defiling nature, and eſpecially thoſe mentioned, which defile body and ſoul, and render men loathſome and abominable in the ſight of God.

℣. 4. They will not frame their doings to turn unto their God, &c.] Either their evil doings; they will not leave, as the Targum and Jarchi[g]; their evil ways and worſhip, their adultery and idolatry; which was neceſſary to repentance and true converſion to God, whom they yet profeſſed to be their God, tho' they had ſo ſadly departed from him: or their good works; they did not chuſe to do them, which were leading ſteps to repentance and converſion, or fruits and evidences of it: they had no mind to repent of their ſins, and turn from them to the Lord; they had no thought, care or concern about theſe things, but obſtinately perſiſted in their ſins, and in their impenitence: their wills were wretchedly depraved and corrupted; their hearts hard, perverſe and obſtinate; they had no will to that which is good: for the ſpirit of whoredom is in the midſt of them; an unclean ſpirit, that prompts them to, and puſhes them on to commit corporal and ſpiritual whoredom; the biaſs and inclination of their minds were this way, which put them upon ſuch evil practices; the ſpirit of error, which cauſed them to err, as the Targum and Kimchi; the lying ſpirit in the falſe prophets, which encouraged them therein; and even ſatan himſelf, the ſpirit that works in the children of diſobedience: and they have not known the Lord; ignorance of God, his nature and perfections, his will, word and worſhip, was the cauſe of their idolatry, and other ſins; ſee ch. iv. 1. and this was wilful and affected ignorance; they knew not, nor would they underſtand; they rejected the knowledge of God, and the means of it; ſo the Targum, "and they ſought not inſtruction (or doctrine) from the Lord."

℣. 5. And the pride of Iſrael doth teſtify to his face, &c.] Or does or ſhall anſwer to his face[h]; contradicts him, convicts him, and fills him with ſhame; the pride of his heart, and of his countenance, and which appears in all his actions, and which is open and manifeſt to all, ſhall ſtare him in the face, and confound him; even all the ſinful actions done by him in a proud and haughty manner, in contempt of God, and of his laws, ſhall fly in his face, and fill him with dread and horror. The Targum is, "the glory of Iſrael ſhall be humbled, and they ſeeing it:" inſtead of greatneſs, glory and honour, they formerly had, they ſhall be in a mean, low condition, even in their own land, before they go into captivity; and which their eyes ſhall behold, as Kimchi explains the paraphraſe; and to this ſenſe Jarchi and Aben Ezra incline; and ſo read the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions. Some underſtand this of God himſelf, who formerly, at leaſt, was the pride, glory and excellency of Iſrael; of whom they were proud, and boaſted, and gloried in; even he ſhall be a ſwift witneſs againſt them: and therefore ſhall Iſrael and Ephraim fall in their iniquity; that is, the ten tribes ſhall fall by, and for their iniquities, ſuch as before mentioned, into ruin and miſery; it has reſpect to their final deſtruction and captivity by the Aſſyrians; they firſt fell into ſin, and then by it into ruin; ſee chap. xiv. 1. Judah alſo ſhall fall with them; the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, as they fell into idolatry, and were guilty of the ſame crimes, ſo ſhould be involved in the ſame or like puniſhment, tho' not at the ſame time; for the Babyloniſh captivity, in which Judah was carried captive, was many years after Iſrael was carried captive by the Aſſyrians: unleſs this is to be underſtood of the low, afflicted and diſtreſſed condition of Judah, in the times of Ahaz, by Tiglath Pileſer, king of Aſſyria, who had a little before carried captive part of Iſrael, and by others; and in which times Judah fell into idolatrous practices, and fell by them; ſee 2 Kings xv. 29. and xvi. 7, 8. 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 6, 16—20.

℣. 6. They ſhall go with their flocks, and with their herds, to ſeek the Lord, &c.] Not only the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, to whom Kimchi, Aben Ezra, and Abarbinel reſtrain the words; but the ten tribes of Iſrael alſo, who, when in diſtreſs, and ſeeing ruin coming upon them, ſhould ſeek the Lord; ſeek help from him againſt their enemies, and the pardon of their ſins; ſeek his face and favour, and to appeaſe his wrath, by bringing a multitude of ſacrifices out of their flocks and herds; ſuch a number of them, as if they brought all their flocks and herds with them; but not with true repentance for their ſins, nor with faith in the great ſacrifice, which legal ſacrifices, rightly performed, prefigured. Kimchi refers this to the times of Joſiah; but, as it reſpects Iſrael, as well as Judah, it ſeems to deſign ſome time a little before the ruin of them both: but they ſhall not find him; ſhall not find grace and mercy with him; he will not be favourable to them, will not afford them any help, but give them up to utter ruin and deſtruction; as he did Iſrael at the Aſſyrian captivity, and Judah at the Babyloniſh captivity: he hath withdrawn himſelf from them; the glory of the Lord departed from them; his Shekinah or divine majeſty, as the Targum, removed from them, becauſe of their idolatry, and other ſins; they ſought him not where and while he was to be found; and therefore when they ſought him, found him not, becauſe he had withdrawn his preſence from among them, being provoked by their iniquities.

[g] So R. Sol. Urbin. fol. 68. 2.

[h] ענה בפניו reſpondebit, Montanus, Zanchius, Tarnovius, Rivet, Schmidt; reſpondit, Cocceius.

℣. 7. They have dealt treacherouſly againſt the Lord, &c.] Which was the reaſon of his departure from them; as a woman deals treacherouſly with her huſband when ſhe is unfaithful to him, and commits adultery; ſo Iſrael and Judah dealt treacherouſly with the Lord, who ſtood in the relation of an huſband to them in covenant, by committing idolatry: for they have begotten ſtrange children; either of ſtrange women, the daughters of idolatrous heathens they married, ſo the Targum, Jarchi and Kimchi; or rather their natural children, tho' born of Iſraelitiſh or Jewiſh parents, both ſuch; yet being educated by them in an idolatrous way, and brought up in the commiſſion of the evils their parents were guilty of, are ſaid to be ſtrange children to the Lord, alienated from him and his worſhip, and as ſuch to be begotten: now ſhall a month devour them with their portions; the Jews underſtand this literally of the month Ab, the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, ſo Jarchi and R. Jeſhuah in Aben Ezra and Ben Melech; or the month Tammuz, in which the city was broke up, and the month Ab, in which it was deſtroyed, as Kimchi; or rather, which is alſo a ſenſe he mentions, it ſignifies a ſhort time, a very little while ere the deſtruction ſhould come; and compares it with Zech. xi. 8. tho', according to the Targum, it is to be underſtood of every month; and ſo denotes the continual deſolation that ſhould be made, until they were utterly deſtroyed; but others ſeem better to interpret it, of their new moon, or firſt day of the month, which they obſerved in a religious way, by offering ſacrifice, &c. and on which they depended; but this ſhould be ſo far from being of any ſervice to them, that it ſhould turn againſt them; and becauſe of the idolatry committed in them, the Lord would hate them, and deſtroy them on account of them; even their farms, and fields, and vineyards, which were their portions and inheritances; ſee Iſ. i. 13, 14. unleſs it is rather to be underſtood of the parts of the beaſts ſlain in ſacrifice on thoſe days to appeaſe the Lord; which would be ſo far from doing it, that they would provoke him yet more to wrath, and ſlay them.

℣. 8. Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah, &c.] As an alarm of war, to give notice that the enemy is at hand, juſt ready to invade the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah, and bring deſtruction upon them; according to the Targum, the words are directed to the prophets, "O ye prophets, lift up your voice like a trumpet;" to declare to the people of Judah their ſins and tranſgreſſions, and the puniſhment that would be inflicted on them for them; or it may be, this is a call of the people to faſting, mourning and lamentation, as in Joel ii. 1, 15. Gibeah is the ſame which is called Gibeah of Saul, 1 Sam. xi. 4. it being the birth place of that prince; and which Joſephus [i] calls Gabath-Saoule, and interprets it the hill of Saul, and ſays it was diſtant from Jeruſalem about thirty furlongs; tho' elſewhere [k] he repreſents it as but twenty furlongs; perhaps in the latter place there is a corruption in the number; for, according to Jerom, it was near Ramah, which was ſeven miles from Jeruſalem; he ſays, it is called alſo Gibeah of Benjamin, 1 Sam. xiii. 2. becauſe it was in that tribe, as was alſo Ramah; which, according to Euſebius [l], was ſix miles from Jeruſalem, theſe were near to each other; ſee Judg. xix. 13. ſo that the calamity threatened is what reſpects the two tribes: cry aloud at Bethaven; the ſame with Bethel, or a place near unto it, in the tribe of Benjamin, or on the borders of Ephraim; ſee ch. iv. 15. According to the above writer [m], it lay about twelve miles from Jeruſalem, in the way to Sichem; and being upon the borders both of Benjamin and Ephraim, it ſometimes belonged to Iſrael, and ſometimes to Judah; ſee 2 Chron. xiii. 19. and ſeeing, as Jerom obſerves, that Benjamin was at the back of it, for where the tribe of Benjamin ended, not far in the tribe of Ephraim, according to him, was this city built, it therefore very beautifully follows, after thee, O Benjamin; that is, either the enemy is after thee, O Benjamin, is juſt at hand, ready to fall upon thee, and deſtroy thee, as Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech; or rather, after the trumpet is blown in Gibeah and Ramah, cities which belonged to Benjamin, let it be blown, either in Bethaven, on the borders of Benjamin and Ephraim; or let it be blown in the tribe of Judah, ſo that all the twelve tribes may have notice, and prepare for what is coming upon them.

℣. 9. Ephraim ſhall be deſolate in the day of rebuke, &c.] The country of the ten tribes ſhall be laid deſolate, the inhabitants of them deſtroyed either by the ſword, or famine, or peſtilence, and the reſt carried captive, as they were by Salmaneſer; and this was the day of the Lord's rebuke and chaſtiſement of them: or of the reward of their ſins, as the Targum, when the Lord puniſhed them for them; and this is what the trumpet was to be blown for, in order to give notice of, or to call for mourning on account of it: among the tribes of Iſrael have I made known that which ſhall ſurely be; this deſolation was foretold by the prophets, and publiſhed in all the tribes of Iſrael, as what ſhould certainly come to paſs; and therefore they could not plead ignorance of it, or ſay they had no notice given them, or they would have repented of their ſins. The Targum is, "in the "tribes of Iſrael I have made known the law;" ſo Jarchi; which they tranſgreſſed, and therefore were made deſolate; or the word of truth, as Kimchi; the true and faithful Word, that if they walked in his ways, hearkened unto him, it would be well with them, but if not, he would deſtroy their land, and carry them captive.

℣. 10. The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound, &c.] Or landmark, which to do was contrary to the law, Deut. xix. 14. and has always been reckoned an hainous ſin among all nations, and is only done by ſuch who have no regard to right and wrong, and by them ſecretly; and ſuch were the kings, princes and nobles of Judah, they ſecretly committed the groſſeſt iniquities, yea were abandoned to their vile luſts, and could not be contented within any bounds. The Caph here uſed, is, according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, not a note of ſimilitude, but of certainty; and then the ſenſe is, that the princes of Judah did remove the bound; either in a literal ſenſe, by force and violence ſeized on the poſſeſſions and inheritances of their neighbours which lay next to theirs; or, in a figurative ſenſe, they broke thro' all bounds and limits, and tranſgreſſed the laws of God and men, being not to be reſtrained by either: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water; in great abundance, and with ſuch force and vehemence, as not to be ſtopped, but utterly deſtroy; like a flood of water, which overflows the banks, or breaks them down, and carries all before it; or like the flood of water that came upon the earth, and carried off the world of the ungodly; in like manner ſhould the wrath of God be poured down from heaven upon theſe princes without meaſure, exceeding all bounds, in juſt retaliation for their removing the bounds of their neighbours, or tranſgreſſing the laws of God: this was fulfilled either in the times of Ahaz, when Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Iſrael, as well as Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, greatly afflicted Judah, 2 Chron. xxviii. or at the time of the Babyloniſh captivity.

ỷ. 11. Ephraim is oppreſſed, and broken in judgment, &c.] Here the prophet again returns to the ten tribes, who were oppreſſed and broken, either by their own judgments, as the Targum; by the tyranny of their kings, and the injuſtice of their judges, who looked only for the mammon of unrighteouſneſs; or by the judgment of their enemies, the Aſſyrians, the taxes they laid upon them, the devaſtations they made among them, and by whom, at laſt, they were carried captive; or by the judgments of God upon them; for all the enemy did was by his permiſſion, and according to his will: becauſe he willingly walked after the commandment; not after the commandment of God, but after the commandment of men, as Aben Ezra; or after the commandment of the prophets of Baal, as Jarchi; or after the commandment of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, as Kimchi, by worſhipping the calves at Dan and Bethel he ſet up there.

ỷ. 12. Therefore will I be unto Ephraim as a moth, &c.] Which eats garments, penetrates into them, feeds on them privately, ſecretly, without any noiſe, and gradually and ſlowly conſumes them; but at laſt utterly, that they are of no uſe and profit: this may ſignify the various things which befel the ten tribes in the reigns of Zachariah, Shallum, Menachem, Pekahiah, and Pekah, which ſecretly and gradually weakened them; and the utter conſumption of them in the times of Hoſhea by Salmaneſer: and to the houſe of Judah as rottenneſs; as rottenneſs in the bones, Prov. xii. 4. which can never be got out or cured; or as a worm that eats into wood, as Jarchi interprets it; and gets into the very heart of a tree, and eats it out: thus the Lord threatens the houſe of Judah, or the two tribes, with a gradual, yet thorough ruin and deſtruction.

ỷ. 13. When Ephraim ſaw his ſickneſs, and Judah ſaw his wound, &c.] That their civil ſtate were in a ſickly condition, very languid, weak, feeble and tottering, juſt upon the brink of ruin; ſee Iſ. i. 6: then went Ephraim to the Aſſyrian, and ſent to king Jareb; that is, the ten tribes, or the king of them, went and met the Aſſyrian king; and Judah the two tribes, or the king of them, ſent embaſſadors to king Jareb; which ſenſe the order of the words, in connexion with the preceding clauſe, ſeems to require: by the Aſſyrian and king Jareb, we are to underſtand one and the ſame, as appears from the following words, yet could he not heal, &c. whereas, if they were different, it would have been expreſſed, yet could they not heal, &c. and the king of Aſſyria is meant, who alſo is called king Jareb, or rather king of Jareb[n]; ſee ch. x. 6. for this does not ſeem to be the name of the king of Aſſyria himſelf; tho' it may be, that Pul, or Tiglath-Pileſer, or Salmaneſer, might have more names than one, whoever is meant; but rather it is the name of ſome place in Aſſyria, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, from which the country may be here denominated; tho' the Targum takes it to be, not the proper name of a man or place, but an appellative, paraphraſing it, "and ſent to the king that ſhall come to avenge them;" and ſo other interpreters[o] underſtand it, rendring it, either the king that ſhould defend, as Tremellius; or the king the adverſary, or litigator, as Cocceius, Hillerus[p], and Guſſetius[q]; a court-adverſary, that litigates a point, contends with one, and is an advocate for another; or, as Hiller elſewhere[r] renders it, the king that lies in wait: this was fulfilled with reſpect to Ephraim, when Menachem king of Iſrael, or the ten tribes, often meant by Ephraim, went and met Pul king of Aſſyria, and gave him a thouſand talents to depart out of his land; perceiving his own weakneſs to withſtand him, and in order to ſtrengthen and confirm the kingdom in his hand, 2 Kings xv. 19. or when Hoſhea king of Iſrael gave preſents to Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, and became a ſervant to him, till he could get ſtronger, and ſhake off his yoke, 2 Kings xvii. 3. and with reſpect to Judah it had its accompliſhment, when Ahaz king of Judah ſent meſſengers to Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria to come and help him againſt the kings of Syria and Iſrael, finding he was not ſtrong enough to oppoſe them himſelf, 2 Kings xvi. 7. now all this was highly provoking to the Lord, that when both Iſrael and Judah found themſelves in a weak condition, and unable to reſiſt their enemies, inſtead of ſeeking to him for help, they applied to a foreign prince, and which proved unſucceſsful to them: yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound; but, on the contrary, afflicted them, hurt and deſtroyed them; there being a Meioſis in the words, which expreſſes leſs than is deſigned; for tho' with reſpect to Ephraim or Iſrael, Pul king of Aſſyria deſiſted from doing any damage to Iſrael, yet a ſucceſſor of his, Tiglath-Pileſer, came and took ſeveral places of Iſrael, and carried the inhabitants captive; and at laſt came Salmaneſer, and took Samaria the metropolis of the land, and carried all the ten tribes captive, 2 Kings xv. 29. and xvii. 4, 5, 6. and ſo with reſpect to Judah, Tiglath-Pileſer, whom Ahaz ſent unto for help, not only did not help and ſtrengthen him, but afflicted him, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. thus when ſenſible ſinners ſee their ſpiritual maladies, and feel the ſmart of their wounds, and make a wrong application for relief, to their tears, repentance and humiliation, and to works of righteouſneſs, or to any thing or perſon ſhort of Chriſt the great phyſician, they meet with no ſucceſs, find no relief until better directed.

[r] Onomaſt. Sacr. p. 430.

℣. 14. For I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as a young lion to the houſe of Judah, &c.] Being provoked by their above conduct and behaviour in ſeeking to others, and not to him for help, he threatens to puniſh them in a more public and ſevere manner; not be to them only as a moth and rottenneſs, but as a lion, and as a young lion, creatures ſtrong and fierce, that deſtroy and devour all that come into their hands, and from whom there is no deliverance: thus the Lord was both to Iſrael and Judah, by means of the Aſſyrians and Babylonians; the former are compared to a lion; that devoured Iſrael; and the latter to a young lion, that broke the bones of Judah; ſee Jer. l. 17. and laſt of all by means of the Romans, eſpecially to Judah: I, even I will tear and go away; as a lion tears its prey in pieces it ſeizes upon, and goes away, and leaves it torn, having ſatisfied itſelf, and is in no fear of being purſued, or any vengeance taken on him for what he has done; ſo the Lord would deſtroy Iſrael and Judah, and leave them in their ruinous ſtate, none being able to riſe up and avenge their cauſe. The I is doubled to expreſs the certainty of it: I will take away, and none ſhall reſcue him; as the lion, having glutted itſelf with its prey, takes the reſt away, and carries it to its den, where none dare come and take it from him; ſo the Lord ſignifies, that thoſe of Iſrael and Judah that periſhed not by the ſword of the enemy, or by famine or peſtilence, ſhould be carried captive, and none ſhould be able to return them till he pleaſes: under the wrath and diſpleaſure of God, and under this tearing, rending and afflictive diſpenſation they now are, and will continue till the time of their converſion.

℣. 15. I will go and return to my place, &c.] Leave the countries of Iſrael and of Judah, where he had uſed to grant his gracious and ſpiritual preſence unto his people, and watched over them, and cared for them, and beſtowed many favours on them, and go up to heaven the place of his more glorious preſence, as the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi interpret it; and there, as it were, ſhut himſelf up, particularly with reſpect to theſe people, as if he had no more thought of them, or concern for them: this is to be underſtood in a ſenſe becoming and agreeable to the omnipreſence of God: till they acknowledge their offence, and ſeek my face; till the Iſraelites acknowledge their idolatry, and the Jews their diſbelief and rejection of the Meſſiah, and all other ſins; till they ingenuouſly confeſs themſelves to be guilty, or know and acknowledge they have ſinned, as the Targum; and then humbly ſeek the face and favour of God, the remiſſion of their ſins from him, and acceptance with him: in their affliction they will ſeek me early; in the morning, betimes, early, and earneſtly; which affliction may be underſtood both of the Aſſyrian and Babyloniſh captivity; or rather of their preſent affliction toward the cloſe of it, when they ſhall be ſenſible of their ſins, and confeſs them, and look to him whom they have pierced, and mourn, and ſeek for pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation from him; and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, of whoſe converſion this is a prophecy.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter gives an account of ſome who were truly penitent, and ſtirred up one another to return to the Lord, encouraged by his power, grace and goodneſs, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and of others, who had only a form of religion, were very unſtable in it; regarded more the ceremonial law, and the external ſacrifices of it, than the moral law; either that part of it which reſpects the love of the neighbour, or that which concerns the knowledge of God; and dealt treacherouſly with the Lord, tranſgreſſing the covenant, ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7. particularly the city of Gilead is repreſented as full of the workers of iniquity, and is charged with bloodſhed, ℣. 8. yea even the prieſts were guilty of murder and lewdneſs, ℣. 9. and Iſrael or the ten tribes in general are accuſed of whoredom, both corporal and ſpiritual, with which they were defiled, ℣. 10. nor was Judah clear of theſe crimes, and therefore a reckoning-day is ſet for them, ℣. 11.

℣. 1. Come, and let us return unto the Lord, &c.] The Septuagint and Arabic verſions connect theſe words with the laſt clauſe of the preceding chapter, adding the word, ſaying; and ſo the Targum and Syriac verſions, they ſhall ſay; and very rightly as to the ſenſe; for they are the words of thoſe perſons under the afflicting hand of God, and being brought thereby to a ſenſe of their ſins, acknowledge them, and ſeek to the Lord for pardon, and encourage one another ſo to do; as Iſrael and Judah will in the latter day, when the veil ſhall be taken off their minds, the hardneſs of their heart removed, and they ſhall be converted, and turn to the Lord, and ſeek him together, weeping as they go; having both faith in Chriſt, and repentance towards God, by which they will return unto him; ſee 2 Cor. iii. 16. Jer. l. 4, 5. ſo all ſinners ſenſible of their departure from God by ſin, and of the evil and danger of it, repent of it, and loath it, confeſs and acknowledge it, depart from it, and forſake it; and return to the Lord, having ſome view and apprehenſion of him as a God, gracious and merciful in Chriſt; imploring the forgiveneſs of their ſins, with ſome degree of faith and confidence in him; and not having only love to their own ſouls, and the welfare of them, but alſo to the ſouls of others, exhort and encourage them to join with them in the ſame acts of faith, repentance and obedience. The Targum is, "let us return to the worſhip of the Lord;" from which they have ſadly departed. The arguments or reaſons follow, for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath ſmitten, and he will bind us up; the ſame hand that has torn will heal, and that has ſmitten will bind up, and none elſe can; and therefore there is a neceſſity of returning to him for healing and a cure, Deut. xxxii. 39. and his tearing is in order to heal, and his ſmiting in order to bind up; and as ſure as he has done the one, he'll do the other, and therefore there is great encouragement to apply to him; all which the Jews will be ſenſible of in the laſt day; and then the Lord, who is now tearing them in his wrath, and ſmiting them in his ſore diſpleaſure, both in their civil and church-ſtate, diſperſing them among the nations, and has been ſo doing for many hundred years, will bind up the breach of his people, and heal the ſtroke of their wound, Iſ. xxx. 26. and ſo the Lord deals with all his people, who are truly and really converted by him; he rends their heart, tears the caul of it; pricks and cuts them to the heart; ſmites them with the hammer of his word; wounds their conſciences with a ſenſe of ſin; lets in the law into them, which works wrath, whereby they become broken and contrite; and all this in order to their turning to him that ſmites them, and be healed, and in love to their ſouls, tho' for the preſent grievous to bear: and then the great phyſician heals them by his ſtripes and wounds; by the application of his blood; by means of his word, the goſpel of peace and pardon; by a look to him, and a touch of him by faith; by diſcoveries of his love, and particularly his pardoning grace and mercy, which as oil and wine he pours into the wounds made by ſin, and binds them up; and which he heals univerſally, both with reſpect to perſons and diſeaſes, for which he is applied unto, and infallibly, thoroughly, and perfectly, and all freely.

℣. 2. After two days will he revive us, in the third day he will raiſe us up, &c.] The Jews, in their preſent ſtate, are as dead men, both in a civil and ſpiritual ſenſe, and their converſion and reſtoration will be as life from the dead; they are like perſons buried, and when they are reſtored, they'll be raiſed out of their graves, both of ſin and miſery; ſee Rom. xi. 15. Ezek. xxxvii. 11, 12, 13, 14. the time of which is here fixed, after two days, and on the third; which Jarchi interprets of the two temples that have been deſtroyed, and of the third temple to be built, which the Jews expect, but in vain, and when they hope for good times: Kimchi explains it of their three captivities, in Egypt, Babylon, and the preſent one, and ſo Ben Melech, from which they hope to be raiſed, and live comfortably; which ſenſe is much better than the former: and with it may be compared Vitringa's [a] notion of the text, that the firſt day was between Iſrael's coming out of Egypt and the Babyloniſh captivity; the ſecond day between that and the times of Antiochus, which was the third night; then the third day followed, which is the times of the Meſſiah: but the Targum comes nearer the truth, which paraphraſes the words thus, "he will quicken us in the days of conſolation "which are to come, and in the day of the reſur-"rection of the dead he will raiſe us up;" where by days of conſolation are meant the days of the Meſſiah, with which the Jews generally connect the reſurrection of the dead; and if we underſtand them of the laſt days of the Meſſiah, it is not much amiſs; for the words reſpect the quickening and raiſing up of the Jews in the latter day, the times of Chriſt's ſpiritual coming and reign: and theſe two and three days may be expreſſive of a long and ſhort time, as interpreters differently explain them; of a long time, as the third day is a long time for a man to lie dead, when there can be little or no hope of his reviving, Luke xxiv. 31. or of a ſhort time, for which two or three days is a common phraſe; and both true in this caſe: it is a long time Iſrael and Judah have been in captivity, and there may ſeem little hope of their reſtoration; but it will be a ſhort time with the Lord, with whom a thouſand years are as one day, and one day as a thouſand years: and this I take to be the ſenſe of the words, that after the ſecond millennium, or the Lord's two days, and at the beginning of the third, will be the time of their converſion and reſtoration, reckoning from the laſt deſtruction of them by the Romans; for not till then were Iſrael and Judah wholly in a ſtate of death: many of Iſrael were mixed among thoſe of Judah before the Babyloniſh captivity, and many returned with them from it; but when deſtroyed by the Romans, there was an end of their civil and church-ſtate; which will both be revived on a better foundation at this period of time: but if this conjecture is not agreeable, for I only propoſe it as ſuch; the ſenſe may be taken thus, that in a ſhort time after the repentance of Iſrael, and their converſion to the Lord, they will be brought into a very comfortable and happy ſtate and condition, both with reſpect to things temporal and ſpiritual. And we ſhall live in his ſight; comfortably, in a civil ſenſe, in their own land, and in the poſſeſſion of all their privileges and liberties; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, by faith on Jeſus Chriſt, whom they ſhall now embrace, and in the enjoyment of the goſpel and goſpel-ordinances; and the prophet repreſents the penitents and faithful among them as believing and hoping for theſe things. This may be applied to the caſe of ſenſible ſinners, who as they are in their natural ſtate dead in ſin, and dead in law, ſo they ſee themſelves to be ſuch when awakened; and yet entertain a ſecret hope, that ſooner or later they ſhall be revived and refreſhed, and raiſed up to a more comfortable ſtate, and live in the preſence of God, and the enjoyment of his favour. The ancient fathers generally underſtood theſe words of Chriſt, who was buried on the ſixth day, lay in the grave the whole ſeventh day, and after theſe two days, on the third, roſe again from the dead; and to this paſſage the apoſtle is thought to have reſpect, 1 Cor. xv. 3. and alſo of the reſurrection of his people in and with him, and by virtue of his: and true it is, that Chriſt roſe from the dead on the third day, and all his redeemed ones were quickened and raiſed up together with him as their head and repreſentative, Eph. ii. 5, 6. and it is in virtue of his being quickened, that they are regenerated and quickened, and made alive, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; he is the author of their ſpiritual life, and their life itſelf; ſee 1 Pet. i. 3. and not only in virtue of his reſurrection, is their ſpiritual reſurrection from the death of ſin to a life of grace, but even their corporal reſurrection at the laſt day; and as in conſequence of their ſpiritual reſurrection, they live in the ſight of God a life of grace and holineſs by faith in Chriſt, and in a comfortable view and enjoyment of the divine favour; ſo they ſhall live eternally in the preſence of God, where are fulneſs of joy, and pleaſures for evermore: but the firſt ſenſe is beſt, and moſt agreeable to the context and ſcope of it.

℣. 3. Then ſhall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord, &c.] The word if is not in the original text, and the paſſage is not conditional, but abſolute; for as perſons, when converted, know Chriſt, and not before, when he is revealed to them, and in them, as the only Saviour and Redeemer, ſo they continue and increaſe in the knowledge of him; they earneſtly deſire to know more of him, and eagerly purſue thoſe means and methods by which they attain to a greater degree of it: for ſo the words are, and we ſhall know, we ſhall follow on to know the Lord[t]; that grace, which has given the firſt meaſure of ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of him, will influence and engage them to ſeek after more. The Jews, when they are quickened, and turn to the Lord, will know him, own and acknowledge him, as the Meſſiah, the only Redeemer and Saviour; and will be ſo delighted with the knowledge of him, that they will be deſirous of, and ſeek after, a larger meaſure of it; and indeed they ſhall all know him, from the leaſt to the greateſt, when the covenant of grace ſhall be renewed with them, manifeſted and applied to them. The words may be conſidered as a continuation of their exhortation to one another from ℣. 1. thus, and let us acknowledge, let us follow on to know him[u]; let us own him as the true Meſſiah, whom we and our fathers have rejected; and let us make uſe of all means to gain more knowledge of him: or let us follow after him, to ſerve and obey him, which is the practical knowledge of him; let us imitate him, and follow him the Lamb of God, embrace his goſpel, and ſubmit to his ordinances. So Kimchi interprets it, to know him; that is, to ſerve him; firſt know him, then ſerve him. His going forth is prepared as the morning; that is, the Lord's going forth, who is known, and followed after to be more known; and is to be underſtood, not of his going forth in the council and covenant of grace from everlaſting; nor of his incarnation in time, or of his reſurrection from the dead; but of his ſpiritual coming in the latter day, with the brightneſs of which he will deſtroy antichriſt; or of his going forth in the miniſtration of the goſpel to the converſion of Jews and Gentiles, the light of which diſpenſation will be very great; it will be like a morning after a long night of darkneſs with the Jewiſh and Pagan nations; and be as grateful and delightful, beautiful and chearful, as the morning-light; and move as ſwiftly and irreſiſtibly as that, and be alike growing and increaſing: and ſo the words are a reaſon of the increaſing knowledge of the Lord's people in thoſe times, becauſe he ſhall go forth in the miniſtration of the word like the morning-light, which increaſes more and more till noon; and of the evidence and clearneſs of it, it being like a morning without clouds; with which agrees the note of Joſeph Kimchi, "we ſhall know him, and it will be as clear "to us as the light of the morning without "clouds:" and alſo of the firmneſs and certainty of it; for both the increaſing knowledge of the ſaints, and the going forth of Chriſt in a ſpiritual manner, is firm and ſure (which may be the ſenſe of the word[w]) as the morning; for as ſure as the night cometh, ſo alſo the morning. And he ſhall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth; in the land of Iſrael they had uſually two rains in a year; the one in autumn, or quickly after the ſeed was ſown; the other in the ſpring, when the corn was ripe, and harveſt near, and which was very reviving and refreſhing to the earth, and the fruits of it; and ſuch will be the coming of Chriſt unto his people, in the miniſtration of the goſpel in the latter day, which will drop as the rain, and diſtil as the dew, as the ſmall rain on the tender herb, and as ſhowers upon the graſs; and in the diſcoveries of his favour and love to them, and in the diſtribution of the bleſſings of his grace among them. Much the like phraſes are uſed of the ſpiritual coming of Chriſt in the latter day, Pſ. lxxii. 6. The Targum is, "and "we ſhall learn, and we ſhall follow on, to know "the fear of the Lord, as the morning-light, which "darts in its going out; and bleſſings will come "to us as a prevailing rain, and as the latter rain "which waters the earth."

[a] Comment. in Iſ. viii. 20.

℣. 4. O Ephraim, what ſhall I do unto thee? O Judah, what ſhall I do unto thee? &c.] Or, for thee[x]? The Lord having obſerved the effect and conſequence of his going and returning to his place, of his leaving his people for a long time under afflictions and in diſtreſs; namely, their thorough converſion to him in the latter day, and the bleſſings attending it; returns to the then preſent times again, and to the ſtate and condition in which Ephraim and Judah, the ten and two tribes, were, and ſpeaks as one at a loſs, and under difficulties, to know what to do with them and for them; how as it were to give them up to ruin and deſtruction; and yet having tried all ways with them, and in vain, aſks what further was to be done, or could be done, to bring them to a ſenſe of their ſins, to reform them, and cauſe them to return to him. For your goodneſs is as a morning-cloud, and as the early dew it goeth way; meaning not the goodneſs of God beſtowed upon them, and the mercy he ſhowed to them; but the goodneſs that appeared in them, and all the good things done by them, their repentance, reformation, holineſs, and righteouſneſs; theſe, which were only in ſhew, did not laſt long, came to nothing, and diſappeared; like a light cloud in the morning, which vaniſhes away when the ſun riſes; or like the dew that falls in the night, which is quickly dried up and gone, after the ſun has been up a ſmall time. Thus it was with Ephraim, or the ten tribes, in the time of Jehu; there was a ſhew of zeal for religion, and a reformation from idolatry, but it did not go on, nor laſt long; and with the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin in the times of Hezekiah and Joſiah, who did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord; but then the Jews, in the times of their ſucceſſors, returned to their former evil ways. And ſo the beſt works, holineſs and righteouſneſs of men, can no more ſtand before the juſtice of God, and the ſtrict examination of it, than a thin light morning-cloud, or the ſmall drops of dew before the light, force, and heat of the ſun; nor do formal and carnal profeſſors continue in theſe things; they may run well for a while, and then drop their profeſſion and religion, and turn from the holy commandment. And this being the caſe, what can they expect from the Lord?

℣. 5. Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets, I have ſlain them by the words of my mouth, &c.] Sharply reproved them for their ſins by the prophets, who were as lapidaries that cut ſtone, or as hewers of timber that cut off the knotty parts; ſo theſe by preaching the terrors of the law, which is a killing letter, and by delivering out the threatnings of the Lord, and denouncing his judgments upon them for their ſins, cut them to the heart, and killed them; for their foretelling and propheſying of their being ſlain, ruined, and deſtroyed, was a ſlaying of them; ſee Jer. i. 10. The Targum gum is, “ becauſe I admoniſhed them by the meſ“ ſage of my prophets, and they returned not, I “ will bring upon them thoſe that ſlay, becauſe “ they have tranſgreſſed the word of my will.” But the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and ſo Aben Ezra and Joſeph Kimchi, underſtand theſe words, not of hewing, and cutting, and ſlaying of the people by the prophets, but of the cutting and ſlaying the prophets themſelves, and read the words, therefore have I cut off the prophets, and ſlain them, &c. either the falſe prophets, ſome of them that cauſed the people to err, that they might not repent, as Aben Ezra; as the prophets of Baal in the times of Elijah, and the ſcribes and phariſees in Chriſt's time, who were in the way of the peoples repentance, reformation, and reception of Chriſt; theſe he cut off, and their doctrine, and condemned by his own and the doctrine of his apoſtles, the words of the Lord's mouth; ſee Zech. xi. 8. and this he did for the good of his people, in anſwer to the queſtion put by himſelf in the preceding verſe, ſo Schmidt interprets it: or elſe the true prophets of God, who were expoſed to death, to be cut off and ſlain, for the meſſages they were ſent with: or thoſe meſſages were ſuch as were killing to them, to carry them, and deliver them; and they were ſo conſtantly employed, early and late, in ſuch ſervice, that for the work of the Lord they were often nigh unto death: but our verſion, and the ſenſe agreeable to it, ſeem beſt. And thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth; that is, their judgments, the people's, a ſudden change of perſon: meaning either the ſtatutes and judgments preſcribed them by the Lord, and to be obſerved by them; which were clear and plain as the light at noon-day, and therefore could not plead any excuſe of ignorance of them, that they did not obſerve them: or the judgments of God upon them for their ſins; which were open and manifeſt to all, and increaſing like the light, more and more, and no more to be reſiſted than that; and the righteouſneſs of God in them was very conſpicuous, his judgments were manifeſt, and the juſtice of them. Some underſtand this of the judgments or righteouſneſſes of the ſaints both imputed and inherent, Rom. v. 16. Luke i. 6. which appear light and clear, the darkneſs of phariſaiſm being removed by Chriſt. The Targum is, “ my judgment goes forth as the light.”

℣. 6. For I deſired mercy, and not ſacrifice, &c.] That is, the one rather than the other, as the next clauſe explains it. Sacrifices were of early uſe, even before the law of Moſes; they were of divine appointment, and were approved and accepted of by the Lord; they were types of Chriſt, and led to him, and were continued unto his death; but in compariſon of moral duties, which reſpect love to God, and to our neighbour, the Lord did not will them, deſire them, and delight in them; or he had more regard for the former than the latter; ſee 1 Sam. xv. 22. Mark xii. 33, 34. nor did he will or accept at all of the ſacrifices offered to the calves at Dan and Bethel; nor others, when they were not ſuch as the law required, or were not offered up in the faith of Chriſt, attended with repentance for ſin, and in ſincerity, and were brought as real expiatory ſacrifices for ſin, and eſpecially as now abrogated by the ſacrifice of Chriſt. And as theſe words are twice quoted by our Lord, at one time to juſtify his mercy, pity, and compaſſion, to the ſouls of poor ſinners, by converſing with them, Matt. ix. 13. and at another time to juſtify the diſciples in an act of mercy to their bodies when hungry, by plucking ears of corn on the ſabbath-day, Matt. xii. 7. mercy may here reſpect both acts of mercy ſhewn by the Lord, and acts of mercy done by men; both which the Lord wills, deſires, and delights in: he takes pleaſure in ſhewing mercy himſelf, as appears by his free and open declarations of it; by the throne of grace and mercy he has ſet up; by the encouragement he gives to ſouls to hope in his mercy; by the objects of it, the chief of ſinners; by the various ways he has taken to diſplay it, in election, in the covenant of grace, in the miſſion of Chriſt, in the pardon of ſin by him, and in regeneration; and by his oppoſing it to every thing elſe, in the affair of ſalvation. And he likewiſe has a very great regard to mercy as exerciſed by men; as this is one of the weightier matters of the law, and may be put for the whole of it, or however the ſecond table of it, which is love to our neighbours, and takes in all kind offices done to them; and eſpecially deſigns acts of liberality to neceſſitous perſons; which are ſacrifices God is well pleaſed with, even more than with the ceremonious ones; theſe being ſuch in which men reſemble him the merciful God, who is kind to the unthankful, and to the evil. And the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings; which were reckoned the greateſt and moſt excellent ſacrifices, the whole being the Lord's; but knowledge of God is preferred to them; by which is meant, not the knowledge of God by the light of nature, which men might have, and not glorify him; nor by the law of Moſes, as a lawgiver, judge, and conſuming fire; but a knowledge of him in Chriſt, as the God and Father of Chriſt, as the God of all grace, gracious and merciful in him; as a covenant-God and Father in him, which is thro' the goſpel by the Spirit, and is eternal life, John xvii. 3. this includes in it faith and hope in God, love to him, fear of him and his goodneſs, and the whole worſhip of him both internal and external. Theſe words ſeem deſigned to expoſe and remove the falſe ground of truſt and confidence in ſacrifices, the people of Iſrael were prone unto; as we find they were in the times of Iſaiah, who was cotemporary with Hoſea; ſee Iſ. i. 12—15. The Targum interprets them of thoſe that exerciſe mercy, and do the law of the Lord.

℣. 7. But they like men have tranſgreſſed the covenant, &c.] The falſe prophets, as Aben Ezra, whom he threatened to cut off and ſlay, ℣. 5. or rather Ephraim and Judah, whoſe goodneſs was ſo fickle and unſtable; and who inſtead of doing acts of mercy, and ſeeking after the true knowledge of God and his worſhip, which are preferable to all ſacrifices, they tranſgreſſed the law of God, which they promiſed at mount Sinai to obey; the precepts of the moral law, even of both tables, which concern both God and man; and alſo the ceremonial law, by appointing prieſts to ſacrifice, who were not of the tribe of Levi, as did Ephraim or the ten tribes under Jeroboam; and by offering ſacrifices to their calves, and by not obſerving the ſolemn feaſts; and the precepts relating to both theſe laws, conſtitute the covenant made with the children of Iſrael at Sinai, Exod. xxiv. 3—8. which they tranſgreſſed, either like Adam [r] the firſt man, as Jarchi; who tranſgreſſed the covenant of works in paradiſe God made with him, and all mankind in him: or like the men of old, the former generations, as the Targum; meaning either the old inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites; or the men of the old world at the time of the flood, who were a very wicked and abandoned generation of men; or like men in common, depraved and degenerated, fickle and inconſtant, vain and deceitful, and not at all to be depended upon; eſpecially like the lower ſort of men, the common people, who have no regard to their word, covenant, and agreement; or particularly like ſuch men that are given to perjury, and make no conſcience of oaths and covenants ever ſo ſolemnly made: or as others read the words, but they have tranſgreſſed the covenant like man's [z]; making no more account of it, than if it was a man's covenant. There have they dealt treacherouſly againſt me; in the covenant they entered into, by breaking it, not performing their promiſes; and even in the very ſacrifices they offered, and were ſo fond of, and put their confidence in; either by offering ſuch ſacrifices as were not legal, or by offering them to idols, under a pretence of offering them to God, which was dealing treacherouſly againſt him; and in all other acts of religion, in which they would be thought to have regard to the covenant of God, his laws and precepts, and to be very ſerious and devout, yet acted the hypocritical part, were falſe and deceitful, and devoid of all ſincerity: or there, in the promiſed land, where the Lord had ſo largely beſtowed his favours on them; ſo Jarchi, Kimchi, and Abarbinel, agreeable to the Targum, which paraphraſes it thus, "and in the good land which "I gave unto them to do my will, they have dealt "falſly with my word."

[r] כאדם ſicut Adam, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Caſtalio, Grotius. Cocceius.

℣. 8. Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity, &c.] The chief city in the land of Gilead, which lay beyond Jordan, inhabited by Gad and Reuben, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; and ſo belonged to the ten tribes, whoſe ſins are here particularly obſerved. It had its name from the country, or the country from that, or both from the mountain of the ſame name. It is thought to be Ramoth-Gilead, a city of refuge, and put for all the cities of refuge in thoſe parts, which were inhabited by prieſts and Levites; and who ought to have had knowledge of the laws, and inſtructed the people in them, and obſerved them themſelves, and ſet a good example to others; but inſtead of this, the whole courſe of their lives was vicious; they made a trade of ſinning, did nothing elſe but work iniquity; and this was general among them, the city or cities of them conſiſted of none elſe; and all manner of iniquity was committed by them, particularly idolatry: for ſo the words may be rendred, a city of them that ſerve an idol [a]; not only at Dan and Bethel, but in the cities of the prieſts, idols were ſet up and worſhipped; this ſhows the ſtate to be very corrupt: and is polluted with blood; with the blood of murderers harboured there, who ought not to have been admitted; or with the blood of ſuch who were delivered up to the avenger of blood, that ought to have been ſheltered, and both for the ſake of money; or with the blood of children, ſacrificed to Molech: the word uſed has the ſignification of ſupplanting, lying in wait, and ſo is underſtood of a private, ſecret ſhedding of blood, in a deceitful and inſidious way: hence ſome render it, cunning for blood [b]; to which the Targum ſeems to agree, calling it a city "of them that ſecretly "or deceitfully ſhed innocent blood." It has alſo the ſignification of the heel of a man's foot, and is by ſome rendered, trodden by blood [c]; that is, by bloody men: or footed or heeled by blood [d]; that is, ſuch an abundance of it was ſhed, that a man could not ſet his foot or his heel any where but in blood.

℣. 9. And as troops of robbers wait for a man, &c.] As a gang of highwaymen or footpads lie in wait in a ditch, or under a hedge, or in a cave of a rock or mountain, for a man they know will come by that way, who is full of money, in order to rob him; or as Saadiah interprets it, as fiſhermen ſtand upon the banks of a river, and caſt in their hooks to draw out the fiſh; and to the ſame purpoſe is Jarchi's note from R. Meir: ſo the company of prieſts murder in the way by conſent; not only encourage murderers, and commit murders within the city, but go out in a body together upon the highway, and there commit murders and robberies, and divide the ſpoil among them; all which they did unanimouſly, and were well agreed, being brethren in iniquity, as well as in office: or, in the way of Shechem [e]; as good people paſſed by Gilead to Shechem, and ſo to Jeruſalem, to worſhip there at the ſolemn feaſts, they lay in wait for them, and murdered them; becauſe they did not give into the idolatrous worſhip of the calves at Dan and Bethel: or, in the manner of Shechem [f]; that is, they murdered men in a deceitful treacherous manner, as the Shechemites were murdered by Simeon and Levi: Joſeph Kimchi interprets this of the princes and great men, ſo the word Cohanim is ſometimes uſed; but the context ſeems to carry it to the prieſts: for they commit lewdneſs; or enormity; the moſt enormous crimes, and that purpoſely, with deliberation deviſing and contriving them.

℣. 10. I have ſeen an horrible thing in the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] Idolatry, the calves ſet up at Dan and Bethel, which God ſaw with abhorrence and deteſtation; or the prophet ſaw it, and it made his hair ſtand upright as it were, as the word [g] ſignifies, that ſuch wickedneſs ſhould be committed by a profeſſing people: there is the whoredom of Ephraim; in the houſe of Iſrael is the whoredom of Jeroboam, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, and cauſed Iſrael to ſin, to go a whoring after idols; or the whoredom of the tribe of Ephraim, which belonged to the houſe of Iſrael, and even of all the ten tribes; both corporal and ſpiritual whoredom, or idolatry, are here meant: Iſrael is defiled; with whoredom of both kinds; it had ſpread itſelf all over the ten tribes; they were all infected with it, and polluted by it; ſee ch. v. 3.

℣. 11. Alſo, O Judah, he hath ſet an harveſt for thee, &c.] That is, God hath ſet and appointed a time of wrath and vengeance for thee, which is ſometimes ſignified by an harveſt, Rev. xiv. 15. becauſe thou haſt been guilty of idolatry alſo, as well as Ephraim or the ten tribes: or rather it may be rendered, but, O Judah [h], he, that is, God hath ſet an harveſt for thee; appointed a time of joy and gladneſs, as a time of harveſt is: when I returned, or return the captivity of my people [i]; the people of Judah from the Babyloniſh captivity; ſo that here is a prophecy both of their captivity, and of their return from it: and it may be applied unto their return from their ſpiritual captivity, to ſin, ſatan, and the law, through the goſpel of Chriſt and his apoſtles, firſt publiſhed in Judea, by means of which there was a large harveſt of ſouls gathered in, and was an occaſion of great joy.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter either begins a new ſermon, diſcourſe, or prophecy, or it is a continuation of the former; at leaſt it ſeems to be of the ſame argument with the latter part of it, only it is directed to Iſrael alone; and conſiſts of complaints againſt them, becauſe of their manifold ſins, and of denunciations of puniſhment for them. They are charged with ingratitude to God, ſinning in a daring manner againſt mercy, and with falſhood, thefts, and robberies, ℣. 1. with want of conſideration of the omniſcience of God, and his notice of their ſins, which ſurrounded them, ℣. 2. with flattery to their king and princes, ℣. 3. with adultery, which luſt raged in them like an heated oven, ℣. 4. with drunkenneſs, aggravated by drawing their king into it, ℣. 5. with raging luſts, which devoured their judges, made their kings to fall, and brought on ſuch a general corruption, that there were none that called upon the Lord, ℣. 6, 7. with mixing themſelves with the nations of the earth, and ſo learning their ways, and bringing their ſuperſtition and idolatry into the worſhip of God, ſo that they were nothing in religion, like an half-baked cake, ℣. 8. with ſtupidity and inſenſibility of their declining ſtate, ℣. 9. with pride, impenitence, and ſtubbornneſs, ℣. 10. with folly, in ſeeking to Egypt and Aſſyria for help, and not to the Lord; for which they would be taken as birds in a net, and ſorely chaſtiſed, ℣. 11, 12. with ingratitude, hypocriſy, and deceitfulneſs; for all which they are threatened with deſtruction, v. 13, 14, 15, 16.

℣. 1. When I would have healed Iſrael, &c.] Or rather, when I healed Iſrael [k]; for this is not to be underſtood of a velleity, wiſh, or deſire of healing and ſaving them, as Jarchi; nor of a bare attempt to do it by the admonitions of the prophets, and by corrections in providence, but of actual healing them; and by which is meant, not healing them in a ſpiritual and religious ſenſe, as in ch. vi. 1. but in a political ſenſe, of the reſtoring of their civil ſtate to a more flouriſhing condition; which was done in the times of Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh, as Kimchi rightly obſerves; who reſtored the coaſt of Iſrael, from the entring of Hamath, unto the ſea of the plain, 2 Kings xiv. 25, 26: then the iniquity of Ephraim was diſcovered, and the wickedneſs of Samaria; ſome refer this to the times of Jeroboam the Firſt, and that the ſenſe is, that the Lord having cured Iſrael of the idolatry introduced by Solomon, quickly a new ſcene of idolatry broke out in Ephraim or the ten tribes, of which Samaria was the metropolis; for Jeroboam ſoon ſet up the calves at Dan and Bethel to be worſhipped; but it does not appear that Iſrael was corrupted with the idolatry of Solomon, and needed a cure then; nor was Samaria built in Jeroboam's time: others apply it to the times of Jehu, who, tho' he ſlew the worſhippers of Baal, and broke his images, and deſtroyed him out of Iſrael, yet retained the worſhip of the calves at Dan and Bethel, 2 Kings x. 25--30. ſo tho' they were healed of one ſort of idolatry, another prevailed. It is right in both theſe ſenſes, that the iniquity of Ephraim, and wickedneſs or wickedneſſes of Samaria, are taken for the idolatrous worſhip of the golden calves; but then it reſpects the times of Jeroboam the Second, the ſon of Joaſh, in whoſe days Iſrael was proſperous; and yet theſe ſuperſtitious and idolatrous practices of worſhip were flagrant and notorious, were countenanced by the king and his courtiers that dwelt at Samaria, as is clear from Amos vii. 10—13. which was an inſtance of great ingratitude to the Lord. For they commit falſhood; among themſelves, lying to one another, and deceiving each other; or to God, deal falſly with him, are guilty of falſe worſhip, worſhipping idols, which are vanities and lies: and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers ſpoileth without; which may be interpreted either of their ſins, their ſins in general, both private and public; and their ſins of theft and robbery in particular; both ſuch as were committed in houſes by the thief privately entring there, and by a gang of robbers in the ſtreets, or on the highway: ſo the Targum, "in the night they thieve in "houſes, and in the day they rob on the plain," or fields: or elſe of puniſhment for their ſins; and then the words may be rendered [l], therefore the thief entereth in, and the troop or army ſpreads without; this thief was Shallum, who came in to kill and to ſteal; he ſlew Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam, after he had reigned ſix months, and uſurped the kingdom, and ſo put an end to the family of Jehu, according as the Lord had threatened, 2 Kings viii. 12. the troop or army is the Aſſyrian army under Pul, who came againſt Menahem king of Iſrael, of whom he exacted a tribute, and departed, 2 Kings xv. 19, 20. ſo Cocceius.

℣. 2. And they conſider not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedneſs, &c.] That is, the people of the ten tribes, and the inhabitants of Samaria, whoſe iniquity and wickedneſs are ſaid to be diſcovered, and to be very notorious: and yet they ſaid not to their hearts [m], as in the original text; they did not think within themſelves; they did not commune with their own hearts; they did not put themſelves in mind, or put this to their conſciences, that the Lord ſaw all their wicked actions, their idolatry, falſhood, thefts and robberies, and whatſoever they were guilty of; that the Lord took notice of them, and put them down in the book of his remembrance, in order to call them to an account, and puniſh them for them: now their own doings have beſet them about; or, that now their own doings, &c [n]. they don't conſider in their hearts, that in paradiſe God made with him, and all mankind in him: or like the men of old, the former generations, as the Targum; meaning either the old inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites; or the men of the old world at the time of the flood, who were a very wicked and abandoned generation of men; or like men in common, depraved and degenerated, fickle and inconſtant, vain and deceitful, and not at all to be depended upon; eſpecially like the lower ſort of men, the common people, who have no regard to their word, covenant, and agreement; or particularly like ſuch men that are given to perjury, and make no conſcience of oaths and covenants ever ſo ſolemnly made: or as others read the words, but they have tranſgreſſed the covenant like man's [z]; making no more account of it, than if it was a man's covenant. There have they dealt treacherouſly againſt me; in the covenant they entered into, by breaking it, not performing their promiſes; and even in the very ſacrifices they offered, and were ſo fond of, and put their confidence in; either by offering ſuch ſacrifices as were not legal, or by offering them to idols, under a pretence of offering them to God, which was dealing treacherouſly againſt him; and in all other acts of religion, in which they would be thought to have regard to the covenant of God, his laws and precepts, and to be very ſerious and devout, yet acted the hypocritical part, were falſe and deceitful, and devoid of all ſincerity: or there, in the promiſed land, where the Lord had ſo largely beſtowed his favours on them; ſo Jarchi, Kimchi, and Abarbinel, agreeable to the Targum, which paraphraſes it thus, “and in the good land which “I gave unto them to do my will, they have dealt “falſly with my word.”

Some underſtand theſe clauſes of the puniſhment of their ſins, which ſhould ſurround them on every ſide, that they ſhould not be able to eſcape, like perſons cloſely beſieged in a city, that they cannot get out; alluding to the future ſiege of Samaria, when it would be a plain caſe, tho' they did not now think of it, that all their ſins were before the Lord, and were obſerved by him.

℣. 3. They make the king glad with their wickedneſs, &c.] Not any particular king; not Jeroboam the firſt, as Kimchi; nor Jehu, as Grotius; if any particular king, rather Jeroboam the ſecond; but their kings in general, as the Septuagint render it, in ſucceſſion one after another; who were highly delighted and pleaſed with the prieſts in offering ſacrifice to the calves, and with the people in attending to that idolatrous worſhip, by which they hoped to ſecure the kingdom of Iſrael to themſelves, and prevent the people going to Jeruſalem to worſhip: it made them glad to the heart to hear them ſay, that God was as well pleaſed with ſacrifices offered at Dan and Bethel, as at Jeruſalem: and the princes with their lies; with their idols and idolatrous practices, which are vanity and a lie; tho' ſome interpret this of their flatteries, either of them, or their favourites; and of their calumnies and detractions of ſuch they had a diſlike of.

℣. 4. They are all adulterers, &c.] King, princes, prieſts and people, both in a ſpiritual and corporal ſenſe; they were all idolaters, given to idolatry, eager of it, and conſtant in it, as the following metaphors ſhew; and they were addicted to corporal adultery; this was a prevailing vice among all ranks and degrees of men. So the Targum, "they all deſire to lie with their neighbours wives;" ſee Jer. v. 7, 8. and ix. 2: as an oven heated by the baker; which, if underſtood of ſpiritual adultery or idolatry, denotes their eagerneſs after it, and fervour in it, excited by their king, or by the devil and his inſtruments, the prieſts and falſe prophets; and if of bodily uncleanneſs, it is expreſſive of the heat of that luſt, which is ſometimes ſignified by burning; and is ſtirred up by the devil and the corrupt hearts of men to ſuch a degree, as to be raiſed to a flame, and be like a raging fire, or a heated oven; ſee Rom. i. 27. 1 Cor. vii. 9: who ceaſeth from raiſing; that is, the baker having heated his oven, ceaſeth from raiſing up the women to bring their bread to the bakehouſe; or he ceaſeth from waking, or from watching his oven; he lays himſelf down to ſleep, and continues in it: after he hath kneaded the dough, until it be leavened; having kneaded the dough, and put in the leaven, he lets it alone to work till the whole maſs is leavened, taking his reſt in the mean while: as the former clauſe expreſſes the vehement deſire of the people after adultery, ſpiritual or corporal, this may ſignify their continuance in it; or rather the wilful negligence of the king, prieſts and prophets, who, inſtead of awaking them out of their ſleep on a bed of adultery, let them alone in it, until they were all infected with it.

℣. 5. In the day of our king, &c.] Either his birth-day, or his coronation-day, when he was inaugurated into his kingly office, as the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi; or the day on which Jeroboam ſet up the calves, which might be kept as an anniverſary: or, it is the day of our king [o]; and may be the words of the prieſts and falſe prophets, exciting the people to adultery; and may ſhew by what means they drew them into it, ſaying this is the king's birth-day, or coronation-day, or a holyday of his appointing, let us meet together, and drink his health; and ſo by indulging to intemperance, thro' the heat of wine, led them on to adultery, corporal or ſpiritual, or both: the princes have made him ſick with bottles of wine; that is, the courtiers who attended at court on ſuch a day to compliment the king upon the occaſion, and to drink his health, drank to him in bumpers, perhaps a bottle of wine at once; which he pledging them in the ſame manner, made him ſick or drunk: to make any man drunk is criminal, and eſpecially a king; as it was alſo a weakneſs and ſin in him to drink to exceſs, which is not for kings, of all men, to do: or it may be rendered, the princes became ſick thro' the heat of wine [p], ſo Jarchi; they were made ſick by others, or they made themſelves ſo by drinking too much wine, which inflamed their bodies, gorged their ſtomachs, made their heads dizzy, and them ſo weak, as the word [q] alſo ſignifies, that they could not ſtand upon their legs; which are commonly the effects of exceſſive drinking, eſpecially in thoſe who are not uſed to it, as the king and the princes might not be, only on ſuch occaſions: he ſtretched out his hand with ſcorners; meaning the king, who, in his cups, forgetting his royal dignity, uſed too much familiarity with perſons of low life, and of an ill behaviour, irreligious ones; who, eſpecially when drunk, made a jeſt of all religion; ſcoffed at good men, and every thing that was ſerious; and even ſet their mouths againſt the heavens; denied there was a God, or ſpoke very indecently and irreverently of him; theſe the king made his potcompanions, took the cup, and drank to them in turn, and ſhook them by the hand; or admitted them to kiſs his hand, and were all together, hail fellows well met. Joſeph Kimchi thinks theſe are the ſame with the princes, called ſo before they were drunk, but afterwards ſcorners.

℣. 6. For they have made ready their heart like an oven, whiles they lie in wait, &c.] The prince, people, and ſcorners before-mentioned, being heated with wine, and their luſt enraged, they were ready for any wickedneſs; for the commiſſion of adultery, lying in wait for their neighbours wives to debauch them; or for rebellion and treaſon againſt their king, and even the murder of him, made drunk by them, whom they now deſpiſed, and waited for an opportunity to diſpatch him: their baker ſleepeth all the night: in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire; as a baker having put wood into his oven, and kindled it, leaves it, and ſleeps all night, and in the morning it is all burning, and in a flame, and his oven is thoroughly heated, and fit for his purpoſe; ſo the evil concupiſcence in theſe mens hearts made hot like an oven, reſts all night, deviſing miſchief on their beds, either againſt the chaſtity of their neighbours wives, or againſt the lives of others, they bear an ill-will to, particularly againſt their judges and their kings, as the next verſe ſeems to intimate; and in the morning this luſt of uncleanneſs or revenge is all in a flame, and ready to execute the wicked deſigns contrived; ſee Mic. ii. 1. Some, by their baker, underſtand ſatan; others, their king aſleep and ſecure; others Shallum, the head of the conſpiracy againſt Zachariah.

ỳ. 7. They are all hot as an oven, &c.] Eager upon their idolatry, or burning in their unclean deſires after other mens wives; or rather raging and furious, hot with anger and wrath againſt their rulers and governors, breathing out ſlaughter and death unto them: and have devoured their judges; that ſtood in the way of their luſts, reproved them for them, and reſtrained them from them; or were on the ſide of the king they conſpired againſt, and were determined to depoſe and ſlay: all their kings are fallen; either into ſin, the ſin of idolatry particularly, as all from Jeroboam the firſt did, down to Hoſhea the laſt; or they fell into calamities, or by the ſword of one another, as did moſt of them; ſo Zachariah by Shallum, Shallum by Menahem, Pekahiah by Pekah, and Pekah by Hoſhea; ſee 2 Kings xv. So the Targum, "all their kings are "ſlain:" there is none among them that calleth unto me; either among the kings, when their lives were in danger from conſpirators; or none among the people, when their land was in diſtreſs, either by civil wars among themſelves, or by a foreign enemy; ſuch was their ſtupidity, and to ſuch a height was irreligion come to among them!

ỳ. 8. Ephraim, he hath mixed himſelf among the people, &c.] Either locally, by dwelling among them, as ſome of them at leaſt might do among the Syrians; or carnally, by inter-marrying with them, contrary to the command of God; or civilly, by entring into alliances and confederacies with them, as Pekah the ſon of Remaliah king of Iſrael did with Rezin king of Syria, Iſ. vii. 2, 5. or by ſeeking to them for help, calling to Egypt, and going to Aſſyria, as in ỳ. 11. ſo Aben Ezra; or morally, by learning their manners, and conforming to their cuſtoms, eſpecially in religious things: tho' ſome underſtand this as a puniſhment threatened them for their above ſins, that they ſhould be carried captive into foreign lands, and ſo be mixed among the people, and which is Jarchi's ſenſe; but it is rather to be conſidered as their evil in joining with other nations in their ſuperſtition, idolatry, and other impieties; and it is highly offenſive to God, when his profeſſing people mix themſelves with the world, keep company with the men of it, faſhion themſelves according to them, do as they do, and wilfully go into their converſation, and repeat it, and continue therein, and reſolve to do ſo: for ſo it may be rendered, he will mix himſelf[r]; it denotes a voluntary act, repeated and perſiſted in with obſtinacy. 4 Ephraim is a cake not turned; like a cake that is laid on coals, if it is not turned, the nether part will be burnt, and the upper part unbaked, and ſo be good for nothing; not fit to be eaten, being nothing indeed, neither bread nor dough; and ſo may ſignify, that Ephraim having introduced much of the ſuperſtition and idolatry of the Gentiles into religious worſhip, was nothing in religion, neither fiſh nor fleſh, as is proverbially ſaid of perſons and things of which nothing can be made; they worſhipped the calves at Dan and Bethel, and yet ſwore by the name of the Lord; they halted between two opinions, and were of neither; they were like the hotch-potch inhabitants of Samaria in after-times, that came in their room, that feared the Lord, and ſerved their own gods: and ſuch profeſſors of religion there are, who are nothing in religion; nothing in principle, they have no ſcheme of principles; they are neither one thing nor another; they are nothing in experience, if they have a form of godlineſs, they deny the power of it; they are nothing in practice, all they do is to be ſeen of men; they are neither hot nor cold, eſpecially not throughout, or on both ſides, like a cake unturned; but are lukewarm and indifferent, and therefore very diſagreeable to the Lord. Some take this to be expreſſive of puniſhment, and not of fault; either of their partial captivity by Tiglath-Pileſer, when only a part of them was carried captive; or of the ſwift and total deſtruction of them by their enemies, who would be like hungry and half-ſtarved perſons, who, meeting with a cake on the coals half baked, ſnatch it up, and eat it, not ſtaying for the turning and baking it on the other ſide; and thus it ſhould be with them. So the Targum, "the houſe of Ephraim is like to a cake "baked on coals, which before it is turned is "eaten."

ỳ. 9. Strangers have devoured his ſtrength, &c.] 4 Or his ſubſtance, as the Targum; his wealth and riches, fortreſſes and ſtrong holds: theſe ſtrangers were either the Syrians, who, in the times of Jehoahaz deſtroyed Ephraim or the Iſraelites, and ſo weakened them, as to make them like the duſt by threſhing, 2 Kings xiii. 7. or the Aſſyrians, firſt under Pul king of Aſſyria, who came out againſt Menahem king of Iſrael, and exacted a tribute of a thouſand talents of ſilver, and ſo drained them of their treaſure, which was their ſtrength, 2 Kings xv. 19, 20. and then under Tiglath-Pileſer, another king of Aſſyria, who came and took away from them many of their fortified places, and carried the inhabitants captive, ỳ. 29: and he knoweth it not; is not ſenſible how much he is weakened by ſuch exactions and depredations; or does not take notice of the hand of God in all this; does not conſider from whence it comes, what is the cauſe of it, and for what ends: yea, gray hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth not; or, old age has ſprinkled itſelf upon him[s]; or, gray hairs are ſprinkled on him; gray hairs, when thick, are a ſign that old age is come; and when ſprinkled here and there, are ſymptoms of its coming on, and of a perſon's being on the decline of life; and here it ſignifies the weak and declining ſtate of Iſrael, thro' the exactions and depredations of their neighbours, and that their utter ruin was near; and yet they did not know nor conſider their latter end, nor repent of their ſins, and acknowledge them, and return unto the Lord, and implore his mercy: ſo carnal profeſſors, who mix with the men of the world, that are ſtrangers to God and godlineſs, and every thing that is divine and good, are devoured by them; they loſe their time and ſubſtance, and their precious ſouls, and are not aware of it. The ſymptoms of the declining ſtate of the church of God are at this time upon us, and yet not taken notice of; ſuch as great departures from the faith; a number of falſe teachers riſen up; great fallings off of profeſſors, and of ſuch who have made a great figure in the church; a ſmall number of faithful men; great coldneſs and lukewarmneſs to ſpiritual things; little faith on the earth; great neglect of goſpel-worſhip and ordinances; much ſleepineſs and drowſineſs; great immorality and profaneneſs: as alſo the ſymptoms of the declining ſtate of the world, and of its drawing to its period; as wars, and rumours of wars, famine, peſtilence, and earthquakes in divers places; volcanos, burning mountains, eruptions of ſubterraneous fire, which portend the general conflagration; and yet theſe things are little attended to.

℣. 10. And the pride of Iſrael teſtifieth to his face, &c.] See the note on ch. v. 5. notwithſtanding their weak and declining ſtate, they were proud and haughty; entertained a high conceit of themſelves, and of their good and ſafe condition; and behaved inſolently towards God, and were not humbled before him for their ſins. Their pride was notorious, which they themſelves could not deny; they were ſelf-convicted, and ſelf-condemned: and they do not return to the Lord their God; by acknowledgment of their ſins, repentance for them, and reformation from them; and by attendance on his worſhip, from which they had revolted; ſo the Targum, "they return not to the worſhip of the Lord their God:" nor ſeek him for all this; tho' they are in this waſting, declining condition, and juſt upon the brink of ruin, yet they ſeek not the face and favour of the Lord; they don't aſk help of him, or implore his mercy; and tho' they have been ſo long in theſe circumſtances, and have been gradually conſuming for many years, yet in all this time they have made no application to the Lord, that he would be favourable, and raiſe their ſinking ſtate, and reſtore them to their former glory.

℣. 11. Ephraim alſo is like a ſilly dove, without heart, &c.] Or underſtanding; which comes and picks up the corns of grain, which lie ſcattered about, and does not know that the net is ſpread for it; and when its young are taken away, it is unconcerned, and continues its neſt in the ſame place ſtill; and when frightened, repairs not to its dovehouſe, where it would be ſafe, but flies about here and there, and ſo becomes a prey to others. Thus Ephraim going to Egypt and Aſſyria for help, were enſnared by them, not having ſenſe enough to perceive that this would be their ruin; and tho' they had heretofore ſuffered by them, yet ſtill they continued to make their addreſſes to them; and inſtead of keeping cloſe to the Lord, and to his worſhip, and the place of it, and aſking counſel and help of him, they ran about and ſought for it here and there: they call to Egypt; that is, for help; as Hoſhea king of Iſrael, when he ſent meſſengers to So or Sabacon king of Egypt, for protection and aſſiſtance, 2 Kings xvii. 4. Such a fooliſh part, like the ſilly doves, did they act; ſince the Egyptians had been their implacable enemies, and their fathers had been in cruel bondage under them: they go to Aſſyria; ſend gifts and preſents, and pay tribute to the kings thereof, to make them eaſy; as Menahem did to Pul, and Hoſhea to Salmaneſer, 2 Kings xv. 19. and xvii. 3. Some underſtand this laſt clauſe, not of their ſin in going to the Aſſyrian for help; but of their puniſhment in going or being carried captive thither; and ſo the Targum ſeems to interpret it, "they go captive, or are carried captive into Aſſyria."

℣. 12. When they ſhall go, &c.] That is, to Egypt or Aſſyria: I will ſpread my net upon them; bring them into great ſtraits and difficulties; perhaps the Aſſyrian army is meant, which was the Lord's net, guided, and directed, and ſpread by his providence, and according to his will, to take this ſilly dove in; and which incloſed them on all ſides, that they could not eſcape; ſee Ezek. xii. 13. Hoſhea the king of Iſrael was taken by the Aſſyrian, and bound and ſhut up in priſon; Samaria the capital city was beſieged three years, and then taken, 2 Kings xvii. 4, 5, 6: I will bring them down as the fowls of the heaven; tho' they fly on high, ſoar aloft, and behave proudly, and fanſy themſelves out of all danger; yet, as the flying fowl, the eagle, and other birds, may be brought down to the earth by an arrow from the bow, or by ſome decoy; ſo ſhould they be brought down from their fanſied ſafe and exalted ſtate, and be taken in the net, and become a prey to their enemies: I will chaſtiſe them as their congregation hath heard; what was written in the law, and in the prophets, were read and explained in the congregations of Iſrael on their ſtated days they met together on for religious worſhip; in which it was threatened, that if they did not obſerve the laws and ſtatutes of the Lord their God, but neglected and broke them, they ſhould be ſeverly chaſtized and corrected with his ſore judgments, famine, peſtilence, the ſword of the enemy, and captivity: and now the Lord would fulfil his word, agreeable to what had often been heard by them, but not regarded; ſee Lev. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii.

℣. 13. Wo unto them, for they have fled from me, &c.] From the Lord, from his worſhip, and the place of it; from obedience to him, and the ſervice of him; as birds fly from their neſts, and leave their young, and wander about; ſo they had deſerted the temple at Jeruſalem, and forſaken the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and ſet up calves at Dan and Bethel, and worſhipped them; and inſtead of fleeing to God for ſuccour in time of diſtreſs, fled further off ſtill, even out of their own land to Egypt or Aſſyria: the conſequence of which was, nothing but ruin, and ſo lamentation and woes: deſtruction unto them, becauſe they have tranſgreſſed againſt me; againſt the laws which God gave them; ſetting up idols, and worſhipping them, and ſo broke the firſt table of the law; committing murder, adultery, thefts and robberies, with which they are charged in the preceding part of this chapter, and ſo tranſgreſſed the ſecond table of the law; and by all brought deſtruction upon themſelves, which was near at hand, and would certainly come, as here threatened; tho' they promiſed themſelves peace, and expected aſſiſtance from neighbouring nations, but in vain, having made the Lord their enemy, by breaking his laws: tho' I have redeemed them; out of Egypt formerly, and out of the hands of the Moabites, Ammonites, Philiſtines, and others, in the times of the judges; and more lately in the times of Joaſh and Jeroboam the ſecond, who recovered many cities out of the hands of the Syrians. Aben Ezra, Jarchi, and Kimchi, interpret this of the good diſpoſition of God towards them, having it in his heart to redeem them now from their preſent afflictions and diſtreſſes, but that they were ſo impious and wicked, and ſo unfaithful to him: yet they have ſpoken lies againſt me; againſt his being and providence, being atheiſtically inclined; or pretending repentance for their ſins, when they were hypocrites, and returned to their former courſes; or ſetting up idols in oppoſition to him, which were vanity to him; attributing all their good things to them, and charging him with all their evils. Abendana reads the words interrogatively, ſhould I redeem them, when they have ſpoken lies againſt me[t]? no, I will not.

ỳ. 14. And they have not cried unto me with their heart, &c.] In their diſtreſs indeed they cried unto the Lord, and ſaid they repented of their ſins, and promiſed reformation, and made a ſhow of worſhipping God; as invocation is ſometimes put for the whole worſhip of God; but then this was not heartily, but hypocritically; their hearts and their mouths did not go together, and therefore was not reckoned prayer; nothing but howling, as follows: when they howled upon their beds; lying ſick or wounded there; or as ſome in their idol-temples, thoſe beds of adultery, where they pretended to worſhip God by them, and to pray to him thro' them; but ſuch idolatrous prayers were no better than the howlings of dogs to him; even tho' they expreſſed outwardly their cries with great vehemency, as the word uſed denotes, having one letter more in it than common: they aſſemble themſelves for corn and wine; either at their banquets to feaſt upon them, as Aben Ezra; or to the markets to buy them, as Kimchi ſuggeſts; or rather to their idol-temples to deprecate a famine, and to pray for rain and fruitful ſeaſons; or if they gather together to pray to the Lord, it is only for carnal and worldly things; they only ſeek themſelves, and their own intereſt, and not the glory of God; and aſk for theſe things to conſume them on their luſt. The Septuagint verſion is, for corn and wine they were cut, or cut themſelves, as Baal's prieſts did, when they cried to him, 1 Kings xviii. 28. and Theodoret here obſerves, that they performed the heathen rites, and in idol-temples made inciſions on their bodies: and they rebel againſt me; not only flee from him, tranſgreſs his laws, but caſt off all allegiance to him, and take up arms, and commit hoſtilities againſt him. The Targum joins this with the preceding clauſe, "becauſe of the multitude of corn and wine which "they have gathered, they have rebelled againſt "my word;" and to the ſame ſenſe Jarchi; thus, Jeſhurun waxed fat and kicked.

ỳ. 15. Though I have bound, and ſtrengthened their arms, &c.] As a ſurgeon ſets a broken arm, and ſwathes and binds it, and ſo reſtores it to its former ſtrength, or at leaſt to a good degree of ſtrength again, ſo the Lord dealt with Iſrael; their arms were broken, and their ſtrength weakened, and they greatly diſtreſſed and reduced by the Syrians in the times of Jehoahaz; but they were brought into a better ſtate and condition in the times of Joaſh and Jeroboam the ſecond; the former retook ſeveral cities out of the hands of the Syrians, and the latter reſtored the border of Iſrael, and greatly enlarged it; and as all this was done thro' the bleſſing of divine providence, the Lord is ſaid to do it himſelf. Some render it, tho' I have chaſtized, I have ſtrengthened their arms[u]; tho' he corrected them for their ſins in the times of Jehoahaz, and ſuffered their arms to be broken by their enemies, for their inſtruction, and in order to bring them to repentance for their ſins; yet he ſtrengthened them again in the following reigns: yet do they imagine miſchief againſt me; ſo ungrateful were they, they contrived to do hurt to his prophets that were ſent to them in his name, to warn them of their ſins and danger, and exhort them to repent, and forſake their idolatrous worſhip, and other ſins; and they ſought by all means to diſhonour the name of the Lord, by imputing all their ſucceſs in the reigns of Joaſh and Jeroboam to their idols, and not unto him; and ſo hardened themſelves againſt him, and in their evil ways.

ỳ. 16. They return, but not to the Moſt High, &c.] To Egypt, and not to Jeruſalem, and the temple there, and the worſhip of it; to their idols, and not to him whoſe name alone is Jehovah, and is the Moſt High in all the earth, the God of gods, and Lord of lords, and King of kings; tho' they made ſome feint as if they would return, and did begin, and take ſome ſteps towards repentance and reformation; but then they preſently fell back again, as in Jehu's time, and did not go on to make a thorough reformation; nor returned to God alone, and to his pure worſhip, they pretended to, and ought to have done: or, not on high, upwards, above[w]; their affections and deſires are not after things above; they don't look upwards to God in heaven for help and aſſiſtance, but to men and things on earth, on which all their affection and dependence are placed: they are like a deceitful bow; which miſſes the mark it is directed to; which being deſigned to ſend its arrow one way, cauſes it to go the reverſe; or its arrow returns upon the archer, or drops at his feet; ſo theſe people deviated from the law of God, acted contrary to their profeſſion and promiſes, and relapſed into their former idolatries and impieties, and ſunk into earth and earthly things; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 57: their princes ſhall fall by the ſword; either of their conſpirators, as Zachariah, Shallum, Pekahiah, and Pekah; or by the ſword of the Aſſyrians, as Hoſhea and the princes with him by Salmaneſer: for the rage of their tongue; their blaſphemy againſt God, his being and providences; his worſhip, and the place of it; his prieſts and people that ſerved him, and particularly the prophets he ſent unto them to reprove them. This ſhall be their deriſion in the land of Egypt; whither they ſent, and called for help; but now, when their princes are ſlain, and they carried captive into a foreign land, even thoſe friends and allies of theirs ſhall laugh and mock at them. The Targum is, "theſe were their "works while they were in the land of Egypt;" or rather the words may be rendered, this is their deriſion, as of old in the land of Egypt[x]; that is, the calves they now worſhipped, and to which they aſcribed all their good things, were made in imitation of the gods of Egypt, their Apis and Serapis, which were in the form of an ox, and which their fathers derided there; and theſe were juſtly to be derided now, and they to be derided for their worſhip of them, and aſcribing all their good things to them; and which would be done when their deſtruction came upon them.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter treats of the ſins and puniſhment of Iſrael for them, as the preceding; it is threatened and proclaimed that an enemy ſhould come ſwiftly againſt them, becauſe of their tranſgreſſion of the covenant and law of God, ℣. 1. their hypocriſy is expoſed, ℣. 2. they are charged with the rejection of that which is good, and therefore ſhould be purſued by the enemy, ℣. 3. with ſetting up kings and princes, without conſulting the Lord, ℣. 4. and with making of idols, particularly the golden calves, which would be of no uſe to them, diſappoint them, and at laſt be broke to pieces, ℣. 4, 5, 6. their ſeeking to their neighbours for help, and entring into alliances with them, are repreſented as vain and fruitleſs, and iſſuing in their ruin and deſtruction, ℣. 7, 8, 9, 10. their ſins of multiplying altars, contrary to the law of God, and in contempt of it, and offering ſacrifices not acceptable to the Lord, are obſerved; and they are threatened with a viſitation from him, ℣. 11, 12, 13. and the chapter is concluded with ſome notice both of Iſrael and Judah, the one building temples, and the other multiplying fenced cities, which ſhould be devoured by fire, ℣. 14.

℣. 1. Set the trumpet to thy mouth, &c.] Or, the trumpet to the roof of thy mouth [t]; a conciſe expreſſion denoting haſte, and the vehemence of the paſſions in ſpeaking; they are either the words of the Lord to the prophet, as the Targum, "O "prophet, cry with thy throat as with a trumpet, "ſaying;" ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra take them to be the words of the Lord to the prophet, and the ſenſe agrees with Iſ. lviii. 1. The prophet is here conſidered as a watchman, and is called upon to blow his trumpet; either to call the people together, as an eagle to the houſe of the Lord [u], as the next clauſe may be connected with this; that is, to come as ſwiftly to the houſe of the Lord, and hear what he had to ſay to them, and to ſupplicate the Lord for mercy in a time of diſtreſs: or to give the people notice of the approach of the enemy, and tell them that he ſhall come flying as an eagle over [w] or againſt the houſe of the Lord: or they are the words of the Lord, or of the prophet to the enemy, to blow his trumpet, and ſound the alarm of war, and call his army together, and bid them fly like an eagle, with that ſwiftneſs and fierceneſs as that creature does to its prey, againſt the houſe of the Lord; meaning not the temple at Jeruſalem, but the nation of Iſrael, formerly called the houſe and family of God, and ſtill pretended to be ſo. There may be ſome alluſion to Bethel, which ſignifies the houſe of God, where they practiſed their idolatry. This is to be underſtood, not of Nebuchadnezzar, ſometimes compared to an eagle, Ezek. xvii. 3. for not the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem is here meant; nor of the Romans, as Lyra ſeems to underſtand it, the eagle being the enſign of the Romans; but of Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, compared to this creature for his ſwiftneſs in coming, his ſtrength, fierceneſs and cruelty; this creature being ſwift in flight, and a bird of prey. So the Targum interprets it of a king and his army, "behold, as an "eagle flieth, ſo ſhall a king with his army come "up and encamp againſt the houſe of the ſanctuary of the Lord." Some reference ſeems to be had to Deut. xxviii. 49: becauſe they have tranſgreſſed my covenant, and treſpaſſed againſt my law; the law that was given to Iſrael by Moſes at the appointment of God, to which they aſſented, and promiſed to obſerve; and ſo it had the form of a covenant to them: the bounds of this law and covenant they tranſgreſſed, and dealt perfidiouſly with, and prevaricated in, and wilfully broke all its commands, by their idolatry, murder, adultery, theft, and other ſins.

℣. 2. Iſrael ſhall cry unto me, my God, we know thee.] In their diſtreſs they ſhall cry to the Lord to help them, and have mercy on them, as they uſed to do when in trouble, Iſ. xxvi. 16. when the eagle is come upon them, and juſt ready to devour them; when Samaria is beſieged with the Aſſyrian army, their king taken priſoner, and they juſt ready to fall into the hands of the enemy, then they ſhall cry to God, tho' in an hypocritical manner; own him to be the true God, and claim their intereſt in him, and pretend knowledge of him, and acquaintance with him; tho' they have not ſerved and worſhipped him, but idols, and that for hundreds of years; like others who profeſs to know God, but in works deny him, Tit. i. 16. Iſrael is the laſt word in the verſe, and occaſions different verſions: they ſhall cry unto me; theſe tranſgreſſors of the covenant and the law, theſe hypocrites ſhall pray to God in trouble, ſaying, my God, we Iſrael, or Iſraelites, know thee; or, we know thee who are Iſrael [x]; and to this ſenſe is the Targum, "in every time that diſtreſs comes upon "them, they pray before me, and ſay, now we "know that we have no God beſides thee, redeem "us, for we are thy people Iſrael;" why may they not be rendered thus, they ſhall cry unto me; my God, we know thee, Iſrael ſhall ſay. Caſtalio renders them to this ſenſe, my God, ſay they; but we know thee, Iſrael; we the three perſons in the Trinity, Father, Son and Spirit, we know thy hypocriſy and wickedneſs, that it is only outwardly and hypocritically, and not ſincerely that thou crieſt unto, and calleſt upon God.

℣. 3. Iſrael hath caſt off the thing that is good, &c.] Or rejected him that is good [y]; that is, God, as Kimchi obſerves; for there is none good but him, Matt. xix. 17. he is the ſummum bonum, the chiefeſt good to men, and is eſſentially, originally and infinitely good in himſelf, and the fountain of all goodneſs to his creatures; and yet Iſrael has rejected him with deteſtation and contempt, as the word [z] ſignifies, tho' they pretended to know him, which ſhows their hypocriſy; and therefore 'tis no wonder, that their prayers were rejected by him: or they rejected the good word of God, the law, or doctrine contained in it, and the good worſhip, ſervice, and fear of God, and indeed every thing that was good, juſt, and right. Cocceius renders it, the good one, or he that is God, the good God, hath caſt off Iſrael. This reading of the words Druſius alſo mentions, and ſeems to like beſt, and as agreeing with what follows; ſo Rivet; but the poſition of the words in the Hebrew text, and the accents, do not favour it. The enemy ſhall purſue him; who is before compared to an eagle, which flies ſwiftly, and purſues its prey with eagerneſs and fierceneſs: Salmaneſer is meant, who ſhould invade the land, come up to Samaria, beſiege and take it; nothing ſhould ſtop him; nor ſhould Iſrael eſcape from him, ſince they had caſt off the Lord, and every thing that was good. The Targum is, "the "houſe of Iſrael have erred from my worſhip, "for the ſake of which I brought good things "upon them; hence forward the enemy ſhall pur"ſue them."

ỹ. 4. They have ſet up kings, but not by me, &c.] Not by his authority, order, and command; not by aſking advice of him, or his leave, but of themſelves, and of their own accord: this refers to the caſe of Jeroboam their firſt king, after their ſeparation from the houſe of David, and from the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; for though his becoming king of Iſrael was according to the ſecret will of God, and by his over-ruling providence; yet it was done without his expreſs orders, and without aſking counſel of him, or his conſent, and of their own heads; and many of his ſucceſſors were conſpirators, and ſet up themſelves with the conſent of the people, to the dethroning of others, and upon the ſlaughter of them, as Shallum, Menahem, Pekah, and Hoſhea: the people of Iſrael had no right to chuſe a king for themſelves; the right was alone in the Lord; it was he that choſe, appointed, and conſtituted their kings, Deut. xvii. 15. thus Saul, David, and Solomon were choſe and appointed by him, 1 Sam. x. 24. 2 Sam. v. 2. 1 Chron. xxviii. 5. it was not the perſon of Jeroboam choſen, God diſliked; but their taking it upon them to chuſe and ſet him up without his leave. They have made princes, and I knew it not; that is, they ſet up ſubordinate governors, judges, civil magiſtrates, elders of the people, over them, without his approbation, and ſuch as were very diſagreeable to him; otherwiſe he knew what was done by them, as being the omniſcient God, but he did not approve of what they did. Some obſerve, that ש in the word uſed is put for ס, and ſhould be rendered, they have removed, ſo Jarchi and Japhet; that is, they have ſet up kings, and they have removed them; they have took it upon them to make and depoſe kings at pleaſure, without ſeeking the Lord about it, when this is his prerogative, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords, Dan. ii. 21. which ſenſe makes a ſtrong and beautiful antitheſis. Of their ſilver, and their gold, have they made their idols; ſome of their idols were made of ſilver, others of gold; particularly the calves at Dan and Bethel, which are called the golden calves, becauſe made of gold; as was the calf in the wilderneſs, 1 Kings xii. 28. ſee Iſ. xlvi. 6, and ch. ii. 8: that they may be cut off; which denotes not the end, intention, and deſign of making theſe idols of ſilver and gold, but the event thereof; namely, either the deſtruction of the idols themſelves, which for the ſake of the ſilver and gold they were made of, were cut in pieces by a foreign enemy; or the gold and ſilver were cut off from the people, their riches and wealth were waſted by ſuch means; or rather the people were cut off, every one of them, becauſe of their worſhip of them, or this would be the caſe.

ỹ. 5. Thy calf, O Samaria, hath caſt thee off, &c.] Or is the cauſe of thy being caſt off by the Lord, and of being caſt out of thine own land, and carried captive into another; the paſt tenſe is uſed for the future, as is common in prophetic writings, to denote the certainty of the thing: or thy calf hath left thee[a]; in the lurch; it cannot help thee; it is gone off and forſaken thee; it has removed itſelf from thee, according to the ſenſe of the word in Lam. iii. 17. as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve; or is removed far from thee, being carried captive itſelf into Aſſyria; for when the king of Aſſyria took Samaria, he ſeized on the golden calf for the ſake of the gold, and took it away; ſee ch. x. 5, 6. and Iſ. x. 11. or he hath removed thy calf[b]; that is, the enemy, taking it away when he took the city; or God has rejected it with the utmoſt contempt and abhorrence: the calf is here, and in the following verſe, called the calf of Samaria, becauſe this was the metropolis of the ten tribes, in which the calf was worſhipped, and becauſe it was worſhipped by the Samaritans; and it may be, when Samaria became the chief city, the calf at Bethel might be removed thither, or another ſet up in that city: mine anger is kindled againſt them; the calves at Dan and Bethel, the ſingular before being put for the plural; or againſt the calf of Samaria, and Samaria itſelf; or the inhabitants of it, becauſe of the worſhip of the calf, which was highly provoking to God, it being a robbing him of his glory, and giving it to graven images: how long will it be ere they attain to innocency? or purity[c]; of worſhip, life, and converſation: the words may be rendered thus, how long[d]? for there is a large ſtop there; and this may be a queſtion of the prophet's, aſking how long the wrath of God would burn againſt the people, what would be the duration of it, and when it would end? to which an anſwer is returned, as the words may be tranſlated, they cannot bear purity[e]; of doctrine, of worſhip, of heart, and life; when they can, mine anger will ceaſe burning: or as the Targum, "as long as "they cannot purify themſelves," or be purified; ſo long as they continue in their ſins, in their ſuperſtition and idolatry, and other impieties, and are not purged from them.

ỹ. 6. For from Iſrael was it alſo, &c.] That is, the calf was from Iſrael; it was an invention of theirs, as ſome ſay; they did not borrow it from their neighbours, as they did other idols, but it was their own contrivance: but this does not ſeem to be fact; for the calf, the making of it indeed, was of themſelves, but the worſhip of it they borrowed from the Egyptians; with this difference, the Egyptians worſhipped a living cow or ox, theſe the golden image of a calf: but rather the ſenſe is, that this calf was made by the advice of Iſrael, by the advice of Jeroboam their king, and of their princes, they aſſenting to it, ſo Aben Ezra; or the gold and ſilver of which it was made, was exacted on them, and collected from them, as the Targum and Jarchi; or workmen were employed by them to make it; and ſo it was of them alſo, as any other work that was done by their advice and direction, and at their expence; and therefore could never have any divinity in it, any more than other things they did; tho' this is commonly interpreted as having reſpect to the making of the golden calf by Aaron, that this alſo was of Iſrael as well as that: the workman made it, therefore it is not God; a ſtrong and invincible reaſon this; for ſince the calf was the work of an artificer, of the goldſmith or founder, it could not be God; there could not be deity in it; for a creature cannot make a God, or give that which itſelf has not; if the workman was not God, but a creature, if deity was not in him, he could never give it to a golden image, a lifeleſs ſtatue faſhioned by him: this, one would think, ſhould have been a clear, plain, ſtriking, and convincing argument to them, that their calf was, as the Targum has it, "a deity "in which there was no profit:" but the calf of Samaria ſhall be broken to pieces; or for [f] the calf of Samaria, &c. being another reaſon to prove it could not be God; if the former would not convince them, this ſurely would, when they ſhould ſee it broke to pieces by the enemy, from whom it could not ſave itſelf; and therefore could not be a god that could be of any ſervice to them, or ſave them. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, for the calf of Samaria ſhall become ſpiders webs; and Jerom ſays, he learnt it of a Jew, that the word ſo ſignifies; but his Jew impoſed upon him: it does not appear to be any where ſo uſed, either in the bible, or in any other writings. Kimchi interprets it ſhivers, fragments, broken pieces of any thing. Jarchi ſays it ſignifies, in the Syriac language, beams, planks, and boards, pieces of them; ſo the Targum and Ben Melech from the Rabbins; or rather the duſt which falls from them in ſawing, ſaw-duſt; to duſt as ſmall as that ſhould this calf be reduced, as the golden calf was ground to powder by Moſes, to which, 'tis thought, there is an alluſion.

℣. 7. For they have ſown the wind, and they ſhall reap the whirlwind, &c.] The ſenſe is, the Iſraelites took a great deal of pains in the idolatrous worſhip of the calves, and made a great ſtir, buſtle, and noiſe in it, like the wind; were very vainglorious and oſtentatious, made a great ſhow of religion and devotion, and promiſed themſelves great things from it, peace and plenty, wealth and riches, all proſperity and happineſs, enjoyed by heathen nations; but this was all loſt labour, it was labouring for the wind, or ſowing that; they got nothing by it, or what was worſe than nothing; it proved not only uſeleſs, but hurtful to them; for for their idolatry, and continuance in it, the whirlwind of God's wrath would be raiſed up againſt them, and the Aſſyrian army, like a vehement ſtorm of wind, would ruſh in upon them, and deſtroy them; ſo they that ſow to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption. Gal. vi. 8: it hath no ſtalk; what they ſowed did not riſe up above ground; or if it did, it did not ſpring up in a blade or ſtalk, which was promiſing of fruit; no real good, profit and advantage ſprung from their idolatrous practices: the bud ſhall yield no meal; yea, tho' it riſe up into a ſtalk, and this ſtalk produced ears of corn, yet thoſe ſo thin, that no meal or flour could be got out of them, and ſo of no worth and uſe: and if ſo be it yield; any meal or flour: the ſtrangers ſhall ſwallow it up; the Iſraelites ſhould not be the better for it; it ſhould all come into the hands of foreigners, the Aſſyrian army. The meaning is, that if they did proſper and increaſe in riches, yet they ſhould not long enjoy them themſelves, but be pillaged and ſpoiled of them; as they were by the exactions of Pul, and by the depredations of Salmaneſer, kings of Aſſyria. So the Targum, "if they got ſubſtance, "the nations ſhall ſpoil them of it."

℣. 8. Iſrael is ſwallowed up, &c.] Not only their ſubſtance, but their perſons alſo, the whole nation of them, their whole eſtate civil and eccleſiaſtic: it denotes the utter deſtruction of them by the Aſſyrians, ſo that nothing of them and theirs remained; juſt as any one is ſwallowed up and devoured by a beaſt of prey; the preſent is put for the future, becauſe of the certainty of it: now ſhall they be among the Gentiles as a veſſel wherein is no pleaſure; when Salmaneſer took Samaria, and with it ſwallowed up the whole kingdom of Iſrael, he carried captive the inhabitants of it, and placed them among the nations, in Halath, Habor, by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6. where they lived poor, mean, and abject, and were treated with the utmoſt neglect and contempt; no more regarded than a broken uſeleſs veſſel, or than a veſſel of diſhonour, that is made and uſed for the eaſe of nature, for which no more regard is had than for that ſervice: thus idolaters, who diſhonour God by their idolatries ſhall, ſooner or later, be brought to diſgrace and diſhonour themſelves.

℣. 9. For they are gone up to Aſſyria, &c.] Or, tho' they ſhould go up to Aſſyria [g]; to the king of Aſſyria, to gain his friendſhip, and enter into alliance with him; as when Pul king of Aſſyria came againſt them, Menahem king of Iſrael went forth to meet him, and gave him a thouſand talents of ſilver to be his confederate, and ſtrengthen his kingdom, 2 Kings xv. 19. yet this hindered not, but that Iſrael was at length ſwallowed up by that people, and ſcattered by them among the nations; for this is not to be underſtood of their going captive into the land of Aſſyria, as the Targum interprets it: a wild aſs alone by himſelf; which may be applied either to the king of Aſſyria, and be conſidered as a deſcription of him, to whom Iſrael went for help and friendſhip; who tho' he took their preſent, and made them fair promiſes, yet was perfidious, unſociable, and inhuman, ſtudied only his own advantage, and not their good: or to the Iſraelites that went to him, who were as ſottiſh and ſtupid as the aſs, and as head-ſtrong and unruly as that, and like it luſtful, and impetuous in their luſts; running to and fro for the ſatisfying of them, and taking no advice, nor ſuffering themſelves to be controuled, and being alone, became an eaſy prey to the Aſſyrian lion: or yet they ſhould be as a wild aſs alone by itſelf [h]; notwithſtanding all the methods they took to obtain the friendſhip and alliance of the king of Aſſyria, yet they ſhould be carried captive by him, and dwell in the captivity like a wild aſs in the wilderneſs; and ſo it is to be underſtood here agreeable to Job xxiv. 5. Jer. ii. 24. otherwiſe, as Bochart[i] has proved from various writers, theſe creatures go in flocks: Ephraim hath hired lovers; by giving preſents to the kings of Aſſyria and Egypt to be their allies and confederates, patrons and defenders, 2 Kings xv. 19. and xvii. 3, 4. who are repreſented as their gallants, with whom Ephraim or the ten tribes committed adultery, departing from God their huſband, and liege Lord and King, and from his true worſhip; ſee Ezek. xvi. 26, 28, 33. and xxiii. 4, 5. R. Elias Levita[k] obſerves, that ſome interpret the words, Ephraim made a covenant with lovers.

℣. 10. Yea, though they have hired among the nations, &c.] That is, lovers as before; got into confederacies and alliances with the nations about them, thinking thereby to ſtrengthen their hands, and ſecure themſelves and their kingdom; particular regard may be had to the Egyptians, as diſtinct from the Aſſyrians, whom they privately engaged on their ſide to ſhake off the Aſſyrian yoke, or their obligation to ſend yearly preſents to the Aſſyrian king: now will I gather them; either the Aſſyrians againſt them, to invade their land, beſiege their city, and take and carry them captive; or the Iſraelites in a body into the city of Samaria, and there be cooped up, and taken and deſtroyed, or carried captive; for this is not to be interpreted of the collection of them out of their captivity, as the Targum and Jarchi, but of the gathering of them together for their deſtruction: and they ſhall ſorrow a little for the burden of the king of princes; the tax or tribute impoſed upon them by the king of Aſſyria, whoſe princes were altogether kings, Iſ. x. 8. and who uſed to be called king of kings, being at the head of a monarchy, which had many kings ſubject to it; as the kings of Babylon were afterwards called, Ezek. xxvi. 7. this may refer to the yearly preſent or tribute, which Hoſhea king of Iſrael was obliged to give to the king of Aſſyria, which he was very uneaſy at, and did not pay it, which drew upon him the reſentment of the Aſſyrian king; and that ſorrow and uneaſineſs which that tribute gave the king of Iſrael and his people, were but little and ſmall in compariſon of what they after found; it was the beginning of ſorrows to them: and ſo ſome render the words, they began[l]; that is, to ſorrow and complain a little; or this may refer to their burdens and oppreſſions when in captivity, which were laid upon them by the king of Aſſyria, and the princes, the rulers, and governors of the ſeveral places where the Iſraelites were carried captive: even the few that ſhall remain[m], as ſome render it; and not die by famine, peſtilence, and ſword. Kimchi and Ben Melech think there is a deficiency of the copulative and, between king and princes; which is ſupplied by the Targum, and by the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, which read, the king and princes.

℣. 11. Becauſe Ephraim hath made many altars to ſin, &c.] Not with an intention to commit ſin, but to offer ſacrifice for ſin, and make atonement for it, as they thought; but theſe altars being erected for the ſake of idols, and ſacrifices offered on them to them, they ſinned in ſo doing, and were the cauſe of ſin in others, who were drawn into it by their example; as they were made to ſin, or drawn into it, by Jeroboam their king. Theſe altars were thoſe ſet up at Dan and Bethel, and in all high places, and tops of mountains, where they ſacrificed to idols; and which was contrary to the expreſs command of God, who required ſacrifice only at one place, and on one altar, Deut. xii. 5, 6. typical of the one altar Chriſt, and his alone ſacrifice, who is the only Mediator between God and man; and they are guilty of the ſame crime as Ephraim here, who make uſe of more, or neglect him. Altars ſhall be unto him for ſin; either theſe ſame altars, and the ſacrifices offered on them, ſhall be reckoned and imputed to him as ſins, and ſhall be the cauſe of his condemnation and puniſhment: or, let the altars be unto him for ſin, ſo ſome[n]; ſince he will have them, let him have them, and go on in ſinning, till he has filled up the meaſure of his ſins, and brought on him juſt condemnation; or elſe other altars are meant, even in the land of Aſſyria, where, ſince they were ſo fond of multiplying altars, they ſhould have altars enow to ſin at, whereby their ſins would be increaſed, and their puniſhment for them aggravated. The Targum is, "ſeeing the houſe of "Ephraim hath multiplied altars to ſin, the altars "of their idols ſhall be to them for a ſtumbling-"block," or ruin; ſo ſin is taken in a different ſenſe, both for guilt, and the puniſhment of it.

℣. 12. I have written to him the great things of my law, &c.] Which was given by Moſes to Iſrael at the appointment of God, in which were many commands, holy, juſt, and true; a multiplicity of them, as the Targum, relating to the honour of God, and the good of men; many excellent and uſeful ones of a moral nature, and others of a ceremonial kind; and particularly concerning ſacrifices, ſhewing what they ſhould be, the nature and uſe of them, and where and on what altar they ſhould be offered; and which pointed at the great ſacrifice of the Meſſiah, who is both altar, ſacrifice, and prieſt: and theſe things were frequently inculcated by the prophets, who from time to time were ſent unto them; ſo that the Lord was continually writing theſe things to them by them, as Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech interpret it; hence they could not plead ignorance, and excuſe themſelves on that account. The law ſometimes not only deſigns the law of the decalogue, and the ceremonial law, reſpecting ſacrifices, &c. but all the books of Moſes, in which are written many great and excellent things concerning Chriſt, his perſon, offices, and grace; yea, all the books of the prophets, the whole of ſcripture, which is by inſpiration of God, and is the writing and word of God, and not men, and of which holy men of God were the amanuenſes; and in which many valuable and precious things are recorded, even all the works of God, of creation, providence, and grace; yea, the various thoughts, counſels, and purpoſes of his heart, relating to the ſalvation of men, are tranſcribed here; and the manifold grace of God, or the ſeveral doctrines of grace, are contained herein, eſpecially in the doctrinal and evangelical part of it, which is ſometimes called the law of the Lord, even of Chriſt, and the law or doctrine of faith; ſee Pſ. cxix. 18. Iſ. ii. 3. and xliii. 4. Rom. iii. 27. here are delivered and held forth the great doctrines of a Trinity of Perſons in the Godhead; of the everlaſting love of God to his people, and of their choice in Chriſt before the world began; of the covenant of grace; of the incarnation of Chriſt; of redemption by him; of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and atonement thro' him; of eternal ſalvation by him; theſe things are written, and to be read and referred unto, and obſerved as the rule of faith and practice, and not unwritten traditions, pretended revelations, reveries, and dreams of men; and written they were, not for the uſe of the Iſraelites only under the former diſpenſation, but for the learning and inſtruction of us Gentiles alſo, Rom. iii. 2. and ix. 4. and xv. 4: but they were counted as a ſtrange thing; the laws reſpecting ſacrifices more eſpecially, and the place where they were to be offered, which are the things mentioned in the context, had been ſo long diſregarded and diſuſed by Ephraim or the ten tribes, that when they were put in mind of them by the prophets, they looked upon them as things they had no concern with; as laws that belonged to another people, and not to them: and ſo the great things of divine revelation, the great doctrines of the goſpel, are treated by many as things they have nothing to do with, not at all intereſting to them; yea, as nauſeous and deſpicable things, deſerving their ſcorn and contempt, very ungrateful and diſagreeable, and in this ſenſe ſtrange as Job's breath was to his wife, ch. xix. 17. and alſo as foreign to reaſon and good ſenſe, and what can't be reconciled thereunto: ſo the Athenians charged the doctrines of the apoſtle Paul as ſtrange, irrational and unaccountable, Acts xvii. 20.

℣. 13. They ſacrifice fleſh for the ſacrifices of mine offerings, and eat it, &c.] Or, as to the ſacrifices of mine offerings or gifts, they ſacrifice fleſh, and eat it [o]; theſe ſacrifices, which according to the law ſhould be given to God when they offered them; they did not give them to him, they took them to themſelves, and eat them; they were carnal offerings, and offered with a carnal mind, without faith and piety, without any regard to the glory of God, but merely for the ſake of eating: the Targum interprets it of ſacrifices got by rapine, which God hates, Iſ. lxi. 8: but the Lord accepteth them not; neither the ſacrifices, nor the ſacrificers, but deſpiſed and abhorred them; no ſacrifice was acceptable to God, but what was offered according to law, and where he directed, and in the faith of Chriſt, and thro' him: now will he remember their iniquities, and viſit their ſins; he will not pardon them, but puniſh for them; ſo far were their ſacrifices from making atonement for them, as they expected, they added to the meaſure of their iniquities: they ſhall return into Egypt; either flee thither for refuge, as many of them it ſeems did, when the king of Aſſyria entered their land, and beſieged Samaria; where they lived miſerably, as in exile, and were there buried, and never returned to their own land any more; ſee ch. ix. 3, 6. and Deut. xxviii. 68. or they ſhould be carried captive into Aſſyria, where they ſhould be in a like ſtate of bondage as their fathers were in Egypt. Some render it, they return into Egypt [p]; and conſider it not as their puniſhment, but as their ſin; that when the Lord was about to viſit them for their tranſgreſſions, they being made tributary to the Aſſyrians, inſtead of returning to the Lord, and humbling themſelves before him, they ſent to the king of Egypt for help, 2 Kings xvii. 4.

℣. 14. For Iſrael hath forgotten his maker, &c.] The creator and preſerver of every one of them, and who had raiſed them up to a ſtate and kingdom, and had made them great and rich, and populous, and beſtowed many favours and bleſſings on them; and yet they forgot him, to give him glory, and to ſerve and worſhip him: and buildeth temples; to idols, as the Targum adds; to the calves at Dan and Bethel, at which places, as there were altars ſet up, and prieſts appointed, ſo temples and houſes of high places built to worſhip in; ſee 1 Kings xii. 31, 32. Amos vii. 10, 13: and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities; to protect them from their enemies, which was not unlawful; but that they ſhould put their truſt and confidence in them, and not in the Lord their God, which was their ſin; when they ſaw the ten tribes carried captive by the Aſſyrians, they betook themſelves to ſuch methods for their ſecurity, but were not careful to avoid thoſe ſins which brought ruin upon Iſrael: but I will ſend a fire upon his cities, and it ſhall devour the palaces thereof; that is, an enemy, that ſhould ſet fire to their cities, particularly Jeruſalem their chief city, and burn the temple of the Lord, the palaces of their king and nobles, and all the fine houſes of the great men; which was done many years after this prophecy, by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, Jer. lii. 13.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter is an addreſs to Iſrael or the ten tribes, and contains either a new ſermon, or is a very conſiderable part of the former upon the ſame ſubject, the ſins and puniſhment of that people. It begins with an inſtruction to them, not to rejoice in their proſperity as others did; ſince it would ſoon be at an end, becauſe of their idolatry, which was every where committed, and for which they expected a reward of temporal good things, ℣. 1. but on the contrary they are threatned with famine, with want both of corn and wine, ℣. 2. and with an ejection out of their land into foreign countries; where they ſhould be obliged to eat things unclean by their law, ℣. 3. and where their ſacrifices and ſolemnities ſhould be no more attended to, ℣. 4, 5. yea, where their carcaſes ſhould fall and be buried, whilſt their own country and houſes lay waſte and deſolate, ℣. 6. for whatſoever their fooliſh and mad prophets ſaid to the contrary, who pretended to be with God, and know his will, and were a ſnare to them that gave heed unto them, and brought hatred on them, the time of their puniſhment would certainly come, ℣. 7, 8. and their iniquities would be remembred and viſited; ſeeing their corruptions were deep, like thoſe that appeared in Gibeah, in the days of old, ℣. 9. they acting the ſame ungrateful part their fathers had done, of whom they were a degenerate offspring, ℣. 10. wherefore for theſe, and other offences mentioned, they are threatened with being bereaved of their children, and drove out of their land, to wander among the nations, ℣. 11—17.

℣. 1. Rejoice not, O Iſrael, for joy, as other people, &c.] But rather mourn and lament, ſince ſuch a load of guilt lay upon them, and they had ſo highly provoked the Lord to anger by their ſins, and puniſhment would quickly be inflicted on them; and tho' they might be now in proſperity, thro' Jeroboam's ſucceſs againſt their enemies, who by his victories had enlarged their border; yet they ſhould not rejoice at it, as other people uſed to do on ſuch occaſions, by illumination of houſes, making fires in the ſtreets, feaſting, and the like, ſince this proſperity would be but ſhort lived: or if it was on account of the league made by Menahem with the king of Aſſyria, this would not laſt long; or on account of a good harveſt, they need not ſo much rejoice as they that rejoice in harveſt, ſince there would quickly be a famine among them: or rather it may reſpect rejoicing at their idols, and in their idolatrous worſhip, as other people, which is forbidden; ſuch as inſtituting plays to the honour of them, making feaſts before them, and dancing about them; whatever others might do, who knew not the true God, had not his law before them, nor his prophets ſent to them to make known his will; who had been brought up in idolatry, adhered to their gods, and never forſook them; it ill became Iſrael to do the like. So the words may be rendered, rejoice not, O Iſrael, at an idol [q], or idols, as other people; idolatrous ones; for the word ſignifies ſimilitude [r] or likeneſs, which an idol is: for thou haſt gone a whoring from thy God; playing the harlot with many lovers; committing adultery with ſtocks and ſtones; worſhipping idols, and ſo departing from God, the true God, they had profeſſed to be their God, their God in covenant; who ſtood in the relation of an huſband to them, but they proved treacherous to him, and were guilty of ſpiritual adultery, which is idolatry; and therefore had no cauſe to rejoice as other nations that never left their gods, but to take ſhame to themſelves, and mourn over their ſad departure; ſee ch. i. 3: thou haſt loved a reward upon every corn-floor; alluding to the hire of an harlot, proſtituting herſelf for it on a corn-floor, or any where elſe, and that for a meaſure of corn, or for bread: it may point either at their giving the tithes of their corn-floors to their idols, inſtead of giving them to the Lord; or to their aſcribing their plenty of corn, and all good things, to their worſhip of them, which they called their rewards, or hires their lovers gave them, Hoſ. ii. 5, 12. or to their erecting of altars on their corn-floors; as David erected one to the true God on the threſhing-floor of Araunah, 2 Sam. xxiv. 24, 25. and which they might do, either by way of thankſgiving for a good harveſt, which they imputed to them; or in order to obtain one, but in vain, as follows. The Targum is, "for you have erred from the " worſhip of your God; you have loved to ſerve " idols on all corn-floors."

℣. 2. The floor and the wine-preſs ſhall not feed them, &c.] Though their expectations from their worſhip of idols were large, they ſhould find themſelves miſtaken; for there would not be a ſufficiency of corn on the floor, nor of wine in the preſs, to ſupply them with what was neceſſary for their ſuſtenance; either through a blaſt upon their fields and vineyards, or through the invaſion of an enemy, treading them down, and ſpoiling and foraging them: or elſe ſuppoſing a ſufficient quantity of corn and wine got in; yet thoſe bleſſings ſhould be either turned into curſes, or carried off by the enemy, that they ſhould do them no good; or if they enjoyed them, yet they ſhould receive no nouriſhment from them; but ſhould become lean, and look like ſtarved and famiſhing creatures in the midſt of plenty; by all which it would appear, that their idols could neither give them a ſufficiency of proviſions, nor make thoſe nouriſhing to them they had: and the new wine ſhall fail in her; in the congregation or land of Iſrael: or, ſhall lie to her [s]; ſhall not anſwer their expectations, but diſappoint and deceive them; whereas they expected great plenty from the promiſing proſpect of the vines, theſe by one means or another ſhould be deſtroyed, ſo that they would yield but little, and baulk them; ſee Hab. iii. 17. Hagg. i. 6, 10, 11. and ii. 16.

℣. 3. They ſhall not dwell in the Lord's land, &c.] The land of Iſrael or Canaan; which, tho' all the earth is the Lord's, was peculiarly his; which he had choſe for himſelf, and for his people; where he had his temple, and cauſed his Shekinah or divine majeſty to dwell in a very ſpecial manner, and where his worſhip and ſervice were performed. So the Targum calls it the land of the Shekinah or majeſty of the Lord. Sometimes it is called Immanuel's land, where the Meſſiah Immanuel, God with us, was to be born, and dwell, and where he did. Kimchi wrongly interprets this of Jeruſalem only; and others of Judea; but it deſigns the whole land of promiſe, which God gave by promiſe to the fathers of this people, and put them in the poſſeſſion of, the tenure of which they held by their obedience; but they not living according to his will, and in obedience to his laws, who was Lord of the land, ſole proprietor and governor of it, he turned them out of it, and would not ſuffer them to continue any longer in it; and which was a great puniſhment indeed, to be driven out of ſuch a land, a land flowing with milk and honey, and where they had been favoured with privileges and bleſſings of every kind. But Ephraim ſhall return to Egypt; or the ten tribes; that is, ſome of them, who ſhould flee thither for refuge and ſuſtenance; when the Aſſyrian ſhould invade their land, and beſiege Samaria, they ſhould go thither again, where their anceſtors had formerly been in a ſtate of bondage: this is propheſied of them, Deut. xxviii. 68: and they ſhall eat unclean things in Aſſyria; that is, Ephraim or the ten tribes, the far greater part of them, ſhould be taken captive, and carried into Aſſyria, and there eat food which by their law was unclean, as things ſacrificed to idols, ſwines fleſh, and many others; or food that was not fit for men to eat, which nature abhorred; ſuch bread as Ezekiel was bid to make and eat, ch. iv. 9, 12, 13. This may be underſtood even of them that went to Egypt for help againſt the Aſſyrians, or for ſhelter from them, or for food to eat in the time of famine; who ſhould be brought back again, and carried into Aſſyria, Aſſyria, and there live a miſerable and an uncomfortable life; who had been uſed to enjoy corn and wine, and plenty of all good things, to which theſe unclean things may be oppoſed.

℣. 4. They ſhall not offer wine-offerings to the Lord, &c.] This is either a threatening of the ceſſation of ſacrifices, being carried into Aſſyria, a ſtrange land, where it was not lawful to offer ſacrifice, there being no temple nor altar to offer in or at; and ſo as they would not offer to the Lord when they ſhould, now they ſhall not if they would: or this reſpects not the future time of their exile, but their preſent time now, as Kimchi obſerves; and ſo is a reproof of their preſent ſacrifices, which are forbidden to be obſerved; becauſe they were offered not in faith, nor in ſincerity, but hypocritically, and before their calves: beſides, the future tenſe is ſometimes put for the preſent; and this way goes Schmidt. Neither ſhall their ſacrifices be pleaſing unto him; unto the Lord, if they were offered; and is a reaſon why they ſhould not, becauſe unacceptable to him, and that for the reaſons before-mentioned: their ſacrifices ſhall be unto them as the bread of mourners, all that eat thereof ſhall be polluted; as all that eat of the bread of ſuch who were mourning for their dead, that partook of their funeral feaſts, or eat bread with them at any time during their mourning, were defiled thereby according to the Levitical law, and were unqualified for ſervice, Lev. xxi. 1. Deut. xxvi. 14. ſo the ſacrifices of theſe people being offered up with a wicked mind, inſtead of atoning for their ſins, more and more defiled them; and inſtead of being acceptable to God, were abominable to him: for their bread for their ſoul ſhall not come into the houſe of the Lord; in the captivity there was no houſe of the Lord for them to bring it into; and when in their own land, they did not bring their offerings to the houſe of the Lord at Jeruſalem, as they ſhould have done, but offered them before their calves at Dan and Bethel; and which is the thing complained of, that the bread for their ſouls, that is, the offerings accompanied with the minchah or bread-offering, for the expiation of the ſins of their ſouls, were not brought into the houſe of the Lord (the future for the preſent); or elſe this being the caſe, their ſacrifices were reckoned by the Lord as no other than common bread, which they eat for the ſuſtenance of their lives.

℣. 5. What will ye do in the ſolemn day, and in the day of the feaſt of the Lord?] Since their ſacrifices now were ſo diſagreeable and diſpleaſing to the Lord, and ſo unavailable to themſelves; what would they do when in captivity, in the ſolemn day, the ſeventh day of the week, appointed by the Lord for reſt and religious worſhip; and in the firſt day of the month, which alſo was to be ſolemnly obſerved, by offering ſacrifice, &c. and on feaſt-days of the Lord's inſtituting, as the feaſts of the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles? ſeeing thoſe that carried and held them captive, would not allow them time for ſuch ſolemnities; nor would they be furniſhed with proper ſacrifices; nor could they be accommodated with a proper place to offer them at; nor be able, in a ſtrange land, and under hardſhips and miſeries, to expreſs that joy that is ſuitable to ſuch occaſions: thus ſhould they learn by ſad experience, the want of thoſe means and opportunities of ſerving the Lord, which in their own land they rejected and deſpiſed. Jarchi and Kimchi interpret this of the deſtruction of Iſrael, and of puniſhment inflicted on them at the time appointed by the Lord; and which would be a ſolemn time, a feaſt with the Lord, to which he ſhould invite their enemies, and they ſhould ſpill their blood as the blood of ſacrifices; and when he would diſplay the glory of his juſtice, truth, and faithfulneſs, before all the world. And it is aſked, what will you do then? whither will you flee for help? or what ſacrifice can you offer up to the Lord to atone for ſin, or appeaſe his wrath? will you be able to rejoice then? no, your joy will be turned into mourning; ſee Iſ. x. 3. and xxxiv. 6.

℣. 6. For lo, they are gone, becauſe of deſtruction, &c.] That is, many of the people of Iſrael were gone out of their own land to others, particularly to Egypt, becauſe of the deſtruction that was coming upon them, and to avoid it; becauſe of the Aſſyrian army which invaded their land, and beſieged Samaria, and threatened them with entire deſtruction; and upon which a famine enſued, and which is thought by Kimchi to be here particularly meant. Egypt ſhall gather them up; being dead; for they ſhall die there, perhaps by the peſtilence, and never return to their own country, as they flattered themſelves; and they ſhall make preparations for their funeral: Memphis ſhall bury them; or they ſhall be buried there; which was a principal city in Egypt, here called Moph, in Iſ. xix. 13. Noph. It was the metropolis of upper Egypt, and the ſeat of the Egyptian kings. In it, as Plutarch ſays [t], was the ſepulchre of Oſiris; and ſome ſay its name ſo ſignifies. Near to it were the famous pyramids, as Strabo [u] ſays, ſuppoſed to be built for the ſepulture of them. Herodotus [w] places theſe pyramids at Memphis, and ſays there were three of them; the largeſt had ſeveral ſubterraneous chambers in it; the next in bigneſs had none; the ſmalleſt was covered with Ethiopic marble. Strabo, in the place referred to, ſpeaks of many pyramids near it, of which three were very remarkable, and expreſly ſays they were the burying places of the kings. Diodorus [x] agrees with theſe as to the number of them, but places them an hundred and twenty furlongs from Memphis. Pliny [y] places them between Memphis and the Delta, ſix miles from Memphis; pretty near to which is Strabo's account, who in the above place ſays, they ſtood forty furlongs, or five miles from the city. Near it was the lake of Charon or Acheruſia, over which he ferried dead bodies from Memphis to the pyramids, or to the plains of the mummies, the Elyſian fields. Now ſince this was ſo famous for the burying places of kings, there may be an alluſion to it in this expreſſion. Here alſo were buried their deities, the Apis or ox when it died. The pleaſant places for their ſilver, nettles ſhall poſſeſs them; ſuch beautiful edifices as were made for the repoſitories or treaſure-houſes for their ſilver; or were built or purchaſed at great expence of ſilver; or were decorated with it; now ſhould lie in ruins, and be like a waſte, deſert, and deſolate place, all over-run with nettles, and uninhabited: briars ſhall be in their tabernacles; their dwelling-houſes, which being demoliſhed, briars ſhall grow upon the ground where they ſtood, and over-ſpread it, another token of deſolation. The Targum interprets it of living creatures, beaſts of prey, that ſhould dwell there, wild cats particularly.

℣. 7. The days of viſitation are come, the days of recompence are come, &c.] In which the Lord would puniſh the people of Iſrael for their ſins, and reward them in a righteous manner, according as their evil works deſerved; which time being fixed and appointed by him, are called days; and theſe, becauſe near at hand, are ſaid to be come; and this is repeated for the certainty of it: Iſrael ſhall know it; by ſad experience, that theſe days are come; and ſhall acknowledge the truth of the divine predictions, and the righteouſneſs of God in his judgments. Schultens[z], from the uſe of the phraſe in the Arabic language, interprets it of Iſrael's ſuffering puniſhment; with which agrees the Septuagint verſion, Iſrael ſhall be afflicted, or it ſhall go ill with him; and to the ſame purpoſe the Arabic verſion: the prophet is a fool; ſo Iſrael ſaid, before thoſe days came, of a true prophet of the Lord, that he was a fool for propheſying of evil things, but now they ſhall find it otherwiſe. So the Targum, "they of the houſe of Iſrael ſhall know that "they who had propheſied to them were true prophets;" but rather this is to be underſtood of falſe prophets, who, when the day of God's viſitation ſhall come on Iſrael in a way of wrath and vengeance, will appear both to themſelves and others to be fools, for propheſying good things to them, when evil was at hand: the ſpiritual man is mad; he that was truly ſo, and propheſied under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God, was accounted a madman for ſpeaking againſt the idolatry of the times, and foretelling the judgments of God that would come upon the nation for it; but now it would be manifeſt, that not he, but ſuch who pretended to be ſpiritual men, and to be directed and dictated by the Spirit of God, when they promiſed the people peace, tho' they walked after the imagination of their hearts, were the real madmen; who purſued the frenſies and fanſies of their own minds to the deception of themſelves and the people, and called theſe the revelations of God, and pretended they came from the Spirit of God: for the multitude of thine iniquities, and the great hatred; that is, either thoſe evil days came upon them for their manifold ſins and tranſgreſſions, which were hateful to God, and the cauſe of his hatred of them; or they were ſuffered to give heed to thoſe fooliſh and mad prophets, becauſe of their many ſins, eſpecially idolatry; and becauſe of their great hatred of God, and of his true prophets, and of his laws and ordinances, of his word, will and worſhip, and of one another; God gave them up to a reprobate mind, to a judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, to believe a lie, and whatſoever thoſe falſe prophets declared unto them, becauſe they did not like to retain him in their knowledge, to walk according to his law, and to believe his prophets. The Targum is, "but the falſe prophets beſotted them, ſo as to increaſe thy tranſgreſſion, and ſtrengthen thine iniquities."

℣. 8. The watchman of Ephraim was with my God, &c.] Formerly the watchmen of Ephraim, or the prophets of Iſrael, were with the true God, whom the prophet calls his God; as Elijah and Eliſha, who had communion and intimacy with him; had revelations and inſtructions from him; and were under the direction and inſpiration of his Spirit, and propheſied in his name things according to his will, and for the good of his people: or, the watchman of Ephraim ſhould be with my God; on his ſide, and promote his worſhip and ſervice, his honour and intereſt; and give the people warning from him, having heard the word at his mouth; but now they were not with him, nor for him, nor did as they ſhould: or one that bore this character of a watchman in the ten tribes, pretended to be ſuch a one, and would be thought to be with God, and to have his mind and will, and to be ſincere for his glory: but the prophet is a ſnare of a fowler in all his ways; the falſe prophet, the ſame with the watchman, inſtead of guiding and directing Ephraim in the right way in which he ſhould go, lays ſnares for him in all the ways he takes, to lead him wrong, and draw him into ſin, particularly into idolatry, both by his doctrine and example: and hatred in the houſe of his God; and ſo became deteſtable and execrable in the houſe of his own god, the calf at Bethel, in the temple there; propheſying ſuch things as in the event proved falſe, and drawing into ſuch practices as brought on ruin and deſolation. The Targum interprets it, of laying ſnares for their prophets, their true prophets; and Kimchi and Jarchi, of ſlaying Zechariah the prophet in the temple.

℣. 9. They have deeply corrupted themſelves, as in the days of Gibeah, &c.] Not the falſe prophets and watchmen only; but rather Ephraim, or the ten tribes, thro' their means became extremely corrupt in principle and practice; they had moſt ſadly degenerated, and were deeply ſunk and immerſed in all manner of wickedneſs, and rooted in it, and continued obſtinate and incorrigible, ſo that there was no hope of reformation among them; they had got to as great a pitch of wickedneſs, and were guilty of the like uncleanneſs, lewdneſs, barbarity and cruelty, as were acted by the men of Gibeah, with reſpect to the Levite and his concubine, Judg. xix. for Gibeah of Benjamin is here meant, where the people aſked a king, and rebelled againſt the words of the prophet, as ſome in Jarchi interpret it: therefore he will remember their iniquity, he will viſit their ſins; that is, God, my God, as the prophet calls him in the preceding verſe, will not forgive and forget their ſins; pardon being often expreſſed by a non-remembrance of ſins; but will make enquiry after them, and viſit them in a way of wrath and vengeance, and puniſh for them as they deſerve; they being obſtinate and impenitent, and perſiſting in their ſins, like the men of Gibeah and Benjamin.

℣. 10. I found Iſrael like grapes in the wilderneſs, &c.] Not Jacob or Iſrael perſonally, with the few ſouls that went down with him into Egypt; for theſe died in Egypt, and never returned from thence, or came into the wilderneſs to be found; nor Iſrael in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the objects of electing, redeeming and calling grace; tho' it may be accommodated to them, who in their nature-ſtate are as in a wilderneſs, in a forlorn, hopeleſs, helpleſs and uncomfortable condition; in which the Lord finds them, ſeeking them by his Son in redemption, and by his Spirit in effectual vocation; when they are like grapes, not in themſelves, being deſtitute of all good, and having nothing but ſin and wickedneſs in them; for whatever good thing is in them at converſion, it is not found, but put there; but the ſimile may ſerve to expreſs the great and unmerited love of God to his people, who are as agreeable to him, as grapes in the wilderneſs to a thirſty traveller; and in whom he takes great delight and complacency, notwithſtanding ſtanding all their ſinfulneſs and unworthineſs; and beſtows abundance of grace upon them, and makes them like cluſters of grapes indeed; and ſuch were many of the Jewiſh fathers, and who are here intended, even the people of Iſrael brought out of Egypt into the wilderneſs of Arabia, thro' which they travelled to Canaan: here the Lord found them, took notice and care of them, provided for them, and protected them, and gave them many tokens of his love and affection; ſee Deut. xxxii. 10. and they were as acceptable to him, and he took as much delight and pleaſure in them, as one travelling thro' the deſerts of Arabia, or any other deſert, would rejoice at finding a vine laden with cluſters of grapes. The deſign of this metaphor is not to compare Iſrael with grapes, becauſe of any goodneſs in them, and as a reaſon of the Lord's delight in them; for neither for quantity nor quality were they like them, being few, and very obſtinate and rebellious; but to ſet forth the great love of God to them, and his delight and complacency in them; which aroſe and ſprung, not from any excellency in them, but from his own ſovereign good will and pleaſure; ſee Deut. vii. 6, 7, 8. and ix. 5, 6. and x. 15: I ſaw your fathers as the firſt ripe in the fig-tree at her firſt time; the Lord looked upon their anceſtors, when they were ſettled as a people, in their civil and church-ſtate, upon their being brought out of Egypt, with as much pleaſure as a man beholds the firſt ripe fig his fig-tree produces after planting it, or the firſt it produces in the ſeaſon, the fig-tree bearing twice in a year; but the firſt is commonly moſt deſired, as being moſt rare and valuable; and ſuch were the Iſraelites to the Lord at firſt, Mic. vii. 1. Jer. ii. 2. This is obſerved to aggravate their ingratitude to the Lord, which ſoon diſcovered itſelf; and to ſuggeſt that their poſterity were like them, who, tho' they had received many favours from the Lord, as tokens of his affection to them, and delight in them; yet behaved in a moſt ſhocking and ſhameful manner to him: but they went to Baal-peor; or, went into Baal-peor [a]; committed whoredom with that idol even in the wilderneſs where the Lord found them, and ſhewed ſo much regard to them; this refers to the hiſtory in Numb. xxv. Baal-peor is by ſome interpreted, the lord, or god of opening; and was ſo called, either from his opening his mouth in prophecy, as Ainſworth [b] thinks, as Nebo a god of Babylon had his name from propheſying; or from his open mouth, with which this idol was figured, as a Jewiſh writer [c] obſerves; whoſe worſhippers took him to be inſpired, and opened their mouths to receive the divine afflatus from him: others interpret it, the lord, or god of nakedneſs; becauſe his worſhippers expoſed to him their poſteriors in a ſhameful manner, and even thoſe parts which ought to be covered; and this is the ſenſe of moſt of the Jewiſh writers. So in the Jeruſalem Talmud [d], the worſhip of Peor is repreſented in like manner, and as moſt filthy and obſcene, as it is by Jarchi [e], who ſeems to have taken his account from thence; and even Maimonides [f] ſays, it was a known thing, that the worſhip of Peor was by uncovering of the nakedneſs; and this he makes to be the reaſon why God commanded the prieſts to make themſelves breeches to cover their nakedneſs in the time of ſervice, and why they might not go up to the altar by ſteps, that their nakedneſs might not be diſcovered; in ſhort, they took this Peor to be no other than a Priapus; and in this they are followed by many chriſtians, particularly by Jerom on this place, who obſerves, that Baal-peor is the god of the Moabites, whom we may call Priapus; and ſo Iſidore [g] ſays, there was an idol in Moab called Baal, on mount Fegor, whom the Latins call Priapus, the god of gardens; but Mr. Selden [h] rejects this notion, and contends that Peor is either the name of a mountain, of which Iſidore juſt now mentioned ſpeaks; ſee Numb. xxiii. 28. where Baal was worſhipped, and ſo was called from thence Baal-peor; as Jupiter Olympius, Capitolinus, &c. is ſo called from the mountains of Olympus, Capitolinus, &c. where divine honours are paid him; or elſe the name of a man, of ſome great perſon in high eſteem, who was deified by the Moabites, and worſhipped by them after his death; and ſo Baal-peor may be the ſame as lord Peor; and it ſeems moſt likely that Peor is the name of a man, at leaſt of an idol, ſince we read of Beth-peor, or the temple of Peor, in Deut. xxxiv. 6: and ſeparated themſelves unto that ſhame; they ſeparated themſelves from God and his worſhip, and joined themſelves to that ſhameful idol, and worſhipped it, thought by many, as before obſerved, to be the Priapus of the Gentiles, in whoſe worſhip the greateſt of obſcenities were uſed, not fit to be named; ſo that this epithet of ſhame is with great propriety given it, and aggravates the ſin of Iſrael, that ſuch a people ſhould be guilty of ſuch filthy practices; tho' Baal, without ſuppoſing him to be a Priapus, may be called that ſhame; for Baal and Boſheth, which ſignifies ſhame, are ſometimes put for each other; ſo Jerub-baal, namely Gideon, is called Jerub-beſheth, Judg. viii. 35. 2 Sam. xi. 21. and Eſh-baal appears plainly to be the ſame ſon of Saul, whoſe name was Iſh-boſheth, 1 Chron. viii. 33. 2 Sam. ii. 10. and Merib-baal is clearly the ſame with Mephi-boſheth, 1 Chron. viii. 34. 2 Sam. ix. 6. yea, it may be obſerved, that the prophets of Baal are called in the Septuagint verſion of 1 Kings xviii. 25. προφητας της αισχυνης, the prophets of that ſhame; every idol, and all idolatry being ſhameful, and the cauſe of ſhame, ſooner or later, to their worſhippers; eſpecially when things obſcene were done in their religious rites, as were in many of the heathens, in which the Jews followed them; ſee Jer. iii. 24, 25. and xi. 13: and their abominations were according as they loved; or, as they loved them, the daughters of Moab; for it was thro' their impure love of them, that they were drawn into theſe abominations, or to worſhip idols, which are often called abominations; or, as Joſeph Kimchi reads the words, and gives the ſenſe of them, and they were abominations as I loved them; that is, according to the meaſure of the love wherewith I loved them, ſo they were abominations in mine eyes; they were as deteſtable now, as they were loved before.

℣. 11. As for Ephraim, their glory ſhall flee away like a bird, &c.] That is, ſuddenly, ſwiftly and irrecoverably, and never return more; which ſome underſtand of God their glory, and of his departure from them, as in the next verſe; others of their wealth and riches, and whatever was glorious and valuable among them, which ſhould fly away from them in a moment, when taken and carried captive; rather their numerous poſterity, in which they were very fruitful, according to their name, and in which they gloried, as children are the glory of their parents, Prov. xvii. 6. which ſenſe agrees with what follows, and which explains the manner of their fleeing away, and the periods of it: from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception; that is, ſome of them, as ſoon as they were born; others whilſt in the womb, being abortives; or however, when they ſhould, or as ſoon as they did, come from thence; and others, as ſoon as conceived, never come to any thing; or not conceived at all, as Kimchi interprets it, the women being barren.

℣. 12. Tho' they bring up their children, &c.] Tho' this be the caſe of ſome, as to be conceived, carried in the womb to the full time, and be born, and brought up to a more adult age, and appear very promiſing to live, and perpetuate the names of their fathers and their families: yet will I bereave them; their parents of them, by the ſword, famine, peſtilence, or by carrying them captive into a foreign country: that there ſhall not be a man left; in the whole land of Iſrael, but all ſhall be deſtroyed, or carried captive: or, from men[i]; that is, either from being men, as the Targum; tho' they are brought up to ſome ripeneſs, and a more adult age than others, yet arrive not to ſuch a time and age as to be called men, as Kimchi obſerves; or from being among men, being either taken away by death, or removed from the ſociety of men to live among beaſts, and to be ſlaves like them: yea, wo alſo to them, when I depart from them; withdraw my preſence, favour, and protection from them; or remove my Shekinah from them, as the Targum; and leave them to the ſpoil and cruelty of their enemies, which would be a greater calamity and judgment than the former. The Septuagint, and ſo Theodotion render it, wo is to them, my fleſh is of them; which ſome of the ancients interpret of the incarnation of Chriſt, not conſidering that the words are ſpoken of Ephraim, or the ten tribes; whereas, the Meſſiah was to ſpring, and did, from the family of David, and tribe of Judah.

℣. 13. Ephraim, as I ſaw Tyrus, is planted in a pleaſant place, &c.] That is, either as the city of Tyre, a very famous city in Phœnicia, was ſituated in a very pleaſant place by the ſea, and abounded in wealth and riches, and was well fortified, and ſeemed ſecure from all danger, and from all enemies; ſo Ephraim or the ten tribes, the kingdom of Iſrael, were in like circumſtances, equal to Tyre, as the Targum paraphraſes it, in proſperity and plenty; yet, as the prophet in the viſion of prophecy ſaw that Tyre, notwithſtanding all its advantages by power and wealth, by art and nature, would be deſtroyed, firſt by Nebuchadnezzar, and then by Alexander; ſo by the ſame prophetic ſpirit he ſaw that Ephraim or the ten tribes, notwithſtanding their preſent proſperity, and the ſafety and ſecurity they thought themſelves in, yet ſhould be given up to ruin and deſtruction by the hand of the Aſſyrians; or it may be rendered thus, Ephraim as, or when I ſaw it, unto Tyre[k]; reaching unto that place, and bordering upon it, as part of the ten tribes did; I ſaw it, I obſerved it, took a ſurvey of it, and I perceived it was planted in a pleaſant place; like a tree planted in a fruitful ſoil, well rooted, and in a flouriſhing condition; ſo were they, abounding with all good things, and having a numerous offspring; from all which they promiſed themſelves much happineſs for ages to come: but Ephraim ſhall bring forth his children to the murderer; to ſacrifice them to Moloch, as ſome; ſo the Targum, "they of the houſe of Ephraim have ſinned in ſlaying their children to the ſervice of idols;" with which Jarchi agrees; but rather the ſenſe is, with Kimchi, and others, when their enemies ſhall come againſt them, as the Aſſyrian army, they ſhall go out with their ſons to fight with them, and theſe ſhall be deſtroyed and murdered by them; it will be like leading lambs to the ſlaughter to be butchered and devoured by them.

℣. 14. Give them, O Lord: what wilt thou give them? &c.] The prophet foreſeeing the butchery and deſtruction of their children, his heart aked for them; and to ſhew his tender affection for this people, was deſirous of putting up a ſupplication for them; but was at a loſs what to aſk, their ſins were ſo many, and ſo aggravated, and the decree gone forth for their deſtruction: or, give them what thou wilt give them[l]; ſo Jarchi, Kimchi, and Abarbinel, what thou haſt threatened before to give them, ℣. 11. don't give them to be butchered and murdered before the eyes of their parents by their enemies; but rather let them die in the womb, or as ſoon as born, ſo it follows: give them a miſcarrying womb, and dry breaſts; the latter being a ſign of the former, as phyſicians obſerve; or the words may be rendered disjunctively, give them one, or the other; that is, to the wives of the people of Iſrael, if they conceive, let them miſcarry, prove abortive, rather than bring forth children to be deſtroyed in ſuch a cruel manner by murderers; or if they bear them to the birth, and bring them forth, let their breaſts be dried up, and afford no milk for their nouriſhment; and ſo die for lack of it, rather than fall into the hands of their mercileſs enemies: thus, of two evils, the prophet chooſes and prays for the leaſt. Some interpret this as a prediction of what would be, or an imprecation of it; but it rather ſeems a pathetic wiſh, flowing from the tender affection of the prophet, judging ſuch a caſe to be preferable to the former; ſee Luke xxiii. 29. tho' the other ſenſe ſeems beſt to agree with what follows, and which is favoured by the Targum, "give thou, O Lord, the recompence of their works; give them a miſcarrying womb and dry breaſts."

℣. 15. All their wickedneſs is in Gilgal, &c.] A place in the ten tribes, where the covenant of circumciſion was renewed in Joſhua's time; the firſt paſſover was kept in the land of Canaan, and the people of Iſrael eat the firſt fruits of the land; where the tabernacle was for a while, and ſacrifices were offered up to the Lord: but now things were otherwiſe; all manner of iniquity was committed in it, eſpecially idolatry; for which it was choſen by idolaters, becauſe it had formerly been famous for religious worſhip: here, tho' not to the excluſion of other places, as Dan and Bethel, was the above ſin committed; here it begun and ſpread itſelf, and had the meaſure of it filled up; here began the firſt departure from the Lord, rejecting him, and aſking a king in the days of Samuel, as Kimchi and Abarbinel obſerve; and here were high places and altars erected for idolatry; and this is now the reaſon of the above threatnings of God, and the predictions of the prophet. Grotius thinks there is a myſtical ſenſe in the words, and that they have reference to the ſin of the Jews in crucifying Chriſt on Golgotha; which, in the Syriac language, is the ſame with Gilgal; but both the people ſpoken of, and the place are different: for there I hated them; or therefore [m], becauſe they ſinned ſo greatly againſt him in a place where they had formerly worſhipped him; their ſacrifices there, inſtead of being acceptable, were the more abominable to him, as they were offered there where his tabernacle once was, and ſacrifices were offered to him according to his will: for the wickedneſs of their doings I will drive them out of mine houſe; not out of the houſe of my ſanctuary, or the temple, as the Targum; unleſs this is to be underſtood of loſing the opportunity of going to the temple at Jeruſalem, which thoſe of the ten tribes had whilſt they were in their own land, which the few godly perſons among them then took, and made uſe of; but now their idolatry increaſing in Gilgal, and other places, they ſhould be carried captive; and if they would, could not go up to the houſe of the Lord, and worſhip him there: or rather this may deſign, either the viſible church of God, out of which they would be now ejected; or their native country, where they had been, as the family and houſehold of God; but now ſhould be ſo no more, but as afterwards ſaid, wanderers among the nations, and no more reckoned as belonging to the Lord, and under his paternal care and protection: I will love them no more; which is not to be underſtood of the ſpecial love and favour the Lord bears to his own people in Chriſt, which is everlaſting and unchangeable; but of his general and providential favour and regard unto theſe people, which he had manifeſted in beſtowing many great and good things upon them; but now would do ſo no more; he would do nothing to them, or for them, that looked like love, or be interpreted of it, but all the reverſe; and by his behaviour to them, ſhow that they were the objects of his averſion and hatred; and this was to continue, and has continued, and will continue unto the time of their converſion in the latter day, when all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. xi. 26: all their princes are revolters; from God and his worſhip, who ſhould have ſet a good example to the people; and ſince theſe were perverſe and rebellious againſt God, it is no wonder that the people in general apoſtatized. This is to be underſtood of their king as ſupreme, and all ſubordinate rulers; of their judges and magiſtrates of every order; of all their governors, both civil and eccleſiaſtic; and not at Gilgal only, but in all the land. There is an elegant paronomaſia [n] in the original, the beauty of which cannot be expreſſed in the tranſlation.

℣. 16. Ephraim is ſmitten, &c.] The people of the ten tribes, the kingdom of Iſrael, who had been like a tree planted in a pleaſant place, ℣. 13. and were in very flouriſhing circumſtances in the times of Jeroboam the ſecond; but now were like a tree ſmitten with thunder and lightning, or hail ſtones, and beat to pieces; or with the heat of the ſun, or with blaſting winds, or by worms; as in the ſucceeding reigns, by the judgments of God upon them; by civil wars, conſpiracies, and murders among themſelves; and by the exactions of Pul and depredations of Tiglath-Pileſer kings of Aſſyria; and quickly would be ſmitten again; the preſent being put for the future, becauſe of the certainty of it, as uſual in prophetic writings; or be utterly deſtroyed by Salmaneſer, and be no more a kingdom: their root is dried up; like the root of a tree that has no ſap and moiſture in it, and can communicate none to the body and branches of the tree, which in courſe muſt die. This may be underſtood of their king, princes, nobles and chief men, the ſupport and ſtrength of the nations; and of parents and heads of families, cut off by one judgment or another: they ſhall bear no fruit; as a tree thus ſmitten, and its root dried up, cannot; ſo neither this being their caſe, there would be none to beget, nor any to bear children, and bring them forth; called the fruit of the womb, in alluſion to the fruit of trees: yea, tho' they bring forth; tho' ſome of them ſhould be ſpared, women with their huſbands, and ſhould procreate children: yet will I ſlay even the beloved fruit of their womb; their children they ſhould bring forth, on whom their affections were ſtrongly ſet; and the rather, as they were but few, and from whom they had raiſed expectations of building up their families; even theſe the Lord would ſlay, or ſuffer to be ſlain, either by the ſword of the enemy, or by famine, or by peſtilence, or by ſome diſeaſe or another; ſo that there ſhould be no hope of a future poſterity, at leaſt of no great number of them.

℣. 17. My God will caſt them away, &c.] With loathſomneſs and contempt, having ſinned againſt him, and done ſuch abominable things; caſt them out of their own land, as men not fit to live in it; caſt them out of his ſight, as not able to endure them; caſt them away, as unprofitable and good for nothing; reject them from being his people; no more own them in the relation they had ſtood in to him; nor ſhew them any more favour, at leaſt until the converſion of them in the times of the Meſſiah. Theſe are the words of the prophet, who calls the Lord his God, whom he worſhipped, by whom he was ſent, and in whoſe name he propheſied; and this in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from, Iſrael, who worſhipped other gods, and who had caſt off the true God, and were now, or would be, caſt away by him, and ſo no longer their God: becauſe they did not hearken unto him; to his word, as the Targum; to him ſpeaking by his prophets, to the inſtructions, admonitions, threatnings and predictions delivered to them from him; they did not obey his law, regard his will, or attend his worſhip; which was the cauſe of the rejection of them, and a juſt one: and they ſhall be wanderers among the nations; being diſperſed by the Aſſyrians in the ſeveral nations of the world, where they were fugitives and vagabonds; as their poſterity are to this day.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter is of the ſame argument with the former, and others before that; ſetting forth the ſins of the ten tribes, and threatning them with the judgments of God for them; and exhorting them to repentance, and works of righteouſneſs. They are charged with unfruitfulneſs and ingratitude; increaſing in idolatry, as they increaſed in temporal good things, ℣. 1. with a divided heart, and with irreverence of God, and their king; and with falſe ſwearing, covenant-breaking, and injuſtice, ℣. 2, 3, 4. and are threatened with a removal of their king, and with the deſtruction of their idols, and places of idolatry, which ſhould cauſe fear in the common people, and mourning among the prieſts, ℣. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8. It is obſerved, that their ſin had been of long continuance, tho' the Lord had been kind and good unto them, in chaſtizing them in love, giving them good laws, ſending his prophets to exhort them to repentance and reformation, but all in vain, ℣. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. wherefore they are threatened with the ſpoiling of their fortreſſes, the deſtruction of the people, and the cutting off of their king, ℣. 14, 15.

℣. 1. Iſrael is an empty vine, &c.] The people of Iſrael are often compared to a vine, and ſuch a one from whence fruit might be expected, being planted in a good ſoil, and well took care of; ſee Pſ. lxxx. 8. Iſ. v. 1, 2, 3. Jer. ii. 21. but proved an empty vine, empty of fruit; not of temporal good things, for a multitude of ſuch fruit it is afterwards ſaid to have; but of ſpiritual fruit, of the fruit of grace, and of good works, being deſtitute of the Spirit of God, and his grace; and having no ſpiritual moiſture, was incapable of bringing forth good fruit: or, an emptying vine [o]; that caſts its fruit before it is ripe; theſe people, what fruit they had, they made an ill uſe of it; even of their temporal good things; they emptied themſelves of their wealth and riches, by ſending preſents, or paying tribute to foreign princes for their alliance, friendſhip and help; or by conſuming it on their idols, and in their idolatrous worſhip. The Targum renders it, "a ſpoiled vine [p];" ſpoiled by their enemies, who robbed them of their wealth and riches, and trampled them under foot. The Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow that, underſtand it in a ſenſe quite the reverſe, rendring it, a flouriſhing vine; putting forth branches, leaves, and fruit; and which the learned Pocock confirms from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language: but then it follows, he bringeth forth fruit unto himſelf; all the good works done by them, were not to the praiſe and glory of God, as fruits of righteouſneſs are, which come by Jeſus Chriſt; but were done to be ſeen of men, and to gain their applauſe and eſteem, and ſo were for themſelves; and all their temporal good things they abounded with, were not made uſe of in the ſervice of God, and for the promoting of his glory, and of true religion among them; but either conſumed on their own luſts, or in the ſervice of idols: or, the fruit is like unto himſelf [q]; as was the vine, ſo was its fruit: the vine was empty, and devoid of goodneſs, and ſo the fruit it produced. The Targum is, "the fruit of their works was the cauſe of their "being carried captive:" according to the multitude of his fruit, he hath increaſed the altars; as the Iſraelites increaſed in riches and wealth, their land bringing forth in great abundance, they erected the greater number of altars to their idols, and multiplied their ſacrifices to them; this was the ill uſe they made of what fruit they did produce: according to the goodneſs of his land they have made goodly images; of richer metal, and more ornamented, and more of them, according to the plenty of good things, corn, and wine, and oil their land produced: thus abuſing the providential goodneſs of God to ſuch vile purpoſes!

℣. 2. Their heart is divided, &c.] Some ſay from Hoſhea their king, who would have reformed them from their idolatry, and returned them to the true worſhip of God; but of that there is no proof; better from one another, their affections being alienated from each other, by their diſcords and animoſities, their conſpiracies againſt their kings, and the murders of them, and the civil wars among themſelves; they alſo not being of one mind, but diſagreeing in their ſentiments about their idols; ſome being for one, and ſome for another: or rather from God himſelf, from the fear of him, from his worſhip and ſervice; or, from the law, as the Targum; or their hearts were divided between God and their idols, as in Ahab's time between God and Baal; they pretended to worſhip God, when they worſhipped the calves, and ſo ſhared the ſervice between them: or it may be rendered, their heart flatters [r] them; as if they had done that which was right and good, and were guilty of no evil, nor would any puniſhment be inflicted on them: now ſhall they be found faulty; be convicted of their ſin and folly, and appear guilty; when they ſhall be puniſhed for their idolatry, and their idols not able to ſave them, as the deſtruction of them next mentioned will fully evince: or, now ſhall they become deſolate [s]; their land ſhall be deſolate, and they carried captive: he ſhall break down their altars: he ſhall ſpoil their images; that is, the king of Aſſyria ſhall do all this, or God by him: or, behead their altars [t]; take off the top of them, as the Targum; the horns of them, which might be made of gold, or other ornaments which were of value; and therefore became the plunder of the enemy; and who alſo would break in pieces their images, for the ſake of the metal, gold or ſilver, of which they were made; as was uſually done by conquerors, and to ſhew their entire power over the conquered, that even their gods could not deliver them out of their hands.

℣. 3. For now they ſhall ſay, we have no king, &c.] This they would ſay, either when they had one; but by their conduct and behaviour ſaid they had none; becauſe they had no regard unto him, no affection for him, and reverence of him; but every one did what was right in his own eyes: or during the inter-regnum, between the murder of Pekah, which was in the twentieth year of Jotham, and the ſettlement of Hoſhea, which was in the twelfth of Ahaz; ſee 2 Kings xv. 30. and xvii. 1. or when the land of Iſrael was invaded, and their king was ſhut up in priſon, and Samaria beſieged, ſo that it was as if they had no king; they had none to protect and defend them, to ſally out at the head of them againſt the enemy, and fight their battels for them; or rather when the city was taken, the altars broke down, their images ſpoiled, and they and their king carried captive: becauſe we feared not the Lord; did not ſerve and worſhip him, but idols; and this ſin, caſting off the fear of the Lord, was the ſource and cauſe of all their troubles and ſorrows; of the invaſion of their land; of the beſieging and taking their city, and having no king to rule over them, and protect them: what then ſhould a king do to us? if they had one, he could be of no ſervice to them; for ſince they had offended God, the King of kings, and made him their enemy, what could an earthly king, a weak mortal man do for them, or againſt him? it was now all over with them, and they could have no expectation of help and deliverance.

℣. 4. They have ſpoken words, ſwearing falſly, in making a covenant, &c.] Theſe are other crimes they were guilty of, for which the wrath of God could not be awarded from them by a king, if they had one, or by any other. They had uſed vain and idle words in their common talk and converſation; and lying and deceitful ones to one another in trade and commerce, in contracts and promiſes; and ſo had deceived and over-reached one another: they had belched out many oaths of vanity[u]; or vain oaths and curſes; their mouths had been full of curſing and bitterneſs; and they made covenants with God, and their king, and with other kings and princes, and with one another, and had not kept them; and now for theſe things God had a controverſy with them: thus judgment ſpringeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field; either the judgment of God, his wrath and vengeance for the above ſins, roſe up and ſpread itſelf in all their cities, towns and villages; or rather the judgment and juſtice they pretended to execute, inſtead of being what it ſhould have been, uſeful and beneficial to the people, like an wholeſome herb, ſprung up like hemlock, bitter and poiſonous, and ſpread itſelf in all parts of the kingdom. Injuſtice is meant; ſee Amos vi. 12.

℣. 5. The inhabitants of Samaria ſhall fear, becauſe of the calves of Beth-aven, &c.] Or, the cow-calves[w], as in the original; ſo called by way of deriſion, and to denote their weakneſs and inability to help their votaries; and ſo Bethel, where one of theſe calves was, is here, as elſewhere, called Beth-aven; that is, the houſe of iniquity, or of an idol, by way of contempt; and may take in Dan alſo, where was the other calf, ſince both are mentioned; unleſs the plural is put for the ſingular: now the land of Iſrael being invaded by the enemy, the inhabitants of Samaria, which was the metropolis of the nation, the king, nobles, and common people that dwelt there, and were worſhippers of the calves, were in pain leſt they ſhould be taken by the enemy; or becauſe they were, theſe places falling into his hands before Samaria was beſieged, or at leaſt taken; and theſe calves being broken to pieces, which they had worſhipped, and put their truſt in, they were afraid the ruin of themſelves and children would be next, and was not very far off: for the people thereof ſhall mourn over it; either the people of Samaria, the ſame with the inhabitants of it; or rather the people of Beth-aven, where the idol was; but now was broke to pieces, or carried away; tho' it is generally interpreted of the people of the calf, the worſhippers of it, who would mourn over it, or for the loſs of it, being taken away from them, and diſpoſed of as in the following verſe. The Jews[x] have a tradition, that in the twentieth year of Pekah king of Iſrael, Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, came and took away the golden calf in Dan; and in the twelfth year of Ahaz, another king of Aſſyria, (Salmaneſer) came and took away the golden calf at Bethel: and the prieſts thereof that rejoiced on it; the Chemarim, as in Zeph. i. 4. or black[y] ones, becauſe of their meager and ſordid countenances, or black clothing: the ſame word the Jews uſe for popiſh monks: here it deſigns the prieſts of Beth-aven, or the calf, who before this time rejoiced on account of it, becauſe of the ſacrifices and preſents of the people to it, and the good living they got in the ſervice of it; but now would mourn, as well as the people, and more, becauſe of being deprived of their livelihood. Some read the words without the ſupplement that, the prieſts thereof rejoiced on it; which ſome interpret according to a tradition of the Jews mentioned by Jerom, tho' by no other, as I can find, that the prieſts ſtole away the golden calves, and put brazen and gilded ones in the room of them; ſo that when they were carried away the people mourned, taking them to be the true golden calves; but the prieſts made themſelves merry with their ſubtle device, and rejoiced that their fraud was not detected; but rather the word here uſed, as Pocock and others have obſerved, is of that kind which has contrary ſenſes, and ſignifies both to mourn, and to rejoice; and here to mourn, as perhaps alſo in Job iii. 22. Pſ. ii. 11. and ſo Ben Melech obſerves, that there are ſome of their interpreters who underſtand it here, in the ſenſe of mourning: for the glory of it, becauſe it is departed from it; either becauſe of the glory of the calf, which was gone from it, the veneration it was had in, the worſhip which was given to it, and the gems and ornaments that were about it; or rather the glory of Beth-aven, and alſo of Samaria, and indeed of all Iſrael, which was carried captive from them; that is, the calf, which was their god, in which they gloried, and put their truſt and confidence in.

℣. 6. It ſhall alſo be carried unto Aſſyria, for a preſent to king Jareb, &c.] Or, he himſelf[z]; not the people of Samaria, or of Beth-aven, or of the calf, but the calf itſelf; which, being all of gold, was ſent a preſent to the king of Aſſyria, here called Jareb; either Aſſyria, or the king of it; ſee the note on ch. v. 13. this was done either by the people of Iſrael themſelves to appeaſe the king of Aſſyria; or rather by the Aſſyrian army, who reſerved the plunder of this as a proper preſent to their king and conqueror, to whom not only nations, but the gods of nations were ſubject: Ephraim ſhall receive ſhame; for worſhipping ſuch an idol, when they ſhall ſee it broke to pieces, and the gold of it made a preſent to the Aſſyrian king, and that it could not ſave them, nor itſelf: and Iſrael ſhall be aſhamed of his own counſel; of giving in to ſuch idolatry, contrary to the counſel, mind and will of God; or of the counſel which they and Jeroboam took to ſet up the calves at Dan and Bethel, and thereby to keep the people from going up to Jeruſalem, 1 Kings xii. 28. as well as of their counſel and covenant with the king of Egypt againſt the king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xvii. 4.

℣. 7. As for Samaria, &c.] The metropolis of the ten tribes of Iſrael, and here put for the whole kingdom: her king is cut off; which ſome underſtand of Pekah, who was killed by Hoſhea; others of ſeveral of their kings cut off one after another, very ſuddenly and quickly, as the metaphor after uſed ſhews; or rather Hoſhea the laſt king is meant, who was cut off by the king of Aſſyria; the preſent tenſe is uſed for the future, to denote the certainty of it. Aben Ezra thinks the verb cut off is to be repeated, Samaria is cut off, her king is cut off; both king and kingdom deſtroyed. So the Targum, "Samaria is cut off with her "king:" as the foam upon the water; as any light thing flowing upon it; as the bark of a tree, as Kimchi and Abarbinel; or as the ſcum upon a boiling pot of water, as Jarchi, and the Targum; or as foam, which is an aſſemblage of bubbles upon the water; ſuch are kings and kingdoms, ſwell, look big and high for a while; but are mere bubbles, empty things; and are often ſuddenly, quickly and eaſily deſtroyed; ſo Samaria and her king were by the Aſſyrian army; the Lord of hoſts, the King of kings, being againſt them.

℣. 8. The high places alſo of Aven, &c.] Bethel, which is not only as before called Beth-aven, the houſe of iniquity; but Aven, iniquity itſelf; the high places of it were the temple and altars built there for idolatrous ſervice, which were uſually ſet on hills and mountains: the ſin of Iſrael ſhall be deſtroyed; that is, which high places are the ſin of Iſrael, the occaſion of ſin unto them; and where they committed ſin, the ſin of idolatry, in worſhipping the calves; theſe ſhould be thrown down, demoliſhed, and no longer uſed: the thorn and the thiſtle ſhall come up on their altars; lying in ruins, theſe ſhall grow upon them, the people and prieſts being carried captive that uſed to ſacrifice upon them; but now they ſhall lie deſerted by them, being deſtroyed by the enemy: and they ſhall ſay to the mountains, cover us; and to the hills, fall on us; not that the high places and altars ſhall ſay ſo in a figurative ſenſe, according to R. Moſes in Aben Ezra; but as Japhet, they that worſhipped there, the prieſts and people of Samaria, Beth-aven, and even of all Iſrael, becauſe of their great diſtreſs; and as perſons in the utmoſt conſternation, and in deſpair, and confounded, and aſhamed, ſhall call to the mountains and hills where they have been guilty of idolatry to hide and cover them from the wrath of God; ſee Luke xxiii. 30., Rev. vi. 16.

℣. 9. O Iſrael, thou haſt ſinned from the days of Gibeah, &c.] This has no reſpect, as the Targum, and others, to Gibeah of Saul, of which place he was, and the chuſing him to be king; but to the affair of the Levite and his concubine at Gibeah in the days of the Judges, and what followed upon it, Judg. xix. and xx. ſuggeſting, that the ſins of Iſrael were not new ones; they were the ſame with what were committed formerly, as early as the hiſtory referred to, and had been continued ever ſince; the meaſure of which were now filling up: or, as Aben Ezra and Abarbinel interpret it, thou haſt ſinned more than the days of Gibeah; were guilty of more idolatry, inhumanity and impurity, than in thoſe times; and yet the groſſeſt of ſins, particularly unnatural luſts, were then committed: there they ſtood; either the men of Gibeah continued in their ſins, and did not repent of them; and ſtood in their own defence againſt the tribes of Iſrael, and the Benjamites ſtood alſo with them, and by them; and ſtood two battels, and were conquerors in them; and tho' beaten in the third, were not wholly deſtroyed, as now the Iſraelites would be: or the tribes of Iſrael ſtood, and continued in, and connived at, the idolatry of the Levite; or rather, ſtood ſluggiſh and ſlothful, and were not forward to fight with the Benjamites, who took part with the men of Gibeah; which were their ſins, for which they were worſted in the two firſt battels, and in which the preſent Iſraelites imitated them: the battel in Gibeah againſt the children of iniquity did not overtake them; the two firſt battels againſt the men of Gibeah and the Benjamites, who are the children of iniquity, the one the actors, and the other the abettors and patrons of it, did not ſucceed againſt them; but the Iſraelites were overcome; and the third battel in which they got the day, did not overtake them ſo as utterly to cut them off; for ſix hundred perſons made their eſcape; but in the preſent caſe propheſied of, 'tis ſuggeſted, that as their ſins were as great or greater than theirs, their ruin ſhould be entire and complete: or the ſenſe is, that they were backward to go to battel; they were not eager upon it; they did not at once eſpouſe the cauſe of the Levite; they did not ſtir in it till he had done that unheard-of thing, cutting his concubine into twelve pieces, and ſending them to the twelve tribes of Iſrael; and then they were not over-forward, but ſought the Lord as if it was a doubtful caſe; which backwardneſs was reſented in their ill ſucceſs at firſt; and the ſame ſlow diſpoſition to puniſh vice had continued with them ever ſince; ſo Schmidt.

℣. 10. It is in my deſire that I ſhould chaſtiſe them, &c.] Or bind them[a], and carry them captive; and by ſo doing correct them for their ſins they have ſo long continued in: this the Lord had in his heart to do, and was determined upon it, and would do it with pleaſure, for the glorifying of his juſtice, ſince they had ſo long and ſo much abuſed his clemency and goodneſs: and the people ſhall be gathered againſt them; the Aſſyrians, who, at the command of the Lord would come and invade their land, beſiege their city, and take it, and bind them, and carry them captive: when they ſhall bind themſelves in their two furrows; when, like heifers untamed, and bound in a yoke to plow, don't make and keep in one furrow, but turn out to the right or left, and make croſs furrows; ſo it is intimated, that this was the reaſon why the Lord would correct Iſrael, and ſuffer the nations to gather together againſt them, and carry them captive, becauſe they did not plow in one furrow, or keep in the true and pure worſhip of God; but made two furrows, worſhipping partly

God, and partly idols: or, when they, their enemies, ſhall bind them, being gathered againſt them, and carry them captive, they ſhall make them plow in two furrows, the one up, and the other down; and to this hard ſervice they ſhall keep them continually. There is a double reading of this clauſe, the Cetib, or textual writing or reading is, to their two eyes, or fountains; alluding, as Jarchi obſerves, to the binding of the yoke on oxen on each ſide of their eyes; or to the fountains in the land of Iſrael, the abundance of wine, milk and honey; for the ſake of which the people got together, broke in upon them, and bound them, in order to drink of. So Guſſetius [b] renders the words, and they ſhall bind them to drink of their fountains. The Keri or marginal reading is, their two iniquities; which the Septuagint follows, rendring it, "in "chaſtiſing them, or when they are chaſtiſed for "their two iniquities;" ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions; meaning either their worſhipping the two calves at Dan and Bethel; or their corporal and ſpiritual adultery; or their forſaking the true God, and worſhipping idols; ſee Jer. ii. 13. Schmidt underſtands all this, not as a puniſhment threatened, but as an inſtance of the love of God to them, in chaſtiſing them in a loving and fatherly way; which had a good effect upon them, and brought them to repentance; partly in the times of the Judges, but more eſpecially in the days of Samuel, when they behaved well; and particularly in the reigns of David and Solomon; and when the people were gathered, not againſt, but to them; either became proſelytes to them, or tributaries, or coveted their friendſhip; and when they themſelves lived in great concord, in one kingdom, under one king, like oxen plowing in two contiguous furrows.

ỳ. 11. And Ephraim is as an heifer that is taught, and loveth to tread out the corn, &c.] Like an heifer taught to bear the yoke, and to plow; but learned it not, as the Targum; does not like it; chuſes to tread out the corn, where it can feed upon it, its mouth not being then muzzled, according to the law; oxen or heifers were uſed, both in plowing and treading out corn, to which the alluſion is. The ſenſe is, that Ephraim or the ten tribes were taught to bear the yoke of the law, and yield obedience to it, and perform good works; but did not like ſuch a courſe of life; had no further regard for religion, than as they found their own worldly profit and advantage in it: or they did not care to labour much in it; they liked the fruit and advantage ariſing from working, rather than the work itſelf; and thus, like an heifer, doing little, and living well, they grew fat, increaſed in power, wealth and riches; and ſo became proud and haughty, and kicked againſt the houſe of David, and rent themſelves from it; and ſet up a kingdom of their own, and lived and reigned according to their own will and pleaſure, like an heifer without yoke and muzzle: but I paſſed over upon her fair neck; or, the goodneſs of her neck [c]; which is expreſſive of the flouriſhing and opulent ſtate and condition of the ten tribes, eſpecially in the times of Jeroboam the ſecond, which made them proud and haughty: but the Lord was determined to humble them, and firſt in a more light and gentle manner; or cauſed the rod of correction to paſs over them more lightly; or put upon them a more eaſy yoke of affliction, by cauſing Pul king of Aſſyria to come againſt them; and to get rid of whom a preſent was given him, exacted of the people; and afterwards Tiglath-Pileſer, another king of Aſſyria, who carried captive part of their land; and this not having its proper effect, the Lord was determined to proceed againſt them in a heavier manner: I will make Ephraim to ride; ſome, taking the future for the paſt, render it, I have made Ephraim to ride [d]; that is, to rule and govern, having royal dignity and power given them, and that greater than that of Judah; and ride over the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who were ſometimes very much afflicted by them; and this is thought to be the ſenſe of the following phraſes, Judah ſhall plow, and Jacob ſhall break his clods; or, break the clods for him [e]; for Ephraim whilſt he rides, and uſes them very hardly; as in the days of Joaſh and Pekah kings of Iſrael, when many of the tribes of Judah were ſlain by them, 2 Kings xiv. 12, 13. 2 Chron. xxviii. 6, 8. but rather the meaning is, I will cauſe to ride on Ephraim [f]; that is, the Aſſyrians ſhall ride upon them, get the dominion over them, carry them captive, and uſe them to hard ſervice and bondage, as an heifer rid upon by a ſevere rider whilſt plowing; and the other tribes ſhall not eſcape, tho' they ſhall not be ſo hardly dealt with: Judah ſhall plow, and Jacob ſhall break his clods; theſe ſhall be carried captive into Babylon, and employed in hard and ſervile work, but more tolerable; as plowing and breaking clods are eaſier than to be rid upon; and as they had hope of deliverance at the end of ſeventy years; whereas no promiſe of return was made to the ten tribes, which is the ſenſe ſome give; but Pocock and others think that theſe words regard the tender and gentle methods God took with theſe people to bring them to obedience to his law. Ephraim being teachable like an heifer, he took hold of her fair neck, and ſtroked it to encourage her, and accuſtom her to the hand, and to the yoke; and then put the yoke of his law upon them, and trained them up in his inſtitutions, and uſed alſo gentle methods to keep them in obedience; and alſo ſet Judah to plow, and Jacob to break the clods, preſcribed for them; and employed them in good works, in the duties of religion, from whence anſwerable fruit might have been expected; ſaying to them by his prophets, as follows:

ỳ. 12. Sow to yourſelves in righteouſneſs, &c.] Not the ſeed of grace, which bad men have not, and cannot ſow it; and which good men need not, it being ſown in them already, and remaining; rather the ſeed of the word, which ſhould be laid up in their hearts, dwell richly in them, and be kept and retained by them; tho' 'tis beſt of all to underſtand it of works of righteouſneſs; as ſowing to the fleſh is doing the works of the fleſh, or carnal and ſinful acts; ſo ſowing unto righteouſneſs [g], as it may be rendered, is doing works of righteouſneſs; living ſoberly and righteouſly; doing works according to the word of righteouſneſs, from good principles, and with good views, with a view to the glory of God: and which will be ſowing to themſelves, turn to their own account; for tho ſuch works are not profitable to God, as to merit any thing at his hands; yet they are not only profitable to others, but to thoſe that do them; for tho' not for, yet in keeping the commands of God, there is great reward, Pſ. xix. 11. Reap in mercy; or according to mercy[h]; not according to the merit of works, for there is none in them; but according to the mercy of God, to which all bleſſings, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, are owing; and ſuch who ſow to the Spirit, or ſpiritual things, ſhall of the Spirit reap life everlaſting; not as the reward of debt, but of grace; not as of merit, but as owing to the mercy of Chriſt, Gal. vi. 9. Jude, ℣. 21: break up your fallow ground; that is, of their hearts; which were like ground unopened, unbroken, not tilled and manured, nor ſown with ſeed, but over-run with weeds and thiſtles; and ſo were they, hard and impenitent, deſtitute of grace, and full of ſin and wickedneſs, and ſtood in need of being renewed in the ſpirit of their minds; which this exhortation is deſigned to convince them of, and to ſtir them up to make uſe of proper methods of obtaining it, thro' the efficacious grace of God; ſee Jer. iv. 3: for it is time to ſeek the Lord; for his grace; as the huſbandman ſeeks, prays and waits for rain, when he has tilled his ground, and ſowed his ſeed, to water it, and make it fruitful, that he may have a good reaping time, a plentiful harveſt; and as there is a time to ſeek for the one, ſo for the other: till he come and rain righteouſneſs upon you; that is, Chriſt, whoſe coming is as the rain, ch. vi. 3. Pſ. lxxii. 6. and who when he ſhould come, whether perſonally by his incarnation, or ſpiritually by his gracious preſence, would rain a plentiful rain of the doctrines of grace, and the bleſſings of it, ſuch as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life by him; particularly the juſtifying righteouſneſs wrought out by him, which is fully manifeſted in the goſpel, the miniſtration of that righteouſneſs, and is applied unto, and put upon all them that believe: or till he come and teach you righteouſneſs[i]; as Chriſt did when come; he taught the word of righteouſneſs in general, and the righteouſneſs of God in particular, and directed men to ſeek it; declared he came to fulfil all righteouſneſs, and taught men to believe in him for it, and that he is their righteouſneſs, and the end of the law for it; as well as he taught them to live righteouſly and godly; ſee Joel ii. 23. The Targum is, "O houſe of Iſrael, do for yourſelves "good works; walk in the way of truth; eſtabliſh "for yourſelves the doctrine of the law; behold "at all times the prophets ſay to you, return to "the fear of the Lord; now ſhall he be revealed, "and bring righteouſneſs to you." But theſe exhortations were vain and fruitleſs, as appears by what follows:

℣. 13. Ye have plowed wickedneſs, &c.] Contrived it, and took a great deal of pains to commit it; by plowing ſowed it, and which ſprung up in a plentiful crop: it may denote their firſt ſins, from whence all others aroſe; as their irreligion and infidelity; their apoſtacy from God; their idolatry and contempt of his word and prophets: ye have reaped iniquity; abundance of other ſins have ſprung up from thence; a large harveſt of them have been reaped and got in; or great numbers of other ſins have been committed; one ſin leads on to another, and theſe proceed ad infinitum; wickedneſs is of an increaſing nature, and grows worſe and worſe, and proceeds to more ungodlineſs: many underſtand this of the puniſhment or reward of ſin: ye have eaten the fruit of lies; as a ſweet morſel, tho' bread of deceit; which could not profit them, nor yield them in the iſſue the pleaſure it promiſed them, and they hoped for from it: becauſe thou didſt truſt in thy way; in the worſhip of their idols, and in their alliances with neighbouring nations, and promiſed themſelves great proſperity and happineſs from hence: and in the multitude of thy mighty men; their valiant ſoldiers, their numerous armies, and the generals of them, well ſkilled in war, and courageous; and alſo in their auxiliaries, which they had from the Egyptians and others; theſe they put their confidence in, to protect them; and ſo in their garriſons and fortreſſes, as the following words ſhew.

℣. 14. Therefore ſhall a tumult ariſe among thy people, &c.] Becauſe of their wickedneſs and vain confidence, the Aſſyrian army ſhould invade them; which would cauſe a tumultuous noiſe to be made throughout the tribes in all cities and towns, a cry, a howling, and lamentation; eſpecially among fearful and timorous ones, as women and children; who would be thrown into a pannic, at hearing the news of a foreign powerful enemy entring their country, and laying waſte all before them; a voice of clamour, as Jarchi obſerves, crying, flee, flee: and all thy fortreſſes ſhall be ſpoiled; the ſtrongholds, in which they put their confidence for ſafety; every one of theſe ſhould be taken and demoliſhed by the enemy, in all parts of the kingdom; ſo that there ſhould be none left to flee unto, no place of retreat: as Shalman ſpoiled Beth-arbel in the day of battel; that is, Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, his name being abbreviated, as Bethaven is called Aven, ℣. 8. who had lately, tho' there is no account of it elſewhere, ſpoiled this place, demoliſhed its fortreſſes, and deſtroyed the inhabitants of it; which is thought to be either the city of Arbel beyond Jordan, 1 Maccab. ix. 2. which Joſephus[k] calls a city of Galilee, and ſometimes a village; and which, according to him, was not far from Sipphore, and in lower Galilee, near to which thieves and robbers dwelt in caves and dens, difficult to come at; and ſo a Jewiſh writer[l] places Arbel between Sipphore and Tiberias; and elſewhere[m] mention is made of the valley of Arbel, near to thoſe places: and Jerom[n] ſays, there was the village Arbel beyond Jordan, on the borders of Pella, a city of Paleſtine; and another of this name in the large plain, nine miles from the town of Legio: and he alſo ſpeaks of an Arbela, the border of the tribe of Judah to the eaſt; perhaps the ſame with Har-Baalah, whence Arbela, or the mount of Baalah, Joſh. xv. 11. now one or other of theſe places might be laid waſte by this king of Aſſyria, in the firſt year of Hoſhea, when he came up againſt him, and made him tributary: tho' ſome think Arbela in Aſſyria or Armenia is meant, famous for the utter defeat of Darius by Alexander, four hundred years after this, when it might have been rebuilt, and become conſiderable again: ſome of the Jewiſh writers[o] ſay, there was a place near Niniveh ſo called; Benjamin jamin of Tudela ſays [p], from Niniveh to Arbel is one parſa, or four miles: and others [q] think Samaria itſelf is meant; but that cannot be, ſince the deſtruction of that city is here propheſied of, which ſhould be as this: ſome conjecture it was the temple of a deity called Arbel, as Schmidt: but be it what or where it will, here was a great devaſtation and ſlaughter made; which at this time was well known, and to which the deſolation that would be made in the land of Iſrael is compared. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, as Salmana was waſted by the houſe of him who judged Baal in the day of battel; which the patrons and defenders of interpret of the ſlaughter of Zalmunna by Jerubbaal, that is, Gideon; but the names of the one and the other are very different; nor does the text ſpeak of the ſlaughter of a prince, but of the deſtruction of a city, and not of Shalman, but of Arbel; and refers not to an ancient, but recent hiſtory. Mr. Whiſton [r] places the ſpoil of Arbela, in the year of the Julian period 3982, and before Chriſt 732. The mother was daſhed in pieces with her children; women big with child, or having their children in their arms, had no mercy ſhown them, but were deſtroyed together; ſo it had been at Arbel, and would be again in Iſrael, which was dreadful to think of: according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, Arbel was the name of a great man in thoſe days, whoſe family, meant by Beth or a houſe, was thus cruelly deſtroyed.

℣. 15. So ſhall Bethel do unto you, becauſe of your great wickedneſs, &c.] Or, becauſe of the evil of your evil [s]; their extreme wickedneſs, and exceeding ſinfulneſs; the evil of evils they were guilty of, was their idolatry, their worſhipping the calf at Bethel: and this was the cauſe of all their ruin; God was the efficient of it; the king of Aſſyria the inſtrument; but the procuring or meritorious cauſe was their abominable wickedneſs at Bethel; which therefore ſhould be as Beth-arbel; yea, the whole land ſhould be on the account of that like unto it, or be ſpoiled as that was. Or the words may be rendered, ſo will he do unto you, O Bethel [t]; that is, either God, or Shalman or Salmaneſer, ſhall do the ſame to Bethel, as he did to Beth-arbel; utterly deſtroy it and its inhabitants, ſhewing no mercy to age or ſex. In a morning ſhall the king of Iſrael be utterly cut off; meaning Hoſhea the laſt king of Iſrael, and the kingdom entirely deſtroyed; ſo that afterwards there was no more king in Iſrael, nor has been to this day; there was not only an utter deſtruction of that king, but of all kingly power and government, and ever ſince the children of Iſrael have been without a king, ch. iii. 4. and this was to be done, and was done, in a morning; in the beginning of his reign, as Joſeph Kimchi; but this ſeems not ſo well to agree with the hiſtory; ſince it was in the ninth year of his reign that Samaria was taken: but the ſenſe is, either that it would be certainly done, as ſure as the morning came; or ſuddenly and quickly, as the morning-light breaks forth; or in the morning of proſperity, when they were expecting light and good days, from their alliance with the king of Egypt, againſt the king of Aſſyria.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter gives an account of the free and ancient love of Ged to Iſrael, and of the benefits and bleſſings of goodneſs he beſtowed upon them; and of their ingratitude in not owning them, nor hearkening to his prophets, but ſacrificing and burning incenſe to idols, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. wherefore they are threatened with diſappointment of relief from Egypt, with captivity into Aſſyria, and with the ravages of the ſword in all places, being a people bent to backſliding, and incorrigible, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and yet notwithſtanding all this, the bowels of the Lord yern after them, and promiſes of mercy are made to them; that they ſhall not utterly be deſtroyed, but a remnant ſhall be ſpared; which in the latter day ſhall be called and follow after the Lord, the king Meſſiah, and be returned from their captivity, and be reſettled in their own land, and replaced in their own houſes, ℣. 8, 9, 10, 11, the chapter is concluded with an honourable character of Judah, ℣. 12.

℣. 1. When Iſrael was a child, then I loved him, &c.] Or, for Iſrael was a child [u]; a rebellious and diſobedient one, therefore his king was cut off in a morning, and he has been, and will be, without a king many days, yet ſtill I loved him: or, tho' Iſrael was a child [w]; a weak, helpleſs, fooliſh and imprudent one, yet I loved him: or, when a child; in the infancy of his civil and church-ſtate, when in Egypt, and in the wilderneſs; the Lord loved him, not only as his creature, as he does all the works of his hands, but with a more ſpecial love than he loved others; chuſing them to be a ſpecial people above all others; giving them his law, his ſtatutes, and his judgments, his word and his worſhip, which he did not give to other nations. So he loves ſpiritual and myſtical Iſrael, all the elect of God, whether Jews or Gentiles, when children, as ſoon as born, and tho' born in ſin, carnal and corrupt; yea, before they are born, and when having done neither good nor evil; and ſo may be expreſſive both of the earlineſs and antiquity of his love to them, and of the freeneſs of it, without any merits or motives of theirs. And called my ſon out of Egypt; not literal Iſrael as before, whom God called his ſon, and his firſt-born, and demanded his diſmiſſion from Pharaoh, and called him, and brought him out of Egypt with a mighty hand and ſtretched-out arm; and which was a type of his calling ſpiritual Iſrael, his adopted ſons, out of worſe than Egyptian bondage and darkneſs: but his own natural and only-begotten Son, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; for theſe words are expreſly ſaid to be fulfilled in him, Matt. ii. 15. not by way of alluſion; or by accommodation of phraſes; or as the type is fulfilled in the antitype; or as a proverbial expreſſion, adapted to any deliverance; but literally: the firſt and only ſenſe of the words reſpects Chriſt, who in his infancy was had to Egypt for ſhelter from Herod's rage and fury, and when he was dead, and thoſe that ſought the life of Jeſus, he was by an angel of the Lord, warning Joſeph of it, called out of Egypt, and brought into Judea, Matt. ii. 19—23. and this as a proof of the love of God to Iſrael; which as it was expreſſed to him in his infancy, it continued and appeared in various inſtances, more or leſs, unto the coming of Chriſt; who though obliged for a while to go into Egypt, muſt not continue there, but muſt be called from thence, to be brought up in the land of Judea; to do his miracles, preach his doctrines, and do good to the bodies and ſouls of men there, being ſent particularly to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; and above all, in order to work out the ſalvation and redemption of his ſpecial people among them, and of the whole Iſrael of God every where elſe; which is the greateſt inſtance of love to them, and to the world of the Gentiles, that ever was known, John iii. 16. 1 John ii. 2. and iv. 9, 10.

℣. 2. As they called them, ſo they went from them, &c.] That is, the prophets of the Lord, the true prophets, called Iſrael to the worſhip and ſervice of God; but they turned a deaf ear to them, and their backs upon them; and the more they called to them, the further they went from them, and from the way of their duty; ſee ℣. 7. So the Targum, “I ſent the prophets to teach them, but they “wandered from them;” Moſes and Aaron were ſent unto them, and called them out of Egypt, but they hearkened not unto them; ſee Exod. vi. 9, 12. in after-times the prophets were ſent unto them, to exhort them to their duty, and to reclaim them from their evil ways, but they deſpiſed and refuſed to attend to their advice and inſtructions; and this was continued to the times of Iſrael, or the ten tribes, departing from the houſe of David, and ſetting up idolatrous worſhip; and during their revolt and apoſtacy; but all in vain. So after Chriſt was called out of Egypt, he and his apoſtles, and John the Baptiſt before them, called them to hearken to him, but they turned away from them. Aben Ezra interprets it of the falſe prophets, who called them to idolatry, and they went after them. Schmidt underſtands it of the Iſraelites calling one another to it, and going after it, for their own ſakes, and becauſe it pleaſed them, and was agreeable to them. They ſacrificed to Baalim, and burnt incenſe to graven images; they joined themſelves to Baal-peor, and worſhipped the golden calf, faſhioned with a graving tool, in the wilderneſs; they ſacrificed to Baalim, one or another of them, in the times of the Judges, and of Ahab, and committed idolatry with other graven images, of which burning incenſe is a part. And the Jews in Chriſt's time, inſtead of hearkening to him and his apoſtles, followed the traditions of the elders, and the dictates of the ſcribes and phariſees, who were their Baals, their lords and maſters; and they ſought for life and righteouſneſs by their own works, which was ſacrificing to their net, and burning incenſe to their drag; all this was great ingratitude. Next follows a narrative of other benefits done to this people.

℣. 3. I taught Ephraim alſo to go, &c.] All the tribes of Iſrael and Ephraim, or the ten tribes with the reſt; theſe the Lord inſtructed in the way of his commandments, and taught them to walk therein; he ſent his angel before them, to conduct them thro' the wilderneſs; yea, he himſelf went before them in the pillar of cloud by day, and in the pillar of fire by night, to which hiſtory this ſeems to refer. So the Targum, “I, by an angel ſent by “me, led Iſrael in the right way.” The alluſion ſeems to be to a mother or nurſe accommodating herſelf to her child, beginning to go; ſhe ſtoops down, ſets it on its feet, and one foot before another, forms its ſteps, teaches it how to go, and walks its pace with it. And in like manner the Lord deals with his ſpiritual Iſrael, his regenerated ones, who become like little children, and are uſed as ſuch; as in regeneration they are quickened, and have ſome degree of ſpiritual ſtrength given them, they are taught to go; they are taught what a Saviour Chriſt is, and their need of him; they are inſtructed to go to him by faith for every thing they want, and to walk by faith on him, as they have received him; and having heard and learned of the Father, they go to Chriſt, John vi. 45. and are taught alſo to go to the throne of grace for all ſupplies of grace; and to the houſe of God, to attend the word and ordinances, for the benefit of their ſouls; and to walk in the ways of the Lord, for his glory, and their good. Taking them by their arms; or on his own arms[x]; bearing and carrying them in his arms, as a father his ſon; ſee Deut. i. 31. and xxxii. 10, 11, 12. Numb. xi. 12. ſo the Lord deals with his ſpiritual Iſrael, either holding them by their arms while walking, as nurſes their children, to help and eaſe them in walking, and that they may not ſtumble and fall; ſo the Lord holds up the goings of his people in his ways, that their footſteps ſlip not, and upholds them with the right hand of his righteouſneſs: or taking them up in his own arms when weary, he carries them in his boſom; or when they are falling or fallen, lays hold on them, and takes them up again; and ſo they are not utterly caſt down, whether the fall is into ſin, or into ſome calamity and affliction; when he puts underneath his everlaſting arms, and bears them up, and keeps them from ſinking, as well as from a final and total falling away. Abarbinel, and others after him, interpret this of Ephraim taking up and carrying in his arms Baalim, the graven images and golden calves; which is mentioned as an inſtance of ingratitude; but very wrongly. But they knew not that I healed them; of the diſeaſes of Egypt, or preſerved them from them: this includes the whole of their ſalvation and deliverance from Egypt, and all the benefits and favours accompanying it, which they imputed to their idols, and not to the Lord; ſee Exod. xv. 26. and xxxii. 4. Healing, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, generally ſignifies the forgiveneſs of ſin, which the Lord's people may have, and not know it; and thro' want of better light and knowledge, may alſo aſcribe it to their repentance, humiliation and tears, when it is alone owing to the grace of God, and blood of Chriſt.

℣. 4. I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love, &c.] As Ephraim is compared to an heifer in the preceding chapter, here he is ſaid to be drawn; but not with ſuch cords and bands as cattel are, but with ſuch as men are; in a rational and gentle way, in a kind, loving, tender, humane, friendly, and fatherly way and manner; ſo the Lord drew Iſrael on in the wilderneſs, till he was brought to Canaan's land, by beſtowing kind favours upon them, and by making precious promiſes to them. So the Lord deals with his ſpiritual Iſrael, he draws them out of the preſent ſtate and circumſtances, in which they are by nature, to himſelf, and to his Son, and to follow after him, and run in the ways of his commandments; and which he does not by force and compulſion againſt their wills, nor by mere moral ſuaſion, but by the invincible power of his grace, ſweetly working upon them, and attracting them; he does it by revealing Chriſt in them, in the glories of his perſon, and in the riches of his grace, and by letting in his love into their hearts; and by kind invitations, precious promiſes, and divine teachings, attended with his powerful and efficacious grace; ſee Jer. xxxi. 3. John vi. 44. Cant. i. 4. And I was to them as they that take off the yoke on their jaws; as one that is merciful to his beaſt; as a kind and humane huſbandman, when his cattel have been hard at work, takes off their bridles or muzzles, or the yokes on them, faſtened with a halter about their jaws, that they may have liberty to feed on food ſet before them, as the next clauſe ſhews. So the Targum, "my word was to them as a good huſbandman, who lightens the ſhoulder of oxen, "and looſes the bridles on their jaws." This may refer to Iſrael's deliverance from their bondage in Egypt; and be ſpiritually applied to Chriſt, the eſſential word of God, breaking and taking the yoke of ſin, ſatan, and the law, from off his people, and bringing them into the liberty of the children of God. Schmidt reads and interprets the words quite otherwiſe, and I was to them as they that lift up the yoke upon their jaws; not remove it from them, but put it on them; expreſſing their ignorance and ingratitude, who when the Lord drew them in the kind and loving manner he did, reckoned it as if he put a yoke upon them, and treated them rather as beaſts than men; but this ſeems not to agree with what follows: and I laid meat unto them; or declined, or brought it down to them, to their very mouths; referring to the manna and quails he rained about their tents. So the Targum, "and even when they were in the "wilderneſs, I multiplied to them good things to "eat." And thus in a ſpiritual ſenſe the Lord gives meat to them that fear him, whilſt in the wilderneſs of this world; he brings it near, and ſets it before them, in the miniſtry of the word and ordinances; even that meat which endures to everlaſting life, the fleſh of Chriſt, which is meat indeed; and the doctrines of the goſpel, which are milk for babes, and ſtrong meat for more experienced ſaints.

℣. 5. He ſhall not return into the land of Egypt, &c.] Ephraim or Iſrael, the ten tribes: and the Septuagint and Arabic verſions expreſs them by name, tho' they give a wrong ſenſe of the words, rendering them, and Ephraim dwelt in Egypt; he did ſo indeed with the other tribes formerly; but here it is ſaid he ſhall not go thither again to be a captive there, but ſhall go into bondage more ſevere than that in Egypt, even into captivity in Aſſyria: rather the ſenſe is, they ſhould not go thither for ſhelter, at leaſt not as a body, tho' ſome few of them might, as in ch. ix. 3. the far greater part of them ſhould be carried captive by the Aſſyrians: or they ſhould not return to Egypt to ſeek for help and ſuccour, as they had done; either they ought not to do it, nor would there be any need of it, did they but return to the Lord, as Kimchi obſerves; or rather they ſhould now be ſo ſtraitly ſhut up in Samaria, beſieged ſo cloſely by the enemy, or elſe carried into diſtant lands, that if they would, they could not apply to Egypt for relief. But the Aſſyrian ſhall be his king; the king of Aſſyria ſhall be king over the ten tribes, whether they will or no; they ſhall be forced to acknowledge him as their king, and be ſubject to him, being taken and carried captive into his land: because they refuſed to return; to the Lord, from whom they had backſlidden, and to his pure worſhip, word, and ordinances, they had departed from, ſetting up the calves at Dan and Bethel; they refuſed to relinquiſh worſhipping idols, inſtead of the true God; thus ungratefully behaving to him for all the above favours beſtowed upon them; wherefore they are righteouſly threatned with captivity and bondage in Aſſyria.

℣. 6. And the ſword ſhall abide on the cities, &c.] Or ſhall fall [y], and continue; meaning the ſword of the Aſſyrians, whereby Ephraim ſhould be brought into ſubjection to them, and the king of Aſſyria become king over them; his ſword ſhould be drawn, and reſt upon them, not only on their chief city Samaria, beſieged three years by him, but upon all their other cities, which would fall into his hands, with the inhabitants of them: and ſhall conſume his branches, and devour them; that is, the towns and villages adjoining to the cities; which were to them as branches are to a tree, ſprung from them, and were ſupported by them; and being near them, proſpered or ſuffered as they did: ſome render it, his bars [z], as the word is ſometimes uſed, and interpret it of the great men and nobles of the land. So the Targum, "and it ſhall "ſlay his mighty men, and deſtroy his princes;" with which Jarchi agrees. Becauſe of their own counſels; which they took and purſued, contrary to the counſel of God, the revelation of his mind and will; particularly in ſetting up idolatrous worſhip, and continuing in it, notwithſtanding all the admonitions, exhortations, counſels, and threatenings of God by his prophets; or elſe becauſe of their counſels with the Egyptians, and their covenants with them, for help againſt the Aſſyrian, whoſe yoke they were for caſting off, and refuſed to pay tribute to; which provoked him to draw his ſword upon them, which made the havock it did in their cities, and the inhabitants of them.

℣. 7. And my people are bent to backſliding from me, &c.] There is a propenſity in them to it, thro' prevailing corruption in them; they are inclined unto it, the biaſs of their minds is that way; they are bent upon it, and pertinaciouſly abide in it; nor will they be reclaimed from it, by all the means and methods made uſe of, even tho' they had been, and profeſſed themſelves to be, the people of God. Some underſtand this, not of their backſliding and averſion from God; but either of his return to them, or of their return to him, rendering the words, and my people are in ſuſpence [a]; like a man that hangs in the air, as Aben Ezra, neither aſcends nor deſcends; that is, they are in doubt of what ſhould be done to them, or they themſelves ſhould do: either about my return [b]; that is, to them; whether after all they may expect that God would be kind and merciful to them, ſo Abarbinel: or about return to me [c]; whether they ſhould or no, inclining rather not to return. So the Targum, "my people divide (or heſitate) to return to my law;" with which Jarchi agrees, paraphraſing it, "when the prophets inſtruct them to return unto me, they are in ſuſpence whether to return or no;" but Aben Ezra and Kimchi obſerve, the word is always uſed in a bad ſenſe, of averſion or backſliding, and that the word is in another form when uſed for repentance or returning. Though they called them to the Moſt High; that is, the prophets of the Lord called them to turn from their idols, and return to the moſt high God, the true and the living God, from whom they had backſlidden, and to his true worſhip, they had neglected and forſaken: none at all would exalt him; the moſt high God, and give him the praiſe and glory due to his name; but, on the other hand, extolled their idols, and aſcribed all their good things to them: or none would exalt them [d]; the prophets of the Lord that called them; would not give that honour to them that was due to their office, or pay any regard to them, or to their admonitions and advice, but depreciated them, and reproached and perſecuted them: or none at all would lift up; that is, their head, as Aben Ezra, toward the heaven, and to God in it, to whom they were called; but kept looking on the earth, and to earthly things, particularly to their idols; and did not lift up or erect their ears, to hearken to what was ſaid to them, but were deaf to all counſel and reproof. The Targum is, "they walked not in an erect ſtature." Agreeable to which the former clauſe may be rendered, as by ſome, and they called them to things above; but none would look upwards; ſee the note on ch. vii. 16.

℣. 8. How ſhall I give thee up, Ephraim? how ſhall I deliver thee, Iſrael? &c.] That is, as uſually interpreted, into the hand of the enemy, or unto wrath, ruin, and deſtruction; for notwithſtanding all the ſins of this people before obſerved, and the puniſhment threatened to be inflicted on them, the Lord is pleaſed here, and in the following verſes, to give ſome intimations of his goodneſs, grace, and mercy to them; not to the whole body of them, for they as ſuch were given and delivered up to the enemy, and carried captive, and diſperſed among the nations, and were never recovered to this day; but to a remnant among them, according to the election of grace, that ſhould ſpring from them, for the ſake of which they were not all cut off by the ſword; but were reſerved as a ſeed for after-times, the times of the Meſſiah, which the prophecy in this and the following words has reſpect unto; not only the firſt times of the goſpel, when ſome of the diſperſed of Iſrael were met with by it, and converted under it, but the laſt times of it, times yet to come, when all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; and may be applied to the elect of God, in all ages, and of all nations. The words are generally underſtood as a debate in the divine mind, ſtruggling within itſelf between juſtice and mercy; juſtice requiring the delivery of theſe perſons unto it, and mercy being reluctant thereunto, pleading on their behalf; and which at laſt gets the victory, and rejoices againſt judgment. There is a truth in all this; juſtice ſeems to demand that ſinners as ſuch, who have injured and affronted him, be given up to him, and ſuffer the curſe of the law, according to their deſerts, and be delivered unto death, even eternal death, as well as to temporal puniſhments; and which might be expected would be the caſe, by the inſtances and examples of the angels that ſinned, and of the men of the old world, and of the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha; but mercy cannot bear it, pleads againſt it, and aſks how can it be done, ſince theſe are my children, my dear children, pleaſant ones, as Ephraim was, my choſen and my covenant ones, and beſides, for whom proviſion is made in Chriſt for the ſatisfaction of juſtice? But the ſenſe is rather this, how might or could I give thee up, Ephraim? how might or could I deliver thee, Iſrael [e]? that is, with what ſeverity might I deal with thee? and how juſtly and righteouſly could I do it? ſince thy ſins are ſo many, and ſo great. How ſhall I make thee as Admah? how ſhall I ſet thee as Zeboim? two cities that were utterly deſtroyed by fire from heaven, along with Sodom and Gomorrha, Deut. xxix. 23. how juſtly could I have made thee, and put thee in the ſame condition and circumſtances, as thoſe two cities, and the inhabitants of them, who were ſo ſeverely puniſhed for their ſins, and were never reſtored again? ſignifying, that inaſmuch as they were guilty of the ſame, or like hainous ſins, was he utterly to deſtroy them, and cut them off from the face of the earth, he ſhould not exceed the due bounds of juſtice. To this ſenſe Schmidt interprets the words. The deſign of which is to ſhew the greatneſs of Ephraim's ſins, as deſerving the uttermoſt wrath and vengeance of God, and to magnify the riches of God's grace in their ſalvation, as next expreſſed; and it is true of all God's elect, who, conſidered as ſinners in Adam, and by their own tranſgreſſions, both before and after converſion, deſerved to be treated according to the rigour of juſtice; but God is merciful to them, according to his choice of them, covenant with them, and proviſion he has made in Chriſt, and upon the foot of his ſatisfaction. Mine heart is turned within me; not changed; for there is no ſhadow of turning with the Lord, neither in his mind and purpoſes, which he never turns from, nor can be turned back, nor in his affections for them; as his heart is never turned from love to hatred, ſo neither from hatred to love; or his love would not be from everlaſting, as it is, and he reſt in it as he does; but this expreſſes the ſtrong motion of mercy in him towards his people, ſpringing from his ſovereign will and pleaſure, and what is elſewhere ſignified by the troubling, ſoundings, and yearnings of his bowels towards them; ſee Jer. xxxi. 20. Iſ. lxiii. 15. with which compare Lam. i. 20. My repentings are kindled together; not that repentance properly belongs to God, who is neither man, nor the ſon of man, that he ſhould repent of any thing, Numb. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29. he repents not of his love to his people, nor of his choice of them, nor of his covenant with them, nor of his ſpecial gifts and grace beſtowed on them; but he ſometimes does what men do when they repent, he changes his outward conduct and behaviour in the diſpenſations of his providence, and acts the reverſe of what he had done, or ſeemed to be about to do; as with reſpect to the old world, the making of Saul king, and the caſe of the Ninevites, Gen. vi. 6. 1 Sam. xv. 11. Jon. iii. 4, 10. ſo here, tho' he could, and ſeemed as if he would, go forth in a way of ſtrict juſtice, yet changes his courſe, and ſteers another way, without any change of his will. The phraſe expreſſes the warmth and ardour of his affections to his people; how his heart burned with love to them, his bowels and inward parts were inflamed with it; from whence proceeded what is called repentance among men, as in the caſe of Jeremiah, ch. xx. 9. The Targum is, "the word of my covenant met me; my mercies (or bowels of mercies) were rolled together."

℣. 9. I will not execute the fierceneſs of mine anger, &c.] That is, his wrath and fury to the uttermoſt; his people are deſerving of his wrath as others, being by nature children of wrath as the reſt; which they are ſenſible of under ſpiritual conviction, and therefore flee from it, where they may be ſafe: and tho' the Lord often chaſtizes and afflicts them, yet not in wrath; or however but in a little wrath, as it ſeems to them; he does not ſtir up all his wrath, nor any in reality; all being poured upon his Son their ſurety, who ſaves and delivers them from wrath to come. I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim; or again, or any more deſtroy [f] him; not twice; he might be deſtroyed when carried captive into Aſſyria; but the remnant that ſhall ſpring from him in the latter day ſhall not be deſtroyed, but ſaved. The Targum is, "my word ſhall not return to deſtroy the houſe of Iſrael;" or I will not return from my love and affections to them, I'll never be wroth with them any more; nor from my mercy to them, which is from everlaſting to everlaſting; or from my covenant, promiſe, and reſolution to ſave them, they ſhall not be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction: for I am God, and not man; a God gracious and merciful, long-ſuffering, ſlow to anger, and pardoning ſin, and not man, cruel, revengeful, implacable, who ſhews no mercy when it is in the power of his hands to avenge himſelf; or God that changes not in his purpoſes and counſels, in his love and affections, and therefore the ſons of Jacob are not conſumed, and not man that repents, is fickle, inconſtant, and mutable; or God that is faithful to his covenant and promiſes, and not man that lies and deceives, promiſes and never performs. The Targum is, "ſeeing I am God, my word remains for ever, and my works are not as the works of the fleſh (or of men) who dwell upon the earth." The holy one in the midſt of thee; being in the midſt of his people, he protects and defends them, and ſo they are ſafe; and being the holy one there, he ſanctifies them, and ſaves them, in a way conſiſtent with his own holineſs and juſtice: or there is a holy one, or holy ones, the ſingular put for the plural, in the midſt of thee [g]; and therefore thou ſhalt not be deſtroyed for their ſakes, as Sodom would not, had there been ten righteous perſons in it, to which ſome think the alluſion is: and I will not enter into the city; in an hoſtile way, to deſtroy or plunder it; but this is not to be underſtood either of Samaria or Jeruſalem, which were entered into in this manner. The Targum is, "I have decreed by my word, that my holy Shekinah ſhall be among you, and I will not change Jeruſalem again for another city;" which ſenſe the Jewiſh commentators follow; but as this reſpects goſpel-times, the meaning ſeems to be, that God would dwell among his people every where, and would not be confined to any city or temple as heretofore; but wherever his church and people were, there would be his temple, and there he would dwell.

℣. 10. They ſhall walk after the Lord, &c.] That is, after the Meſſiah, who is Jehovah our righteouſneſs; that Jehovah the Jews pierced, and now ſhall mourn at the ſight of, being converted to him; for theſe are the choſen of God among that people, who in the latter day ſhall partake of the grace and favour before expreſſed, in conſequence of which they ſhall be ſet a ſeeking the Lord their God, and David their king; and finding him, ſhall follow after him, as ſheep go after their ſhepherd, being led by him into green paſtures; as ſubjects follow their prince, obeying his commands and orders; as ſoldiers march after their leader and commander, ſo theſe after Chriſt, the great captain of their ſalvation, part of whoſe armies they will make: they will walk under the influence of his grace, having life, ſtrength, guidance, and direction from him, which walking implies; they will walk not after the fleſh, as they now do, but after the ſpirit of Chriſt, taking him for their guide, by whom they will be led into all truth, as it is in Jeſus; they will walk in his ways, in all the paths of faith and holineſs, truth and righteouſneſs; in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, according to his word. The Targum is, "they ſhall go after the worſhip of the Lord." He ſhall roar like a lion; the Lord Chriſt they walk after; who is the lion of the tribe of Judah, the Iſraelites ſhall now follow after; receiving, embracing, and confeſſing him the true Meſſiah. So the Targum, "and his word ſhall be as a lion that roars; Chriſt, the eſſential word of God: and ſo Jarchi, according to Lyra, interprets it of the Meſſiah to come; who is compared to a lion for his ſtrength and courage, and for the fierceneſs of his wrath againſt his enemies; and his voice, in his word, is like the roaring of a lion, exceeding loud, and reaching far, even the uttermoſt parts of the earth; as it did in the firſt times of the goſpel, and will in the laſt; and which the Jews particularly, in the ſeveral parts of the world, will hear, and Gentiles alſo, and be affected with it; for it will be alſo very ſtrong, powerful, and efficacious; which is another reaſon of its being compared to a lion roaring; ſee Joel iii. 16. Rev. x. 2. When he ſhall roar, then the children ſhall tremble from the weſt; the children of Iſrael, the children of God, his adopted ones, whom he has predeſtinated to the adoption of children; theſe, through the firſt impreſſions of Chriſt's voice or word upon them, ſhall ſtartle, and be ſet a trembling, and be aſtoniſhed, as Saul was, when called and converted; as it is reported of the lion, that when it roars other beaſts are ſo terrified, that they are quite ſtunned and amazed, and are not able to ſtir; but though the firſt ſound of the voice of Chriſt may have ſome effect upon the Jews, yet this will not cauſe them to tremble at him, ſo as to flee from him, but to cauſe them to flee to him: for the phraſe is expreſſive of motion towards him, and to their own land, as appears from the following verſe; when filled with a ſenſe of his majeſty and grace, they ſhall approach him with an holy awe of him, with fear and trembling: or come with honour [h]; agreeable to 1 Sam. xvi. 4. having high, honourable, and grand ſentiments and apprehenſions of him; ſo that this trembling, at leaſt, iſſues in a godly and filial fear and reverence of him, ſuitable to their character as children. The phraſe, from the weſt, or from the ſea[i], meaning the Mediterranean ſea, which lay weſt of Judea, and is often uſed for the weſt, may ſignify the weſtern or European part of the world, where the Jews for the moſt part are, and from whence they will be gathered. The Targum is, “for he ſhall roar, and the captives ſhall be gathered from the weſt.”

℣. 11. They ſhall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, &c.] They ſhall come from thence with fear and trembling; which may allude to the trembling of birds at the roaring of a lion, or to the trembling motion of their wings in flying; and denotes the ſwiftneſs of the motion of the Iſraelites and Jews to Chriſt, and to his church and people, and to their own land, under divine influence and direction: or ſhall come with honour[k]; with all readineſs and chearfulneſs, in the obedience of faith: and as a dove out of the land of Aſſyria; which is expreſſive of the ſame things, the dove being both a timorous and ſwift creature. Birds in common are very timorous, and tremble at any noiſe, and fearful of every thing that diſturbs them, and therefore make all the haſte and ſpeed they can to get out of the way, and to do which they are naturally provided; and more eſpecially the dove is always repreſented as very fearful and trembling, eſpecially when purſued by the hawk, as the poet[l] obſerves. Tho' it may be, theſe figures may only ſignify, as the weak and impotent ſtate of the Jews, conſidered in themſelves at this time, ſo the quick ſpeed and haſte they ſhall make to their own land. And perhaps there may be ſomething alluded to in the text, that may refer to the dove as peculiar to Aſſyria, as it ſhould ſeem to be. Now it is ſaid of Semiramis, an ancient queen of Aſſyria, that being expoſed when an infant, was nouriſhed by doves, and at her death was turned into one; and from hence it is not only ſaid ſhe had her name, which ſignifies a dove in the Syriac tongue, but doves by the Syrians were worſhipped as deities[m]. And Derceto, a Syrian goddeſs, ſuppoſed to be her mother, having a temple at Aſcalon, perhaps the above ſtory may be the reaſon why the inhabitants of that place reckoned doves ſo ſacred, that they did not kill them; for Philo[n], who lived there ſome time, having obſerved great numbers of them in the highways, and in every houſe, aſked the reaſon of it; and he was anſwered, that the citizens were of old forbid the uſe of them: and it may be further obſerved, that in honour of Semiramis, the kings of Aſſyria bore a dove in their coat of arms[o]; but whether there is any thing peculiar or no in this reference, is not certain: and beſides what has been obſerved of the fearfulneſs of this creature, and its ſwiftneſs and haſte it makes in flying; it may alſo denote the characters of meekneſs, humility, and harmleſſneſs, which the Jews now converted will have by the grace of God, as well as their mournful diſpoſition. Egypt and Aſſyria are particularly mentioned, as they generally are, where the return of Iſrael and Judah into their own land is propheſied of, Iſ. xi. 11. Zech. x. 10. and may ſignify the Turks, in whoſe poſſeſſion theſe countries are, and among whom many Jews live: and the one lying to the ſouth, and the other to the north of Judea, and the weſt being obſerved before, this ſhews that theſe people ſhould be gathered from all parts of the world, where they are diſperſed; the eaſt is not mentioned, becauſe their land they will be returned unto lies there. And I will place them in their houſes, ſaith the Lord; it is not ſaid in towns and cities, and fortified places, but in houſes; ſignifying that they ſhould dwell in their own land, in a civil ſenſe, ſecurely, and in their habitations, under their vines and fig-trees, being in no fear and danger of enemies, and live in the utmoſt ſafety, under the government and protection of the king Meſſiah; or in a ſpiritual ſenſe, they will be placed in the congregations of the ſaints in the churches of Chriſt, which will be as dove-houſes to them, and whither they ſhall fly as doves to their windows, Iſ. lx. 8. and it is obſerved of doves, that they fly the ſwifteſt when they make to their own houſes: and at laſt, as all the people of God will, they will be placed in the manſions of glory, in Chriſt's Father's houſe, thoſe everlaſting habitations. Theſe words, ſaith the Lord, are added, for the certain and ſure accompliſhment of all this. The Targum of the whole is, “as a bird which comes openly, ſo ſhall they come who are carried captive into the land of Egypt; and as a dove that returns to its dove-houſe, ſo ſhall they return who are carried into the land of Aſſyria; and I will return them in peace to their houſes, and my word ſhall be their protection, ſaith the Lord.”

℣. 12. Ephraim compaſſeth me about with lies, and the houſe of Iſrael with deceit, &c.] Here properly we ſhould begin a new chapter, as many interpreters and commentators do; for the prophet, or the Lord by him, in the preceding verſe, having finiſhed his predictions concerning the call and converſion of the Iſraelites, and their return to their land, here begins a new diſcourſe, by comparing the characters of Ephraim and Judah, and thence deſcends to the ſins and puniſhment of both. The former, namely, Ephraim or Iſrael, that is, the ten tribes, ſurrounded either the prophet, to hear him propheſy, and profeſſed a great regard to what he ſaid, tho' it was all deceit and flattery; or rather the Lord himſelf, whom they pretended to ſerve and worſhip, when they worſhipped the calves at Dan and Bethel; and would have it thought they did not worſhip them, but the Lord in them, and by them, as the papiſts now ſay of their images and image-worſhip; but let them not deceive themſelves, God will not be mocked: or when they did at any time ſeem to approach unto him in any branch of religious worſhip, either to pray unto him, or to praiſe him, it was not done with ſincerity; it was only with their mouths, not with their hearts; theſe agreed not together, but like their anceſtors of old, they did flatter him with their mouth, and lied unto him with their tongues, Pſ. lxxviii. 36. and ſo all ſuch profeſſors of religion, who are not ſincere in their ſervice and worſhip of God; or meet together to ſpeak and hear falſe doctrines, which are lies in hypocriſy; or attend to ſuperſtition and will-worſhip, and ſet up ordinances and inſtitutions of their own, neglecting thoſe which are of God, do as Ephraim did, encompaſs compaſs the Lord with lies and deceit. But Judah yet ruleth with God; a Theocracy was as yet acknowledged and ſupported among them; God ruled in the midſt of them, and they ruled with him; their kings ruled in the fear of God, and according to his laws, ſtatutes, and appointment, and not their own; particularly in the days of Hezekiah, which may be here reſpected, the people retained and practiſed the true worſhip and ſervice of God; which as it is the trueſt liberty, ſo is the higheſt honour and dignity: ſuch are rulers with God, as all the Lord's people, all that believe in Chriſt are; they are made by his grace kings and princes; and they appear to be ſo by their new birth; they are clothed, fed, and guarded as princes, as the ſons of a king, as kings themſelves; they have the riches and power of kings; they are poſſeſſed of a kingdom of grace now, which is within them, and where grace reigns, thro' righteouſneſs, over their luſts and corruptions; and great power, like princes, have they in prayer with God, and are heirs of the kingdom of glory, as well as ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth. Guſſetius renders it, Judah yet weeps with God; as his father Jacob did, imitating him, as in ch. xii. 4: and is faithful with the ſaints; which Kimchi's father intrepets of God himſelf; and ſo Lyra, and according to him Jarchi: and then the ſenſe is, and he, that is, God, is faithful with the ſaints; in fulfilling all his counſels, purpoſes, and deſigns of grace concerning them; in making good his covenant with them, and his promiſes unto them; and by bringing them to the enjoyment of all that grace and glory he calls them to: but this is rather an epithet of Judah; who kept to the word and worſhip of the true God, as the ſaints of old, their anceſtors had done; walked in the good old way, in the way of good men, and kept the paths of the righteous; abode by the true prieſts of the Lord, who were ſet apart and ſanctified for that office; and hearkened to the prophets, the holy men of God, who ſpake to them, being moved by the Holy Spirit: and adhered firmly to the holy things [p], as it may be rendered; to the holy temple, and the worſhip in it; to the holy ſacrifices, altars, &c. when the ten tribes departed from them: and ſo this may be applied to the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus, that believe in him truly, and continue in the faith of him in all ages; and who are faithful with the holy ones [q]; the ſame with God in the former clauſe; ſo Kimchi interprets it, and ſo the word is uſed in Prov. ix. 10. and xxx. 3. ſee Joſh. xxiv. 19. that is, with Father, Son, and Spirit; with the Father, when they worſhip him in ſpirit and truth; with the Son, when they cleave to him with full purpoſe of heart; with the Spirit, when they walk after him, and give to each the glory due unto them: or rather, faithful with holy men [r]; ſanctified by the Spirit and grace of God; as they are, when they hold faſt the faith delivered to the ſaints without mixture or wavering, with courage and manlineſs; tho' the greater number is againſt them, and they are reproached and perſecuted for ſo doing; when they abide by the ordinances of Chriſt, as they were delivered, and keep them in faith and love, without ſiniſter views; when they continue ſtedfaſtly in the communion of the ſaints, attending with them on the word and ordinances, and do not forſake their aſſembling together; and when they conſtantly exhort and ſtir up one another to the duties of religion, and faithfully admoniſh and reprove each other as there is occaſion for it.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter contains complaints and charges both againſt Iſrael and Judah, and threatens them with puniſhment in caſe they repent not, which they are exhorted to; and firſt Ephraim is charged with idolatry, vain confidence in, and alliances with foreign nations, ℣. 1. and then the Lord declares he has a controverſy with Judah, and will puniſh the inhabitants of it for their ſins, ℣. 2. which are aggravated by their being the deſcendents of ſo great a man as Jacob, who got the advantage of his elder brother, had much power with God, and received favours from him, and they alſo, ℣. 3, 4, 5. and therefore are exhorted to turn to God, wait on him, and do that which is right and good, ℣. 6. Ephraim is again in his turn charged with fraudulent dealing in trade, and with oppreſſion, and the love of it; and yet pretended he got riches by his own labour, without wronging any, ℣. 7, 8. nevertheleſs, the Lord promiſes them publick ordinances of worſhip, and joy in them, and the miniſtry of his prophets, ℣. 9, 10. tho' for the preſent they were guilty of groſs idolatry, ℣. 11. which is aggravated, by the raiſing of Jacob their progenitor from a low eſtate, and the wonderful preſervation of him, and the bringing of them out of Egypt, ℣. 12, 13. and the chapter is cloſed with obſerving Ephraim's bitter provocation of God, for which his reproach ſhould return unto him, and his blood be left upon him, ℣. 14.

℣. 1. Ephraim feedeth on wind, &c.] Which will be no more profitable and beneficial to him, than wind is to a man that opens his mouth, and fills himſelf with it: the phraſe is expreſſive of labour in vain, and of a man's getting nothing by all the pains he takes; the ſame with ſowing the wind, and reaping the whirlwind, ch. viii. 7. and ſo the Targum has it here, "the houſe of Iſrael are like "to one that ſows the wind, and reaps the whirl-"wind all the day;" and this refers either to the worſhip of idols, and the calves in particular, and the vain hope of good things promiſed to themſelves from thence; or to their vain confidence in the alliances and confederacies they entered into with neighbouring nations; from which they expected much, but found little: and followed after the eaſt wind; a wind ſtrong and vehement, burning and blaſting, very noxious and hurtful; ſo that inſtead of receiving any profit and advantage, either by their idolatry, or their covenants with other nations, they were only in theſe things purſuing what would be greatly to their detriment: or they would be no more able to attain by ſuch methods what they ſought for, than they would be able to overtake the eaſt wind, which is a very ſwift and fleeting one; ſo that this clauſe expoſes their folly, in expecting good things from their idols, or help from their neighbours. He daily increaſeth lies and deſolation; whilſt they multiplied idols, which are lies fallacious and deceitful, and idolatrous rites and acts of worſhip, they do but increaſe their deſolation and ruin, which ſuch things are the cauſe of, and will certainly bring them unto; or not content with the daily increaſe of their idolatries among themſelves, they continually perſecute, ſpoil, and plunder thoſe who do not give into their falſe worſhip: ſo the Targum, "lies "and ſpoil they multiply;" idolaters are generally perſecutors: and they do make a covenant with the Aſſyrians; and gave tribute and preſents to their kings, as Menahem did to Pul, and Hoſhea to Salmaneſer, not to hurt them, and to help and aſſiſt them againſt their enemies, and to ſtrengthen their kingdom; ſee 2 Kings xv. 19, 20. and xvii. 3, 4: and oil is carried into Egypt; one while they ſent preſents to the Aſſyrians, to obtain their favour and friendſhip; and at another time to the Egyptians; nay, they ſent to So king of Egypt, at the ſame time they were tributary to Aſſyria, and conſpiring againſt him, brought on their ruin; and oil was a principal part of the preſent ſent; for this was carried not by way of traffick, but as a preſent: ſo the Targum, "and they carried gifts to Egypt;" ſee Iſ. lvii. 9. The land of Iſrael being a land of oil-olive, was famous for the beſt oil, of which there was a ſcarcity in Egypt, and therefore a welcome preſent there, as balſam alſo was; ſee Gen. xxxvii. 25. and xliii. 11. Ezek. xxvii. 17.

℣. 2. The Lord hath alſo a controverſy with Judah, &c.] The two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, as well as the ten tribes; for tho' they had ruled with God, and had been faithful with the ſaints in the firſt times of the apoſtacy of Iſrael; yet afterwards they ſadly degenerated, and fell into idolatry likewiſe, particularly in the time of Ahaz, in which Hoſea propheſied; and therefore the Lord had ſomewhat againſt them; nor would he ſpare them, but reprove them by the prophets, and rebuke them in his providences; bring them to his bar, and lay before them their evils, and threaten them with puniſhment in caſe of impenitence, as follows: and will puniſh Jacob according to his ways; all the poſterity of Jacob, whether Ephraim or Judah; thoſe of the ten tribes, or of the two, who all deſcended from Jacob: or will viſit according to his ways[s]; if right and agreeable to the mind and word of God, in a way of grace and mercy; but if wrong, crooked, and perverſe, then in a way of puniſhment; for viſiting is uſed both ways: according to his doings will he recompenſe him; as they were good or bad; if good, will reward them with a reward of grace; if bad, with vengeance. The Targum paraphraſes it, "according to his right "works."

℣. 3. He took his brother by the heel in the womb, &c.] That is, Jacob took his brother Eſau by the heel, as he came forth from his mother's womb; the hiſtory of it is in Gen. xxv. 25, 26. It is here obſerved, upon mentioning the name of Jacob in the former verſe, meaning the poſterity of the patriarch; but here he himſelf is intended, and occaſionally taken notice of, to ſhew how very different his poſterity were from him, and how ſadly degenerated; as well as to upbraid them with ingratitude, whoſe anceſtors, and they alſo, had received ſuch and ſo many favours from the Lord: Jacob the patriarch was an hero from the womb, but they tranſgreſſors from it; this action of his obſerved, was a preſage and pledge of his having the ſuperiority of his brother, and of his getting the birthright and bleſſing from him. So the Targum, "prophet, ſay unto them, was it not ſaid "of Jacob before he was born, that he would be "greater than his brother?" ſee Rom. ix. 11, 12. In this action there was ſomething divine, miraculous, and preter-natural; it was not the effort of nature merely, but contrary to it, or at leaſt above it; and not done by chance, but ordered by the providence of God, as a prediction and teſtification of his future greatneſs, and even of his poſterity's, in times yet to come, as Kimchi obſerves, who refers to Obad. ℣. 18. And by his ſtrength he had power with God; the Targum is, with the angel, as in the following verſe; he is called a man in the hiſtory of this event in Gen. xxxii. 24. not that he was a mere man, ſince he is here expreſsly called God, and afterwards the Lord God of hoſts; and there it is evident from the context, he was a divine perſon, and no other than the Son of God; who tho' not as yet incarnate, appeared in an human form, as a preſage of his future incarnation; though this was not a mere apparition, ſpectre, or fantaſm, as Joſephus[t] calls it; for it was not in a dream, or in a viſionary way, that this wreſtling and ſtriving was between this divine perſon in this form and Jacob, but in reality; it was a real ſubſtance which the Son of God formed, animated, actuated, and aſſumed for that time and purpoſe, and then laid it aſide; which touched Jacob, and he touched that, laid hold on it, and held it faſt, and ſtrove with it, and had power over it, and over God in it; even over him that is God over all, the true God and eternal life, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; not a created God, or God by office, but by nature; as the perfections that are in him, and the works and worſhip aſcribed to him, declare: now Jacob had power over him by his ſtrength; not by his natural ſtrength; either of his body, which could not have been equal to the ſtrength of this human body aſſumed for the time, as it was uſed and managed by a divine perſon, unleſs he had been extraordinarily aſſiſted and ſtrengthened; or of his mind and ſoul, not by any ſpiritual ſtrength he had of himſelf; but by what he had from this divine perſon, with whom he wreſtled; who put ſtrength into him, and ſupported and increaſed the power and ſtrength of faith in prayer; ſo that he prevailed over him, and got the bleſſing, for which reaſon his name was called Iſrael, Gen. xxxii. 28.

℣. 4. Yea, he had power over the angel, and prevailed, &c.] This is repeated in different words, not only for the confirmation of it, it being a very extraordinary thing, and difficult of belief; but to direct to the hiſtory here referred to, where the perſon Jacob prevailed over is called a man, and here the angel; and ſo Joſephus[u] calls him a divine perſon; not a created angel, not Michael, as the Rabbins ſay, unleſs the Meſſiah is meant by him; nor Jacob's guardian angel, as Kimchi, every man being thought by ſome to have one; and much leſs Eſau's evil angel, that was againſt Jacob, as Jarchi and Abarbinel; for of him he would never have ſought nor expected a bleſſing; but an increated angel, the Son of God, the ſame that went before the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and that redeemed Jacob from all evil, Gen. xlviii. 16. Exod. xxiii. 20—23. called an angel, being ſo not by nature, for he is ſuperior to angels in both his natures divine and human; but by office, being ſent to reveal the will of God, and to do the work of God in the redemption and ſalvation of men; the ſame that is called the angel of the great council in the Greek verſion of Iſ. ix. 6. and the angel of God's preſence, Iſ. lxiii. 9. and the angel or meſſenger of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1. the phraſes uſed denote, as before, the power and prevalence Jacob had with this divine perſon in prayer; whereby he obtained the bleſſing of him, even deliverance from his brother Eſau, as well as others reſpecting him and his poſterity. He wept, and made ſupplication unto him; not the angel, intreating Jacob to let him go, as Jarchi and Kimchi, and ſo ſome chriſtian interpreters; who think that an angel in human form may be ſaid to weep, as well as to eat and drink; and the rather, ſince this angel was not the conqueror, but the conquered; and ſince Chriſt, in the days of his fleſh, both prayed and wept, and ſhed tears; but the caſe here is different; and tho' he was prevailed over, it was thro' his own condeſcenſion and goodneſs: but rather Jacob is meant, as Abarbinel and others; who wept not on account of the angel's touching his thigh, and the pain that might put him to; for he was of a more heroic ſpirit than to weep for that, who had endured ſo much hardſhip in Laban's ſervice, in heat and cold; and beſides, notwithſtanding this, he kept wreſtling with him, and afterwards walked, though haltingly: but he wept either becauſe he could not get out the name of the perſon he wreſtled with; or rather the tears he ſhed were for the bleſſing he ſought of him; for it is joined with his making ſupplication, and is expreſſive of the humble, yet ardent, affectionate, fervent, and importunate requeſt he made to obtain it; and here we have another proof of the deity of Chriſt, in that ſupplication was made to him, and he is here repreſented as the object of that part of religious worſhip, prayer, as he often is in the New Teſtament. This circumſtance is not expreſſed in Gen. xxxii. though it may be gathered from what is there ſaid; however, the prophet had it by divine inſpiration; and the truth of it is not to be doubted of, being not at all inconſiſtent with, but quite agreeable to that hiſtory. He found him at Bethel; either the angel found Jacob in Bethel, as he did more than once, both before and after this time, Gen. xxviii. 12—19. and xxxv. 6, 7, 9. it is good to be in Bethel, in the houſe of God; happy are thoſe that dwell there, and are found there living and dying, doing the will and work of God there: or rather Jacob found God or the angel in Bethel; God is to be found in his own houſe, there he comes and bleſſes with his gracious preſence; here Chriſt the angel of his preſence is; here he meets with his people, and manifeſts himſelf unto them. There is in the words a tacit reflection on Iſrael, or the ten tribes, that bore the name of Jacob; the patriarch found God in Bethel, Chriſt the angel of the Lord; but now inſtead of him, there was a calf ſet up in this place, Iſrael worſhipped; and therefore was it called Bethaven, the houſe of an idol or iniquity, inſtead of Bethel, the houſe of God. And there he ſpake with us; not with Eſau and his angel, concerning Iſaac's bleſſing of Jacob, as Jarchi; nor with Jacob and his angel, as the father of Kimchi; nor with the prophet, and with Amos, to reprove Iſrael there for the worſhip of the calves, as Kimchi himſelf; but with all the Iſraelites, of whom the prophet was one; who were then in the loins of Jacob, when he converſed with God, and God with him at Bethel: or as Saadiah interprets it, for us; for our ſakes, on our account: or concerning us; concerning the multiplication of Jacob's poſterity, and the giving the land of Canaan to them, as the Lord did at both times he appeared to Jacob in Bethel; ſee Gen. xxviii. 14, 15. and xxxv. 11, 12. and it is in the houſe of God where Chriſt is as a Son, that he ſpeaks with and to his people, even in his word and ordinances there.

℣. 5. Even the Lord God of hoſts, &c.] The God Jacob had power over, the angel he prevailed with, to whom he made ſupplication with weeping, and who ſpake with him and his in Bethel, is he whoſe name is Jehovah; who is the true and living God, the Lord of hoſts and armies both in heaven and in earth; of all the angels in heaven, and the legions of them; and of the church militant, and all the ſaints, who are the good ſoldiers of Chriſt, his ſpiritual militia; and he is the captain of the Lord's hoſt, and of their ſalvation, and to whom all the numerous hoſts of creatures, be they what they will, are ſubject: this is obſerved, to ſet off the greatneſs of the perſon Jacob wreſtled with, and his wondrous grace, in condeſcending to be over-powered by him: the Lord is his memorial; or his name, Jehovah, which belongs to this angel, the Son of God, as to his divine Father; and which is expreſſive of his divine exiſtence, of his eternity and immutability; this is his memorial, or the remembrancer of him; which puts his people in all ages in remembrance of him, what he is, what an infinite, almighty, and all-ſufficient being he is; and he is always to be believed in, and truſted to, and to be ſerved, adored, and worſhipped. The Targum adds, to every generation and generation.

℣. 6. Therefore turn thou to thy God, &c.] Judah, with whom the Lord had a controverſy, is here addreſſed and exhorted to return to the Lord, from whom they had backſlidden; and this is urged, from the conſideration of their being the deſcendents of ſo great a man as Jacob; whoſe example they ſhould follow, and make ſupplication to the Lord as he did; and from this inſtance of their progenitor might encourage themſelves, that God, who was his God, and their God, would be gracious and merciful to them, and that they ſhould prevail with him likewiſe, and obtain the bleſſing, and eſpecially ſince he is the everlaſting and unchangeable Jehovah. Turning to the Lord, as it ſuppoſes a going aſtray from him, ſo it ſignifies a turning from idols, and all vain confidences; and is done by renewed acts of faith and truſt in the Lord, and repentance towards him; and cannot be performed aright, without grace and ſtrength from him, of which Ephraim was ſenſible, Jer. xxxi. 18. as well as the encouragement to it is from a view of God as a covenant-God, and as gracious and merciful. So Aben Ezra interprets it of divine help, of turning by thy God, that is, by the help and aſſiſtance of thy God; and indeed, converſion to God, whether at firſt, or after, is thro' his powerful and efficacious grace. Kimchi explains it, thou ſhalt reſt in thy God [w]; when what follows is performed, comparing it with Iſ. xxx. 15. The Targum is, "and thou ſhalt be ſtrong "in the worſhip of thy God." Keep mercy and judgment; or obſerve [x] them, to do them; to ſhew mercy to perſons in miſery, to the poor and indigent, which is what the Lord deſires and delights in, more than in ceremonial ſacrifices; and is a principal part of the moral law, as judgment is another; the exerciſe of juſtice both public and private; paſſing a righteous ſentence in courts of judicature, and doing that which is right between man and man; owing no man any thing, but giving to all their due; doing no injury to any man's perſon, property, or character; which are fruits meet for true repentance; and when they ſpring from faith and love, and are done with a view to the glory of God, and good of men, are acceptable to the Lord; theſe are the weightier matters of the law, Matt. xxiii. 23. And wait on thy God continually; both in private prayer, and for an anſwer of it, and in public worſhip and ordinances, in hope of meeting with him, and enjoying his preſence; for this takes in the whole of religious worſhip private and public, and all religious exerciſes, as invocation of God, truſt in him, and expectation of good things from him; and may have a reſpect to the Meſſiah, and ſalvation by him, and a waiting for him and that; as Jacob did, and his poſterity ſhould, and many of them were in this poſture, before and at his coming; ſee Gen. xlix. 18. Iſ. xxv. 9. Luke ii. 25, 38. Agreeable to this the Targum is, "and wait for the "redemption or ſalvation of thy God continu- "ally."

℣. 7. He is a merchant, &c.] Here is a change of perſon from thou to he, from Judah to Ephraim, who is ſaid to be a merchant; and if that was all, there is nothing worthy of diſpraiſe in it; but he was a cheating merchant, a fraudulent dealer, as appears by what follows: or he is Canaan, or a Canaanite [y]; more like a deſcendent of Canaan by his manners, than a deſcendent of Jacob. But the Canaanites dealing much in merchandiſe, their name became a common name for a merchant, as a Chaldean for an aſtrologer; and as the children of Iſrael poſſeſſed their land, ſo they followed the ſame buſineſs and employment of life; which had they performed honeſtly, would not have been to their diſcredit; but they were too much like the Canaanites, of whom Philoſtratus [z] ſays, they were covetous and fraudulent; and this was Ephraim's character. The Targum is, "be you not as mer- "chants." The balances of deceit are in his hand; he uſed falſe weights and meaſures; made the ephah ſmall, and the ſhekel great, and falſified the balances by deceit; had wicked balances, and deceitful weights, and the ſcant meaſure, which is abominable, Amos viii. 5. Mic. vi. 10, 11. they pretended to weigh every thing exactly they bought or ſold; but cheated either by ſlight of hand, holding the balances as they ſhould not; or had one pair of ſcales and weights to buy with, and another to ſell by, contrary to the law of God, Lev. xix. 35, 36. He loveth to oppreſs; inſtead of keeping and doing mercy and juſtice, they oppreſſed the poor, ground their faces, defrauded them of their due, and by ſecret and private methods cheated them in their dealings with them, and brought them to poverty and diſtreſs; and this they took delight and pleaſure in, which ſhewed a want of a principle of honeſty in them, and that they were habituated to ſuch a courſe of life, and were hardened in it, and had no remorſe of conſcience for it, but rather gloried in it.

℣. 8. And Ephraim ſaid, yet I am become rich, &c.] Notwithſtanding they took ſuch unjuſt methods, as to uſe deceitful balances, they proſpered in the world, got abundance of riches; and therefore concluded from thence, that their manner of dealing was not criminal, at leaſt not ſo bad as the prophets repreſented to them; and ſo promiſed themſelves impunity, and that what they were threatened with would not come upon them; and as long as they got riches, they cared not in what manner; and inaſmuch as they proſpered and ſucceeded in their courſe of trading, they were encouraged to go on, and not fear any evil coming upon them for it. According to Aben Ezra and Kimchi, the ſenſe is, that they became rich of themſelves, by their own induſtry and labour, and did not acknowledge that their riches, and power to get them, were of God. They gloried in them as their own attainments; and which they had little reaſon to do, ſince they were treaſures of wickedneſs, and mammon of unrighteouſneſs, which in a day of wrath would be of no ſervice to them. I have found me out ſubſtance; they found ways and means of acquiring great riches, and large eſtates, by their own wiſdom and cunning, and all for themſelves, for their own uſe, to be enjoyed by them for years to come; and they were reckoned by them ſolid and ſubſtantial things, when a mere ſhadow, emptineſs, and vanity; and were not to be employed for their own uſe and advantage only, but ſhould have been for the good of others; nor were they to be attributed to their own ſagacity, prudence, and management, but to the providence of God, admitting they had been got in ever ſo honourable and juſt a manner. In all my labours they ſhall find none iniquity in me, that were ſin; here again Ephraim, or the people of Iſrael, vainly aſcribe all their wealth and riches to their own labour, diligence, and induſtry, and take no notice of God and his providence, or of his bleſſing upon them; and pretend to be very upright and honeſt in their dealings, and that what they got were very honeſtly got, and would bear the ſtricteſt ſcrutiny; and that if their courſe of trade was ever ſo narrowly looked into, there would be nothing found that was very bad or criminal, that they could be juſtly reproached for; only ſome little trifling things, that would not bear the name of ſin, or deſerve any correction or puniſhment; ſo pure were they in their own eyes, ſo blinded and hardened in ſin, and fearleſs of the divine diſpleaſure; like the adulterous woman, wiped their mouths when they had eaten the ſweet morſels of ſin, and ſaid they had done no wickedneſs, Prov. xxx. 20. or which was involuntary, and not done knowingly, as Kimchi and Abendana: or rather, as Ben Melech renders it, no iniquity and ſin; and ſo others: or beſt of all, no iniquity or ſin, as Noldius [a]; no iniquity, or any kind of ſin at all. Thus, as Ephraim was charged before with idolatry and lies in religion, ſo here with fraudulent dealings, and getting riches in an illicit way in civil things; and of whoſe repentance and reformation there was no hope.

[a] Concord. Ebr. Part. p. 104. N°. 522.

℣. 9. And I that am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, &c.] Ephraim being ſo very corrupt in things, both religious and civil, and ſo very impenitent and impudent, is let alone to ſuffer the juſt puniſhment of his ſins; but Judah being called to repentance, and brought unto it, gracious promiſes are here made unto him, to be fulfilled in the times of the Meſſiah, either at the firſt or latter part of them; eſpecially the laſt is to be underſtood, when indeed all Iſrael ſhall return to the Lord, and be ſaved; and then it will appear, that the Lord who was their God, as was evident from his bringing them out of Egyptian bondage, and continued to be ſo from that time to the Babyloniſh captivity, and even to the times of the Meſſiah, will now be their God moſt clearly and manifeſtly, having redeemed them from worſe than Egyptian bondage; from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, the law, the world and death; even the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the true Meſſiah, they will now ſeek and embrace, who is God over all, and equal to ſuch a work of redemption and ſalvation; Immanuel, God with us, God in our nature, our Lord and our God, the God of the Jews now converted, as will be acknowledged, as well as of the Gentiles: and he will yet make thee to dwell in tabernacles, as in the days of the ſolemn feaſt; alluding to the feaſt of tabernacles, kept in commemoration of the Iſraelites dwelling in tents in the wilderneſs, Lev. xxiii. 42, 43. typical of Chriſt's incarnation, expreſſed by his tabernacling among men in human nature, John i. 14. and which feaſt, tho' aboliſhed by Chriſt with the reſt, yet it is ſaid will be kept by converted Jews and Gentiles in the latter day; which can be underſtood no otherwiſe than of their embracing and profeſſing the incarnate Saviour, partaking of the bleſſings of grace that come by him, and attending on thoſe ordinances of public worſhip inſtituted by him; ſee Zech. xiv. 16—19. and which booths, tents or tabernacles the Iſraelites dwelt in at that feaſt, were alſo typical of the churches of Chriſt under the goſpel-diſpenſation, and which are here meant; and in which it is here promiſed the converted Jews ſhall dwell, as they had been uſed to do in their booths at the ſolemn feaſt of tabernacles. Theſe chriſtian churches reſembling them in the matter of them; believers in Chriſt, the materials of ſuch churches, being often compared to goodly trees, to willows of the brook, to palm-trees, olive-trees, and myrtle-trees, with others, the branches of which were uſed at the above feaſt, to make their tabernacles with; ſee Lev. xxiii. 40. Neh. viii. 15. and in the uſe of them, which was to dwell in during the time of the ſaid feaſt; as the churches of Chriſt are the tabernacles of the Moſt High, the dwelling places of Father, Son, and Spirit; and the habitation of the ſaints, where they dwell and enjoy great plenty and proſperity, tranquillity and ſecurity; and here it particularly denotes that joy, peace and ſafety the converted Jews ſhall partake of in the churches of Chriſt in the latter day; of which the feaſt of tabernacles was but a ſhadow, and which was attended with much rejoicing, plenty of proviſions, and great ſafety.

℣. 10. I have alſo ſpoken to the prophets, &c.] Or, I will ſpeak[b]; for this reſpects not the Lord's ſpeaking by the prophets of the Old Teſtament, who ſpake as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt; tho' all they ſaid were for the uſe of, and profitable unto, chriſtian churches; but his ſpeaking by the apoſtles, prophets and teachers under the goſpel-diſpenſation; by whom the doctrines of grace have been more clearly diſpenſed, and which are no other than the voice of Chriſt ſpeaking in them; and which it is both a privilege to hear, and a duty to attend unto; ſee Eph. iv. 11: and I have multiplied viſions; or, will multiply viſions[c]; more than under the former diſpenſation, as was foretold by Joel ii. 28. ſee Acts ii. 16, 17. witneſs the viſions of the apoſtles Peter, Paul, John, and others: or this may reſpect the more clear ſight and knowledge of goſpel-truths in the times of the Meſſiah, then under the Moſaic œconomy; ſee 2 Cor. iii. 13—18: and uſed ſimilitudes by the miniſtry of the prophets; or, will uſe ſimilitudes[d]; for this is to be underſtood, not of the types and figures uſed by the Lord under the legal diſpenſation to repreſent ſpiritual things, as the brazen ſerpent, paſſover-lamb, manna, and the ſacrifices of the law; nor of the ſimilitudes uſed by the prophet Hoſea, taking a wife and children of whoredoms, to ſet forth the caſe and condition of Iſrael, and of the compariſons he makes of God, to a lion, leopard, bear, &c. or by any other of the former prophets; but of parables and ſimilitudes uſed in goſpel-times; not only ſuch as Chriſt uſed himſelf, who ſeldom ſpoke without a parable; ſee Matt. xiii. 11. but which he uſed by the miniſtry of his apoſtles and prophets, and which are to be met with in their diſcourſes and writings; ſee 1 Cor. iii. 6—12. and eſpecially ſuch ſeem to be meant that reſpect the converſion of the Jews, and the glory of the church in the latter day, Rom. xi. 16—26. Rev. xxi. 12—23.

℣. 11. Is there iniquity in Gilead? &c.] Idolatry there? ſtrange that there ſhould be, ſeeing it was a city of the prieſts, a city of refuge; or there is none there, ſay the prieſts, who pretended they did not worſhip idols, but the true Jehovah in them: or, is there not iniquity or idolatry in Gilead[e]? verily there is, let them pretend to what they will: or, is there only iniquity in it[f]? that the men of it ſhould be carried captive, as they were by Tiglath-Pileſer, before the reſt of the tribes; ſee 2 Kings xv. 29. no, there is iniquity and idolatry committed in other places, as well as there, who muſt expect to ſhare the ſame fate in time: or, is Gilead, Aven[g]? that is, Bethaven, the ſame with Bethel; it is as that, as guilty of idolatry as Bethel, where one of the calves was ſet up: ſurely they are vanity; the inhabitants of Gilead, as well as of Bethel, worſhipping idols, which are moſt vain things, vanity itſelf, and deceive thoſe that ſerve them, and truſt in them: they ſacrifice bullocks in Gilgal; to idols, as the Targum adds; and ſo Jarchi and Kimchi; according to Aben Ezra, they ſacrificed them to Baal; this ſhews that Gilead was not the only place of idolatry, which was on the other ſide Jordan, but Gilgal which was on this ſide Jordan was alſo polluted with it. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, "in Gilgal they were ſa-"crificing to bullocks;" to the calves there, the ſame as were at Dan and Bethel; ſo in the Septuagint gint verſion of 1 Kings xii. 29. it was formerly read; and ſo Cyril[h] quotes it, he (Jeroboam) ſet the one (calf) in Gilgal, and the other in Dan; hence the fable that Epiphanius[i] makes mention of, that when Eliſha was born, the golden ox or heifer at Gilgal bellowed very loudly, and ſo loud as to be heard at Jeruſalem. The Targum makes mention of an idol-temple here; and as it was near to Bethel, as appears from 1 Sam. x. 3, 8. and from Joſephus[k]; and ſo Jerom ſays[l], hard by Bethel, ſome ſuſpect another Gilgal; hence it might be put for it; however, it was a place of like idolatrous worſhip; it is mentioned as ſuch along with Beth-aven or Bethel, in ch. iv. 15. ſee alſo ch. ix. 15: yea, their altars are as heaps in the furrows of the fields; not only in the city of Gilgal, and in the temple there, as the Targum; but even without the city, in the fields they ſet up altars, which looked like heaps of ſtones; or they had a multitude of altars that ſtood as thick as they. So the Targum, "they have multiplied their altars, "like heaps upon the borders of the fields;" and the Jewiſh commentators in general underſtand this as expreſſive of the number of their altars, and of the increaſe of idolatrous worſhip; but ſome interpret it of the deſtruction of their altars, which ſhould become heaps of ſtones and rubbiſh, like ſuch as are in fields. Theſe words reſpect Ephraim or the ten tribes, in which theſe places were, whoſe idolatry is again taken notice of, after gracious promiſes were made to Judah. Some begin here a new ſermon or diſcourſe delivered to Iſrael.

℣. 12. And Jacob fled into the country of Syria, &c.] Or, field of Syria[m]; the ſame with Padan-Aram; for Padan in the Arabic language, as Bochart has ſhewn, ſignifies a field; and Aram is Syria, and is the word here uſed. This is to be underſtood of Jacob's fleeing thither for fear of his brother Eſau, the hiſtory of which is had in Gen. xxviii. and xxix. tho' ſome interpret this of his fleeing from Laban out of the field of Syria unto Gilead, Gen. xxxi. 21, 23. and ſo make it to be introduced as an aggravation of the ſin of the inhabitants of Gilead, that that place, which had been a refuge and ſanctuary to their anceſtor in his diſtreſs, ſhould be defiled with idolatry; but the words will not bear ſuch a conſtruction, and the following ſeem to militate againſt it: and Iſrael ſerved for a wife, and for a wife he kept ſheep; and ſo the laſt clauſe is ſupplied by the Targum, Jarchi and Kimchi: this was after his flight into Syria, and before he fled from Laban, whom he ſerved ſeven years for Rachel; and then ſerved him by keeping his ſheep ſeven years more for the ſame: tho' it may be underſtood of his two wives, thus; he ſerved ſeven years for a wife, for Rachel intentionally, but eventually it was for Leah; and then he kept ſheep ſeven years more for his other wife Rachel; the hiſtory of this is in Gen. xxix. This is mentioned to ſhew the meanneſs of Jacob the anceſtor of the Iſraelites, from whom they had their original and name; he was a fugitive in the land of Syria; there he was a Syrian ready to periſh, a very poor man, obliged to ſerve and keep ſheep for a wife, having no dowry to give; and this is obſerved here to bring down the pride of Iſrael, who boaſted of their deſcent, which is weak and fooliſh for any to do; and to ſhew the goodneſs of God to Jacob, and to them, in raiſing him and them from ſo low an eſtate and condition to ſuch eminency and greatneſs as they were; and to upbraid their ingratitude to the God of their fathers, and of their mercies, whom they had revolted from, and turned to idols.

℣. 13. And by a prophet the Lord brought Iſrael out of Egypt, &c.] Or, by the prophet; the famous and moſt excellent prophet Moſes, who, by way of eminency, is ſo called; him the Lord ſent, and employed, and made uſe of him as an inſtrument to bring his people out of their bondage in Egypt; in which he was a type of Chriſt the great prophet of the church, raiſed up like unto him, and the redeemer of his people from ſin, ſatan and the world, law, hell and death, and all enemies: and by a prophet he was preſerved; by the ſame prophet Moſes was Iſrael preſerved at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs; where they were kept as a flock of ſheep from their powerful enemies, and brought to the borders of Canaan's land. Some underſtand this laſt clauſe of Joſhua, by whom the Iſraelites were ſafely conducted thro' Jordan into the land of Canaan, and ſettled there; and particularly were brought by him to Gilgal, where the covenant of circumciſion was renewed, and the firſt paſſover in the land kept, but now a place of idolatry, as before-mentioned; and which ſin was aggravated by this circumſtance: but the deſign of this obſervation ſeems to be to put the Iſraelites in remembrance of their low eſtate in Egypt, and of the goodneſs of God to them in delivering them from thence, which they had ſadly requited by their degeneracy and apoſtacy from him; and to hint unto them how much they ought to have valued the prophets of the Lord, tho' they had deſpiſed them, ſince they had received ſuch benefits and bleſſings by the means of a prophet.

℣. 14. Ephraim provoked him to anger moſt bitterly, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion ſupplies it, me; that is, God, as Kimchi; or his Lord, as it may be ſupplied from the laſt clauſe of the verſe; the ſenſe is the ſame either way: it was God that Ephraim or the ten tribes provoked to ſtir up his wrath and vengeance againſt them; notwithſtanding all the favours that they and their anceſtors had received from him, they provoked him in a moſt bitter manner, to bitter anger, vehement wrath and fury: or, with bitterneſſes[n]; with their ſins, which are in their own nature bitter, diſpleaſing to God; and in their effects bring bitterneſs and death on thoſe that commit them; meaning particularly their idolatry, and all belonging to it; their idols, high places, altars, &c. The word here uſed is rendered, high heaps[o], Jer. xxxi. 21. and is here by Kimchi interpreted of altars, with which, and their ſacrifices on them, they provoked the Lord to anger: therefore ſhall he leave his blood upon him; the blood of innocent perſons, prophets, and other good men ſhed by him; the ſin of it ſhall be charged upon him, and he ſhall bear the puniſhment of it. So the Targum, "the fault of inno-"cent blood which he ſhed ſhall return upon him:" or, his own blood ſhall be poured out upon him[p]; in juſt retaliation for the blood of others ſhed by him, and for all the blood ſhed by him in idolatrous ſacrifices, crifices, and other bloody ſins; or his own blood being ſhed by the enemy ſhall remain upon him unrevenged; God will not puniſh thoſe that ſhed it: and his reproach ſhall his Lord return unto him; that is, as he has reproached the prophets of the Lord for reproving him for his idolatry, and reproached the Lord himſelf, by revolting from him, and neglecting his worſhip, and preferring the worſhip of idols to him; ſo as a juſt recompence, he ſhall be delivered up into the hands of the enemy, and become a reproach, a taunt, and a proverb in all places into which he ſhall be brought. God is called his Lord, tho' he had rebelled againſt him, and ſhook off his yoke, and would not obey him; yet whether he will or no, he is his Lord, and will ſhew himſelf to be ſo, by his ſovereignty and authority over him, and by the judgments exerciſed on him. Some underſtand this of the Aſſyrian king, become his lord, by taking and carrying him captive, the inſtrument in God's hand of bringing him to reproach; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter begins with obſerving the different ſtate and condition of Ephraim before and after his idolatry, ỷ. 1. his increaſe in it, ỷ. 2. and therefore his proſperity was very ſhort-lived, which is ſignified by various metaphors, ỷ. 3. and his ſins are aggravated by the former goodneſs of God unto him; his great ingratitude unto God, and forgetfulneſs of him, ỷ. 4, 5, 6. hence he is threatened with his wrath and vengeance in a very ſevere manner, ỷ. 7, 8. for which he had none to blame but himſelf; yea, ſuch was the grace and goodneſs of God to him, that tho' he had deſtroyed himſelf, yet there were help and ſalvation for him in him, ỷ. 9. tho' not in his king he had deſired, and was given, and was took away in wrath, ỷ. 10, 11. but his ſin being bound up and hid, and he fooliſh and unwiſe, ſharp corrections would be given him, ỷ. 12, 13. and yet a gracious promiſe is made of redemption from death and the grave by the Meſſiah, ỷ. 14. but notwithſtanding this, and all his preſent proſperity, he would be blaſted in his wealth and riches; and Samaria the metropolis of his country would be deſolate; and the inhabitants of it be uſed in the moſt cruel manner, becauſe of their rebellion againſt God, ỷ. 15, 16.

ỷ. 1. When Ephraim ſpake trembling, he exalted himſelf in Iſrael, &c.] Or, with trembling, as Jarchi; ſo Jeroboam, who was of the tribe of Ephraim ſpake before Solomon, a great king, as he obſerves. R. Moſes the prieſt interprets it of Jeroboam; but it may be underſtood of the tribe in general, and eſpecially of the heads of it, at any time before it fell into idolatry; when they ſpake with ſubmiſſion and humility, they were attended to by the other tribes in all conſultations and debates, and great deference was paid unto them; and they were had in great eſteem, and highly honoured, agreeable to that common ſaying of our Lord, he that humbleth himſelf ſhall be exalted, Luke xiv. 12. or, when he ſpake, there was trembling [q]; either among the neighbouring nations, when he threatened them with war; or among the other tribes of Iſrael, when he ſpake in counſel, and with authority, they roſe up and heard him with great reverence and reſpect; ſee Job xxix. 8, 9, 10. So the Targum, "when any one of the "houſe of Ephraim ſpake, trembling laid hold on "the people; they became princes in Iſrael." Some refer this to the times of Joſhua, who was of that tribe, and whom the Iſraelites feared as they had feared Moſes, Joſh. iv. 14. others to the times of Gideon and Jephtha, with whom the tribe of Ephraim expoſtulated, Judg. viii. 1. and xii. 1. but others interpret it of Jeroboam's idolatry, of his ſetting up the worſhip of the calves, which he did upon his exalting himſelf, and ſetting himſelf up as king of the ten tribes; and in ſome agreement with this, Schmidt underſtands by trembling, a terrible and horrible thing, idolatry, which he commanded and appointed; and which he bore or carried, as the word [r] is interpreted by him, and may be; that is, his ſin, and the puniſhment of it, which Jeroboam and his poſterity did bear; and ſo it agrees with what follows: but, or, and when he offended in Baal, he died; or when he ſinned, and became guilty of more idolatry ſtill by worſhipping Baal, as well as the calves, which was done in the times of Ahab, 1 Kings xvi. 31. when Ephraim or the kingdom of Iſrael fell into diſtreſſes and calamities, ſunk in their grandeur and authority, declined in their wealth and riches, and were inſulted by their enemies, particularly by Benhadad king of Syria, who ſent to Ahab, and challenged his ſilver and gold, his wives and children, as his own, 1 Kings xx. 3, 4. and ſo they gradually decreaſed in credit and reputation, in power and authority, in wealth and ſubſtance, and at laſt were delivered to the ſword of the enemy, and to captivity, which was their civil death.

ỷ. 2. And now they ſin more and more, &c.] Since the times of Jeroboam, and alſo of Ahab, adding other deities to the calves, and to Baal, as follows; increaſing the number of their idols, and their idolatrous ſacrifices, rites and ceremonies: this they did in the times of the prophet, who propheſied after the times of Ahab; as it is common with evil men and ſeducers to wax worſe and worſe, and to proceed to more ungodlineſs, and from evil to evil; ſuch is the way of idolaters, they ſtop not, but run into greater abſurdities and groſſer idolatries: and have made them molten images of their ſilver: which is to be underſtood, not of the calves, or of Baal, made of gold, which they purchaſed with their ſilver; but of other images they had in their houſes, or carried about with them, made of their ſilver, of their plate, which they melted and caſt images of it, of whatſoever ſhape or form they pleaſed: and idols according to their own underſtanding; which were entirely of man's device, and had nothing divine in them, either as to matter or form, but wholly the invention of the human brain: or, according to their own likeneſs, as the Targum, and ſo other Jewiſh interpreters; after the form of a man, and yet were ſo weak and ſtupid as to account them gods: all of it the work of the craftſmen; of ſilverſmiths and founders, ders, and ſuch like artificers; the ſame, or of the ſame ſort with the craftſmen that made ſhrines for Diana, Acts xix. 24, 38. and therefore ſuch a work, wrought by ſuch hands, could never be a deity, or have any thing divine in it; they muſt be as ſtupid and ſenſeleſs as the work itſelf to imagine there ſhould: and yet they ſay of them; the falſe prophets, or the idolatrous prieſts ſay of ſuch idols: let the men that ſacrifice, kiſs the calves; let thoſe that bring their ſacrifices, or thoſe that offer them, pay religious worſhip and adoration to the calves; which they ſignified by kiſſing the idols they ſacrificed to, either their mouths, or their hands; or if out of their reach, they kiſſed their own hands in token of honour to them; which rites were commonly uſed among the heathens. So Cicero[s] ſays at Agrigentum, where was a temple of Hercules, where the people not only uſed to ſhew a veneration to his image by prayers and thankſgivings, but they uſed to kiſs it. So Apuleius[t] ſpeaks of a beautiful virgin, the report of whoſe beauty brought together a vaſt number of citizens and ſtrangers; who, amazed at the ſight of her, put their right-hand to their mouths, the firſt finger reſting upon the thumb erect, and gave her reverence with religious adoration, as if ſhe had been the goddeſs Venus herſelf; and Minutius Felix[u] ſays of Cæcilius, that obſerving the image of Serapis (probably much like one of theſe calves) putting his hand to his mouth, according to the ſuperſtitious cuſtom of the vulgar, with his lips ſmacked a kiſs; and ſo Pliny[w] obſerves, in worſhipping the right-hand is uſed for a kiſs, turning about the whole body, which to do to the left was reckoned the more religious; hence it is obſerved[x] of Æmilius, a derider and ſcoffer at of things divine, that he would never make ſupplication to any god, nor frequent any temple; and if he paſſed by any place of worſhip, he reckoned it a crime to put his hand to his lips by way of adoration, or on account of that; and it ſeems to have obtained as early as the times of Job among idolatrous people, that upon the ſight of the ſun or moon, they immediately with their mouth kiſſed their hands; ſee Job xxxi. 26, 27. hence Lucian[y] ſpeaking of the Indians ſays, riſing early in the morning, they worſhip the ſun, not as we, who think the prayers are finiſhed when the hand is kiſſed; and Tertullian[z] addreſſing the heathens in his time, thus beſpeaks them, moſt of you out of an affectation of worſhipping the celeſtial bodies at the riſing of the ſun, move and quaver your lips; hence kiſſing is uſed for the worſhip of the Son of God, Pſ. ii. 12. Some read the words, let thoſe that ſacrifice a man[a], kiſs the calves; as if it reſpected the abominable practice of ſacrificing men to Moloch; or intimated that men were ſacrificed to the calves at Bethel.

℣. 3. Therefore they ſhall be as the morning-cloud, &c.] Which, however promiſing it is, ſoon diſappears when the ſun is riſen; ſignifying, that the idolatrous Iſraelites, king, prieſts and people, ſhould be no more; their kingdom would ceaſe, all their riches and wealth would depart from them, and they and their children be carried captive into a ſtrange land: and as the early dew it paſſeth away; as ſoon as the heat of the ſun is felt, when the earth is left dry; ſo theſe people, tho' they ſeemed to be in great proſperity, and to be very fruitful in children, and in ſubſtance, and promiſed themſelves much more; yet in a little time their land would become deſolate, and they ſtripped of all that was dear and valuable to them. Theſe metaphors are uſed in ch. vi. 4: as the chaff that is driven with a whirlwind out of the floor; ſignifying that theſe idolatrous people were like chaff, light and empty, uſeleſs and unprofitable, fit for nothing but burning; and that they would be driven out of their own land thro' the Aſſyrian that ſhould come like a whirlwind with great force and power, as eaſily and as quickly as chaff is drove out of a threſhing floor of corn with a ſtrong blaſt of wind; ſee Pſ. i. 5. Jer. iv. 11, 12, 13. Dan. ii. 35: and as the ſmoke out of the chimney; which riſes up in a pillar, and is ſoon diſſipated by the wind, or diſſolved into air; and is no ſooner ſeen, but it diſappears; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 2. All theſe ſimilies ſhew how eaſily, ſuddenly and quickly the deſtruction of this idolatrous nation would be brought about.

℣. 4. Yet I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, &c.] Which brought thee out from thence, as the Targum; and ever ſince from that time to this had ſhown a regard unto them, as the Lord their God, both in the wilderneſs, as after-mentioned, and in the land of Canaan, where they had been continued, and followed with inſtances of goodneſs to that day, and yet had ſinned in ſo groſs a manner; which argued great ingratitude in them, and forgetfulneſs of the Lord, and his mercies: and thou ſhalt know no God but me; they ought to have known, acknowledged and worſhipped no other god, as was enjoined them in the law: or, thou knoweſt not[b]; they did not know any other, which they in their own conſciences were obliged to confeſs, if appealed to; however, they ſhould know no other; by ſad experience they would find, that there was no other that could be of any ſervice to them; their images and idols being unable to help them: for there is no Saviour beſides me; that could ſave them out of their troubles, and deliver them out of their diſtreſſes; no other that is, or can be the author, either of temporal, or of ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation.

℣. 5. I did know thee in the wilderneſs, &c.] Where there were no food nor drink, where were ſcorpions, ſerpents, and beaſts of prey; there the Lord knew them, owned them, and ſhewed a fatherly affection for them, and care of them; and fed them with manna and quails, and guided and directed them in the way, and protected and preſerved them from their enemies, and from all hurt and danger. So the Targum explains it, "I ſufficiently ſupplied their neceſſities in the wilderneſs:" in the land of great drought; or, of droughts[c]; the word is only uſed in this place; and is by Aben Ezra interpreted a dry and thirſty land; and ſo he ſays it ſignifies in the Arabic language; and the ſame is obſerved by the father of Kimchi, and by R. Jonah[d]; but is by ſome rendered torrid [e], or inflamed, as if it had the ſignification of an Hebrew word, which ſignifies a flame: and the Targum takes it to be a-kin to another, which ſignifies to deſire, rendering it, "in a land "in which thou deſireſt every thing;" i. e. wants every thing. The firſt ſeems beſt, and is a fit deſcription of the wilderneſs, which was a place of drought, wherein was no water, Deut. viii. 15.

[d] Apud R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 35. 1.

℣. 6. According to their paſture, ſo were they filled, &c.] When they came into the land of Canaan, which was a land flowing with milk and honey, they were like a flock of ſheep brought from ſhort commons to a good paſture; and there they filled themſelves to the full, and indulged to luxury and exceſs, pampered themſelves, and made proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil its luſts, and became carnal and ſenſual: they were filled, and their hearts were exalted; they were elated with their plenty, and grew proud and haughty, and attributed their fulneſs not to the goodneſs of God, but to their own excellency and merit; and put their truſt and confidence in their affluence, and not in the Lord; and thought themſelves ſafe and ſecure, and out of all danger, and concluded it would never be otherwiſe with them: therefore have they forgotten me; the author of their beings, the father of their mercies, and God of all their comforts; they forgot to give him praiſe and glory for their abundance; to place their truſt, and have their dependence on him, and to ſerve and worſhip him; this was the conſequence of their luxury and pride. The Targum is, "therefore they left my wor- "ſhip;" they waxed fat, and kicked, and lightly eſteemed, and forſook the God and rock of their ſalvation, Deut. xxxii. 15.

℣. 7. Therefore I will be unto them as a lion, &c.] Becauſe of their idolatry, ingratitude, luxury, and eſpecially their forgetfulneſs of God, which is laſt mentioned, and with which the words are connected. By this and the following metaphors, are ſet forth the ſeverity of God's judgments upon them for their ſins, and their utter deſtruction by them. Some obſerve the word [f] here uſed ſignifies an old lion, which tho' flower in the purſuit of its prey, is more cruel when it has got it; ſee ch. v. 14. As a leopard by the way will I obſerve them; which is a quick-ſighted, vigilant, crafty, and inſidious creature, which lurks in trees, and watches for men and beaſts that paſs by the way, and ſeizes on them. The lion makes his onſet more openly, this more ſecretly; and both expreſs the various ways God would take in his providence to chaſtiſe theſe people for their ſins, and that he would watch over them to do them hurt, as he had to do them good, and take the proper opportunity of doing it, and execute his purpoſe with great wrath and fury, to their utter ruin; ſee Jer. v. 6. and xliv. 27. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions render it, as a leopard by the way of Aſſyria [g], or the Aſſyrians; and ſo ſome interpreters take the ſenſe to be, that God would watch them in their way to Aſſyria for help, and blaſt their deſigns, diſappoint them of their expected aſſiſtance, and ſurprize them with his judgments; ſee ch. v. 13. and vii. 11. and viii. 9. and Jer. ii. 18, 19. and there was a mountain in Syria, called the mountain of the leopards, where they uſed to haunt, and from whence they came out to take their prey, to which there is a reference in Cant. iv. 8. which was two miles from Tripoli (a city of Syria) northward, three from the city Arces ſouthward, and one from mount Lebanon [h]; and ſuch is the vigilance and agility of leopards, that they will ſometimes, as Pliny [i] ſays, mount thick trees, and hide themſelves in the branches, and leap at once, and unawares, upon thoſe that paſs by, whether men or beaſts, as before obſerved; wherefore, with great propriety, is this ſimile uſed. The Targum is, my word ſhall be, &c.

℣. 8. I will meet them as a bear bereaved of her whelps, &c.] Which is a fierce cruel creature at any time, but eſpecially when this is its caſe, being very fond of its whelps; and having taken a great deal of pains to lick them into form, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve, it is the more inraged at the loſs of them, and therefore falls upon man or beaſt it meets, with the utmoſt fury: the phraſe is expreſſive of the fierceſt rage; ſee Prov. xvii. 12: and will rent the caul of their hearts; the pericardium, which is a membrane or ſkin that incloſes the heart, and which when pierced is immediate death: perhaps ſome reſpect is had to the cloſing of their hearts to God, the hardneſs of them againſt him and his ways, and their inattention to his word; and now he'll open them, not in a way of grace and mercy, but of wrath and fury; as a bear, when it ſeizes a man, ſticks his claws in his breaſt, tears it open, and makes his way at once to the heart, fetches it out, and ſucks his blood: and there will I devour them like a lion; either in their cities and houſes, when taken by the enemy; or in the way, in which they would be obſerved; or in their captivity: or there may be put for then, and ſo denotes the time when he would be all this to them before-mentioned, and then he would utterly deſtroy them: the wild beaſt ſhall tear them; which literally is one of God's ſore judgments, but here figuratively deſigns the Aſſyrian, and who is meant as the inſtrument of God's vengeance in all the other expreſſions; and is ſometimes compared to a lion, and that as concerned with Iſrael; ſee Jer. l. 17. which is much better, than by theſe four ſorts of creatures to underſtand the four monarchies which Iſrael ſuffered by. The Targum is, "my word ſhall meet them as a bear "bereaved, and I will break the wickedneſs of "their hearts, &c."

℣. 9. O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf, &c.] Tho' the Lord was a lion, a leopard, and a bear to them, yet their deſtruction was not owing to him, but to themſelves; he was not chargeable with it, but they only; the fault and blame was theirs; their own ſins brought it on them, and provoked him to ſuch righteous wrath and vengeance before expreſſed: this is ſaid to clear the Lord from any imputation of this kind, and to lay it where it ſhould be. It may be rendered, it hath deſtroyed thee [k]; either the calf, as Kimchi, and the worſhipping of that, their idolatry; or their king, as others, taking it from the following verſe by way of anticipation; or rather it may refer to all their ſins before obſerved, their idolatry, luxury, and ingratitude. Guſſetius [l] thinks the word כי has the ſignification of burning, as in Iſ. iii. 24. and renders it, burning in me hath deſtroyed thee, even in him who is thy help; that is, by their ſins they had made God their enemy, who is a conſuming fire, and whoſe burning wrath deſtroyed them, in whom otherwiſe they would have had help. Now tho' this may primarily regard the deſtruction of the civil ſtate and kingdom of Iſrael for their ſins, yet it may be applied to the ſpiritual and eternal ſtate of men. Man is a loſt, ruined, and undone creature; he is depraved and corrupted in his whole nature, ſoul and body; the image of God in him is marred and ſpoiled; there is no holineſs in him, nor any righteouſneſs upon him; no will nor power to that which is good; tho' he has not loſt the natural liberty of his will, he has loſt the moral liberty of it, and is a ſlave to his luſts, and a vaſſal to ſatan; he has no true knowledge of that which is good, no inclination to it, nor ſtrength to perform it. He is dead in ſin, and dead in law; he is under the curſe of it, and in the open way to everlaſting ruin and deſtruction; and is in himſelf both helpleſs and lifeleſs; and he is a ſelf-deſtroyed creature. His deſtruction is not owing to ſatan only, tho' he was an inſtrument of the ruin of mankind; nor to the firſt parents of human nature only, in whom all men naturally and federally were, in whom they ſinned, and with whom they fell; but to their own actual ſins and tranſgreſſions. However, their deſtruction is not to be charged upon God, or aſcribed to any decree of his, which is no cauſe of man's damnation, but ſin only; nor to any ſentence of condemnation paſt by him, or the execution of it, which both belong to him as a righteous judge; but to themſelves and their ſins, as is owned both by good men, who under true and ſaving convictions acknowledge their damnation would be juſt, if God ſhould execute it on them; and by bad men, even the damned in hell; this will be the never dying worm, the remorſe of a guilty conſcience, that they have brought all this ruin on themſelves. But in me is thine help; not in themſelves, not in any creature, but in the Lord alone; the word of the Lord, as the Targum; the eſſential word, the Son of God, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, on whom his divine Father has laid the help of his people; and who has helped them, and ſaved them from their ſins, the cauſe of their deſtruction, and from wrath, which they deſerved by reaſon of them; and has brought them out of a wretched ſtate, a pit wherein is no water, into a comfortable, glorious, and happy one, and delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies; and helps them to what they want, to holineſs, righteouſneſs, and ſtrength; to all ſupplies of grace here, and glory hereafter. Some render the particle as cauſal, for in me, &c [m]. and ſo make it to be a reaſon, either proving that God could not be the cauſe of their deſtruction, becauſe in him was their help, and in him only; or that their deſtruction was owing to themſelves; for in or againſt me, againſt thine help, thou haſt tranſgreſſed and rebelled; ſo Jarchi.

℣. 10. I will be thy king, &c.] Governor, protector, and defender; and ſo confirming what is before ſaid, that their help was in him: or as the Targum, Abarbinel, and others [n], where is thy king now, that he may ſerve thee in all thy cities? whom they had aſked, rejecting the Lord, and in whom they had put their truſt and confidence for help; and now either having no king, he being taken away from them by death, or by the enemy; or if they had, he being unable to help them in their diſtreſs; they are ironically aſked, where he was, that he might exert himſelf and ſave them, if he could, in all the cities of the land, where the enemy were come, and had beſieged and took them: and thy judges, of whom thou ſaidſt, give me a king and princes? that is, where are thy king and his nobles, his courtiers and his counſellors, and all judges, magiſtrates, and governors ſubordinate to him, let them ariſe for thy help, if they can, by their policy or power, by their counſel, or by their arms? for judges and princes deſign ſuch as were of the king's court and council, or acted in government under his direction and influence; for tho' theſe are not expreſsly mentioned, when they aſked for a king, yet are implied; ſince there is no king without a court and nobles to attend him, to adviſe with, and to act under him. This refers to the ſtory in 1 Sam. viii. 6, &c. and ſeems to be the leading ſtep to Iſrael's ruin and deſtruction as a ſtate.

℣. 11. I gave thee a king in mine anger, &c.] Not the king of Aſſyria, ſent to waſte and deſtroy them, and carry them captive, as ſome, for of him the next clauſe cannot be ſaid; nor Jeroboam, the firſt king of the ten tribes, as others, who was not given in anger to Iſrael, but to Solomon; rather Saul, as Kimchi and Aben Ezra, the firſt king of all Iſrael; and who was given at the requeſt of the people, tho' in anger and reſentment, they rejecting God their king; or it may deſign the kingly office and power in general, in a ſucceſſion of kings from him the firſt of them: and took him away in my wrath; not Jeroboam, who does not appear to be taken away by death in wrath; rather Saul, who died in battel with the Philiſtines, and fell on the mountains of Gilboa: but it may be rendered better, I will take him away [o]; and refers not to Zedekiah the laſt king of Judah, as ſome in Kimchi; but to Hoſhea, the laſt king of the ten tribes; for it is of them more eſpecially the words, both in the text and context, are ſpoken; and ſo it reſpects the entire removal of kingly power from them, which ceaſed in Hoſhea; ſee ch. iii. 4. and x. 15.

℣. 12. The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up, his ſin is hid, &c.] Which Kimchi reſtrains to the ſin of the calves, and worſhipping them; and others to the requeſt of a king, the context ſpeaks of: but it ſeems beſt to underſtand it in a more general ſenſe of theſe, with all other ſins, which were bound up, and not looſed, or were not remitted and forgiven, they being impenitent, and perſiſting in their ſins; and which were bound up as in a bag or purſe, in order to be opened and brought forth in proper time in open court, and be took cognizance of in a judiciary way; with which agrees an expreſſion in Job xiv. 17. or which were laid up among the treaſures of divine omniſcience, in the mind of God, and not forgotten by him, as they might be thought to be, and would in due time be brought to light, and vengeance took on them. So the Targum, "the ſins of the houſe of "Ephraim are treaſured up; they are reſerved to "puniſh all their offences;" ſee Deut. xxxii. 34.

℣. 13. The ſorrows of a travailing woman ſhall come upon him, &c.] Upon Ephraim, or the ten tribes; that is, afflictions, diſtreſſes, and calamities, which are often in ſcripture compared to the pains and ſorrows of a woman in child-brith; and may denote the ſuddenneſs and inevitableneſs of them; ſee Iſ. xiii. 8. Jer. xxx. 6, 7. So the Targum, "diſtreſs and trouble ſhall come upon them, "as pains on a woman with child;" which may reſpect the invaſion of their land, the ſiege of Samaria, and their captivity. He is an unwiſe ſon; taking no warning by his anceſtors, by their ſins, and what befel them on account of them, but perſiſting in his ſins, and in impenitence and hardneſs of heart: ſo the Targum, "he is not wiſe to know "my fear:" for he ſhould not ſtay long in the place of the breaking forth of children; that is, in the womb, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; tho' the Targum and Jarchi underſtand it of the ſtool or ſeat of women in travail. The ſenſe is, either that he is fooliſh and unwiſe, that he does not endeavour to extricate himſelf from theſe troubles; or rather to prevent them by repentance, by leaving his idols, and returning to the Lord; or, that ſhould he do ſo, he would ſoon be delivered from all his ſorrows, and not ſtay a moment longer in them. Though the words may be better rendered, for he ſtays not, or would not ſtay the time for the breaking forth of children [p]; now this time is the time of the goſpel-diſpenſation, the time of the Meſſiah's birth, the fulneſs of time appointed for his coming, and the time of the church's bringing forth many children in a ſpiritual ſenſe; ſee Iſ. liv. 1. Gal. iv. 26, 27. for which Ephraim or the ten tribes ſhould have waited, but did not, which was their folly and their ruin; they did not ſtand, or continue in the belief and expectation of the Meſſiah, and in the true worſhip of God, but left that, and ſerved idols; and ſo continued not to the times of the Meſſiah, when the bleſſings mentioned in the following verſe would be obtained and enjoyed; ſo Schmidt.

℣. 14. I will ranſom them from the power of the grave, &c.] That is, when or at which time before ſpoken of, and here underſtood, as the above interpreter rightly connects the words, I will do this and what follows: I will redeem them from death; theſe are the words, not of Jehovah the Father, as in ch. i. 7. but of the Son, who redeemed Iſrael out of Egypt, which was a typical redemption, ℣. 4. in whom is the help of his people laid and found, ℣. 9. the word of the Lord, as the Targum; who is the true God, the mighty God, and ſo equal to this work of redemption; and who is alſo the near kinſman of the redeemed, as one of the words here uſed implies, and ſo to him belonged the right of redemption: the perſons redeemed are not Iſrael after the fleſh, but ſpiritual Iſrael, whether Jews or Gentiles; a ſpecial and peculiar people, choſen of God and precious, out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; and who, in their nature-ſtate, are under ſin, in bondage to it, and liable to the curſe of the law, the wrath of God, hell and damnation; which are meant by the grave and death, and ſo needed a redeemer to ranſom them: for the word for grave ſhould be rendered hell [q], as it often is; and death intends not a corporal one only, but eternal death, or the ſecond death; and both ſignify the wrath of God due to ſin, and which God's elect are deſerving of, and Chriſt has bore, and delivered them from; and the curſe of the law, which he has redeemed them from, being made a curſe for them; and eternal death, the equivalent to which he has ſuffered, and ſo has ſaved them from it, and all this by redeeming them from their ſins, the cauſe of it; and which he has done by giving a redemption or ranſom-price, which is his blood, his life, yea himſelf, and which the firſt of the words here uſed imports. It is indeed true, that in conſequence of all this, there will be a redemption by him from a corporal death, and from the grave; not as yet, for the ranſomed of the Lord die as others, and are laid in the grave, the houſe appointed for all living; but in the reſurrection-morn there will be a redemption, a deliverance of the bodies of the ſaints from the grave, from mortality and corruption; yea, of them from the moral corruption of ſin, and all the defilements of it, as well as from all afflictions and diſeaſes, and from death itſelf, which ſhall have no more dominion over them; to which purpoſe the words are applied by the apoſtle, 1 Cor. xv. 55. ſee the note there; and ſo by ſome ancient Jews [r] to the Meſſiah, and his times. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction; that is, the utter deſtruction of them, for the plague or peſtilence is a waſting deſtruction, Pſ. xci. 6. 'tis the ſame which in New Teſtament-language is the aboliſhing of death, 2 Tim. i. 10. which is true of eternal death with reſpect to the redeemed, which Chriſt's death is the death of, he having by his death reconciled them to God, and opened the way to eternal life for them, which he has in his hands to give unto them; and of corporal death and the grave, which Chriſt has utterly deſtroyed with reſpect to himſelf, having looſed the bands of death, and ſet himſelf free, and on whom that ſhall have no more dominion; and with reſpect to his people, he has deſtroyed him that had the power of it, which is the devil; he has put away and aboliſhed ſin, the cauſe of it; he has took away that which is its ſting; ſo that it may be truly ſaid, as the apoſtle quotes theſe words, O death, where is thy ſting? he has removed the curſe from it, and made it a bleſſing; he has aboliſhed it as a penal evil, ſo that it is not inflicted as a puniſhment on his people; and in the laſt day will entirely deliver them from the power of that, and of the grave; and then that which has ſlain its millions and millions, a number not to be numbered, will never ſlay one more: and that grave which devoured as many, will never be opened more, or one more put into it; and then it may be ſaid, grave, where is thy victory? thou ſhalt conquer no more, but be at an end. Repentance ſhall be hid from mine eyes; that is, the Lord will never repent of his decree of redemption from hell, death, and the grave; nor of the work of it by Chriſt; nor of the entire deſtruction of theſe things; which being once done, will never be repented of nor recalled, but remain ſo for ever.

℣. 15. Though he be fruitful among his brethren, &c.] This is not ſpoken of Chriſt, as ſome think, who take the words to be a continuation of the prophecy concerning the Redeemer, who ſhould increaſe his brethren, and bring many to him; and be as noxious to hell and death, as the eaſt wind is to perſons and things, and dry up the fountains and ſprings of hell and death; the ſins of men he ſhould aboliſh, and be victorious over all his enemies, and divide their ſpoils: but they are rather the words of Chriſt himſelf concerning Ephraim, in connexion with ℣. 13. expreſſing his character and ſtate, and explaining the ſorrows and calamities that ſhould come upon him for his folly, in not ſtaying the time of the breaking forth of children; and to be underſtood either of his ſpiritual fruitfulneſs in the laſt days; when Iſrael ſhall return to the Lord by repentance, and believe in the true Meſſiah, and bring forth the fruit of good works, as an evidence of it, along with their brethren, thoſe of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and ſo all Iſrael ſhould be ſaved; which yet ſhould not hinder the diſtreſſes and deſtruction that ſhould come upon the ten tribes by the Aſſyrians, as afterwards declared: or rather of his political fruitfulneſs, in alluſion to his name; increaſing in numbers, abounding in power and authority, in wealth and riches; either before the ſin of the calves, as Kimchi, before he fell into idolatry; or afterwards, particularly in the times of Jeroboam the Second, who enlarged the border of Iſrael; and in aftertimes, when the kings of Iſrael entered into alliance with the Aſſyrians, and enjoyed peace and proſperity, and thought themſelves ſecure of the continuance of it. Some render it, becauſe he is fierce[s]; or like a wild aſs's colt; not only fooliſh and unwiſe, but fierce and unruly among his brethren, and would not ſtay the time of the breaking forth of children: therefore an eaſt wind ſhall come; which is very vehement, cold, blaſting, and exceeding noxious and pernicious to fruit; meaning Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, who came from the eaſt; his kingdom, the land of Aſſyria, lying, as Kimchi obſerves, eaſtward to the land of Iſrael. So the Targum, "now will I bring againſt him a king " ſtrong as a burning wind;" ſo the king of Babylon and his army are compared to a ſtrong and violent wind, Jer. iv. 11, 12, 13. The wind of the Lord ſhall come up from the wilderneſs; the ſame is called the wind of the Lord, partly to denote the ſtrength and vehemency of it, as mountains of the Lord, and cedars of the Lord, ſignify great and mighty ones; and partly to ſhow that this enemy would come at the call of the Lord, by his direction and appointment. So the Targum, "by " the word of the Lord, thro' the way of the wil-" derneſs ſhall he come up;" this circumſtance, from the wilderneſs, is mentioned, not only becauſe winds from thence uſually blow more ſtrongly and violently, but becauſe the way from Aſſyria to the land of Iſrael lay thro' a wilderneſs. And his ſpring ſhall become dry, and his fountain ſhall be dried up; his land waſted and deſtroyed; his fields, vineyards, and olive-yards trodden down and ruined, which yielded a large increaſe; trade and commerce ſtopped, and ſo all the ſprings and fountains of wealth and riches dried up; as well as their wives and children deſtroyed, as often mentioned, which were the ſource and ſpring of their continuance as a people in ages to come. He ſhall ſpoil the treaſure of all pleaſant veſſels; not Chriſt, nor Ephraim, but the Aſſyrian; who entering into their cities, would plunder them of all their veſſels of deſire[t], or deſirable ones; their veſſels of gold and ſilver; all their rich houſhold goods and furniture of value; all their wealth and riches treaſured up by them, their gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, rich garments, &c. So the Targum, "he ſhall deſtroy " the houſe of his treaſures, and ſhall lay waſte the " city of his kingdom; he ſhall ſpoil the treaſu-" ries, all veſſels of deſire."

℣. 16. Samaria ſhall become deſolate, &c.] With this verſe the 14th chapter begins in the Hebrew copies, and in the Targum, and in many verſions; but ſeems better to conclude the preſent chapter; ſince it is in cloſe connexion with the preceding verſe, and explains the figurative expreſſions there uſed. Samaria was the head of Ephraim, Iſ. vii. 9. or the metropolis of the ten tribes of Iſrael; whoſe deſolation is here propheſied of, and was accompliſhed by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, ſignified by the eaſt wind; by whom it was not only beſieged and taken, but very probably its houſes were demoliſhed, its walls broken down, and razed to the very foundation; ſee 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6. and as this was the head-city, it may be put for all the reſt, and even for the whole land, which was at the ſame time laid waſte. The Targum is, "Samaria ſhall " be guilty;" that is, ſhall be found guilty of many ſins; her tranſgreſſion ſhall be revealed, as Jarchi, become manifeſt by the juſt puniſhment inflicted on her. For ſhe hath rebelled againſt her God; and bitterly provoked him to wrath and anger, as the word[u] ſignifies; by relinquiſhing him and his worſhip, and by ſerving idols, the calves at Dan and Bethel, Baal and other idols; when the Lord was their God, not only by creation, as of all men, but by the choice he made of them, and the covenant he made with them; by a national adoption of them, attended with various bleſſings and privileges, and by their profeſſion of him; all which were an aggravation of their rebellion againſt him. They ſhall fall by the ſword; the inhabitants of Samaria, and of the land, particularly the men thereof; and eſpecially their armed men, their men of war, that fought for them, and defended them; theſe ſhould fall by the ſword of the Aſſyrian. Their children ſhall be daſhed to pieces; againſt ſtones, walls, and pavements, who ſhould have perpetuated their name to future ages, and inherited their poſſeſſions: and their women with child ſhall be ript up; things which are often done by cruel enemies, when cities are ſacked and plundered; and which Salmaneſer might be provoked unto, by the perfidy of the king of Iſrael, and by the city of Samaria holding out a three years ſiege. This, tho' we have no account of as done at that time, yet no doubt was; even as the ſame things are predicted of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, and which were to be done to them, in retaliation for them, tho' there is no narrative of them; ſee Pſ. cxxxvii. 8, 9. Iſ. xiii. 16, 18.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter concludes the book, with gracious promiſes to repenting ſinners, to returning backſliders. It begins with an exhortation to Iſrael to return to the Lord, ſeeing he was their God, and they had fallen by ſin from proſperity into adverſity, temporal and ſpiritual, ỳ. 1. and they are directed what to ſay to the Lord upon their return to him, both by way of petition, and of promiſe and of reſolution how to behave for the future, encouraged by his grace and mercy, ỳ. 2, 3. and they are told what the Lord, by way of anſwer, would ſay to them, ỳ. 4. and what he would be to them; and what bleſſings of grace he would beſtow on them; and in what flouriſhing and fruitful circumſtances they ſhould be, ỳ. 5, 6, 7, 8. and the chapter ends with a character of ſuch that attend to, and underſtand thoſe things; and with a recommendation of the ways of the Lord, which are differently regarded by men, ỳ. 9.

ỳ. 1. O Iſrael, return unto the Lord thy God, &c.] From whom they had revolted and backſlidden; whoſe worſhip and ſervice they had forſaken; and whoſe word and ordinances they had ſlighted and neglected, and had ſerved idols, and had given into idolatry, ſuperſtition, and will-worſhip; and are here exhorted to turn again to the Lord by repentance and reformation, to abandon their idols, and every falſe way, and cleave to the Lord with full purpoſe of heart; and the rather, ſince he was their God; not only their creator, preſerver, and kind benefactor, but their God, by his ſpecial choice of them above all people; by his covenant with them; by his redemption of them; and by their profeſſion of him; and who was ſtill their God, and ready to receive them, upon their return to him: and a thorough return is here meant, a returning even unto [w], or quite up to the Lord thy God; it is not a going to him half-way, but a going quite up to his ſeat; falling down before him, acknowledging ſin and backſlidings, and laying hold upon him by faith as their God, Redeemer and Saviour: hence, from the way of ſpeaking here uſed, the Jews [x] have a ſaying, as Kimchi obſerves, "great is repentance, for it brings a man "to the throne of glory:" the imperative may be here uſed for the future, as ſome take it; and then it is a prediction of the converſion of Iſrael, thou ſhalt return, O Iſrael [y]; and which was in part fulfilled in the firſt times of the goſpel, which met with many of the Iſraelites diſperſed among the Gentiles, and was the means of their converſion; and will have a greater accompliſhment, when all Iſrael ſhall be converted and ſaved: for thou haſt fallen by thine iniquity; or though thou art fallen [z]; into ſin, and by it into ruin temporal and ſpiritual; from a ſtate of great proſperity and happineſs, both in things civil and religious, into great adverſity, and calamities of every ſort; yet return, repent, conſider from whence thou art fallen, and by what; or thou ſhalt return, be recovered and reſtored, notwithſtanding thy fall, and the low eſtate in which thou art. The Targum is, "return "to the fear of the Lord."

ỳ. 2. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord, &c.] Not mere words without the heart, but ſuch as come from it, and expreſs the true ſenſe of it; words of confeſſion, as the Targum; by which ſin is acknowledged, and repentance declared, and forgiveneſs aſked. Kimchi's note is a very good one; "he (i. e. God) does not require "of you upon return, neither gold nor ſilver, nor "burnt-offerings, but good works; therewith confeſſing your ſins with your whole hearts, and not "with your lips only:" and which beſt agrees with evangelical repentance and goſpel-times, in which ceremonial ſacrifices are no more; and not any words neither; not tautologies and multiplicity of words, or words of man's preſcribing, but of the Lord's directing to, and dictating; the taught words of the Holy Ghoſt, which he ſuggeſts and helps men to, who otherwiſe know not how to pray, or what to pray for; and theſe expreſſed under a ſenſe of ſin, and ſorrow for it, and in the ſtrength of faith, and are as follow: ſay unto him, take away all iniquity; which is to be underſtood, not of the taking away of the being of ſin; which, tho' very deſirable, is not to be expected in this life: nor of the expiation of ſin by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which is done already; he has taken the ſins of his people from them to himſelf, and has bore them, and carried them away, and removed them out of the ſight of divine juſtice, which is ſatisfied for them: nor of the taking away of the power and dominion of ſin; which is done by the Spirit of God, and the efficacy of his grace, on the hearts of converted perſons: nor of an extinguiſhing all ſenſe of ſin in men; for none have a quicker ſenſe of it than pardoned ſinners, or are more humble on the account of it, or more loath it; but of the taking of it away from the conſcience of a ſenſible truly penitent ſinner or backſlider, by a freſh application of pardoning grace and mercy: ſin is a burden, an heavy one, when the guilt of it is charged and lies upon the conſcience; pardon of ſin applied is a lifting up, as the word here uſed ſignifies, a taking off of this burden from it, a cauſing it to paſs away; which is done by the freſh ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus, which purges the conſcience from ſin, and clears it from the guilt of it, and ſpeaks peace and comfort; and which is the bleſſing here prayed for, and every backſlider, ſenſible of his caſe, ſees he ſtands in need of, and even to have all taken away; for if but one ſin remains, and the guilt of it continues, he can have no peace, nor ſtand up under it; but when God forgives ſin, he forgives all ſin. And receive us graciouſly; receive into grace and favour, that is, openly and manifeſtly; the free love and favour of God is always the ſame, but the manifeſtations of it are different; ſometimes more or leſs, and ſometimes ſcarce any, if any at all, and is the caſe here; and therefore a petition is made for the remembrance of it, for a renewed diſcovery and application of it: or accept us in a gracious manner; acceptance with God is not on account of the merits of men, but his own grace and mercy; not thro' any works of righteouſneſs done by them, which are impure and imperfect; but thro' Chriſt the beloved, in whom God is well pleaſed with the perſons, and ſervices, and ſacrifices of his people, and receives all for his ſake, and which is here aſked for; as well as that he would take them into his protection, and open affection. It is in the original text only, receive good [a]; meaning either their good hearts, made ſo by the grace of God; their broken hearts and contrite ſpirits, which are ſacrifices not deſpiſed by him, but acceptable to him thro' Chriſt: or their good words they were bid to take, and did take, and uſe; their good prayers offered up thro' Chriſt, in his name, and in the exerciſe of faith, which are the Lord's delight: or their good works, done from a principle of love, in faith, to the glory of God, and with which ſacrifices he is well pleaſed: or rather, as the ſame word ſignifies, to give as well as receive; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 18. Eph. iv. 8. It may be rendered, give good [b]; take good, and give it to us, even all good things, temporal and ſpiritual, eſpecially all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt; all which good things come from God, and are his gifts; particularly the good Spirit of God, and his grace, which the Lord gives to them that aſk; and all ſupplies of grace from Chriſt; and more eſpecially, as ſome interpreters of note explain it, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed and applied; which goes along with pardoning grace, or the taking away of ſin, Zech. iii. 4. and is the good, the better, the beſt robe; a gift, the gift of grace; a bleſſing received from the Lord, and to be aſked for of him: ſo will we render the calves of our lips; not calves, bullocks and oxen for ſacrifice, as under the law; but the ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving for pardoning grace, for a juſtifying righteouſneſs, and for all good things: theſe are the fruit of the lips, as the apoſtle interprets it, Heb. xiii. 15. and which are ſacrifices more acceptable to God than calves of a year old, or an ox or bullock that has horns and hoofs, Pſ. lxix. 30, 31. This ſhews that the text and context refer to goſpel-times, to the times of the Meſſiah; in which the Jews themſelves ſay all ſacrifices will ceaſe, but the ſacrifice of praiſe. The Targum is, "turn to the worſhip of the Lord, and ſay, let "it be with thee to forgive ſins, and may we be "received as good, and the words of our lips be "accepted with thee as bullocks for good pleaſure "upon the altar."

℣. 3. Aſhur ſhall not ſave us, &c.] This is ſtill a continuation of the words repenting and returning Iſrael are directed to make uſe of before the Lord, declaring they would not do any more as they had done; go to Aſſyria, or the kings of Aſſyria, as the Targum, for help, and deſire aſſiſtance, and expect deliverance and ſalvation from thence; ſee ch. v. 13. and vii. 11. and viii. 9: we will not ride upon horſes; to ſeek for help elſewhere; or go to Egypt for them, as they had done; or put their truſt in them for ſafety, in a time of war; or think to make their eſcape by them when in danger; ſee Pſ. xx. 8. Iſ. xxxi. 1, 3: neither will we ſay any more to the work of our hands, ye are our gods; that is, ſay ſo to, or concerning their idols, which were made by their hands, or by their orders, as they had formerly done to the golden calf in the wilderneſs, and to the calves at Dan and Bethel; ſee Exod. xxxii. 4. 1 Kings xii. 28. now, by all theſe expreſſions is meant, that they would determine not to put any confidence in any creature, or in any creature-performance; that they would not truſt in their own merits, but in the mercy of God thro' Chriſt for the pardon of their ſins; nor in any works of righteouſneſs for their juſtification before God, and acceptance with him; nor expect ſalvation in any other way than by the free grace of God, and his abundant mercy in Chriſt: for in thee the fatherleſs findeth mercy; and in thee only; hereby declaring that the Lord was the only Saviour; that there was ſalvation in Chriſt, and in no other; and that they would have no other Saviour but him; that they would look to the mercy of God proclaimed in him, and communicated from, and thro' him, the mercy-ſeat, and to his mercy alone for eternal life; in whom the moſt deſtitute perſons, as the fatherleſs, who are deſtitute of friends, of help and aſſiſtance, of counſel and advice, find favour, kindneſs and mercy, even ſuch as are moſt hopeleſs and helpleſs; which is a great encouragement to look to the Lord, to truſt in him, and hope in his mercy.

℣. 4. I will heal their backſlidings, &c.] This and what follows is the Lord's anſwer to the above prayer; and this clauſe particularly is an anſwer to that petition, take away all iniquity; ſins are diſeaſes, natural and hereditary, nauſeous and loathſome, mortal and incurable, but by the grace of God, and blood of Chriſt: backſlidings are relapſes, which are dangerous things; Chriſt is the only phyſician, who heals all the diſeaſes of ſin, and theſe relapſes alſo; he will do it, he has promiſed it, and never turns away any that apply to him for it; and which he does by a freſh application of his blood, whereby he takes away ſin, heals the conſcience wounded with it, and reſtores peace and comfort; which is a great encouragement to take words, and return unto him; ſee ch. vi. 1. Jer. iii. 22. Iſ. lvii. 17, 18: I will love them freely; this is in anſwer to that petition, receive us graciouſly; or receive good, or rather give it; not that the love of God or Chriſt begins when ſinners repent and turn to him, or he applies his pardoning grace, ſince his love is from everlaſting; but that in ſo doing he manifeſts his love, and will continue in it, nor ſhall any thing ſeparate from it: and this love, as it is freely ſet upon the objects of it, without any merits of theirs, or any motives in them, but flows from the free ſovereign will and pleaſure of God in Chriſt; ſo it is as freely manifeſted, and continues upon the ſame bottom, and is diſplayed in a moſt liberal and profuſe donation of bleſſings of grace to them: this love is free in its original, and is liberal and bountiful in the effects of it; and makes the objects of it a free, willing and bountiful people too: for mine anger is turned away from him; from Iſrael, which, under former diſpenſations of providence, ſeemed to be towards him, at leaſt when under his frowns, reſentment and diſpleaſure, as is the caſe of that people at this day; but when they ſhall return to the Lord, and he ſhall manifeſt and apply his pardoning grace to them, his anger will appear no more, and they ſhall be in a very happy and comfortable condition, as Iſrael or the church declares, Iſ. xii. 1. which refers to the ſame times as theſe words do; ſee Rom. xi. 26, 27. and compare Pſ. lxxxv. 2, 3, where a manifeſtation of pardoning grace is called the Lord's turning himſelf from the fierceneſs of his anger; and eſpecially this ſuits with goſpel-times, ſatisfaction being made for ſin by the ſacrifice of Chriſt.

℣. 5. I will be as the dew unto Iſrael, &c.] To ſpiritual Iſrael, to thoſe that return to the Lord, take with them words, and pray unto him, whoſe backſlidings are healed, and they are freely loved; otherwiſe it is ſaid of apoſtate Iſrael or Ephraim, that they were ſmitten, and their root dried up, and bore no fruit, ch. ix. 16. Theſe words, and the whole context, reſpect future times, as Kimchi obſerves; even the converſion of Iſrael in the latter day, when they ſhall partake of all the bleſſings of grace, ſignified by the metaphors uſed in this and the following verſes. Theſe words are a continuation of the anſwer to the petitions put into the mouths of converted ones, promiſing them many favours, expreſſed in figurative terms; and firſt by the dew, which comes from heaven, is a great bleſſing of God, and is quickening, very refreſhing and fruitful to the earth: and the Lord is that unto his people, as the dew is to herbs, plants, and trees of the earth; he is like unto it in his free love and favour, and the diſcoveries of it to them; which, like the dew, is of, and from himſelf alone; is an invaluable bleſſing; better than life itſelf; and is not only the cauſe of quickening dead ſinners, but of reviving, cheering and refreſhing the drooping ſpirits of his people; and is indeficient, never fails, but always continues, Prov. xix. 12. and ſo he is in the bleſſings of his grace, and the application of them; which are in heavenly places, in Chriſt, and come down from thence, and in great abundance, like the drops of dew; and fall ſilently, inſenſibly and unawares, particularly regenerating grace; and are very cheering and exhilarating, as forgiveneſs of ſin, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, adoption, &c. Deut. xxxiii. 13. and alſo in the goſpel, and the doctrines of it, which diſtil as dew; theſe are of God, and come down from heaven; ſeem little in themſelves, but of great importance to the converſion of ſinners, and comfort of ſaints; bring many bleſſings in them, and cauſe great joy and fruitfulneſs whereever they come with power, Deut. xxxii. 2. The Targum is, "my word ſhall be as dew to Iſrael;" the eſſential word of God, the Meſſiah; of whoſe incarnation of a virgin ſome interpret this; having, like the dew, no father but God, either in his divine or human nature; but rather it is to be underſtood of the bleſſings of grace he is to his people as Mediator; being to them wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification and redemption, and every other, even their all in all: he ſhall grow as the lily; to which the church and people of God are ſometimes compared, eſpecially for their beauty and comelineſs in Chriſt, Solomon in all his glory not being arrayed like one of theſe; particularly for their unſpotted purity, being clothed with fine linen, clean and white, the white raiment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and having their garments waſhed and made white in his blood; ſee Cant. ii. 1, 2, 16. and here for its growth. The root of the lily lies buried in the earth a long time, when it ſeems as if it was dead; but on a ſudden it ſprings out of the earth, and runs up to a great height, and becomes very flouriſhing; which is not owing to itſelf, it toils not, but to the dew of heaven: ſo God's elect in a ſtate of nature are dead, but being quickened by the grace of God, ſpring up on a ſudden, and grow very faſt; which is not owing to themſelves, but to the dews of divine grace, the bright ſhining of the ſun of righteouſneſs upon them, and to the influences of the bleſſed Spirit; and ſo they grow up on high, into their head Chriſt Jeſus, and riſe up in their affections, deſires, faith and hope to heavenly things, to the high calling of God in Chriſt, and become fruitful in grace, and in good works. The Targum is, "they "ſhall ſhine as the lily;" ſee Matt. vi. 29: and caſt forth his roots as Lebanon; as the tree, or trees of Lebanon, as the Targum; and ſo Kimchi, who adds, which are large, and their roots many; or as the roots of the trees of Lebanon, ſo Jarchi; like the cedars there, which, as the word here uſed ſignifies, ſtruck [c] their roots firm in that mountain, and ſtood ſtrong and ſtable, let what winds and tempeſts ſoever blow: thus, as in the following, what one metaphor is deficient in, another makes up. The lily has but a weak root, and is eaſily plucked up; but the cedars in Lebanon had roots firm and ſtrong, to which the ſaints are ſometimes compared, as here; ſee Pſ. xcii. 12. and this denotes their permanency and final perſeverance; who are rooted in the love of God, which is like a root under-ground from all eternity, and ſprouts forth in regeneration, and is the ſource of all grace; is itſelf immoveable, and in it the people of God are ſecured, and can never be rooted out; and they may be ſaid to ſtrike their roots in it, as the phraſe here; when they exerciſe a ſtrong faith in it, and are firmly perſuaded of their intereſt in it; ſee Eph. iii. 17, 18. Rom. viii. 38, 39. they are alſo rooted in Chriſt, who is the root of Jeſſe, of David, and of all the ſaints; from whom they have their life, their nouriſhment and fruitfulneſs, and where they remain unmoved, and ſtrike their roots in him, by renewed acts of faith on him, claiming their intereſt in him; and are herein ſo ſtrongly rooted and grounded, that all the winds and ſtorms of ſin, ſatan and the world, cannot eradicate them; nay, as trees are more firmly rooted by being ſhaken, ſo are they; ſee Col. ii. 7. Iſ. xxxvii. 31. The Targum is, "they ſhall dwell "in the ſtrength of their land, as a tree of Lebanon, which ſends forth its branch."

℣. 6. His branches ſhall ſpread, &c.] As the well-rooted cedars in Lebanon; ſee Numb. xxiv. 6. This reſpects the propagation of the church of God, and the intereſt of Chriſt in the world, as in the firſt times of the goſpel, and will be in the latter day; when the goſpel ſhall be ſpread every where; churches ſet up in all places; the Jews converted, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles brought in; and theſe like ſpreading branches, and fruitful boughs, abounding in grace and good works. The Targum is, "they ſhall multiply or increaſe "with ſons and daughters:" and his beauty ſhall be as the olive-tree; which lies in its being laden with excellent fruit, and being always green; for which reaſons particular believers, and the whole church of God, are ſometimes compared to it; having that fatneſs in them, with which God and men are honoured; and that true grace, which is ſignified by oil in the veſſels of the heart, and is called the unction and anointing of the holy one; and they perſevering in this grace to the end, which is ever green and durable, immortal, and dies not; ſee Pſ. lii. 8. Jer. xi. 16. Here again it may be obſerved, that the trees of Lebanon, tho' they had ſtrong roots, and ſpreading branches, yet were not fruitful; and the deficiency of that metaphor is ſupplied by this of the olive: and his ſmell as Lebanon; as the trees of Lebanon, the cedars, trees of frankincenſe, and other odoriferous trees and plants, which grew upon it; here what is wanting in the olive-tree, whoſe ſmell is not ſo grateful, is made up by this ſimile of the trees of Lebanon, and the ſmell of them; which may denote the ſweet and grateful ſmell the Lord ſmells in his people, or his gracious acceptance of them in Chriſt; whoſe garments of righteouſneſs and ſalvation on them are as the ſmell of Lebanon; and whoſe graces in them exceed the ſmell of all ſpices; and whoſe prayers are odours, and their praiſes a ſacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to God; ſee Cant. iv. 10, 11. Rev. v. 8. and viii. 3, 4. 1 Pet. ii. 5. Some render it, as incenſe [d], called Lebonah in Hebrew, from whence the mountain is thought to have its name, frankincenſe growing upon it. So the Targum, "and their ſmell as the ſmell of the incenſe "of ſpices." Jarchi ſays, as the ſanctuary, which was made of the cedars of Lebanon.

℣. 7. They that dwell under his ſhadow, ſhall return, &c.] Either under the ſhadow of Lebanon, as Japhet and Jarchi; the ſhadow of that mountain, or of the trees that grew upon it; or under the ſhadow of Iſrael, the church, to which young converts have recourſe, and under which they ſit with pleaſure; or rather under the ſhadow of the Lord, Iſrael was called to return unto, and now return, ℣. 1, 2. as the Iſraelites will in the latter day. So the Targum, "and they ſhall be gathered "out of the midſt of their captivity, they ſhall "dwell under the ſhadow of their Meſſiah;" thus truly gracious perſons ſit under the ſhadow of Chriſt, who come to themſelves, and return unto the Lord; even under the ſhadow of his word and ordinances, where they deſire to ſit, and do ſit with delight and pleaſure, as well as in the greateſt ſafety; and find it a very refreſhing and comfortable ſhadow to them; even a ſhadow from the heat of avenging juſtice, a fiery law, the fiery darts of ſatan, and the fury of the world; and like the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land, exceeding pleaſing and cheering to weary travellers; ſee Cant. ii. 3. Iſ. xxv. 4, 5. and xxxii. 2: they ſhall revive as the corn; which firſt dies, and then is quickened; or which, after a cold nipping winter, at ſpring revives again: thus do believers under the dews of divine grace, under the ſhadow of Chriſt, and the influences of his Spirit: or, ſhall revive with corn [e]; by means of it; by which may be ſignified the corn of heaven, angels food, the hidden manna, the goſpel of Chriſt, and Chriſt himſelf, the bread of life; by which the ſpirits of his people are revived, their ſouls upheld in life, and their graces quickened; which they find and eat, and it is the joy and rejoicing of their hearts: and grow as the vine; which, tho' weak, and needs ſupport, and its wood unprofitable; yet grows and ſpreads very much, and brings forth rich fruit in cluſters: ſo the ſaints, tho' they are weak in themſelves, and need divine ſupports, and when they have done all they can are unprofitable ſervants; yet thro' the power of divine grace, which is like the dew, they grow in every grace, and are filled with the bleſſings of it, and bring forth much fruit to the glory of God: and the ſcent thereof ſhall be as the wine of Lebanon; like the wine of thoſe vines, which grow on mount Lebanon, and judged to be the beſt. On mount Lebanon, about the mid-way between the top and the bottom of it, there is now a convent called Canobine, ſituated in a very pleaſant place; and Le Bruyn in his travels relates, that it is preferable to all other places on account of its wines, which are the richeſt and fineſt in the world; they are very ſweet, of a red colour, and ſo oily that they ſtick to the glaſs. At Lebanon was a city called by the Greeks Ampeloeſſa, from the excellency of its wine, as Grotius from Pliny [f] obſerves. Gabriel Sionita [g] aſſures us, that even to this day the wines of Libanus are in good reputation. Kimchi relates from Aſaph a phyſician, that the wines of Lebanon, Hermon, and Carmel, and of the mountains of Iſrael and Jeruſalem, and of the mountains of Samaria, and of the mountains of Caphtor Mizraim, were the beſt of wines, and exceeded all others for ſcent, taſte, and medicine. Japhet interprets it, the ſmell of their vine afar off was as the wine of Lebanon; and ſo Kimchi, the ſmell of the wine of the vine, to which Iſrael is compared, is like the ſmell of the wine of Lebanon. This may denote the ſavourineſs of truly converted gracious ſouls, of their graces, doctrines, life and converſation. Some chuſe to render it, their memory [h] ſhall be as the wine of Lebanon; ſo the Targum interprets it, of "the memory of their goodneſs;" the ſaints obtain a good report thro' faith, and have a good name, better than precious ointment; their memory is bleſſed; they are had in everlaſting remembrance; the memory of them is not only dear to the people of God in after-ages; but the memory of their perſons, and of their works, is exceeding grateful to God and Chriſt.

℣. 8. Ephraim ſhall ſay, what have I to do any more with idols? &c.] This is to be underſtood, not of apoſtate Ephraim, as in the times of the prophet, who was ſo wedded and glued to the idols, that there was no hope of getting him from them; and therefore is bid to let him alone, ch. iv. 17. but of Ephraim or Iſrael returning to God at his call, under the influence of his grace in the latter day, ℣. 1, 2. Idols are the ſame with the works of their hands, ℣. 3. and to be interpreted, not of graven or molten images, to the worſhip of which the Jews have not been addicted ſince their captivity to this day; ſee ch. iii. 4. but of the idols of their hearts, their impiety, their unbelief, their rejection of the Meſſiah, which, at the time of their converſion, they will loath, abhor, and mourn over; likewiſe the traditions of their elders, they are now zealous and tenacious of, and prefer even to the written word; but will now relinquiſh them, and embrace the goſpel of Chriſt; as well as the idol of their own righteouſneſs they have always endeavoured to eſtabliſh;

but ſhall now renounce, and receive Chriſt as the Lord their righteouſneſs. The like to this is to be found in common in all truly penitent and converted ſinners; who, being made ſenſible of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, deteſt and abhor it, and declare they will have nothing to do with it; not but that it continues in them, and has to do with them, and they with that; yet not ſo as to live and walk in it; to yield their members as inſtruments of it; to ſerve and obey it as their maſter; to make proviſion for it, and to have the courſe of their lives under the direction and power of it; and ſo likewiſe being convinced of the imperfection and inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs to juſtify them, they will have nothing to do with that in the buſineſs of juſtification before God, and acceptance with him: now theſe are the words of the Lord, affirming what Ephraim ſhould ſay, as Kimchi rightly obſerves; he promiſes for him, as he well might, ſince it is he that gives repentance to Iſrael, and works in his people principles of grace, and enables them both to will and to do, to make ſuch holy reſolutions, and perform them. Some render the words, O Ephraim, what have I to do [i], &c. and take them to be words of God concerning himſelf, declaring he would have nothing to do with idols, nor ſuffer them in his ſervice, nor ſhould they; for what concord hath Chriſt with Belial; or what agreement hath the temple of God with idols, 2 Cor. vi. 15, 16. but the former ſenſe is much beſt; rather what Schmidt ſuggeſts is more agreeable, who, rendring the words in the ſame way, makes them to be the words of a believing Gentile returning and dwelling under the ſhadow of Iſrael; ſo he interprets the preceding verſe, and takes this to be the language of ſuch an one throughout. The Targum is, “they “of the houſe of Iſrael ſhall ſay, what is it to us “to ſerve idols any more?” I have heard him; ſays the Lord, Ephraim bemoaning himſelf, repenting of his ſins, and confeſſing them; his prayers for pardon and acceptance, and the reſolutions made by him in the ſtrength of divine grace, ỷ. 2, 3, 8. ſee Jer. xxxi. 18, 19, 20. and this is what his idols he once ſerved could not do, who had ears, but heard not; but the Lord not only heard, but anſwered, and granted his requeſt. So the Targum, “I by my word will receive the prayer of Iſrael, “and will have mercy on him:” and obſerved him; looked at him, and on him with an eye of pity and compaſſion; with a favourable and propitious look, as the Lord does towards thoſe that are poor, and of a contrite ſpirit; obſerved the ways and ſteps he took in returning to him; marked his tears and humiliations, groans and moans, and took notice of his wants in order to ſupply them. I am like a green fir-tree; theſe are the words of the Lord continued; tho' ſome take them to be the words of Ephraim; or, as Schmidt, of the Gentile believer, like thoſe of David, Pſ. lii. 8. but they beſt agree with Chriſt, who may be compared to ſuch a tree, as he is to many others in ſcripture; becauſe a choice one, as he is to his Father, and to all believers, choſen and precious, lovely and beloved; a tall tree, ſo Chriſt is highly exalted as Mediator, higher than the kings of the earth, above the angels in heaven, yea higher than the heavens. The boughs of this tree, as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve, bend downward ſo low as to be laid hold on; Chriſt tho' the high and lofty one dwells with humble ſouls, and ſuffers himſelf to be laid hold upon by the faith of every one that comes to him. Pliny ſays [k], that this tree is of a chearful aſpect, ſmooth and ſcarce any knots upon it; and its leaves ſo thick that a ſhower of rain will not paſs thro' it: Chriſt is moſt amiable, and altogether lovely to look at in his perſon and fulneſs; and he looks in a loving ſmiling manner upon his people; he is without any knot of ſin or corruption in him, as to principle or practice; and is a delightful ſhade from the wrath of God, or rage of man, from the heat of a fiery law, and the darts of ſatan: and as this tree, as here, is ever green, ſo he is always the ſame; he ever lives, and his people in him, and by him; his fulneſs always continues to ſupply them. Once more the fir-tree is the habitation of the ſtork, an unclean creature by the law of God; ſo Chriſt is the dwelling place of ſinners, he receives them, and converſes with them, Pſ. civ. 17. The Septuagint verſion renders it, as a thick juniper-tree; which naturaliſts ſay [l] has ſuch a virtue in it, as by the ſmell to drive away ſerpents. So the old ſerpent the devil was drove away by Chriſt in the wilderneſs, in the garden, and on the croſs; and reſiſting by faith, holding out his blood and righteouſneſs, cauſes him to flee from the ſaints. The Arabic verſion is, as the fruitful cypreſs-tree; which is of a good ſmell, and its wood very durable; and ſo may be expreſſive of the ſavour of Chriſt, his righteouſneſs and ſacrifice, the graces of his Spirit, and of his duration. Some take this to be a promiſe that Ephraim ſhould be as a green fir-tree, ſo Aben Ezra; with which agrees the Targum, “I by my word will make him as the beau- “tiful fir-tree;” and to which ſometimes the ſaints are compared; ſee Iſ. xli. 19. and lv. 13. and lx. 13. and this being a tree that bears no fruit, it follows to make up that defect in the metaphor, from me is thy fruit found; from Chriſt are all the ſpiritual bleſſings of grace, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, adoption, a right and meetneſs for eternal life, and that itſelf; all the fruits and graces of the Spirit, as faith, hope, love, &c. and all good works, which ſpring from union with him, are done in his ſtrength, and influenced by his grace and example; ſee Phil. i. 11.

ỷ. 9. Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe things? prudent, and he ſhall know them? &c.] Contained in this book, and particularly in this chapter; which expreſſes ſo much of the goodneſs of God, and grace of Chriſt to Iſrael; tho' it may be applied to the whole ſcripture, and to all the myſteries and doctrines of the goſpel, reſpecting Chriſt and his grace; and be a recommendation of theſe to the conſideration of every wiſe and prudent man; where he will find enough to exerciſe his wiſdom and underſtanding; tho' he need not be diſcouraged in his ſearch and enquiry into them. It ſuggeſts as if there were but few ſuch wiſe perſons, and that they are the only wiſe men that do know and underſtand theſe things; and all others are but fools, let them be thought as wiſe as they will: for the ways of the Lord are right; ſtrait, plain, even, according to the rules of juſtice and equity; there is no unrighteouſneſs in them; none in the ways in which he himſelf walks, either in his ways and methods of grace, his decrees and purpoſes, his counſels and covenant; or in his providential diſpenſations; nor in thoſe he directs others to walk in, the paths of faith and doctrine; or the ways of his commandments: and the juſt ſhall walk in them; ſuch as are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and have his grace wrought in them, and live righteouſly; theſe walk, and continue to walk in the ways of God; which ſhews that the doctrine of juſtification by Chriſt's imputed righteouſneſs is no licentious doctrine: but the tranſgreſſors ſhall fall therein; the tranſgreſſors of the law of God, not being uſed to his ways, as Kimchi's father obſerves, ſtumble in them and fall; or rather, as Jarchi and the Targum, they fall into hell, into ruin and deſtruction, becauſe they walk not in them; tho' the ſenſe ſeems to be, that as Chriſt himſelf, ſo his ways and his word, his doctrines and his ordinances, are ſtumbling-blocks to wicked men, at which they ſtumble, and fall, and periſh; ſee Luke ii. 34. Rom. ix. 33. 1 Pet. ii. 8.

J O E L.

IN ſome Hebrew bibles, this prophecy is called Sepher Joel, the book of Joel; in the Vulgate Latin verſion, the prophecy of Joel; and in the Syriac verſion, the prophecy of the prophet Joel; and the Arabic verſion, the prophet Joel; and ſo the apoſtle Peter quotes him, Acts ii. 16. His name, according to Hillerus[a], ſignifies the Lord is God; but others derive it from יאל, which in Hiphil is הואיל, and ſignifies he willed, acquieſced, or is well pleaſed, ſo Abarbinel; and hence Schmidt thinks it anſwers to Deſiderius or Eraſmus. According to Iſidorus[b], he was born at Bethoron, in the tribe of Reuben, and died, and was buried there; and ſo ſays Pſeudo-Epiphanius[c]. In what age he lived, is not eaſy to ſay. Aben Ezra expreſsly affirms, there is no way to know it; and ſo R. David Ganz[d] ſays, his time we know not; and likewiſe Abarbinel. Some think he propheſied about the ſame time Hoſea did, after whom he is next placed; and ſo Mr. Whiſton[e] and Mr. Bedford[f] make him to propheſy much about the ſame time with Iſaiah and Hoſea, about 800 years before Chriſt; but in the Septuagint verſion, this book is in the fourth order, and not Hoſea, but Amos and Micah are placed before him; and ſo the author of Juchaſin[g] puts the prophets in this order, firſt Hoſea, then Amos, next Iſaiah, then Micah, and after him Joel. Some of the Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi, Kimchi, and Abendana relate, make Joel cotemporary with Eliſhah, and ſay he propheſied in the days of Jehoram the ſon of Ahab, when the ſeven years famine called for came upon the land, 2 Kings viii. 1. Both in Seder Olam Rabba and Zuta[h], he is placed in the reign of Manaſſeh; and ſo in Hilchot Gedolot, as Jarchi obſerves. And it ſeems indeed, as if he propheſied after the ten tribes were carried captive, which was in the ſixth year of Hezekiah's reign; ſince no mention is made of Iſrael, but with reſpect to future times, only of Judah and Jeruſalem. But be it when it will that he propheſied, there is no doubt to be made of the authenticity of this book, which is confirmed by the quotations of two apoſtles out of it, Peter and Paul, Acts ii. 16. Rom. x. 13.

C H A P. I.

THIS chapter deſcribes a dreadful calamity upon the people of the Jews, by locuſts and caterpillers, and a drought. After the title of the book, ℣. 1. old men are called upon to obſerve this ſore judgment to their children, that it might be tranſmitted to the lateſt poſterity, as that the like to which had not been ſeen and heard of, ℣. 2, 3, 4. and drunkards to awake and weep, becauſe the vines were deſtroyed, and no wine could be made for them, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and not only huſbandmen and vine-dreſſers, but the prieſts of the Lord are called to mourn, becauſe ſuch deſtruction was made in the fields and vineyards, that there were no meat nor drink-offering brought into the houſe of the Lord, ℣. 8—13. wherefore a general and ſolemn faſt is required throughout the land, becauſe of the diſtreſs of man and beaſt, ℣. 14—18. and the chapter is concluded with the reſolution of the prophet to cry unto the Lord, on account of this calamity, ℣. 19, 20.

℣. 1. The word of the Lord that came to Joel the ſon of Pethuel.] Who this Pethuel was is not known; Jarchi takes him to be the ſame with Samuel the prophet, who had a ſon of this name, 1 Sam. viii. 2. and gives this reaſon for his being called Pethuel, becauſe in his prayer he perſuaded God; but the diſtance of time will by no means admit of this, nor the character of Samuel's ſon agree with Joel; and therefore is rightly denied by Aben Ezra, who obſerves however, that this man was an honourable man, and therefore his name is mentioned; and gives this as a rule, that whenever any prophet mentions the name of his father, he was honourable. Perhaps it is here obſerved, to diſtinguiſh him from another of the ſame name; and there was one of this name, Joel, an high-prieſt in the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham, according to Seder Olam Zuta[i] and Abarbinel[k]; in whoſe time Joel is by ſome thought to propheſy.

℣. 2. Hear this, ye old men, &c.] What the prophet was about to relate, concerning the conſumption of the fruits of the earth, by various ſorts of creatures, and by a drought; and theſe are called upon to declare, if ever the like had been known or heard of by them; who by reaſon of age had the greateſt opportunities of knowledge of this ſort, and could remember what they had heard or ſeen, and would faithfully relate it: this may be underſtood of elders in office, as well as in age: and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land; or earth; not of the whole earth, but of the land of Judea; who were more particularly concerned in this affair, and therefore are required to liſten attentively to it: hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers? that is, not the ſelf-ſame thing, but any thing equal to it; a judgment of the ſame kind and nature, and of the ſame degree. By this queſtion it ſeems, the like had never been in the memory of any man living; nor in former times, in the days of their anceſtors, as could be averred upon report; or atteſted on the credit of annals, chronicles, or other methods of conveying the hiſtory of ages paſt. As for the plague of locuſts in Egypt, tho' they were ſuch as never had been, nor would be there any more; yet ſuch or greater, and more in number than thoſe, might be in Judea; beſides, they continued but a few days at moſt, theſe four years ſucceſſively, as Kimchi obſerves; and who thinks that in Egypt there was but one ſort of locuſts, here four; but the paſſage he quotes in Pſ. lxxviii. 46. contradicts him; to which may be added Pſ. cv. 34.

℣. 3. Tell ye your children of it, &c.] Give them a particular account of it; deſcribe the creatures, and their number, as near as you can; ſay when they begun, and how long they continued, and what devaſtations they made, and what was the cauſe and reaſon of ſuch a judgment, your ſins and tranſgreſſions: and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation; or to the generation following[1]; let it be handed down from one generation to another, that it may be a caution to future poſterity how they behave, and leſt they bring down the like awful judgments on them. What this referred to, was as follows:

℣. 4. That which the palmer-worm hath left, hath the locuſt eaten, &c.] Theſe, with the two following, are four kinds of locuſts, as Jarchi obſerves; tho' it is difficult to fix the particular ſpecies deſigned; they ſeem to have their names from ſome peculiar properties belonging to them; as the firſt of theſe from their ſheering or cropping off the fruits and leaves of trees; and the ſecond from the vaſt increaſe of them, the multitude they bring forth, and the large numbers they appear in: and that which the locuſt hath left, hath the canker-worm eaten; which, in the Hebrew language, is called from its licking up the fruits of the earth, by which it becomes barren: and that which the canker-worm hath left, hath the caterpiller eaten; which has its name from waſting and conſuming all that comes in its way: now theſe came not together, but followed one another; not one one year, and another the ſecond, and ſo on throughout four years, as Kimchi thinks; for though the calamity laſted ſome years, as is manifeſt from ch. ii. 25. yet it is not reaſonable, that for inſtance, what the palmer-worm left the firſt year, ſhould remain in the fields and vineyards, on the fig-trees and vines, till the next year, for the locuſt to conſume, and ſo on: but rather theſe all appeared in ſucceſſion, in one and the ſame year; and ſo what the palmer-worm left, having eat up what was moſt agreeable to them, the locuſt came and devoured what they had left; and then what they left, was deſtroyed by the canker-worm, which fed on that which was moſt grateful to them; and laſt of all came the caterpiller, and conſumed all the others had left; and this might be continued for years ſucceſſively: when this calamity was, we have no account in ſacred hiſtory; whether it was in the ſeven years famine in the days of Eliſha, or the ſame with what Amos ſpeaks of, ch. iv. 6—9. is not eaſy to ſay: and tho' it ſeems to be literally underſtood, as the drought after-mentioned, yet might be typical of the enemies of the Jews ſucceeding one another in the deſtruction of them. Not of the four monarchies, the Babylonians, Perſians, Grecians, and Romans, as Lyra and Abarbinel; ſince the Perſians particularly never entred into the land of Judea and waſted it; tho' this is the ſenſe of the ancient Jews, as Jerom relates; for he ſays, the Hebrews interpret the palmer-worm of the Aſſyrians, Babylonians, and Chaldeans, who coming from one climate of the world, deſtroyed both the ten and the two tribes, that is, all the people of Iſrael: the locuſt they interpret of the Medes and Perſians, who having overturned the Chaldean empire, carried the Jews captive: the canker-worm is the Macedonians, and all the ſucceſſors of Alexander; eſpecially king Antiochus, ſurnamed Epiphanes, who like a canker-worm ſat in Judea, and devoured all the remains of the former kings, under whom were the wars of the Maccabees: the caterpiller they refer to the Roman empire, the fourth and laſt that oppreſſed the Jews, and drove them out of their borders. Nor of the ſeveral kings of Aſſyria and Babylon, who followed one another, and waſted firſt the ten tribes, and then the other two, as Tiglath-Pileſer, Salmaneſer, Sennacherib, and Nebuchadnezzar, ſo Theodoret; ſince this prophecy only relates to the two tribes. Rather therefore this may point at the ſeveral invaſions and incurſions of the Chaldean army into Judea, under Nebuchadnezzar and his generals; firſt, when he came up againſt Jeruſalem, and made Jehoiakim tributary to him; a ſecond time, when he carried Jehoiachin and his family into Babylon, with a multitude of the Jews, and their wealth; a third time, when he beſieged Jeruſalem, and took it, and Zedekiah the king, and carried him captive; and a fourth time, when Nebuzaradan came and burnt the temple, and the houſes of Jeruſalem, and broke down the walls of it, and cleared the land of its inhabitants and riches; ſee 2 Kings xxiv. and xxv.

℣. 5. Awake, ye drunkards, and weep, and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, &c.] Who are uſed to neither, either to awake or to howl, being very prone to drowſineſs upon their drinking-bouts, and to mirth and jollity in them; but now ſhould be awake, and ſober enough, not as being a virtue in them, but thro' want of wine; and for the ſame reaſon ſhould howl, as follows: becauſe of the new wine, for it is cut off from your mouth; the locuſts having ſpoiled the vines, and eat the grapes, no new wine could be made, and ſo none could be brought in cups to their mouths; nor they drink it in bowls, as they had uſed to do; and which being ſweet and grateful to their taſte, they were wont to drink in great abundance, till they were inebriated with it; but now there was a ſcarcity, their lips were dry, but not their eyes. The word, Kimchi ſays, ſignifies all liquor, which is ſqueezed by bruiſing or treading.

℣. 6. For a nation is come up upon my land, &c.] A nation of locuſts, ſo called from their great numbers, and coming from foreign parts; juſt as the ants are called a people, and the conies a folk, Prov. xxx. 25, 26. and which were an emblem of the nation of the Chaldeans, which came up from Babylon, and invaded the land of Judea; called by the Lord my land, becauſe he had choſen it for the habitation of his people; here he himſelf had long dwelt, and had been ſerved and worſhipped in it: tho' Kimchi thinks theſe are the words of the inhabitants of the land, or of the prophet; but if it can be thought they are any other than the words of God, they rather ſeem to be expreſſed by the drunkards in particular, howling for want of wine, and obſerving the reaſon of it: ſtrong, and without number; this deſcription ſeems better to agree with the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans, who were a mighty and powerful people, as well as numerous; tho' locuſts, notwithſtanding they are weak ſingly taken, yet coming in large bodies, carry all before them, and there's no ſtopping them: whoſe teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great lion; or the grinders [m] of ſuch a one; being hard, ſtrong, and ſharp, to bite off the tops, boughs, and branches of trees: Pliny [n] ſays, locuſts will gnaw with their teeth the doors of houſes; ſo the teeth of locuſts are deſcribed in Rev. ix. 8. this may denote the ſtrength, cruelty, and voraciouſneſs of the Chaldean army.

ỷ. 7. He hath laid my vine waſte, &c.] That is, the locuſt, which ſpoiled the vines in Judea, the ſingular being put for the plural, by gnawing the branches, biting the tops of them, and devouring the leaves and the fruit; and ſo not only left them bare and barren, but deſtroyed them: this may emblematically repreſent the Aſſyrians or Babylonians waſting the land of Judea, the vine and vineyard of the Lord of hoſts; ſee Iſ. v. 1—5: and barked my fig-tree; gnawed off the bark of them; locuſts are not only hurtful to vines, as is hinted by Theocritus [o], but to fig-trees alſo: Pliny [p] ſpeaks of fig-trees in Bœotia gnawn by locuſts, which budded again; and mentions it as ſomething wonderful and miraculous that they ſhould: and yet Sanctius obſerves, that theſe words cannot be underſtood properly of the locuſts, ſince fig-trees cannot be hurt by the bite or touch of them; which beſides their roughneſs have an inſipid bitter juice, which preſerves them from being gnawn by ſuch creatures; and the like is obſerved of the cypreſs by Vitruvius [q]; but the paſſage out of Pliny ſhews the contrary. Some interpret it of a froth or ſcum they left upon the fig-tree when they gnawed it, ſuch as Aben Ezra ſays is upon the face of the water; and ſomething like this is left by caterpillers on the leaves of trees, which deſtroy them. He hath made it clean bare; ſtripped it of its leaves and fruit, and bark alſo: and caſt it away; having got out all the juice they could: the branches thereof are made white; the bark being gnawed off, and all the greenneſs and verdure of them dried up; ſo trees look, when this is their caſe: and thus the Jews were ſtripped by the Chaldeans of all their wealth and treaſure, and were left bare and naked, and as the ſcum and offſcouring of all things.

ỷ. 8. Lament like a virgin, &c.] This is not the continuation of the prophet's ſpeech to the drunkards; but, as Aben Ezra obſerves, he either ſpeaks to himſelf, or to the land. The Targum ſupplies it, O congregation of Iſrael; the more religious and godly part of the people are here addreſſed; who were concerned for the pure worſhip of God, and were as a chaſte virgin eſpouſed to Chriſt, tho' not yet come, and for whom they were waiting; theſe are called upon to lament the calamities of the times in doleful ſtrains, like a virgin: girded with ſackcloth, for the huſband of her youth; either as one that had been betrothed to a young man, but not married, he dying after the eſpouſals, and before marriage; which muſt be greatly diſtreſſing to one that paſſionately loved him; and therefore inſtead of her nuptial robes, prepared to meet him, and be married in, girds herſelf with ſackcloth; a coarſe hairy ſort of cloth, as was uſual in the eaſtern countries, to put on in token of mourning: or as one lately married to a young man ſhe dearly loved, and was exceſſively fond of, and lived extremely happy with; but being ſuddenly ſnatched away from her by death, puts on her widow's weed, and mourns not in ſhew only, but in reality; having loſt in her youth her young huſband, ſhe had the ſtrongeſt affection for: this is uſed to expreſs the great lamentation the people are called unto, in this time of their diſtreſs.

ỷ. 9. The meat-offering, and the drink-offering is cut off from the houſe of the Lord, &c.] The meat-offering was made of fine flour, oil, and frankincenſe; and the drink-offering was of wine; and becauſe of the want of corn and wine, theſe were not brought to the temple as uſual; and which was matter of great grief to religious perſons, and eſpecially to the prieſts, as follows: the prieſts, the Lord's miniſters mourn; partly becauſe they had no work to do, and could not anſwer to their character, the miniſters of the Lord, in miniſtring about holy things, and bringing the ſacrifices and offerings of the people to him; and partly becauſe of their want of food, their livelihood greatly depending on the offerings brought, part of which belonged to them, and on which they and their families lived.

ỷ. 10. The field is waſted, &c.] By the locuſts, that eat up all green things, the graſs and herbs, the fruit and leaves of trees; and alſo by the Chaldeans trampling on it with their horſes, and the increaſe of which became fodder for them: the land mourneth; being deſtitute, nothing growing upon it, and ſo looked diſmally, and of an horrid aſpect; or the inhabitants of it, for want of proviſion: for the corn is waſted; by the locuſts, and ſo by the Aſſyrian or Chaldean army, before it came to perfection: the new wine is dried up; in the grape, thro' the drought after-mentioned: or, is aſhamed [r]; not anſwering the expectations of men, who ſaw it in the cluſter, promiſing much, but failed: the oil languiſheth; or ſickens [s]; the olive-trees withered; the olives fell off, as the Targum, and ſo the oil failed: the corn, wine, and oil are particularly mentioned, not only as being the chief ſupport of human life, as Kimchi obſerves, and ſo the loſs of them muſt be matter of lamentation to the people in general; but becauſe of theſe the meat and drink-offerings were, and therefore the prieſts in particular had reaſon to mourn.

ỷ. 11. Be ye aſhamed, O ye huſbandmen, &c.] Tillers of the land, who have took a great deal of pains in cultivating the earth, dunging, plowing, and ſowing it; confuſion may cover you, becauſe of your diſappointment, the increaſe not anſwering to your expectations and labours: howl, O ye vine-dreſſers; that worked in the vineyards, ſet the vines, watered and pruned them, and when they had done all they could to them, were dried up with the drought, or devoured by the locuſts, as they were deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans; and therefore had reaſon to howl and lament, all their labour being loſt: for the wheat, and for the barley, becauſe the harveſt of the field is periſhed; this belongs to the huſbandmen, is a reaſon for their ſhame and bluſhing, becauſe the wheat and barley were deſtroyed before they were ripe; and ſo they had neither wheat nor barley-harveſt. The words, by a tranſpoſition, would read better, and the ſenſe be clearer, thus, be ye aſhamed, O ye huſbandmen, for the wheat, and for the barley, becauſe the harveſt, &c. howl, O ye vine-dreſſers; for what follows:

℣. 12. The vine is dried up, &c.] Withered away, ſtripped of its leaves and fruits, and its ſap and moiſture gone: or, is aſhamed [t]; to ſee itſelf in this condition, and not anſwer the expectation of its proprietor and dreſſer: and the fig-tree languiſheth; ſickens and dies, thro' the bite of the locuſts: the pomegranate-tree; whoſe fruit is delicious, and of which wine was made: the palm-tree alſo; which bears dates: and the apple-tree; that looks ſo beautiful, when either in bloom, or laden with fruit, and whoſe fruit is very grateful to the palate; ſo that both what were for common uſe and neceſſary food, and what were for delight and pleaſure, were deſtroyed by theſe noiſome creatures: even all the trees of the field are withered; for locuſts not only devour the leaves and fruits of trees, but hurt the trees themſelves; burn them up by touching them, and cauſe them to wither away and die, both by the ſaliva and dung, which they leave upon them, as Bochart, from various authors, has proved: becauſe joy is withered away from the ſons of men; this is not given as a reaſon of the above trees dried up and withered, but of the lamentation of the vine-dreſſers and huſbandmen: or elſe the particle כי is merely expletive, or may be rendered, therefore, or truly, or ſurely [u], joy is withered; or aſhamed; it bluſhes to appear, as it uſed to do at the time of harveſt; but now there was no harveſt, and ſo no joy expreſſed, as uſually was at ſuch times; ſee Iſ. ix. 3.

℣. 13. Gird yourſelves, and lament, ye prieſts, &c.] Prepare and be ready to raiſe up lamentation and mourning; or gird yourſelves with ſackcloth, and mourn in that, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſupply the words; ſee Jer. iv. 8: howl, ye miniſters of the altar; who ſerved there, by laying on and burning the ſacrifices, or offering incenſe: come, lie all night in ſackcloth, ye miniſters of my God; that is, come into the houſe of the Lord, as Kimchi; into the court of the prieſts, and there lie all night, in the ſackcloth girded with; putting up prayers to God, with weeping and lamentations, that he would avert the judgments that were come, or were coming upon them: for the meat-offering and the drink-offering are withholden from the houſe of your God; ſee the note on ℣. 9.

℣. 14. Sanctify ye a faſt, &c.] This is ſpoken to the prieſts, whoſe buſineſs it was to appoint a faſt, as the Targum renders it; or to ſet apart a time for ſuch religious ſervice, as the word ſignifies; and to keep it holy themſelves, and ſee that it was ſo kept by others: Kimchi interprets it, prepare the people for a faſt; give them notice of it, that they may be prepared for it: call a ſolemn aſſembly; of all the people of the land after-mentioned: or, proclaim a reſtraint [w]; a time of ceaſing, as a faſt-day ſhould be from all ſervile work, that attendance may be given to the duties of it, prayer and humiliation: gather the elders; meaning not thoſe in age, but in office: and all the inhabitants of the land; not the magiſtrates only, tho' firſt and principally, as examples, who had been deeply concerned in guilt; but the common people alſo, even all of them: into the houſe of the Lord your God; the temple, the court of the Iſraelites, where they were to go and ſupplicate the Lord, when ſuch a calamity as this of locuſts and caterpillers were upon them; and where they might hope the Lord would hear them, and remove his judgments from them, 1 Kings viii. 37: and cry unto the Lord; in prayer, with vehemence and earneſtneſs of ſoul.

℣. 15. Alas for the day, for the day of the Lord is at hand, &c.] A time of ſeverer and heavier judgments than theſe of the locuſts, caterpillers, &c. which were a preſage and emblem of greater ones, even of the total deſtruction of their city, temple, and nation, either by the Chaldeans, or by the Romans, or both: and as a deſtruction from the Almighty ſhall it come; unawares, ſuddenly, and irreſiſtibly: there is in the Hebrew text an elegant paronomaſia, which may be rendered, as waſting from the waſter, or deſtruction from the deſtroyer ſhall it come [x]; even from the almighty God, who is able to ſave and deſtroy, and none can deliver out of his hands; ſee Iſ. xiii. 6. the word ſignifies one powerful and victorious, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſo it does in the Arabic language.

℣. 16. Is not the meat cut off before our eyes? &c.] Such an interrogation moſt ſtrongly affirms; it was a matter out of all queſtion, they could not but ſee it with their eyes; it was a plain caſe, and not to be denied, that every eatable thing, or that of which food was wont to be made, was cut off by the locuſts, or the drought, or by the Aſſyrian or Chaldean army: yea, joy and gladneſs from the houſe of our God; the harveſt being periſhed, there were no firſt-fruits brought to the temple, which uſed to be attended with great joy; and the corn and vines being waſted, no meat-offerings made of fine flour, nor drink-offerings of wine, were offered, which uſed to make glad God and man; nor any other ſacrifices, on which the prieſts and their families lived, and were matter of joy to them; and theſe they ate of in the temple, or in courts adjoining to it. So Philo [y] the Jew ſays of the ancient Jews, that "having prayed and offered ſacri"fices, and appeaſed the deity, they waſhed their "bodies and ſouls; the one in lavers, the other in
"the ſtreams of the laws, and right inſtruction;
"and being chearful, turned themſelves to their "food, not going home oftentimes, but remain"ing in the holy places where they ſacrificed; and
"as mindful of the ſacrifices, and reverencing the "place, they kept a feaſt truly holy, not ſinning
"either in word or deed."

℣. 17. The ſeed is rotten under their clods, &c.] Or grains [z] of wheat or barley, which had been ſown, and for want of rain, putrified and waſted away under the clods of earth, thro' the great drought; ſo that what with locuſts, which cropped that that did bud forth, and with the drought, by reaſon of which much of the ſeed ſown came to nothing, an extreme famine enſued: the Targum is, "caſks of "wine rotted under their coverings:" the garners are deſolate; the treaſuries [a], or ſtorehouſes, having nothing in them, and there being nothing to put into them; Jarchi makes theſe to be peculiar for wine and oil, both which failed, ℣. 10: the barns are broken down; in which the wheat and barley had uſed to be laid up; but this judgment of the locuſts and drought continuing year after year, the walls fell down, and no care was taken to repair them, there being no uſe for them; theſe were the granaries, and as Jarchi, for wheat particularly: for the corn is withered; that which ſprung up withered and dried away, thro' the heat and drought: or was aſhamed [b]; not anſwering the expectation of the ſower.

℣. 18. How do the beaſts groan? &c.] For want of fodder, all green graſs and herbs being eat up by the locuſts; or devoured, or trampled upon, and deſtroyed by the Chaldeans; and alſo for want of water to quench their thirſt: the herds of cattel are perplexed, becauſe they have no paſture; the larger cattel, as oxen; theſe were in the utmoſt perplexity, not knowing where to go for food or drink: yea, the flocks of ſheep are made deſolate; which have ſhepherds to lead and direct them to paſtures, and can feed on commons, where the graſs is ſhort, which other cattel cannot; yet even theſe were in great diſtreſs, and waſted away, and were conſumed for want of nouriſhment.

℣. 19. O Lord, to thee will I cry, &c.] Or pray, as the Targum; with great vehemency and earneſtneſs, commiſerating the caſe of man and beaſt: theſe are the words of the prophet, reſolving to uſe his intereſt at the throne of grace in this time of diſtreſs, whatever others did: for the fire hath devoured the paſtures of the wilderneſs; or, of the plain [c]; though in the wilderneſſes of Judea, there were paſtures for cattel: Kimchi interprets them of the ſhepherds tents or coats, as the word [d] is ſometimes uſed; which were wont to be pitched, where there were paſtures for their flocks: and ſo the Targum renders it, the habitations of the wilderneſs; theſe, whether paſtures or habitations, or both, were deſtroyed by fire; the paſtures by the locuſts, as Kimchi; which, as Pliny [e] ſays, by touching burn the trees, herbs, and fruits of the earth; ſee ch. ii. 3. or by the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans, who by fire and ſword conſumed all in their way; or by a dry burning blaſting wind, as Lyra; and ſo the Targum interprets it of a ſtrong eaſt wind like fire: it ſeems rather to deſign extreme heat and exceſſive drought, which burn up all the produce of the earth: and the flame hath burnt all the trees of the field; which may be underſtood of flaſhes of lightning, which are common in times of great heat and drought; ſee Pſ. lxxxiii. 14.

℣. 20. The beaſts of the field cry alſo unto thee, &c.] As well as the prophet, in their way; which may be mentioned, both as a rebuke to ſuch who had no ſenſe of the judgments upon them, and called not on the Lord; and to expreſs the greatneſs of the calamity, of which the brute creatures were ſenſible, and made piteous moans, as for food, ſo for drink; panting thro' exceſſive heat and vehement thirſt, as the hart after the water-brooks, of which this word is only uſed, Pſ. xlii. 1. but in vain: for the rivers of water are dried up; not only ſprings, and rivulets, and brooks of water, but rivers, places where were large deep waters, as Aben Ezra explains it; either by the Aſſyrian army, the like Sennacherib boaſts of, Iſ. xxxvii. 25. and is ſaid to be done by the army of Xerxes, wherever it came; or rather by the exceſſive heat and ſcorching beams of the ſun, by which ſuch effects are produced: and the fire hath devoured the paſtures of the wilderneſs; ſee the note on ℣. 19. and whereas the word rendered paſtures, ſignifies both them and habitations alſo; and being repeated, it may be taken in one of the ſenſes in ℣. 19. and in the other here: and ſo Kimchi, who interprets it before of tents, here explains it of graſſy places in the wilderneſs, dried up, as if the ſun had conſumed them.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter, a further account is given of the judgment of the locuſts and caterpillers, or of thoſe who are deſigned by them, ℣. 1—11. the people of the Jews are called to repentance, humiliation, and faſting, urged from the grace and goodneſs of God, his jealouſy and pity for his people, and the anſwer of prayer that might be expected from him upon this, even to the removal of the calamity, ℣. 12—20. a prophecy of good things, both temporal and ſpiritual, in the times of the Meſſiah, is delivered out as matter and occaſion of great joy, ℣. 21—27. and another concerning the effuſion of the Spirit, which was fulfilled on the day of Pentecoſt, ℣. 28, 29. and the chapter is concluded with the judgments and deſolations that ſhould come upon the land of Judea after this, for their rejection of Chriſt, tho' the remnant according to the election of grace ſhould be delivered and ſaved from the general deſtruction, ℣. 30, 31, 32.

℣. 1. Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and ſound an alarm in my holy mountain, &c.] This is ſpoken to the prieſts, whoſe buſineſs it was to blow the trumpets for calling ſolemn aſſemblies to meet in Zion, the temple built there, called from thence the holy mountain of God. Here the trumpet is ordered to be blown with a broken quivering voice, a tarantantara, to give notice of approaching danger by the locuſts, or thoſe enemies ſignified by them, and to prepare for it, and return to God by repentance. Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; at the judgments of God coming upon them, and the alarm of them: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand; the time fixed by him to puniſh a wicked people, and to pour out his wrath and vengeance on them; the day of his viſitation, not in love, but in anger.

℣. 2. A day of darkneſs, and of gloomineſs, a day of clouds, and of thick darkneſs, &c.] Alluding to the gloomy and thick darkneſs cauſed by the locuſts, which ſometimes come in prodigious numbers, like thick clouds, and darken the air; ſo the land of Egypt was darkened by them, Exod. x. 15. hiſtorians and travellers relate, as Bochart [f] has ſhewn, that theſe creatures will fly like a cloud, and darken the heavens at noon-day, cover the ſun, and hinder the rays of it from touching the earth; tho' all theſe phraſes may be expreſſive of great afflictions and calamities, which are often in ſcripture ſignified by darkneſs, as proſperity is by light; ſee Iſ. viii. 22. and ix. 1: as the morning ſpread upon the mountains; as the morning-light when it firſt appears, diffuſes itſelf in a moment throughout the earth, and is firſt ſeen on the tops of the mountains [g]; ſo theſe locuſts, and this calamity threatened, ſhould ſuddenly and at once come, and be ſpread over the whole land; and which could no more be reſiſted than the morning-light. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it in connexion with the next clauſe, as the morning ſpread upon the mountains, a people much and mighty; but the accents will not admit of it; tho' it may ſeem a little improper, that the ſame thing ſhould be as a dark day, and the morning-light; wherefore Cocceius underſtands the whole of the day of Chriſt, which was light to many nations, and darkneſs to the wicked Jews: a great people, and a ſtrong; numerous and mighty, many in number, mighty in ſtrength; ſo the locuſts are repreſented as a nation and people for might and multitude, ch. i. 6. an emblem of the Chaldeans and Babylonians, who were a large and powerful people: there hath not been ever the like, neither ſhall any more after it, even to the years of many generations; that is, in the land of Judea; otherwiſe there might have been the like before in other places, as in Egypt, and ſince in other countries. Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi account for it, thus; that it was never known before or ſince, that four kinds of locuſts came together; as for the plague of Egypt there was but one ſort of them, they ſay; but it is beſt to underſtand it of the like not having been in the ſame country: and ſuch a numerous and powerful army as that of the Chaldeans had not been in Judea, and made ſuch havock and deſolation as that did; nor would any hereafter for many generations, even until the Romans came and took away their place and nation.

℣. 3. A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth, &c.] This is not to be underſtood of the heat of the ſun, or of the great drought that went before and continued after the locuſts; but of them themſelves, which were like a conſuming fire; wherever they came, they devoured all green graſs, herbs and leaves of trees, as fire does ſtubble; they ſucked out the juice and moiſture of every thing they came at, and what they left behind ſhrivelled up and withered away, as if it had been ſcorched with a flame of fire: and ſo the Aſſyrians and Chaldeans, they were an emblem of, deſtroyed all they met with, by fire and ſword; cut up the corn and herbage for forage, and what they could not diſpenſe with they ſet fire to, and left it burning. Sanctius thinks this refers to fire, which the Chaldeans worſhipped as god, and carried before their armies as a ſacred and military ſign; but this ſeems not likely: the land is as the garden of Eden before them; abounding with fields and vineyards, ſet with fruitful trees, planted with all manner of pleaſant plants, and all kind of corn growing upon it, and even reſembling a paradiſe: and behind them a deſolate wilderneſs; all green graſs eaten up, the corn of the field devoured, the vines and olives deſtroyed, the leaves and fruit of them quite gone, and the trees themſelves barked; ſo that there was juſt the ſame difference between this country before the calamities deſcribed came upon it, and what it was after, as between the garden of Eden, or a paradiſe, and the moſt deſolate wilderneſs; ſuch ravages were made by the locuſts, and by thoſe they reſembled: yea, and nothing ſhall eſcape them; no herb, plant or tree could eſcape the locuſts; nor any city, town or village, nor ſcarce any particular perſon could eſcape the Chaldean army; but was either killed with the ſword, or carried captive, or brought into ſubjection. The Targum interprets it, of no deliverance to the ungodly.

℣. 4. The appearance of them is as the appearance of horſes, &c.] In their running, as Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it; they came with as much ſwiftneſs and eagerneſs, with as much fierceneſs and courage, as horſes ruſh into the battel. Bochart [h] has ſhewn from various writers, that the head of a locuſt is in ſhape like that of a horſe; and Theodoret on the text obſerves, that whoever thoroughly examines the head of a locuſt, will eaſily perceive that it is very like the head of a horſe; ſee Rev. ix. 7. The Chaldeans are often repreſented as ſtrong and mighty, fierce and furious, and riding on horſes exceeding ſwift, Jer. iv. 13. and v. 15. Hab. i. 6, 7, 8: and as horſemen, ſo ſhall they run; with great agility and ſwiftneſs. The particle as is obſerved by ſome, againſt thoſe interpreters that apply this wholly to the enemies of the Jews, and not the locuſts; and it ſeems indeed beſt to favour them; but Theodoret obſerves, that the as here may be taken, not as a note of ſimilitude, but as uſed for the increaſe and vehemency of the expreſſion.

℣. 5. Like the noiſe of chariots on the tops of the mountains ſhall they leap, &c.] The motion of the locuſts is leaping from place to place; for which the locuſts have legs peculiarly made, their hindermoſt being the longeſt: wherefore Pliny [i] obſerves, that inſects which have their hindermoſt legs long, leap as locuſts; to which agrees the ſcripture-deſcription of them: which have legs above their feet to leap withal upon the earth, even thoſe of them ye may eat, the locuſt after his kind, Lev. xi. 21, 22. which words, as Dr. Shaw [k] obſerves, may bear this conſtruction; which have knees upon, or above their hinder legs to leap withal upon the earth; and he obſerves, that the הארבה locuſt has the two hindermoſt of its legs or feet much ſtronger, larger and longer than any of the foremoſt; in them the knee, or the articulation of the leg and thigh, is diſtinguiſhed by a remarkable bending or curvature, whereby it is able, whenever prepared to jump, to ſpring and raiſe itſelf with great force and activity; and this fitly reſembles the jumping of chariots on mountains and hills, which are uneven, and uſually have ſtones lie ſcattered about, which, with the chains and irons about chariots, cauſe a great rattling; and the noiſe of locuſts is compared to the noiſe of theſe, which is repreſented as very great; ſome ſay it is to be heard ſix miles off, as Remigius on the place; and Pliny ſays [l], they make ſuch a noiſe with their wings when they fly, that they are thought to be other winged fowls; ſee Rev. ix. 9. Chariots were made uſe of in war, and the Chaldeans are ſaid to have chariots which ſhould come like a whirlwind, Jer.

iv. 13: like the noiſe of a flame of fire that devoureth the ſtubble; as they are before compared to fire, and a flame of fire that devoured all things as eaſily as the fire devours ſtubble, ſo here to the crackling noiſe of it; ſee Eccl. vii. 6: as a ſtrong people ſet in battle array; that is, as the noiſe of a mighty army prepared for battel, juſt going to make the onſet, when they lift up their voices aloud, and give a terrible ſhout; for this clauſe, as the other two, refer to the noiſe made by the locuſts in their march; an emblem of the terribleneſs of the Chaldeans in theirs, who were heard before they were ſeen.

℣. 6. Before their face the people ſhall be much pained, &c.] Or, at their preſence; at the ſight of them they ſhall be in pain, as a woman in travail; into ſuch diſtreſs an army of locuſts would throw them, ſince they might juſtly fear all the fruits of the earth would be devoured by them, and they ſhould have nothing left to live upon; and a like conſternation and pain the army of the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans upon ſight filled them with, as they expected nothing but ruin and deſtruction from them: all faces ſhall gather blackneſs; like that of a pot, as the word [m] ſignifies; or ſuch as appears in perſons dying, or in fits and ſwoons; and this here, thro' fear and hunger; ſee Neh. ii. 10. Lam. iv. 8. and v. 10.

℣. 7. They ſhall run like mighty men, &c.] Like men of war, in an hoſtile way, as ſoldiers run upon their enemy with undaunted courage and bravery. Bochart from Piſidas deſcribes the locuſt's manner of fighting, who ſays, they ſtrike not ſtanding, but running: they ſhall climb the wall like men of war; ſcale the walls of cities as beſiegers do; walls and bulwarks can't keep them out; all places are acceſſible to them, walled cities, towns, yea even houſes, Exod. x. 6: and they ſhall march every one on his ways; in his proper path, following one another, and keeping juſt diſtance: and they ſhall not break their ranks; or pervert their ways, as the word ſignifies in the Arabic language, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech obſerve; that is, decline not from their paths, as the Septuagint verſion; proceed in an orderly way, keep rank and file; ſo they are ſaid to go forth in bands, Prov. xxx. 27. and to encamp, Neh. iii. 17. Jerom on the text relates what he ſaw with his own eyes: "this we lately ſaw (ſays he) in this "province (Paleſtine); for when ſwarms of lo"cuſts came, and filled the air between heaven "and earth, they flew in ſuch order, by the diſ"poſition and command of God, that they kept "their place like checquered ſquares in a pave"ment fixed by the hands of artificers; ſo as not "to decline a point, nor even I may ſay a nail's "breadth;" they keep as exact order, as if military diſcipline was known and obſerved by them. Some render it, they ſhall not aſk their way [n]; being unconcerned about it, moving on in a direct line ſecurely.

℣. 8. Neither ſhall one thruſt another, &c.] Preſs upon another, thruſt him out of his place, or puſh him forward, or any ways ſtraiten and diſtreſs him, or in the leaſt hinder him in his progreſs: they ſhall walk every one in his path; or high way [o]; every one ſhould have his path, and keep in it, and it ſhould be as roomy to him as if he had a high-way to walk in by himſelf, and in which he could not err: and when they ſhall fall upon the ſword; on which they would pitch without any fear or dread of it: they ſhall not be wounded; or cut to pieces [p] by it; it not being eaſy for the ſword to pierce and cut them, thro' the ſmoothneſs and ſmallneſs of their bodies; ſee Rev. ix. 9. and beſides, their numbers being ſo great, the loſs of a few by the uſe of a ſword, or a dart, or any ſuch miſſive weapon, as the word [q] ſignifies, would be of little conſequence, and avail very little to the utter rout, or cutting of them in pieces. Kimchi obſerves, that the word ſignifies haters of gain; and to this ſenſe Jarchi explains it; and ſo the Targum, "they go to the place whither they are "ſent, they ſlay, and receive not mammon;" they are not as other enemies to be appeaſed by money, as Kimchi interprets it. The Targum is, they are not to be bribed, as ſoldiers ſometimes may be, and ſo depart; ſee Iſ. xiii. 17. and to this ſenſe are other verſions [r].

℣. 9. They ſhall run to and fro in the city, &c.] Leap about from place to place, as locuſts do; ſee Iſ. xxxiii. 4. and as the Chaldeans did when they became maſters of the city of Jeruſalem; they ran about from place to place to ſeize upon their ſpoil and plunder: they ſhall run upon the wall; which before they climbed, now they ſhall run upon, and go from tower to tower, as the Chaldeans did, and broke down the walls and fortifications: they ſhall climb up upon the houſes, and enter in at the windows like a thief; ſo the locuſts entered into the houſes of the Egyptians, Exod. x. 6. and Pliny ſays [s], they will eat thro' every thing, and even the doors of houſes. Theodoret on the place obſerves, that not only this may be done by enemies, what is here ſaid, "but even we have often ſeen "it done by locuſts; for not only flying, but even "creeping up the walls, they enter into houſes at "the windows."

℣. 10. The earth ſhall quake before them, &c.] The inhabitants of it, becauſe of the deſolating judgments they bring with them, and thoſe enemies that are ſignified by them: the heavens ſhall tremble; being obſcured by them: the ſun and moon ſhall be dark; the locuſts ſometimes come in ſuch large numbers as to intercept the rays of the ſun. Pliny [t] ſays, they ſometimes darken it; and tho' ſome thought they did not fly in the night, becauſe of the cold; this he obſerves is owing to their ignorance, not conſidering that they paſs over wide ſeas to diſtant countries; and this will account for it, how the moon alſo may be darkened by them, and the ſtars, as follows: and the ſtars ſhall withdraw their ſhining; tho' all this may be underſtood in a figurative ſenſe of the great conſternation that all ſorts of perſons ſhould be in at ſuch calamities coming upon the land, either by locuſts, or by enemies; as the king, queen, nobles, and the common people of the land, ſignified by ſun, moon and ſtars, heaven and earth.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſhall utter his voice before his army, &c.] Either the army of the locuſts, whom Pliny [u] calls peſtis deorum, the plague of the gods; gods; and the Arabians frequently ſtile them, the army of God. It is a tradition of theirs, that locuſts fell into the hands of Mahomet, with this inſcription on their backs and wings, “we are the “army of the moſt high God;” and becauſe they were, for that reaſon Mahomet made a law that none ſhould kill them; ſee the note on Rev. ix. 3. Theſe creatures are certainly at his beck and command; he can command the locuſt to devour the land, 2 Chron. vii. 13. which may be meant by his uttering his voice here; tho' Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it, of the Lord's giving notice of this judgment by his prophets before it came: or this may deſign the army of the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans, of which the locuſts were an emblem, and which were of the Lord's muſtering together, and was at his command; and who is here repreſented as a general at the head of his army, making a ſpeech to them to animate and encourage them to the battel, and to give them the word of command when to begin the onſet: for his camp is very great; or numerous, as both the locuſts and Chaldeans were: for he is ſtrong that executeth his word; or ſtrong is it; namely the camp and army of the locuſts; which, tho' feeble in themſelves, ſeparately conſidered; yet being in ſuch large bodies, and the Lord at the head of them, and ſtrengthened by him, were able to fulfil his word; which he can make the leaſt and meaneſt of his creatures do: or the Aſſyrian or Chaldean army, which was both numerous and mighty; which the Targum may refer unto, paraphraſing the words, “for ſtrong are the “executors of his word:” for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible, and who can abide it? the day appointed by the Lord to take vengeance on the Jews for ſin; and this being the day of his wrath, is very dreadful and intolerable; ſo any ſeaſon may be called in which God remarkably pours down his wrath on men for their ſins; ſee Rev. vi. 17. Such was the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, both by the Chaldeans and Romans.

℣. 12. Therefore alſo now, ſaith the Lord, &c.] Before this terrible and intolerable day, which is near at hand, comes; before theſe judgments and calamities threatened take place, tho' juſt at hand; ſerious repentance is never too late, now is the accepted time; ſee Luke xix. 42: turn ye even to me with all your heart; againſt whom they had ſinned, and who had prepared his army againſt them, and was at the head of it, juſt ready to give the orders, and play his artillery upon them; and yet ſuggeſts, that even now, that if they turned to the Lord by true repentance, not feignedly and hypocritically, but cordially and ſincerely, with true hearts, and with their whole hearts, he was ready to receive and forgive them. The Targum is, “turn ye to my worſhip with all your heart:” and with faſting, and with weeping, and with mourning; external ſigns of inward grief and ſorrow, teſtifying their hearty return to the Lord; which, tho' without the heart, ſignify nothing, yet ſhould be ſhewn where hearty repentance is, for the honour and glory of God.

℣. 13. And rent your heart, and not your garments, &c.] Which latter uſed to be done in times of diſtreſs, either private or public, and as a token of grief and ſorrow, Gen. xxxvii. 34. Eſth. iv. 1. nor was it criminal or unlawful, the apoſtles themſelves uſed it, Acts xiv. 14. nor is it abſolutely forbidden here, only comparatively, that they ſhould rend their hearts rather than their garments; or not their garments only, but their hearts alſo; in like ſenſe as the words in Hoſ. vi. 6. are to be taken: as rending garments was only an external token of ſorrow, and might be done hypocritically, where no true repentance was, the Lord calls for that, rather than the other; and that they would ſhew contrition of heart and brokenneſs of ſpirit, under a ſenſe of ſin, and in the view of pardoning grace and mercy; which is here held forth, to influence godly ſorrow and evangelical repentance; the acts of which flowing from faith in Chriſt, are much more acceptable to the Lord than any outward expreſſions of grief; ſee Pſ. li. 17. Iſ. lvii. 15. and lxvi. 2. The Targum is, “remove the wickedneſs of your heart, but not “with the rending of your garments;” the rending of the garment goes to the heart, ſome ſay to the navel[w]: and turn unto the Lord your God; conſider him not as an abſolute God, and as an angry one, wrathful and inexorable; but as your covenant-God and Father, as your God in Chriſt; ready to receive backſliding ſinners, and prodigal ſons; yea, all ſinners ſenſible of ſin, that flee to him for mercy thro' Chriſt: for he is gracious and merciful; he is the God of all grace, and has laid up a fulneſs of it in Chriſt; and he gives it freely to them that aſk it of him, without upbraiding them with their ſins; he is rich and plenteous in mercy, and ready to forgive; he delights in ſhewing mercy, and in them that hope in it; and this is no ſmall encouragement to turn to the Lord, and ſeek mercy of him: and beſides he is ſlow to anger; he is not haſty to ſtir it up, and ſhew it; he bears with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath; and his long-ſuffering to his own people iſſues in their ſalvation; he waits to be gracious to them; and tho' he may ſeem to be angry, he does not ſtir up all his wrath their ſins deſerve, nor does he retain anger for ever: and of great kindneſs; both in a providential way, and in a way of ſpecial grace thro' Chriſt; whom he has provided as a Saviour, and ſent him into the world as ſuch, and ſaves ſinners by his obedience, ſufferings and death: theſe characters of God are taken out of Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. and are admirably adapted to engage and encourage ſenſible ſouls to turn to the Lord by acts of faith in him, and repentance towards him; ſee Iſ. lv. 7. and 'tis added, and repenteth him of the evil; which the ſins of men deſerve, and he has threatened on account of them; not that he ever changes the counſels of his will, but alters the courſe of his providence, and the manner of his conduct towards men, according to his unalterable will: repentance otherwiſe does not properly belong to God, Numb. xxiii. 19. but is aſcribed to him after the manner of men; and is uſed to expreſs his compaſſion to men; how ready he is to receive and forgive returning ſinners, and not execute the threatened and deſerved evil, and to beſtow all needful good; ſee Jonah iii. 10. and iv. 2. The Targum is, “and he “recalls his word from bringing on the evil.”

℣. 14. Who knoweth if he will return and repent, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of man, and of his returning and repentance; either thus, whoſoever he be that knows the ways of repentance, he will return, and God will repent of this evil; which ſenſe is mentioned by Kimchi and Ben Melech: or he that knoweth that iniquity is on him will return and repent; ſo Jarchi, with which agrees the Targum, “he that knows that ſins are in him will “ return from them, and he ſhall obtain mercy; “ and whoever repents, his ſins ſhall be forgiven “ him;” but rather they are to be underſtood of God, as ſome in Kimchi, and paraphraſe it, who knows. perhaps God may return; and this is the ſenſe of Aben Ezra, and ſeems to be the righteſt; and to be interpreted, either as carrying ſome doubt in it; not as if it was queſtionable whether God will give pardon to repenting ſinners, but whether he will at once remove the preſent affliction and chaſtiſement; which may be thus expreſſed to check the preſumption, and awaken the ſecurity of the people, and rouſe them from their ſluggiſhneſs and ſtupidity: or rather as expreſſive of hope, that God would return and change the diſpenſation of his providence, and repent of the evil he had threatened, or brought upon them; which might be juſtly grounded upon the character before given of him, and that from the revelation of himſelf, and the proclamation of his own perfections; ſee Jonah iii. 9: and leave a bleſſing behind him; meaning not behind God himſelf, as if he was departed, or about to depart, for which there was no great concern, provided he left a temporal bleſſing with them; but behind the army of the locuſt, after that had made all the devaſtation it did: or rather, cauſe to leave; ſtop the locuſt in its progreſs, and not ſuffer it to make a total deſolation, but cauſe it to leave ſome of the fruits of the earth behind it. So Aben Ezra gives the ſenſe of the words, “ perhaps God will return, and cauſe “ the locuſt to leave a bleſſing;” and to the ſame purpoſe Jarchi, of which they make a meat-offering, and a drink-offering, as follows: even a meat-offering, and a drink-offering to the Lord your God; at leaſt leave ſo much of the wheat, that a meat-offering might be made of it; and ſo many of the vines, as that ſo much wine might be produced by them, as would furniſh out a drink-offering to be offered to the Lord, agreeable to the laws given about theſe; for which the greateſt concern is expreſſed, this being cut off and withheld from the houſe of the Lord, by reaſon of the preſent ſcarcity, ch. i. 9, 13. which ſhows a truly pious and religious mind, having more at heart the worſhip of God, than themſelves and families.

℣. 15. Blow the trumpet in Zion, &c.] For the calling of the people together to religious duties, which was one uſe of the ſilver trumpets made for and blown by the prieſts, Numb. x. 2, 3, 8, 10: ſanctify a faſt; call a ſolemn aſſembly; ſee the note on ch. i. 14.

℣. 16. Gather the people, &c.] The common people, all the inhabitants of the land, ch. i. 14. ſummon them to meet together in the temple, in order to humble themſelves before God for their ſins, and implore his mercy, and ſeek his face to remove his judgments, or avert them: ſanctify the congregation; ſee that they are ſanctified and prepared for a faſt as the law directs in ſuch caſes; that they may be clean and free from all ceremonial impurities; that their bodies and cloaths be waſhed, and that they abſtain from their wives, and from all lawful pleaſures, as well as ſinful ones: aſſemble the elders; both in age and authority; that they by their preſence and example might influence others to attend ſuch a ſervice: gather the children, and thoſe that ſuck the breaſts; who were involved in the common calamity and diſtreſs, were obliged to faſting, and whoſe cries might affect their parents, and engage them the more to humiliation and repentance for their ſins, which brought ſuch miſeries, not only upon themſelves, but upon their tender infants; and they might think their cries would move the pity and compaſſion of God; all which is ſuggeſted in the note of Kimchi: let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her cloſet; where they are adorning themſelves, and preparing for an interview with each other; or where they are enjoying each others embraces, and the pleaſures of the matrimonial ſtate. The ſenſe is, let them put off their nuptial robes, and deny themſelves their lawful pleaſures, and betake themſelves to faſting, mourning and prayer; ſee 1 Cor. vii. 5. This refers to a cuſtom among the Jews at the time of eſpouſals, when the bridegroom and bride were introduced into the nuptial-chamber, where the marriage was completed; and according to the Jewiſh writers, it was not finiſhed before: the bleſſing of the bridegroom and bride did not complete the marriage, but the bringing of them into the chamber did; and then they were ſaid to be married, tho' as yet they had not co-habited, and then and not before a man might enjoy his wife [x]: and the marriage-chamber was nothing elſe but a linen cloth or garment ſpread upon four poles over the head of the bridegroom and bride; this they called חופה [y]; the word is here rendered a cloſet, and the ſame with the chamber; and their leaving and coming out of this, ſignifies their abſtaining from the lawful enjoyment of each other, which now they had a right unto.

℣. 17. Let the prieſts the miniſters of the Lord weep between the porch and the altar, &c.] Not the altar of incenſe, which ſtood in the holy place; but the altar of burnt-offering, where the prieſts uſed to ſtand and do ſervice; but now having nothing to do of that kind, they are called upon to weep and pray between that and the porch of the temple; where they might be ſeen and heard by the people in the outward court, which the porch led into: this is thought by ſome to be the ſame ſituation with that between the temple and the altar, Matt. xxiii. 35: and let them ſay, ſpare thy people O Lord; they are directed to plead, not in a way of juſtice, but mercy; that tho' it might be juſt with God to deſtroy theſe people, who were called by his name; yet it is intreated that he would not, but in mercy ſpare them, and not cut them off in his ſore diſpleaſure, which the preſent judgment threatened them with: there ſeems to be an argument for mercy ſuggeſted, in the relation theſe people ſtood in to God; they are thy people, whom thou haſt choſen, and who are called by thy name; tho' this was alſo an aggravation of their ſin; and the ſame may be obſerved in what follows: and give not thine heritage to reproach; the people whom he had choſen for his inheritance, and the land of Canaan he had given to them for an inheritance; both which would be given to reproach, if ſuch a famine ſhould enſue, that they muſt be obliged to go into other countries for food: that the heathen ſhould rule over them; as they would, ſhould they be forced to leave their own country, and ſettle in theirs for the ſake of food: or to be a proverb, or bye-word among the heathen, as Jarchi. This clauſe Jerom thinks opens the myſtery, and explains who are meant by the mighty nation under the name of locuſts, the enemies mies of the Jews; tho' this does not neceſſarily follow, take the words in either ſenſe, as explained: it ſeems indeed very likely, that tho' the locuſts may be underſtood literally, yet may be conſidered as an emblem of the Aſſyrian or Chaldean army; as we have all along obſerved; and as the ſame ancient writer obſerves, when we read of the locuſts, we ſhould think of the Chaldeans, in which thought we may be confirmed by this clauſe: wherefore ſhould they ſay among the people, where is their God? they boaſt of as their creator and benefactor, their protector and defender, that gave them a land flowing with milk and honey, and abounding with all bleſſings? what is become of that? and where is he now? which the Gentiles would ſay in a reproaching blaſpheming way, ſhould they be reduced to famine by the locuſts, or fall into the hands of their enemies; than which kind of reproach and blaſphemy there is nothing more cutting to religious minds; ſee Pſ. xlii. 10. Mic. vii. 10. and this, as well as the former, is uſed as an argument with God for mercy. The Targum is, "where are they that are redeemed by "the word of your God?"

℣. 18. Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, &c.] Or zealous for it; for the honour of it, and the good of its inhabitants, and for the glory of his own name, it being the chief place in the world for his worſhip and ſervice; and his indignation will be moved againſt thoſe who have brought deſolation on it: and pity his people; as a father his children, who had ſuffered much, and had been reduced to great diſtreſs by the locuſts, or by their enemies: this the prophet foretels would be done upon their repentance, faſting, prayers and tears; or, as ſome think, this is a narrative of what had been done, and the prophet was a witneſs of; that the people meeting together with their princes and prieſts, and humbling themſelves before the Lord, and crying to him, he expreſſed a zeal and compaſſion for them, and delivered them out of their troubles; for tho' their humiliation is not expreſſed, it may be underſtood and ſuppoſed, as doubtleſs it was fact.

℣. 19. Yea, the Lord will anſwer and ſay, unto his people, &c.] By his prophets, as Kimchi: or, the Lord anſwered and ſaid [a]; while they were praying and weeping, or as ſoon as they cried unto him; or however praying to him, they might aſſure themſelves that he heard them, and would anſwer them both by words and deeds: behold, I will ſend you corn, and wine, and oil; that is, cauſe the earth to bring forth corn, as wheat and barley, and the vines and olive-trees to bring forth grapes and olives, from which wine and oil might be made: this is, according to ſome interpreters, to be underſtood of an abundance of ſpiritual bleſſings: and ye ſhall be ſatisfied therewith; or, with it; with each and every of the above things, corn, wine and oil; they ſhould not only have them, but have enough of them, even to ſatiety: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen; for want of food, and as if forſaken of God. The Targum is, "and I will not give you any more "the reproaches of famine among the people;" ſee ℣. 17.

℣. 20. But I will remove far off from you the northern army, &c.] The army of the locuſts, which came from the northern corner, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; and is the firſt ſenſe Jarchi makes mention of; tho' he ſays their Rabbins [b] interpret it of the evil imagination hid in the heart of men; and the two ſeas after-mentioned, of the two temples, firſt and ſecond, deſtroyed by it; ſo Kimchi ſays, they explain this verſe of the days of the Meſſiah, and obſerves the ſame ſenſe they give; but Jarchi mentions another, according to which a people coming from the north are deſigned, even the kings of Aſſyria; and with this agrees the Targum, which paraphraſes it, "and "the people which come from the north I will "remove far off from you;" and indeed locuſts don't uſually come from the north, but from the ſouth, or from the eaſt; it was an eaſt-wind that brought the locuſts into Egypt, Exod. x. 13. tho' the word northern may be uſed of the locuſts in the emblem, becauſe the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans came from the north to Judea: and will drive him into a land barren and deſolate; where there are no green graſs, herbs, plants and trees to live upon, and ſo muſt ſtarve and die: with his face towards the eaſt-ſea; the front of this northern army was towards the eaſt-ſea, into which it was drove and fell; that is, the ſea of Cinnereth, or Genezareth, the ſame with the lake of Tiberias, often mentioned in the New Teſtament; or the ſalt-ſea, the ſame with the lake Aſphaltites, or dead-ſea, which was where Sodom and Gomorrah formerly ſtood, as is uſually ſaid; and both theſe were to the eaſt of the land of Iſrael, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve; and ſo either of them might be called the eaſtern-ſea: and his hinder part towards the utmoſt ſea; the rear of this army was towards the utmoſt ſea, or hinder ſea, as it is called in Zech. xiv. 8. the weſtern-ſea, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it, the ſame with the Mediterranean-ſea, which lay to the weſt of the land of Iſrael; ſo the Egyptian locuſts were caſt into the Red-ſea, Exod. x. 19. and Pliny [c] obſerves, that they are ſometimes taken away with a wind, and fall into ſeas and lakes, and adds, perhaps this comes by chance; but what is here related came not by chance, but by the will and providence of God: and his ſtink ſhall come up, and his ill ſavour ſhall come up; that is, the ſtink and ill ſavour of the locuſts ſhall come up out of the ſeas and lakes into which they fell, and where they died and putrefied; or being caſt up from thence upon the ſhores, gave a moſt noiſome ſtench: ſo Jerom on the place ſays, "in "our times we have ſeen ſwarms of locuſts cover "the land of Judea, which upon the wind riſing "have been driven into the firſt and laſt ſeas; "that is, into the dead and Mediterranean-ſeas; "and when the ſhores of both ſeas have been "filled with heaps of dead locuſts, which the "waters have thrown up, their rottenneſs and "ſtench have been ſo very noxious as to corrupt "the air, and produce a peſtilence among men "and beaſts:" or this may be underſtood of the fall and ruin of the enemies of the Jews, ſignified by theſe locuſts; and ſome apply it to Sennacherib's army ſmote by the angel, when there fell in one night an hundred and fourſcore and five thouſand of them in the land of Iſrael, and lay unburied, 2 Kings xix. 35. Theodoret interprets the ſeas of armies; the firſt ſea of the army of the Babylonians, by which Niniveh the royal ſeat of the Aſſyrians was deſtroyed; and the other ſea of the army of the Perſians, who, under Cyrus, took Babylon, the metropolis of the Chaldean empire: becauſe cauſe he hath done great things; evil things, as the Targum; either the locuſt, which had done much miſchief to the fruits of the earth; or the enemy, ſignified by it, who had behaved proudly, and done much hurt to the inhabitants of Judea: or, tho' he hath done great things [d], as ſome render it, yet all this ſhall come to him. Some interpret it of God, for he (God) hath done, or will do great things [e]; in the removing of the locuſts, or in the deſtruction of thoſe enemies they repreſented, as is expreſsly ſaid of him in the following verſe.

℣. 21. Fear not, O land, &c.] O land of Iſrael, as the Targum, and the inhabitants of it; neither of the locuſts, who had ſo terrified them, and had done ſo much miſchief, and threatened more; nor of their enemies, the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans, and their powerful armies, or any other; but on the contrary, be glad, and rejoice; at the removal of the locuſts, and at the deſtruction of their enemies: for the Lord will do great things; good things, in oppoſition to the evil things done by the locuſts, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve; or by the deſtroying army of the king of Aſſyria, by delivering the Jews out of the Babyloniſh captivity; and in the times of the Maccabees, and eſpecially in the times of Chriſt, which are quickly propheſied of in this chapter; and which prophecies ſome interpreters begin here, it not being unuſual for the prophets to paſs directly from things temporal to things ſpiritual, and eſpecially to the great deliverance and ſalvation by Chriſt, and alſo by temporal bleſſings to deſign ſpiritual ones.

℣. 22. Be not afraid ye beaſts of the field, &c.] Which before groaned, and were perplexed for want of paſture, and cried becauſe of the drought, ch. i. 18, 20. perhaps the Gentiles may be here deſigned in the myſtic and ſpiritual ſenſe, in diſtinction from the Jews, the children of Zion, in the next verſe: for the paſtures of the wilderneſs do ſpring; graſs in abundance ſprings up in them, and covers them, ſo that there was plenty of food for the beaſts of the field: for the tree beareth her fruit; brings forth and bears fruit ſuitable to it, agreeable to its nature: the fig-tree and the vine do yield their ſtrength; ſend forth their branches, put forth their buds, their leaves and fruit. This and the preceding clauſe cannot be underſtood as a reaſon why the beaſts' of the field ſhould not be afraid, for they relate not to them, but to men; and may ſerve to confirm the myſtic ſenſe of the words, as they may refer to the great fruitfulneſs produced in the wilderneſs of the Gentile world, thro' the preaching of the goſpel in the times of the Meſſiah; which are more clearly pointed at in the following verſe, and which were introduced with great outward peace and plenty; and the Jews [f] by the tree bearing her fruit in the preceding clauſe, underſtand barren trees bearing fruit.

℣. 23. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, &c.] The people of the Jews, and eſpecially the ſpiritual and believing part of them; ſuch as were born again, that were born of Zion, and born in Zion, and brought up by her, and in her; the children of that Zion or Jeruſalem that is the mother of us all; and who were looking for the Meſſiah, and to whom it would be good news and glad tidings to hear of his coming, Zech. ix. 9: and rejoice in the Lord your God; not in any creature or creature-enjoyment, but in the Lord. The Targum is, "in the word of the Lord your God;" in Chriſt the eſſential word; ſee Philip. iii. 3. and iv. 4. tho' rather Jehovah the Father, the giver and ſender of Chriſt, is here meant, becauſe of what follows; and who is to be rejoiced in by his people, not as an abſolute God, but as in Chriſt, and as their covenant-God and Father in him; who has choſen them for himſelf, and is their portion and inheritance; which are reaſons ſufficient why they ſhould rejoice in him, and others follow: for he hath given you the former rain moderately; or rather, for he hath given you the teacher of righteouſneſs [g]; to which agrees the Targum, "for he hath returned to you your teacher in righteouſneſs;" and ſo Jarchi paraphraſes the words, and interprets them of the prophets in general, "your prophets that teach you to return unto me, that I may juſtify you;" and R. Japhet ſays, that מורה ſignifies a prophet that ſhould teach them in the way of righteouſneſs; not Iſaiah, as Grotius; but the king Meſſiah, as Abarbinel interprets it; who is the teacher ſent from God, and given by him, as his preſence with him, and the miracles done by him, ſufficiently prove, John iii. 2. for which he was abundantly qualified, being the omniſcient God, and the Son of God that lay in the boſom of his Father; is the wiſdom of God, as Mediator; had the ſpirit of wiſdom on him, and the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge hid in him; and who is able to make his teachings effectual, and to qualify others for ſuch work. This office he performed perſonally on earth, both in a doctrinal way, and by way of example; and now executes it by his Spirit, and by his miniſters: and a teacher of righteouſneſs he may be truly ſaid to be; ſince he not only taught the goſpel, the word of righteouſneſs in general; but in particular directed men to ſeek in the firſt place the righteouſneſs of God, which is no other than his own; and pronounced thoſe happy that hungred after it: he declared he came to fulfil all righteouſneſs, even the law for righteouſneſs; and taught men to believe in him for it, and to live righteouſly and godly. Aben Ezra obſerves, that the phraſe is the ſame with the ſun of righteouſneſs, Mal. iv. 2. which is ſaid of Chriſt the author of righteouſneſs, who is our righteouſneſs, made ſo by imputation, the Lord our righteouſneſs: or, as here, a teacher unto, or for righteouſneſs [h]; all which is matter of joy and gladneſs; ſee Iſ. lxi. 10: and he will cauſe to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the firſt month; alluding to the two ſeaſons of the year in which rain was given to the Jews; the former rain fell in Marcheſvan, which anſwers to our September and October, part of each, at their ſeed-time; and the latter in Niſan, the firſt month of their eccleſiaſtical year, and anſwers to part of March and April, and fell ſome time before their harveſt; and theſe former and latter rains now fall about the ſame time. So Dr. Shaw [i] obſerves, that "the firſt rains in theſe countries (Syria, Phœnicia, and the Holy Land) uſually fall about the beginning of November; the latter ſometimes in the middle,

“dle, ſometimes toward the end of April:” and elſewhere he ſays[k], “in Barbary, the firſt rains “fall ſome years in September, in others a month “later; the latter rains uſually fall in the middle “of April:”—and the ſame traveller relates[l], that “upon the coaſt (of Egypt) from Alexandria, all “along to Damiata and Tineh, they have their “former and latter rains as in Barbary and the “Holy Land.” This rain ſpiritually deſigns the doctrine of the goſpel, which is ſometimes compared to rain, Deut. xxxii. 2. Iſ. lv. 10, 11. becauſe as rain it comes from God, deſcends from heaven, is a divine gift, both as to the miniſtry and experience of it; it tarries not for man, neither for his deſires nor deſerts; falls according to divine direction, ſometimes here, and ſometimes there; is a great bleſſing, and brings many with it, revives, refreſhes, and makes fruitful. Jerom interprets theſe two rains of the firſt ſuſception of doctrine, and of a more perfect knowledge of it; as alſo of the two Teſtaments, the Old and New: but it may be better interpreted of the preaching of the goſpel by John the Baptiſt, and by Chriſt; or by Chriſt, and then by his apoſtles; or of the firſt and ſecond miniſtration of the apoſtles, firſt to the Jews, then to the Gentiles; or of the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, for the ſame word is uſed here as in the former clauſe, and of his ſpiritual coming in the latter day, both which are compared to rain, Hoſ. vi. 3. Pſ. lxxii. 6.

℣. 24. And the floors ſhall be full of wheat, &c.] The churches of Chriſt, which will now be in Judea, and in the Gentile world, which are his floors, Matt. iii. 12. and which will be ſet up every where thro' the preaching of the goſpel, the deſcent of the former and latter rain; theſe will be full of precious ſouls gathered in, compared to wheat, and of the choice and excellent doctrines of the goſpel, and of all ſpiritual proviſions, Matt. xiii. 30. Jer. xxiii. 28: and the fats ſhall overflow with wine and oil; with the wine of goſpel-doctrine, and the oil of true grace; there ſhall be a flow, an overflow, a redundancy of theſe, both in the miniſters of the word and private chriſtians, in whom the grace of God ſhall abound, and ſuper-abound; ſee Rom. v. 20. 1 Tim. i. 14.

℣. 25. And I will reſtore to you the years that the locuſt hath eaten, &c.] Or I will recompenſe to you the years[m]; give you fruitful ones, as a full compenſation for thoſe in which the locuſt eat up the fruits of the earth for ſome years running: the canker-worm, and the catterpiller, and the palmer-worm; of which ſee ch. i. 4: my great army which I ſent among you; as in ℣. 11. the Targum of the whole is, “and I will recompenſe unto you good “years, in the room of the years in which the “people, nations, and tongues, the governors “and kingdoms of vengeance ſpoiled you, my “great army which I ſent among you;” and Kimchi obſerves, that the ſenſe of the Targumiſt is, that this verſe is a prophecy of the days of the Meſſiah; as no doubt it is, in which the Lord has done for his people, as Moſes prayed he would, make them glad according to the days wherein he afflicted them, and the years wherein they had ſeen evil, Pſ. xc. 15. the times of the Meſſiah, in which ſo many good things come to the people of God, are a ſufficient recompence for what they endured in times paſt. Of the Mahometan notion of locuſts being the army of God, ſee the note on ℣. 11. and on Rev. ix. 3.

℣. 26. And ye ſhall eat in plenty, &c.] Or in eating eat[n]; moſt ſurely eat, and in great abundance; which Hebraiſm not only denotes the certainty of a thing, but the increaſe and abundance of it; ſee Gen. xxii. 17. 1 Chron. iv. 10. there is plenty of ſpiritual proviſions held forth under the goſpel-diſpenſation: much in God, in his goodneſs, grace and love, truth and faithfulneſs; in his covenant, the bleſſings and promiſes of it: much in Chriſt, who is compared to many things eatable; is called the Lamb of God, the fatted calf, the hidden manna, the tree of life, and the bread of God; every thing in him, and that belongs to him, is food for faith; his fleſh is meat indeed, his blood is drink indeed; the fulneſs of grace in him; the righteouſneſs wrought out by him; the ſalvation he is the author of; upon all which the believer lives by faith: much in the goſpel, and the doctrines of it, compared to honey for ſweetneſs of taſte; to milk for its nouriſhing nature, eaſineſs of digeſtion, and the ſuitableneſs of it for babes; and to ſtrong meat fit for men: and there is great plenty alſo in the ordinances of the goſpel, particularly in the Lord's ſupper, the feaſt of fat things, where ſaints are invited to eat and drink abundantly; which eating is not a bare attendance on outward ordinances, or a ſuperficial taſte of the things in them, but a feeding upon them by faith, receiving and digeſting them. And be ſatisfied; eat to ſatiety; eat and be full, ſo as to be entirely contented, and deſire no other ſort of food; thus ſaints, as Napthali, are ſatisfied with the favour and love of God, having a delightful ſenſation of it, and a full perſuaſion of intereſt in it; with Chriſt as the bread of life, ſo as not to hunger after other; with his righteouſneſs, as not to ſeek any other; and with his ſalvation, being ſo ſuitable to them; and with the goodneſs and fatneſs of the Lord's houſe, his word and ordinances. And praiſe the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wonderouſly with you; acknowledge him to be the giver of all this ſpiritual food, and that they are unworthy of it; aſcribe it entirely to the grace of God, who has done wonders for them; in wonderfully ſetting them apart for himſelf in eternal election; in making ſuch a well-ordered covenant with them in Chriſt; in ſending him to be their Saviour and Redeemer; in calling them out of darkneſs into marvellous light; in beſtowing ſuch love upon them, as to call them and make them his children, and alſo heirs of him and eternal glory; ſee Pſ. xxii. 26. And my people ſhall never be aſhamed; becauſe they ſhall always have food to eat; ſhall never be diſappointed, when they rightly apply for it in proper places and times; and not be like the troops of Tema, and companies of Sheba, Job vi. 19, 20. they ſhall not be aſhamed of their faith and hope, and expectation of good things promiſed them; nor of the word and ordinances, and the profeſſion they have made of Chriſt in this world; nor ſhall they be aſhamed at his coming; but ſhall be placed at his right hand, and received into his kingdom, and ſhall be led by him to fountains of living water, and be ſatisfied with pleaſures for evermore.

℣. 27. And ye ſhall know that I am in the midſt of Iſrael, &c.] The preſence of God among his people ſhall be ſo manifeſt, the tokens of it ſo clear, that it ſhall be eaſily known, by the impreſſions of his love upon them; the teachings of his Spirit in them; the uſefulneſs of the word and ordinances to them; the ſpiritual and heavenly frame of ſoul they ſhall be favoured with, and the ſavourineſs of their converſation; this is the bleſſing Chriſt has promiſed to goſpel-miniſters and churches, Matt. xxviii. 20: and that I am the Lord your God, and none elſe; that he is their covenant-God and Father, and acknowledge none elſe: and my people ſhall never be aſhamed; which is repeated for the certainty of it; ſee the preceding verſe.

℣. 28. And it ſhall come to paſs afterward, &c.] After the teacher of righteouſneſs has been ſent, and a plentiful rain of the goſpel has been let down in the land of Judea, in the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt and his apoſtles, and ſuch a comfortable enjoyment of the bleſſings of grace in it, and the knowledge of God by it; and after the wonderful work of redemption wrought by Chriſt. R. Jeſhua in Aben Ezra and Jarchi, both ſay this prophecy refers to time to come; and Kimchi obſerves, that the phraſe is the ſame with, in the laſt days; and ſo the apoſtle Peter quotes it, Acts ii. 17. a phraſe, as the above writer obſerves, which always ſignifies the days of the Meſſiah, to which he applies theſe words; and ſo do other Jewiſh writers, both ancient and modern [o]; and there is no doubt with us chriſtians, that they belong to the times of Chriſt and his apoſtles, ſince they are by an inſpired writer ſaid to be fulfilled in thoſe times, Acts ii. 16, 17. here ſome begin a new chapter. That I will pour out my Spirit upon all fleſh; not on ſuch whoſe hearts are made tender as fleſh, according to Ezek. xxxvi. 26. as Jarchi; for the Spirit muſt be given firſt to make the heart ſuch; nor only upon men in the land of Iſrael, a place fit to propheſy in, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; but upon all men, as this phraſe frequently ſignifies; ſee Iſ. xl. 5. that is, all ſorts of men, Jews and Gentiles, men of all nations; and ſuch there were on the day of Pentecoſt, when the Spirit was poured down upon the apoſtles, and the grace of the Spirit was given to many of all nations; tho' that was only the beginning of the fulfilment of this prophecy, which quickly had a further accompliſhment in the Gentile world; and denotes the abundance of the gifts of the Spirit, both extraordinary and ordinary, and of his grace, and the bleſſings of it, beſtowed on them. And your ſons, and your daughters ſhall propheſy; as Agabus, Barnabas, Simeon, &c. and the four daughters of Philip the evangeliſt, Acts xi. 28. and xiii. 1. and xxi. 9, 10: your old men ſhall dream dreams, your young men ſhall ſee viſions; as Ananias, Peter, Paul, John, and others, ſome in their elder, ſome in their younger years, Acts ix. 10. and x. 17. and xvi. 9. and xxii. 17. and xxvi. 19. and xxvii. 23. tho' prophecy, dreams, and viſions, being the uſual ways of conveying knowledge, here ſignify, that the knowledge of men in goſpel-times ſhould be equal to, yea exceed whatever was communicated to men in the higheſt degree in former times: John the Baptiſt was greater than any of the prophets, and yet the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven was greater than he, Luke vii. 28.

℣. 29. And alſo upon the ſervants, and upon the handmaids in thoſe days, will I pour my Spirit.] Men-ſervants and maid-ſervants ſhould partake of the gifts and grace of the Spirit in great abundance; and many of them were effectually called by grace, thro' the miniſtry of the word; and ſome ſervants became miniſters of it; all which appears from 1 Cor. vii. 21, 22. 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2. Philem. ℣. 10, 11, 16. for that is not true what the Jews [p] ſay, the Shekinah or divine majeſty does not reſt but upon a wiſe man, and one mighty and rich; or prophecy, as Maimonides [q] has it.

℣. 30. And I will ſhew wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, &c.] This, and what follow, refer to the prodigies ſeen in the air, and done in the earth, a little before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem [r]; when in the air were ſeen comets and blazing-ſtars, particularly one in the form of a ſword hanging over Jeruſalem, and appearances of armies engaged in battel; and on the earth, a flame was ſeen in the temple, and a voice heard in it, ſaying, let us go hence; the doors of it opened of themſelves; an ideot went about crying, wo to the people, wo to the city, &c: blood and fire, and pillars of ſmoke; blood may deſign the great ſlaughter of men by the Roman army in the land of Judea, and by murders committed among themſelves in the city of Jeruſalem, which were very horrible, and of great numbers: fire, the burning of towns and cities; tho' Kimchi interprets it of lightnings in the heavens: and pillars of ſmoke, riſing up in ſtraitneſs and height like palm-trees, as the word [s] ſignifies, vaſt quantities of it ariſing from cities and towns burnt. Guſſetius [t] interprets this of the burning of the martyrs in the firſt ages of chriſtianity, and of their ſpiritual affections, which aſcended upwards to God, and were grateful to him; ſee Cant. iii. 6.

℣. 31. The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the moon into blood, &c.] Not by eclipſes, as Aben Ezra; but by the clouds of ſmoke ariſing from the burning of towns and cities, which would be ſo great as to obſcure the ſun, and thro' which the moon would look like blood: or all this may be underſtood in a figurative ſenſe of the change that ſhould be made in the eccleſiaſtic and civil ſtate of the Jewiſh nation, ſignified by the heavens and earth; and particularly that their king or kingdom ſhould be in a low, mean, and diſtreſſed condition, deſigned by the ſun; and the change of their prieſthood is ſignified by the moon: ſo Vitringa on Iſ. xxiv. 23. interprets the ſun here of king Agrippa, the laſt king of the Jews in obſcurity; and the moon of Ananias junior, the high-prieſt, ſlain by the zealots: before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come; not the fall of Gog and Magog, as Kimchi; not the day of the laſt judgment, but of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; not by the Chaldeans, but by the Romans; their laſt deſtruction, which was very great and terrible indeed, and in which there was a manifeſt appearance of the hand and power of God; ſee Mal. iv. 1. Maimonides [u] interprets it of the deſtruction of Sennacherib near Jeruſalem; but if that ſenſe is not acceptable, he propoſes that of the deſtruction of Gog and Magog, in the times of the Meſſiah.

℣. 32. And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord, ſhall be delivered, &c.]

Or ſaved, as in Acts ii. 21. from thoſe miſeries and calamities before deſcribed, from the inpending ruin and deſtruction of the city; and ſo it was, that thoſe that believed in Chriſt, that were in the city, had an intimation of it before-hand, and removed from thence to a place called Pella [w], and ſo eſcaped being involved in the common calamity: tho' this alſo may be underſtood of a ſpiritual deliverance and ſalvation by Chriſt, from ſin, ſatan, and the world, and from the ſecond death, and wrath to come, and out of the hands of every enemy; which ſuch ſhare in who call on the name of the Lord, pray to him for grace and mercy, life and ſalvation, thro' Chriſt; that have a ſpiritual knowledge of God in Chriſt, real and ſincere deſires after him, and truſt and confidence in him, which this phraſe ſuppoſes; and which alſo includes the whole worſhip of God, internal and external, performed in a ſpiritual and evangelical manner; ſee Rom. x. 13. For in mount Zion, and in Jeruſalem ſhall be deliverance, as the Lord hath ſaid; either by this prophet, or ſome others before him; ſee Pſ. xiv. 7. Iſ. lix. 20. Obad. ℣. 21. this cannot be underſtood literally of mount Zion and Jeruſalem, unleſs it be of deliverance out of it; not in it, for Jeruſalem was the ſeat of blood, confuſion, and diſtreſs; but myſtically of the church of Chriſt, often called Zion and Jeruſalem, Heb. xii. 22. hither the deliverer came, here he is, and to be ſeen; from hence the word of the Lord came, the goſpel of ſalvation, which proclaims deliverance to the captives; here it is to be heard, met with, and found, Iſ. ii. 3. Luke iv. 18. Rom. xi. 26. And in the remnant whom the Lord ſhall call; not merely externally, by the outward miniſtry of the word; but internally, according to his purpoſe, and by his grace, powerfully and effectually, to the ſpecial bleſſings of grace here, and eternal glory hereafter: theſe are the remnant according to the election of grace; the little flock to whom God gives the kingdom; the few that enter in at the ſtrait gate; the little city, and few men in it, delivered by the poor wiſe man; theſe ſhare in the deliverance of Zion, and ſhall be certainly and completely ſaved, with an everlaſting ſalvation. This may reſpect not only the remnant, or a ſmall number of the Jews that believed in Chriſt, upon his firſt coming, and the preaching of the goſpel by his apoſtles, but the call and converſion of them in the latter day; which ſenſe connects the words better with the following chapter.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter, which ſome make the fourth, contains a prophecy of God's judgments on all the antichriſtian nations at the time of the Jews converſion, and the reaſons of them, ℣. 1, 2, 3. a threatening of Tyre and Zidon, by way of retaliation, for carrying the riches of the Jews into their temples, and ſelling their perſons to the Greeks, ℣. 4—8. an alarm to prepare for the battel of Armageddon, or the deſtruction that ſhall be made in the valley of Jehoſhaphat, ℣. 9—15. and after that an account of the happy ſtate of the church of Chriſt, their ſafety and ſecurity, plenty, proſperity, and purity, to the end of the world, ℣. 16—21.

℣. 1. For behold, in thoſe days, and at that time, &c.] Which Kimchi refers to the times of the Meſſiah; and is true of the latter times of the Meſſiah, of his ſpiritual reign yet to come: when I ſhall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jeruſalem; not from the Edomites, Tyrians, and Philiſtines, that had carried them captive in the times of Ahaz; nor from Babylon, where they had been carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar; for nothing of what is after foretold followed upon the return of theſe captivities: but this deſigns the preſent captivity of the Jews, and the reſtoration of them to their own land; of which ſee Iſ. lii. 8. Jer. xxx. 3, 9, 18—21.

℣. 2. I will alſo gather all nations, &c.] Or cauſe or ſuffer them to be gathered together againſt his people; not the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, in the times of Jehoſhaphat, as Aben Ezra; but either the Turks, propheſied of under the name of Gog and Magog in Ezekiel, ch. xxxviii. and xxxix. and a multitude of other nations with them, who ſhall be gathered together againſt the Jews, to regain the land of Judea from them, they will upon their converſion inhabit; or elſe all the antichriſtian kings and nations, which ſhall be gathered to the battel of the great day of God Almighty, Rev. xvi. 14: and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoſhaphat; Kimchi thinks this was ſome valley near to Jeruſalem, in which Jehoſhaphat built or wrought ſome works, and ſo was called by his name: Joſeph ben Gorion [x] ſpeaks of a valley, called the valley of Jehoſhaphat, which was near Jeruſalem, to the further end of which one Zachariah, a good man, in the times of the Jewiſh wars, was rolled and died, being caſt down from the top of a tower upon the wall, eaſt of Jeruſalem; and which is confirmed by R. Abraham, as quoted by Lively; and the true Joſephus ſays [y], that the valley into which this man was caſt, lay directly under Jeruſalem; and Benjamin of Tudela [z] makes mention of a valley of this name, which he ſays lies between Jeruſalem and the mount of Olives; where Jerom [a] places it by the name of Cælas; with whom Mr. Maundrel [b] agrees, who ſays that this valley lies between mount Moriah and mount Olivet, and has its name from the ſepulchre of Jehoſhaphat: and according to Lyra on the place, who is followed by Adrichomius [c], it is the ſame with the valley of Cedron, which was ſo ſituated; but why that ſhould be called the valley of Jehoſhaphat, no reaſon is given. Aben Ezra and others are of opinion, that this is the ſame with the valley of Berachah, where Jehoſhaphat obtained a very great victory over many nations, 2 Chron. xx. 1, 26. but it does not appear to have been called by his name, and beſides, ſeems to be at a great diſtance from Jeruſalem; tho' there may be an alluſion to it, that as many nations were there collected together and deſtroyed, ſo ſhall it be in the latter day; and I am of opinion, that no proper name of a place is here meant, as going by it in common, but is ſo called, from the judgment of God here executed upon his and his people's enemies. So Jarchi calls it, the valley of judgments; Jehoſhaphat ſignifying the judgment of the Lord: Kimchi ſays it may be ſo called, becauſe of judgment, the Lord there pleading with the nations, and judging them: and in the Targum it is rendered, "the valley of the diviſion of judg" ment:" and to me it deſigns no other than Armageddon, the ſeat of the battel of almighty God, Rev. xvi. 16. and which may ſignify the deſtruction of their troops; ſee the note there. And will plead with them there, for my people, and for my heritage Iſrael; the people of the Jews, who will now be converted, who will have the Lo-ammi taken off of them, and will be called the people of the living God again, and be reckoned by him as his portion and inheritance; tho' not them only, but all the ſaints; all that have ſeparated from antichriſt, his doctrine and worſhip, and have ſuffered by him: whom they have ſcattered among the nations, and parted my land; Kimchi refers this to the ſcattering of the Jews by Titus and his army, and the partition of Judea among them, which is not amiſs; in conſequence of which they are ſtill a ſcattered people, and their land has been parted between Turks and Papiſts; ſometimes inhabited by the one, and ſometimes by the other, and now by both, on whom God will take vengeance; he'll plead the cauſe of his people, by the ſevere judgments he'll inflict on his and their enemies. This may reſpect the perſecuting of the chriſtians from place to place, and ſeizing on their lands and eſtates, and parting them, as well as the diſperſion of the Jews, and the partition of the land of Canaan.

℣. 3. And they have caſt lots for my people, &c.] Not only parted their land, but caſt lots for their perſons, or played at dice for them, how many captives each ſoldier ſhould have, and which ſhould be their ſhare and property: ninety-ſeven thouſand Jews, Joſephus[d] ſays, were carried captive by the Romans, who very probably caſt lots for them, as was uſual in ſuch caſes; ſee Nahum iii. 10: and have given a boy for a harlot, and ſold a girl for wine, that they might drink; either they gave a boy to be proſtituted to unnatural luſts, in lieu of a whore; and a girl to be debauched for a bottle of wine: or they gave a boy for the price of a whore, as the Targum and Kimchi interpret it; that is, they gave a boy, inſtead of money, to a whore, to lie with her, as the eunuch was given to Thais; and they gave a girl to the vintner, for as much wine as they could drink at one ſitting. Theſe phraſes both expreſs their uncleanneſs and intemperance, and alſo the low price and value they ſet upon their captives; and is applicable enough to the papiſts, notorious for the ſame abominable luſts.

℣. 4. Yea, and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre and Zidon, and all the coaſts of Paleſtine? &c.] The Tyrians, Zidonians, and Philiſtines, were near neighbours of the Jews, and implacable enemies to them; and are here put for the enemies of the true church of Chriſt, the Papiſts and Turks, and in whoſe poſſeſſion thoſe places now are: theſe are addreſſed by the Lord, enquiring or demanding the reaſon of their ill uſage of him and his people: what have ye to do with me? to be called by my name, or accounted my people; I know you not, nor will I have any fellowſhip with you: or what have ye to do with my people, to diſturb and diſtreſs them? what wrong have I or they done you, that you thus uſe them? will ye render me a recompence? for turning you out of your land, and putting my people into it? do you think to retaliate this? and if ye recompenſe me; by doing an injury to my people: ſwiftly and ſpeedily will I return your recompence upon your own head; bring ſwift and ſudden deſtruction upon you.

℣. 5. Becauſe ye have taken my ſilver, and my gold, &c.] Which is all the Lord's, Hag. ii. 8. or which he had beſtowed upon his people, and they had taken from them: and have carried into your temples my goodly pleaſant things; either the rich furniture of the houſes of his people, which they carried into their own houſes, or palaces[e], as it may be rendered; having either taken them away themſelves, or bought them of others that had taken them: or elſe the rich veſſels of the temple; as theſe were carried away by the Chaldeans, and put into their idol-temples, Dan. i. 2. ſo afterward they were taken by the Romans, and put into the temples of their gods: whether any of theſe came into the hands of the Tyrians, &c. by any means, and were put into their idol-temples, as the temple of Hercules, is not certain; however, it is notorious, that the Papiſts, the Tyrians are an emblem of, not only build ſtately temples, and dedicate them to angels and ſaints, but moſt profuſely adorn them with gold and ſilver, and all goodly and deſirable things; which is putting them to an idolatrous uſe they were not deſigned for.

℣. 6. The children alſo of Judah, and the children of Jeruſalem, &c.] Not children in age literally, as Kimchi, kid-napped or bought by the Tyrians; but the inhabitants of Judah and Jeruſalem: have ye ſold unto the Grecians; or ſons of Javan; it was one part of the merchandiſe of Tyre to trade in the perſons of men; and Javan, or the Greeks, with others, were their merchants for them, Ezek. xxvii. 13. and the ſouls of men are a part of the trade of the merchants of Rome, typified by the Tyrians, Rev. xviii. 13: that ye might remove them far from their border; from their own land, or place of dwelling, that ſo they might not be eaſily redeemed, and return to it any more. Rome, the antichriſtian Tyre, trading with the ſouls of men, is to their eternal damnation, as much as in them lies. Cocceius interprets this of the children of the church being trained up in the doctrine of Ariſtotle, in the times of the ſchoolmen.

℣. 7. Behold, I will raiſe them out of the place whither ye have ſold them, &c.] That is, bring them back to their own land, from their places whither they have been carried captive, and where they have dwelt in obſcurity, and as if they had been buried in graves, but now ſhould be raiſed up and reſtored; and this their reſtoration will be as life from the dead. So the Targum, "behold, "I will bring them publickly from the place whi" ther ye have ſold them;" this is to be underſtood, not of the ſame perſons, but of their poſterity, they being the ſame natural body. Kimchi interprets it of them and their children; them at the reſurrection of the dead, their children at the time of ſalvation. Some think this had its accompliſhment in Alexander and his ſucceſſors, by whom the Jews, who had been detained captives in other countries, were ſet free; particularly by Demetrius, [d] De bello Jud. l. 6. c. 9. §. 3.

[e] להיכליכם in palatia veſtra, Montanus, Druſius, Burkius.

Demetrius, as Joſephus[f] relates: tho' it may be applied to the future reſtoration of the Jews out of all countries, unto their own land; or rather to the gathering together the ſpiritual Iſrael, or people of God, who have been perſecuted from place to place by their antichriſtian enemies. And will return your recompence upon your own head; do to them as they have done to others; pay them in their own coin; retaliate the wrongs done to his people; ſee Rev. xiii. 10. and xviii. 6.

℣. 8. And I will ſell your ſons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, &c.] That is, deliver them into their hands, to diſpoſe of them; this is thought to have been literally fulfilled in the Tyrians, when thirty thouſand[g] of them were ſold for ſlaves, upon the taking of their city by Alexander, who put ſome of them into the hands of the Jews, they being in friendſhip with him: it myſtically deſigns the power that the Jewiſh church, converted, and in union with Gentile chriſtians, will have over the antichriſtian ſtates: and they ſhall ſell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off; the inhabitants of Sheba, a country by the Jews reckoned the uttermoſt parts of the earth; ſee Matt. xii. 42. Theſe are not the ſame with the Sabeans, the inhabitants of Arabia Deſerta, that took away Job's oxen and aſſes; but rather thoſe who were the inhabitants of Arabia Felix, which lay at a greater diſtance. So Strabo[h] ſays, the Sabæans inhabited Arabia Felix; and Diodorus Siculus[i] reckons the Sabæans as very populous, and one of the Arabian nations, who inhabited that Arabia which is called Felix, the metropolis of which is Saba; and he, as well as Strabo, obſerves, that this country produces many odoriferous plants, as caſia, cinnamon, frankincenſe, and calamus, or the ſweet cane; hence incenſe is ſaid to come from Sheba, and the ſweet cane from a far country, Jer. vi. 20. and ſince the Jews traded with theſe people for thoſe ſpices, it is eaſy to conceive how they ſold their captives to them: now theſe lived at a great diſtance, in the extreme parts of Arabia, both towards the Indian ſea, and the Arabian gulph. And Diodorus Siculus[k] obſerves, that δια του εκτοπισμον, becauſe of the diſtance of their ſituation, they never came into the power, or under the dominion of any, or were never ſubdued. Theſe ſeem to be the deſcendents of Cuſh, the ſon of Ham; and if they were the deſcendents of Joktan, the ſon of Shem, as ſome think, theſe are placed by Vitringa[l] in Carmania; and where Pliny[m] makes mention of a city called Sabe, and of the river Sabis; and it is worthy of notice, that the ancient Greek fathers[n], with one conſent, interpret the Sabæans of the Saracens: and whether they may not deſign the Turks, in whoſe poſſeſſion this country now is, and into whoſe hands the antichriſtian powers may be delivered by means of the chriſtians, both Jews and Gentiles, may be conſidered. For the Lord hath ſpoken it; and therefore it ſhall be accompliſhed. The Targum is, "for by the "word of the Lord it is ſo decreed;" whoſe counſels and decrees can never be fruſtrated. This, in an ancient book of the Jews called Mechilta, is referred to the prophecy of Noah concerning Canaan, whoſe ſons inhabited Tyre, a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be to his brethren, Gen. ix. 25. as Jarchi obſerves.

℣. 9. Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, &c.] This decree of God, concerning the deliverance of his church, and the deſtruction of their enemies; which is to be proclaimed among them, to the terror of them, and the comfort of God's people, encouraging them to the battel, ſince they might be ſure of victory; for the prophet here returns to give an account of the armies to be gathered together, and to be deſtroyed in the valley of Jehoſhaphat, as appears from ℣. 12. and to this end, heralds are here ordered to make proclamation of war throughout the nations, and to gather them to the battel of almighty God; whether ſeriouſly or ironically, may be conſidered; what follows ſeems to be ſpoken in the latter way, to the enemies of the church; tho' they may be interpreted as ſpoken ſeriouſly to the people of God themſelves: prepare war; get all things ready for it, men and arms: wake up the mighty men; generals, captains, and other officers, men of ſtrength and courage; let them arouſe from the ſleep and lethargy in which they are, and get themſelves in a readineſs for war, and put themſelves at the head of their troops: let all the men of war draw near, let them come up; to the land of Judea, and to Jeruſalem; that is, either the chriſtian powers with their armies, to defend Jeruſalem againſt the Turks, and deliver it out of their hands; let them appear on the behalf of the Jews: or elſe let the enemies of Chriſt's church and people come up againſt them, even the moſt powerful of them; let them muſter up all their forces, and do the moſt they can, they ſhall not prevail.

℣. 10. Beat your plow-ſhares into ſwords, and your pruning-hooks into ſpears, &c.] Let not only ſoldiers, and ſuch as have been trained up in military diſcipline, appear in the field on this occaſion; but let huſbandmen and vine-dreſſers leave their fields and vineyards, and turn their inſtruments of huſbandry and vine-dreſſing into weapons of war; let them not plead want of armour, but convert theſe to ſuch uſes: on the contrary, when this battel will be over, ſwords ſhall be beat into plow-ſhares, and ſpears into pruning-hooks, Iſ. ii. 4: let the weak ſay, I am ſtrong; ſuch as are weak thro' ſickneſs, or old age, let them not plead their weakneſs to excuſe them from engaging in this war; but let them make the beſt of themſelves, and ſay they are ſtrong and healthy, and fit for it, and enter in it with all courage and bravery: this is ſaid either ironically to the enemies of God's people, ſuggeſting that all hands would be wanted, and ſhould be employed, weak and ſtrong, and all little enough; when they had made the utmoſt effort they could, it would be in vain: or elſe they are ſeriouſly ſpoken to the people of God, that none of them ſhould excuſe themſelves, or be diſcouraged becauſe of their weakneſs, from engaging in this laſt and ſore battel; but take heart, and be of good courage, and quit themſelves like men, and be ſtrong, ſince they might be ſure of victory before-hand. The apoſtle Paul refers to this text in 2 Cor. xii. 10. and applies it to ſpiritual weakneſs and ſtrength; and indeed the weakeſt believer, that is ſo in faith and knowledge, may ſay he is ſtrong, in compariſon of what he once was, and others are; ſtrong, not in himſelf, but in Chriſt, in the power of his might, and in the grace that is in him; nor ſhould he excuſe himſelf from fighting the Lord's battels, againſt ſin, ſatan, and the world, and falſe teachers; or from doing the Lord's work, any ſervice he calls him to; or from bearing the croſs he lays on him on account of his weakneſs; nor ſhould he be diſcouraged by it from thoſe things; but let him ſtrengthen himſelf, as Aben Ezra interprets it, take heart, and be of good courage.

℣. 11. Aſſemble yourſelves, &c.] From divers parts into one place: be ye gathered; or gather yourſelves together, as the Targum and Kimchi; get together in a body, muſter up all the forces you can collect together. Jarchi from Menachem, by the change of a letter, renders it, make ye haſte; loſe no time in preparing for this battel; get men and arms for them as faſt as you can; be as expeditious as poſſible: and come all ye heathen; antichriſtian nations, Mahometan or Papal; which latter eſpecially, are ſometimes called heathen and Gentiles, becauſe of the heatheniſh rites introduced into their worſhip, Pſ. x. 16. Rev. xi. 2: and gather yourſelves round about; from all parts, to the valley of Jehoſhaphat or Armageddon, Rev. xvi. 14, 16. this is ſpoken ironically to them, to uſe their utmoſt endeavours to get moſt powerful armies againſt the people of God, which would be of no avail, but iſſue in their own deſtruction; or it may ſignify what ſhould be done by the providence of God, bringing ſuch large numbers of them together to their own ruin: thither cauſe thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord; which is a prayer of the prophet, or of the church, to God, that he would ſend down his mighty ones, the angels that excel in ſtrength, and deſtroy this great army thus gathered together, as an angel in one night deſtroyed the army of Sennacherib. So Kimchi and Aben Ezra interpret it of angels, and many other interpreters; but perhaps it may be better to underſtand it of chriſtian princes and their forces, thoſe armies clothed in white, and riding on white horſes, in token of victory, with Chriſt at the head of them, Rev. xix. 14. who may be ſaid to be cauſed to come down, becauſe being aſſembled, ſhall go down into the valley of Jehoſhaphat, where their enemies are gathered together, and diſcomfit them. The Targum is, "there the Lord ſhall break the "ſtrength of their ſtrong ones."

℣. 12. Let the heathen be awakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoſhaphat, &c.] That is, let the enemies of Chriſt and his church be arouſed from that ſtate of ſecurity in which they are, and prepare for their own defence; for in ſuch a ſtate the antichriſtian powers will be before their deſtruction; ſee Rev. xviii. 7. let them beſtir themſelves, and exert all the vigour and ſtrength they have; let them come in high ſpirits againſt the people of God; let them invade the holy land, and come even to the valley of Jehoſhaphat; and when come thither, let them deſcend into the place appointed for their ruin: the land of Judea being ſaid to be higher than other countries, going to it is generally expreſſed by going up to it; otherwiſe it is more uſual to ſay that men go down a valley, than come up to it; and mention being made again of this valley, ſhows that the ſame thing is referred to here as in ℣. 2. theſe words are ſaid in anſwer to the petition in the former verſe; for they are ſpoken by the Lord, as appears by what follows: for there will I ſit to judge all the heathen round about; thither gathered together from all parts: the alluſion is to a judge upon the bench ſitting to hear and try cauſes, and paſs a definitive ſentence; and here it ſignifies the execution of that ſentence; ſuch a pleading the cauſe of his people, as to take vengeance, and inflict juſt puniſhment upon their enemies; ſee Pſ. ix. 4, 5. Rev. xiv. 14.

℣. 13. Put ye in the ſickle, for the harveſt is ripe, &c.] This is ſaid to the mighty ones ſent, the chriſtian princes, the executioners of God's vengeance on antichriſt; the angels that will pour out the vials of his wrath on the antichriſtian ſtates, compared to reapers, with a ſharp ſickle in their hands, to cut them down, as corn is cut when reaped; as the ſame ſtates are compared to a harveſt ripe, the meaſure of their ſins being filled up, and the time of their deſtruction appointed for them come; ſee Rev. xiv. 15: come get ye down; to the valley: or go tread ye[o]; for another ſimile is made uſe of: the reference here is to the treading of cluſters of grapes in the wine-preſs, as appears by what follows: and ſo the Targum renders it, "deſcend, tread their mighty men;" in like manner Jarchi interprets it; and ſo the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions render it: and Dr. Pocock obſerves, that the word ردي in the Arabic language, ſignifies to tread, as men tread grapes in a preſs: the reaſons follow, for the preſs is full; of cluſters of the vine; or the valley is full of wicked men, compared unto them, deſtined to deſtruction: the fats overflow; with the juice of grapes ſqueezed out, denoting the great effuſion of blood that will be made; ſee Rev. xiv. 18, 19, 20. and xix. 15, 18, 20: for their wickedneſs is great; is come to its height, reaches even to heaven, and calls aloud for vengeance; an end is come to it, and to the authors of it, Rev. xviii. 5. The Targum of the whole is, "draw out the ſword againſt them, for "the time of their end is come; deſcend, tread "their mighty men ſlain, as any thing is trodden "in a wine-preſs; pour out their blood, for their "wickedneſs is multiplied."

℣. 14. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of deciſion, &c.] The ſame with the valley of Jehoſhaphat before-mentioned; which ſhews that not any valley of that name is intended, but a certain place ſo called, from the judgments of God in it; and here named the valley of deciſion, becauſe here their judgment will be determined, as Kimchi and Jarchi; and at this time the controverſy between God, and his people's enemies, will be decided, and at an end: or the valley of conciſion, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; becauſe in this place, and at this time, the nations gathered together in it, will be cut to pieces: or as others, the valley of threſhing[p]; becauſe, as in Jehoſhaphat's time, the Moabites and Ammonites were threſhed by the Jews in the valley of Berachah, to which the alluſion is; ſo at this time the antichriſtian kings and their armies will be threſhed and beaten, and deſtroyed by the men of Judah, God's profeſſing people; ſee Micah iv. 13. theſe ſeem to be the words of the prophet, breaking out into this pathetic exclamation, upon a ſight of the vaſt multitudes gathered together in this valley, and ſlain in it; and the doubling of the word ſerves to expreſs the prodigious number of them: and this ſhews that this prophecy refers either to the vaſt army of the Turks, under the name of Gog, and the great ſlaughter that will be made of them; and that this valley may be the ſame with the valley of Hamon-Gog, that is, the valley of the multitude of Gog, where their multitude of ſlain ſhall be buried, Ezek. xxxix. 11. or to that vaſt carnage of the antichriſtian kings and and their armies at Armageddon, Rev. xvi. 14, 16. and xix. 18, 19, 20, 21. the Targum is, “armies, armies in the valley of the diviſion of judgment:” for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of deciſion; that is, the great and terrible day of the Lord, to take vengeance on all the antichriſtian powers, both eaſtern and weſtern, is nigh at hand, which will be done in this valley.

℣. 15. The ſun and moon ſhall be darkned, &c.] Both the politic and eccleſiaſtic ſtate of antichriſt, ſhall be ruined and deſtroyed; it ſhall fare with Rome papal, as it did with Rome pagan, at the time of its diſſolution; ſee Rev. vi. 12, 13. and xvi. 8: and the ſtars ſhall withdraw their ſhining; antichriſtian princes and nobles in the civil ſtate, and the clergy of all ranks in the church-ſtate, ſhall loſe their glory.

℣. 16. The Lord alſo ſhall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem, &c.] Chriſt, the Lamb, ſhall now appear as the lion of the tribe of Judah, and utter his voice in his providence and judgments on the behalf of his church and people, ſignified by Zion and Jeruſalem; and therefore ſaid to roar, and utter his voice from thence; he will be heard far and near, and ſtrike terror in the hearts of his enemies; ſee Jer. xxv. 30, 31: and the heavens and the earth ſhall ſhake; great revolutions will be made in the world, both in church and ſtate, among the antichriſtian powers; and ſuch as will alſo make them ſhake and tremble, as well as alter the form and frame of things among them; ſee Rev. xvi. 18, 19. changes in government, civil and eccleſiaſtic, are ſometimes ſignified by ſuch phraſes, Hagg. ii. 6, 7. Heb. xii. 26, 27. Rev. vi. 14. and xi. 13, 19: but the Lord will be the hope of his people; the object, author, ground, and foundation of their hope of ſalvation here and hereafter; in whom they may hope for and expect ſafety and ſecurity in the worſt of times; ſince he will be their refuge, or their harbour [q], as it may be rendered; to whom they may have recourſe, to ſhelter and ſkreen them from the rage and wrath of their enemies, and where they will be ſafe, till the indignation of God be over and paſt; and while calamities and judgments are upon the unchriſtian and ungodly world, they will have nothing to fear amidſt theſe ſtorms, being in a good harbour: and the ſtrength of the children of Iſrael; of the ſpiritual Iſrael; of all ſuch who are Iſraelites indeed, the Lord's choſen, redeemed, and called people, both Jews and Gentiles; the author and giver of their ſpiritual ſtrength, the ſtrength of their lives and of their hearts, of their graces and of their ſalvation; by whom they are furniſhed with ſtrength to do the duties of religion; to exerciſe grace; to wreſtle with God in prayer; to withſtand ſpiritual enemies; to bear afflictions patiently, and to perſevere to the end: or he is their fortreſs [r]; their ſtrong-hold and place of defence, where they are ſafe from every enemy, free from all diſtreſſes, enjoy ſolid peace and comfort, and have plenty of proviſions, Iſ. xxxiii. 16.

℣. 17. So ſhall ye know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain, &c.] The church of God, which is his dwelling-place; and will appear more manifeſtly to be ſo at this time, when Chriſt the Lamb will ſtand on mount Zion, with an 144,000, having his Father's name in their foreheads, Rev. xiv. 1. and which preſence of the Lord will be clearly diſcerned by his people; by the deſtruction of their enemies, and by his protection of them; by his being their hope and ſtrength, their refuge and their fortreſs; they will experimentally know his divine inhabitation among them: then ſhall Jeruſalem be holy; or holineſs [s]; not Jeruſalem literally taken, as Kimchi; tho' it being now rebuilt, will be inhabited by holy perſons, the converted Jews, and ſo all manner of holineſs practiſed in it; but rather the whole church of God every where, conſiſting of holy perſons, made ſo thro' the holineſs of Chriſt imputed to them, and the ſanctifying grace of his Spirit wrought in them; not that they will be perfectly holy in themſelves, as the ſaints will in the new Jeruſalem-ſtate, Rev. xxi. 2, 27. but they will be greatly ſo; holineſs will be predominant and univerſal among men; there will be more real ſaints, and fewer hypocrites will be in the churches; ſee Iſ. iv. 3. Zech. xiv. 20, 21: and there ſhall no ſtrangers paſs thro' her any more; to hurt and annoy the church of God; for there ſhall be none in theſe times to moleſt, diſturb, and hurt in all the holy mountain of the Lord, Iſ. xi. 9. or to pollute her with falſe doctrine, ſuperſtitious worſhip, or immorality; or her communion ſhall not be interrupted and made uncomfortable, or ſhe be peſtered with hypocrites and ungodly perſons, ſtrangers to God and godlineſs, to Chriſt, his Spirit, and the power of religion; ſee Iſ. lii. 1. Ezek. xliv. 9.

℣. 18. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, &c.] When antichriſt ſhall be deſtroyed; the Jews converted; the power of godlineſs revived, and the preſence of God among his people enjoyed. Vitringa, in his Commentary on Iſaiah, frequently applies this, and ſuch like prophecies, to the times of the Maccabees; tho' he owns, they were but an emblem of better times under the goſpel-diſpenſation; nor does he deny the myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe of them. That the mountains ſhall drop down new wine; which, and the following expreſſions, are to be underſtood not in a ſtrict literal ſenſe, as Lactantius [t] ſeems to have underſtood them; who ſays, that in the millennium God will cauſe a rain of bleſſing to deſcend morning and evening; the earth ſhall bring forth all kind of fruit without the labour of man; honey ſhall drop from the rocks, and the fountains of milk and wine ſhall overflow: but hyperbolically, juſt as the land of Canaan is ſaid to flow with milk and honey; not that it really did, but the phraſe is uſed to denote the fertility of it, and the abundance of temporal bleſſings in it. The literal ſenſe is this, that the mountains ſhall be covered with vines, on which they are often planted; theſe vines ſhall be full of large cluſters of grapes; and theſe grapes being preſſed, ſhall yield a large quantity of new wine; and ſo by a metonymy, the mountains are ſaid to drop it down [u], that is, to abound with it, or produce an abundance of it: but the ſpiritual or myſtical ſenſe is, that the churches of Chriſt in thoſe times, comparable to mountains, and ſo to hills in the next clauſe, for their exalted and viſible glorious ſtate in which they now will be; and for the rich gifts and graces of the Spirit within them; and for the paſture upon them, and the trees of righteouſneſs that grow thereon; and alſo for their firmneſs and ſtability, their immoveableneſs and perpetual duration; theſe ſhall abound with freſh and large diſcoveries of the love of God and Chriſt, which is better than wine, Cant. i. 2, 4. like wine cheering and refreſhing; like new wine, tho' old as to its original, yet new in the manifeſtations of it; and which are uſually made in the church, and the ordinances of it, to the making glad the hearts of the Lord's people; alſo they ſhall abound with the bleſſings of grace, the fruits of love, ſuch as pardon, peace, juſtification, &c. which like wine fill with joy, revive and comfort; and tho' they are ancient bleſſings, provided long ago, they are exhibited under the goſpel-diſpenſation in a new covenant-way; and the application of them is made in the churches, in Zion, where the Lord commands the bleſſing, even life for evermore. This may alſo take in the goſpel, which brings the good news of theſe bleſſings, and ſo is very reviving and cheering; and tho' ordained and preached of old, is newly revealed under the preſent diſpenſation; and will be more clearly in after-times, when all the mountains or churches will abound with it, and even the whole earth be filled with the knowledge of it, Iſ. xi. 9. likewiſe the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper, that feaſt of fat things, of wines on the lees well refined, made in the mountain of the Lord, for all his people may be included; and both in that, and in the miniſtry of the word, the Lord is ſometimes pleaſed, as he may, more abundantly hereafter, to give his ſaints ſome prelibations of that new wine, which Chriſt and they ſhall partake of in his Father's kingdom; ſee Cant. vii. 9. Iſ. xxv. 6. and lv. 1, 2, 3. Matt. xxvi. 29. And the hills ſhall flow with milk; that is, there ſhall be much paſturage upon them, and a great number of cattel feeding thereon, which ſhall yield large quantities of milk; and ſo by the ſame figure as before, the hills may be ſaid to flow with it [w]. The ſpiritual meaning is, that the churches of Chriſt, comparable to hills for the reaſons before given, ſhall abound with the means of grace, with the ſincere milk of the word; to which the goſpel is compared for its whiteneſs and purity, for every word of God is pure and purifying; for aſſwaging the wrath the law produces; its being eaſy of digeſtion, even to new-born babes; and its ſalutary nouriſhing virtue and efficacy; and of this there will be great abundance in the latter day; ſee Cant. iv. 11. 1 Pet. ii. 2, 3. And all the rivers of Judah ſhall flow with waters; that is, the channels, in which the rivers run; theſe, in a time of drought, are ſometimes empty, and the bottoms of them to be ſeen, but now full of water, and flow with it: grace is often in ſcripture compared to water, becauſe of its refreſhing, cleanſing, and fructifying nature; and rivers denote an abundance of it; and the channels, thro' which it is conveyed to men, out of the fulneſs of Chriſt, are the ordinances; ſee Zech. iv. 12. and the prophecy ſuggeſts, that theſe ſhould not be dry and empty, but that large meaſures of grace ſhall be communicated by means of them to the ſouls of men, to their great comfort and edification, and for the ſupply of their wants; ſee Ezek. xxxvi. 25. John iii. 5. and iv. 10, 14. and vii. 37, 38, 39. And a fountain ſhall come forth of the houſe of the Lord; not meaning baptiſm, as ſome; nor Chriſt, the fountain of grace, life, and ſalvation; but the goſpel, the word of the Lord, that fountain full of excellent truths and doctrines; of the bleſſings of grace; of exceeding great and precious promiſes; and of much ſpiritual peace, joy, and comfort: this is the law or doctrine of the Lord, that ſhould come out of Zion, or the church, Iſ. ii. 3. the living waters that ſhall come out of Jeruſalem, Zech. xiv. 8. and the ſame with the waters in Ezekiel's viſion, that came from under the threſhold of the houſe, Ezek. xlvii. 1. it ſeems to denote the ſmall beginnings of the goſpel, and the great increaſe and overflow of it in the world, as it does in all the above paſſages: this is referred by the ancient Jews [x] to the times of the Meſſiah. And ſhall water the valley of Shittim; a plain or valley near Jordan, upon the borders of Moab, at the further end of Canaan that way, Numb. xxxiii. 49. Joſh. iii. 1. Benjamin of Tudela [y] ſays, that from the mount of Olives may be ſeen the plain and brook of Shittim, unto or near mount Nebo, which was in the land of Moab. This valley or plain, as the Targum, was ſo called, either from the Shittah-tree, Iſ. xli. 19. of which was the wood Shittim, ſo much uſed for various things in the tabernacle and temple, that grew there; and which Jerom on this place ſays, was a kind of tree that grew in the wilderneſs, like a white thorn in colour and leaves, tho' not in bigneſs; for otherwiſe it was a very large tree, out of which the broadeſt planks might be cut, and its wood very ſtrong, and of incredible ſmoothneſs and beauty; and which grew not in cultivated places, nor in the Roman ſoil, but in the deſert of Arabia; and therefore one would think did not grow in this plain near Jordan, and ſo could not be denominated from hence: but Dr. Shaw [z] obſerves, that the Acacia is by much the largeſt and the moſt common tree of theſe deſerts (i. e. of Arabia) as it might likewiſe have been of the plains of Shittim over-againſt Jericho, from whence it took its name; and adds, we have ſome reaſon to conjecture, that the Shittim wood, whereof the ſeveral utenſils, &c. of the tabernacle, &c. Exod. xxv. 10, 13, 23, &c. were made, was the wood of the Acacia. Or it may be this place had its name from the ruſhes which grew on the banks of Jordan, near to which it was; for ſo is the word interpreted by ſome [a]: and Saadiah Gaon ſays, this valley is Jordan; ſo called, becauſe Jordan was near to a place called Shittim: however, be it as it will, this can never be underſtood in a literal ſenſe, that any fountain ſhould ariſe out of the temple, and flow as far as beyond Jordan, and water any tract of land there; but muſt be underſtood ſpiritually, of the ſame waters of the ſanctuary as in Ezekiel's viſion, ch. xlvii. 1, 8. at moſt, the literal ſenſe could only be, that the whole land ſhould be well watered from one end to the other, and become very fertile and fruitful, by the order and direction of the Lord, that dwells in his temple. The myſtical ſenſe is beſt. Jarchi makes mention of a Midraſh, that interprets it of the expiation of the ſins of the Iſraelites, in the affair of Baal-peor at Shittim, Numb. xxv. 1, 2, 3. but the true ſpiritual ſenſe is, that the goſpel ſhall be carried to the further parts of the earth;

Some render it, ſhall water the valley of cedars [b]; the Shittim wood being a kind of cedar, of which many things belonging to the tabernacle, a type of the church, was made, being firm, ſound, incorruptible and durable; ſee Exod. xxv. 10, 23. and xxvi. 26, 32. and xxvii. 1. ſaints are compared to cedars for their height in Chriſt, their ſtrength in him, and in his grace; their large and ſpreading leaves, branches, and roots, or growth in grace; and for their duration and incorruption; ſee Numb. xxiv. 5, 6. Pſ. xcii. 13. a valley may ſignify the low eſtate of God's people; or be an emblem of lowly, meek, and humble ſouls, to whom the goſpel is preached, and who are watered and revived by it, and to whom more grace is given; ſee Iſ. xl. 4. and lxi. 1. and lvii. 15. It is by Symmachus rendered, the valley of thorns; and ſo Quinquarboreus [c] ſays, the word ſignifies and deſigns ſuch who are barren in good works.

℣. 19. Egypt ſhall be a deſolation, and Edom ſhall be a deſolate wilderneſs, &c.] Theſe two nations having been the implacable enemies of Iſrael, are here put for the future adverſaries of the church of Chriſt, Pagan, Papal, and Mahometan; who will all be deſtroyed as ſuch, and be no more: Rome is called, ſpiritually or myſtically, Egypt, Rev. xi. 8. and Edom is a name that well agrees with it, it ſignifying red, as it is with the blood of the ſaints: and it is common with the Jewiſh writers, by Edom to underſtand Rome; which tho' it may not be true of all places they ſo interpret, yet is of many, and ſo here. Kimchi, by Egypt, underſtands the Iſhmaelites, or the Turks; and by Edom, Rome. For the violence of the children of Judah, becauſe they have ſhed innocent blood in their land; either in the land of Judah; or rather in their own land, Egypt and Edom. This reſpects the violences and outrages committed by the antichriſtian ſtates upon the true profeſſors of the chriſtian religion, the Waldenſes, and Albigenſes, and others, whoſe innocent blood, in great quantities, has been ſpilled by them. Antichriſt is repreſented as drunk with the blood of the martyrs of Jeſus, and in whom will be found the blood of all the prophets and ſaints; and for this reaſon ruin and deſtruction will come upon him and his followers, and blood will be given them to drink, for they are worthy, Rev. xvii. 6. and xviii. 24. and xvi. 6, 7.

℣. 20. But Judah ſhall dwell for ever, &c.] The converted Jews ſhall dwell in their own land for ever, to the end of the world, and never more be carried captive, Ezek. xxxvii. 25. and the true profeſſing people of God, as Judah ſignifies, ſhall continue in a church-ſtate evermore, and never more be diſturbed by any enemies; they ſhall dwell ſafely and peaceably to the end of time: and Jeruſalem from generation to generation; ſhall dwell ſo in like manner, age after age; that is, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, or the members of the true church of Chriſt, who ſhall ſee and enjoy peace and proſperity, both temporal and ſpiritual, as Jeruſalem ſignifies.

℣. 21. For I will cleanſe their blood, which I have not cleanſed, &c.] Which ſome underſtand, as the Targum, of the Lord's inflicting further puniſhments on the enemies of his people, for ſhedding their innocent blood; and that he will not expiate their ſins, nor hold them guiltleſs, or ſuffer them to go unpuniſhed: but rather this is to be interpreted in a way of grace and mercy, as a benefit beſtowed on Judah and Jeruſalem, who are the immediate antecedents to the relative here; and in the words a reaſon is given, why they ſhould dwell ſafely and peaceably for ever, becauſe the Lord will juſtify them from their ſins; forgive their iniquities; cleanſe them from all their pollution, ſignified by blood; of which grace they will have had no application made to them till this time; but now all their guilt and filth will be removed; and particularly God will forgive, and declare to be forgiven, their ſin of crucifying Chriſt; whoſe blood they had imprecated upon themſelves and their children, and which has remained on them; but now will be removed, with all the ſad effects of it. Tho' this may alſo refer to the converſion of the Gentiles, and the pardon of their ſins, and the ſanctification of their perſons, in ſuch places and parts of the world, where ſuch bleſſings of grace have not been beſtowed in times paſt for many ages, if ever. For the Lord dwelleth in Zion; and therefore will diffuſe his grace, and ſpread the bleſſings of it all around: or even the Lord that dwelleth in Zion [d]; he will do what is before promiſed; being the Lord he can do it; and dwelling in Zion his church, it may be believed he will do it; and this will be for ever, when his Shekinah ſhall return thither in the days of the Meſſiah, as Kimchi obſerves.

AMOS.

A M O S.

THIS book in the Hebrew bibles is called Sepher Amos, the book of Amos; and in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, the prophecy of Amos. This is not the ſame perſon with the father of Iſaiah, as ſome have ignorantly confounded them; for their names are wrote with different letters; beſides, the father of Iſaiah is thought to have been of the royal family, and a courtier; whereas this man was a country farmer and herdſman. His name ſignifies burdened: the Jews [a] ſay he was ſo called, becauſe burdened in his tongue, or had an impediment in his ſpeech, and ſtammered; but rather becauſe his prophecies were burdens to the people, ſuch as they could not bear, being full of reproofs and threatnings; however, his prophecy in this reſpect agrees with his name. What time he lived may be learned from ch. i. 1. by which it appears, that he was cotemporary with Iſaiah and Hoſea; but whether he lived and propheſied ſo long as they did, is not certain. The author of Seder Olam Zuta [b] makes him to propheſy in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah. R. Abraham Zacut [c], and R. David Ganz [d], place him later than Hoſea, and prior to Iſaiah; they ſay that Amos received the law from Hoſea, and Iſaiah from Amos. Mr. Whiſton [e] makes him to begin to propheſy in the year of the Julian period 3941, and before Chriſt 773; and Mr. Bedford [f] earlier, in the year 802; and from ſome paſſages in his prophecy, he appears to be of the land of Judah; ſee ch. i. 1. and vii. 12. tho' he propheſied in the land of Iſrael, and againſt the ten tribes chiefly; the occaſion of which was, Jeroboam had been very ſucceſsful and victorious, and the people under him enjoyed great plenty and proſperity, and upon this grew wanton, luxurious, and very ſinful; wherefore this prophet was ſent to reprove them for their ſins, to exhort them to repentance, and threaten them with captivity, in caſe of impenitence; and to comfort the truly godly with promiſes of the Meſſiah's coming and kingdom. The authenticity of this book is not to be queſtioned, ſince many paſſages out of it were taken by following prophets, as the words in ch. i. 2. by Joel iii. 16. and by Jeremiah, ch. xxv. 30. ch. iv. 9. by Hagg. ii. 17. ch. ix. 13. by Joel iii. 18. and others are quoted by the writers of the New Teſtament as divinely inſpired, as ch. v. 25, 26, 27. and ix. 11. in Acts vii. 42, 43. and xv. 15, 16. nor is there any room to doubt of his being the writer of this book, as is manifeſt of his ſpeaking of himſelf as the firſt perſon in it; tho' Hobbes [g] ſays, it does not appear. Some have thought that his language is ruſtic, ſuitable to his former character and employment; but certain it is, there are maſterly ſtrokes, and great beauties of eloquence in it; and which ſhows, that it is more than human. According to ſome writers, he was often beat and buffeted by Amaziah the prieſt of Bethel; and at laſt the ſon of the prieſt drove a nail into his temples, upon which he was carried alive into his own country, and there died, and was buried in the ſepulchre of his anceſtors at Tekoa [h].

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter begins with the general title of the book, in which the author is deſcribed by name, and by his condition of life, and by his country, and the time of his prophecy fixed, ℣. 1. He firſt foretels a drought in the land of Iſrael, in the moſt fruitful places, which would cauſe mourning among the ſhepherds, ℣. 2. then the captivity of the Syrians, whoſe metropolis was Damaſcus, ℣. 3, 4, 5. Next the deſtruction of the Philiſtines, whoſe principal cities were Gaza, Aſhdod, Aſkelon, and Ekron, ℣. 6, 7, 8. After that the ruin of Tyre, with the reaſon of it, ℣. 9, 10. then the calamities that ſhould come upon Edom, whoſe chief places were Teman and Bozrah, ℣. 11, 12. and laſtly the deſolations of the Ammonites, whoſe metropolis Rabbah ſhould be deſtroyed, and their king and princes go into captivity, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and all this for the ſins of theſe ſeveral nations.

℣. 1. The words of Amos, &c.] Not which he ſpoke of, or for himſelf, but from the Lord; all the prophecies, viſions and revelations made unto him are intended: who was among the herdſmen of Tekoa; which was not in the tribe of Aſher, as Kimchi; nor of Zebulun, as Pſeudo-Epiphanius [i]; but in the tribe of Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 5, 6. Jer. vi. 1. It lay to the ſouth, and was ſix miles from Bethlehem. Mr. Maundrel [k] ſays, it is nine miles diſtant, to the ſouth of it; and according to Jerom [l], it was twelve miles from Jeruſalem; tho' he elſewhere [m] ſays, Thecua or Tekoa is a village at this day, nine miles from Aelia or Jeruſalem, of which place was Amos the prophet, and where his ſepulchre is ſeen; either there is a miſtake of the number, or of Ælia for Bethlehem; the former rather ſeems to be the caſe; according to Joſephus [n], it was not far from the caſtle of Herodium.

The Miſnic doctors[o] ſpeak of it as famous for oil, where the beſt was to be had; near to it was a wilderneſs, called the wilderneſs of Tekoa; and Jerom[p] ſays, that beyond it there was no village, nor ſo much as huts and cottages, but a large wilderneſs which reached to the Red-ſea, and to the borders of the Perſians, Ethiopians, and Indians, and was full of ſhepherds, among whom Amos was; whether he was a maſter-herdſman, or a ſervant of one, is not ſaid. The word is uſed of the king of Moab, who is ſaid to be a ſheep-maſter, 2 Kings iii. 4. he traded in cattel, and got riches thereby; and ſo the Targum here renders it, "who was lord or maſter of cattel;" and Kimchi interprets it, he was a great man among the herdſmen; and ſo it was a piece of ſelf-denial to leave his buſineſs, and go to propheſying; but rather he was a ſervant, and kept cattel for others, which beſt agrees with ch. vii. 14. and ſo is expreſſive of the grace of God in calling ſo mean a perſon to ſuch an high office. The word uſed ſignifies to mark; and ſhepherds were ſo called from marking their ſheep to diſtinguiſh them, which ſeems to be the work of ſervants; and, in the Arabic language, a kind of ſheep deformed, and of ſhort feet, are ſo called: which he ſaw concerning Iſrael; or, againſt Iſrael[q], the ten tribes, to whom he was ſent, and againſt whom he propheſied chiefly; for he ſays very little of Judah. Words are more properly ſaid to be ſpoken or heard; but here they are ſaid to be ſeen; which ſhews that not bare words are meant, but things, which the prophet had revealed to him in a viſionary way, and he delivered; ſee Iſ. ii. 1: in the days of Uzziah king of Judah; who was alſo called Azariah, 2 Kings xv. 1: and in the days of Jeroboam, the ſon of Joaſh king of Iſrael; ſo he is called to diſtinguiſh him from Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat; this king was the grandſon of Jehu; he was, as Jerom ſays, before Sardanapalus reigned over the Aſſyrians, and Procas Sylvius over the Latines: two years before the earthquake; which was well known in thoſe times, and freſh in memory. Zechariah ſpeaks of it many years after, from whom we learn it was in the days of Uzziah, ch. xiv. 5. The Jewiſh writers generally ſay, that it was when Uzziah was ſmote with leproſy for invading the prieſt's office; and was in the year in which he died, when Iſaiah had a viſion of the glory of the Lord, and the poſts of the houſe moved, Iſ. vi. 1, 4. and with whom Joſephus[r] agrees; who alſo relates, that the temple being rent by the earthquake, the bright light of the ſun ſhone upon the king's face, and the leproſy immediately ſeized him; and at a place before the city called Eroge, half part of a mountain towards the weſt was broken and rolled four furlongs towards the eaſtern part, and there ſtood and ſtopped up the ways, and the king's gardens; but this cannot be true, as Theodoret obſerves; ſince, according to this account, Amos muſt begin to propheſy in the 50th year of Uzziah; for he reigned 52 years, and he began his reign in the 27th year of Jeroboam, 2 Kings xv. 1. who reigned 41 years, 2 Kings xiv. 23. ſo that Uzziah and he were cotemporary fourteen years only, and Jeroboam muſt have been dead 36 years, when it was the 50th of Uzziah; whereas they are here repreſented as cotemporary when Amos began to propheſy, which was but two years before the earthquake; ſo that this earthquake muſt be in the former, and not the latter part of Uzziah's reign, and conſequently not when he was ſtricken with the leproſy.

℣. 2. And he ſaid, &c.] That is, the prophet Amos before-deſcribed; he being under divine inſpiration, ſaid, as follows: the Lord will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem; not from Samaria, nor from Dan and Bethel, but from Zion and Jeruſalem, where the temple of the Lord ſtood; and out of the holy of holies in it, where was the ſeat of the divine majeſty; and his voice being compared to the roaring of a lion, denotes his wrath and vengeance; and is expreſſive of ſome terrible threatning prophecy he would ſend from hence, by one or other of his prophets; perhaps Amos may mean himſelf; and who, having been a ſhepherd or herdſman in the wilderneſs, had often heard the terrible roaring of the lion, to which he compares his prophecy concerning the judgments of God on nations. Some think reference is had to the earthquake, as Aben Ezra; and which might be attended with thunder and lightning, the voice of God: and the habitations of the ſhepherds ſhall mourn, that is, the huts or cottages they dwell in, erected for the more convenient care of their flocks; theſe, by a figure, are ſaid to mourn, becauſe expoſed to the violent heat of the ſun in this time of drought; or becauſe forſaken by the ſhepherds; or it may deſign the ſhepherds themſelves that dwelled in them, that ſhould mourn becauſe there was no paſture for their flocks, the graſs being dried up, and withered away: and indeed it may be rendered, the paſtures of the ſhepherds ſhall mourn[s]; being deſtroyed by the drought, as the cattel upon them are ſaid to mourn and groan, Joel i. 18: and the top of Carmel ſhall wither; a fruitful mountain in the land of Iſrael; there were two of this name, one in the tribe of Judah, near which Nabal dwelt, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. another in the tribe of Aſher, near to Ptolemais or Aco; ſome think the former is meant, as being nearer Tekoa, and more known to Amos; others the latter, becauſe Iſrael or the ten tribes are propheſied againſt; tho' Carmel may be taken for any and all fruitful places in the land; and the top or chief of it withering, may ſignify the deſtruction of every thing pleaſant and uſeful. Some think Amos ſpeaks figuratively in the language of a herdſman or ſhepherd, as artificers and mechanics do in their own way[t]; and ſo by ſhepherds he means kings and princes; and by their habitations, their kingdoms, cities, towns and palaces; and by Carmel, their wealth, riches and precious things, which ſhould all be deſtroyed; and to this agrees the Targum, "the habitations of kings ſhall become "deſolate, and the ſtrength of their fortreſſes ſhall "be made a deſert."

℣. 3. Thus ſaith the Lord, &c.] Leſt it ſhould be thought that the words that Amos ſpoke were his own, and he ſpake them of himſelf, this and the following prophecies are prefaced in this manner; and he begins with the nations near to the people of Iſrael and Judah, who had greatly afflicted them, and for that reaſon would be puniſhed; which is foretold to let Iſrael ſee that thoſe judgments on them did not come by chance; and leſt they ſhould promiſe themſelves impunity from the proſperity of theſe ſinful nations; and to awaken them to a ſenſe of their ſin and danger, who might expect the viſitation of God for their tranſgreſſions; as alſo to take off all offence at the prophet, who began not with them, but with their enemies: for three tranſgreſſions of Damaſcus, and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; Damaſcus was an ancient city; it was in the times of Abraham, Gen. xv. 2. It was the metropolis of Syria, Iſ. vii. 8. and ſo Pliny calls it, Damaſcus of Syria [u]. Of the ſituation of this place, and the delightfulneſs of it, ſee the note on Jer. xlix. 25. and of its founder, and the ſignification of its name, ſee the note on Acts ix. 2. to which may be added, that tho' Juſtin [w] ſays it had its name from Damaſcus, a king of it before Abraham and Iſrael, whom he alſo makes kings of it; and Joſephus [x] would have Uz the ſon of Aram the founder of it, to which Bochart [y] agrees; yet the Arabic writers aſcribe the building of it to others; for the Arabs have a tradition, as Schultens [z] ſays, that there were Canaanites anciently in Syria; for they talk of Dimaſhc the ſon of Canaan, who built the famous city of Damaſcus, and ſo it ſhould ſeem to be called after his name; and Abulpharagius [a] ſays, that Murkus or Murphus, as others call him, king of Paleſtine, built the city of Damaſcus twenty years before the birth of Abraham: from this place many things have their names, which continue with us to this day, as the Damaſk roſe, and the Damaſcene plumb, tranſplanted from the gardens that were about it, for which it was famous; and very probably the invention of the ſilk and linen called Damaſks, owes its riſe from hence. It is here put for the whole country of Syria, and the inhabitants of it, for whoſe numerous tranſgreſſions, ſignified by three and four, the Lord would not turn away his fury from them, juſtly raiſed by their ſins; or the decree which he had paſſed in his own mind, and now made a declaration of, he would not revoke; or not inflict the puniſhment they had deſerved, and he had threatened. The ſenſe is, that he would not ſpare them, or have mercy on them, or defer the execution of puniſhment any longer; he would not forgive their tranſgreſſions. So the Targum, “I will not pardon them.” De Dieu refers it to the earthquake before-mentioned, that God would not turn away that, but cauſe it to come, as he had foretold, for the tranſgreſſions of theſe, and other nations after ſpoken of; but rather it refers to Damaſcus; and ſo ſome render it, I will not turn, or convert it [b]; to repentance, and ſo to my mercy; but leave it in its ſins, and to my juſt judgments. Kimchi thinks that this reſpects four particular ſeaſons, in which Damaſcus, or the Syrians, evilly treated and diſtreſſed the people of Iſrael; firſt in the times of Baaſa; then in the times of Ahab; a third time in the days of Jehoahaz the ſon of Jehu; and the fourth in the times of Ahaz; and then they were puniſhed for them all: becauſe they have threſhed Gilead with threſhing inſtruments of iron; that is, “the inhabitants of the land of Gilead,” as the Targum; this country lay beyond Jordan, and was inhabited by the Reubenites, and Gadites, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; who were uſed in a very cruel manner by Hazael king of Syria, as was foretold by Eliſha, 2 Kings vii. 12. not literally, as in 2 Sam. xii. 31. but by him they were beat, oppreſſed and cruſhed, as the corn of the threſhing floor; which uſed to be threſhed out by means of a wooden inſtrument ſtuck with iron teeth, the top of which was filled with ſtones to preſs it down, and ſo drawn to and fro over the ſheaves of corn, by which means it was beaten out, to which the alluſion is here; ſee the note on 1 Cor. ix. 9. This was done by Hazael king of Syria, who is ſaid to deſtroy the people, and make them like the duſt by threſhing, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. and xiii. 3, 7.

℣. 4. But I will ſend a fire into the houſe of Hazael, &c.] For ſo doing; into his family, his ſons ſons, one of whom perhaps was Rezin, that Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria ſlew, as Aben Ezra obſerves. This denotes the judgments of God upon his poſterity for his cruel uſage of the Iſraelites; and deſigns an enemy that ſhould come into his country, and war made in the midſt of it, by which it ſhould be depopulated; and this being by the permiſſion and providence of God, and according to his will, is ſaid to be ſent by him: which ſhall devour the palaces of Benhadad; a name frequently given to the kings of Syria; there was one of this name the immediate predeceſſor of Hazael, whoſe ſervant he was; and he left a ſon of the ſame name that ſucceeded him, 2 Kings vii. 7, 15. and xiii. 24. theſe may denote the royal palaces of the kings of Syria, which ſhould not be ſpared in this time of deſolation; tho' rather by them may be intended the temples, which he and Hazael are ſaid by Joſephus [c] to build in the city of Damaſcus, whereby they greatly adorned it; and for theſe and other acts of beneficence, they were deified by the Syrians, and worſhipped as gods; and even to the times of Joſephus, he ſays, their ſtatues were carried in pomp every day in honour of them; and ſo the houſe of Hazael, in the preceding clauſe, may ſignify a temple, that was either built by him, or for the worſhip of him, ſince he was deified as well as Benhadad; and it may be obſerved, that as Adad was a common name of the kings of Syria; for according to Nicholas of Damaſcus [d], ten kings that reigned in Damaſcus were all called Adad; ſo this is a name of the god they worſhipped. Pliny ſpeaks of a god worſhipped by the Syrians whoſe name muſt be Adad; ſince according to him, the gem Adadunephros had its name from him [e]; and Macrobius [f] is expreſs for it, that the chief god of the Aſſyrians was called Adad, which ſignifies one; ſee the note on Iſ. lxvi. 17.

℣. 5. I will break alſo the bar of Damaſcus, &c.] Or bars, the ſingular for the plural, by which the gates of the city were barred; and being broken, the gates would be eaſily opened, and way made for the enemy to paſs into the city, and ſpoil it; or it may ſignify the whole ſtrength, and all the fortifications of it. So the Targum, “I will break the ſtrength of Damaſcus:” and cut off the inhabitant from the plain of Aven; or, of an idol, as the Vulgate Latin verſion. It is thought to be ſome place where idols were worſhipped by the Syrians; their gods were the gods of the vallies, which they denied the God of Iſrael to be, 1 Kings xx. 20. Mr. Maundrel[g] ſays, that near Damaſcus there is a plain ſtill called the valley of Bocat, and which he thinks is the ſame with this Bicat-Aven, as it is in the Hebrew text; and which lies between Libanus and Antilibanus, near to the city of Heliopolis; and the Septuagint and Arabic verſions here call this valley the plain of On, which Theodoret interprets of an idol called On. Father Calmet[h] takes it to be the ſame with Heliopolis, now called Balbec, or Baal-beck, the valley of Baal; where was a famous temple dedicated to the ſun, the magnificent remains whereof are ſtill at this day viſible. Balbec is mentioned by the Arabians as the wonder of Syria; and one of their lexicographers ſays, it is three days journey from Damaſcus, where are wonderful foundations, and magnificent veſtiges of antiquity, and palaces with marble columns, ſuch as in the whole world are no where elſe to be ſeen; and ſuch of our European travellers as have viſited it, are ſo charmed with what they beheld there, that they are at a loſs how to expreſs their admiration. On the ſouth-weſt of the town, which ſtands in a delightful plain on the weſt foot of Antilibanus, is an heathen temple, with the remains of ſome other edifices, and among the reſt of a magnificent palace[i]. Some late travellers[k] into theſe parts tell us, that "upon a riſing ground "near the north-eaſt extremity of this plain, and "immediately under Antilibanus, is pleaſantly ſituated the city of Balbec, between Tripoli of "Syria, and Damaſcus, and about ſixteen hours "diſtant from each.—This plain of Bocat they ſay "might by a little care be made one of the richeſt "and moſt fertile ſpots in Syria; for it is more fertile than the celebrated vale of Damaſcus, and "better watered than the rich plains of Eſdraelon "and Rama. In its preſent neglected ſtate it produces corn, ſome good grapes, but very little "wood.—It extends in length from Balbec almoſt "to the ſea; its direction is from north-eaſt by "north, to ſouth-weſt by ſouth; and its breadth "from Libanus to Antilibanus is gueſſed to be in "few places more than four leagues, or leſs than "two." It ſeems to be the ſame with Bicat-Lebanon, or the valley of Lebanon, Joſh. xi. 17. and with that which Strabo[l] calls the hollow plain; the breadth of which to the ſea (he ſays) is two hundred furlongs, and the length from the ſea to the mid-land is double that: and him that holdeth the ſcepter from the houſe of Eden; that is, the king from his pleaſure-houſe; or it may be underſtood of the name of ſome place in Syria, where the kings of it uſed ſometimes to be, and had their palace there, called Beth-Eden; and it ſeems there is ſtill a place near Damaſcus, on mount Libanus, called Eden, as the above traveller ſays; and Calmet[m] takes it to be the ſame that is here ſpoken of: and the people of Syria ſhall go into captivity unto Kir, ſaith the Lord; which laſt clauſe is added for the certainty of it, and accordingly it was punctually fulfilled; for in the times of Rezin, which was about fifty years after this prophecy of Amos, tho' Kimchi ſays but twenty-five, Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria came up againſt Damaſcus, took it, and carried the people captive to Kir, 2 Kings xvi. 9. The Targum and Vulgate Latin verſion call it Cyrene, which ſome underſtand of Cyrene in Egypt; ſee Acts ii. 10. but this cannot be, ſince it was in the hands of the king of Aſſyria; but rather Kir in Media is meant; ſee Iſ. xxii. 6. which was under his dominion; and ſo Joſephus ſays[n], that he carried captive the inhabitants of Damaſcus into Upper Media.

ỽ. 6. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of Gaza, &c.] The chief city of the Philiſtines, and put for the whole country, and deſigns the inhabitants of it: and for four I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; ſee the note on ỽ. 3: becauſe they carried away captive the whole captivity; which cannot be underſtood of the captivity of the whole nation, either of Iſrael or Judah, who were never carried captive by the Philiſtines; but of their carrying away all the ſubſtance of the houſe of Jehoram king of Judah, and of all his ſons and his wives, and left him not one ſon, but the youngeſt, 2 Chron. xxi. 17: to deliver them up to Edom; or, to ſhut them up in Edom[o]; which country alſo revolted from Jehoram, when he and the captains of his chariots going out againſt them, were compaſſed in by them, ỽ. 8, 9, 10. Some think this refers to the time when Sennacherib invaded Judea, and many of the Jews fled to Paleſtine for ſuccour, but inſtead of being ſheltered were delivered up to the Edomites; but this was in the times of Hezekiah, after Amos had propheſied, and therefore can't be referred to; and for the ſame reaſon this cannot be applied to the Edomites and Philiſtines invading and ſmiting Judah, and carrying them captive, 2 Chron. xxviii. 17, 18.

ỽ. 7. But I will ſend a fire on the wall of Gaza, &c.] An enemy that ſhall pull down and deſtroy the walls of it: this was fulfilled in the times of Uzziah, under whom Amos propheſied; and very likely in a very ſhort time after this prophecy, who went out and warred againſt the Philiſtines, and broke down the wall of Gaza, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6. or elſe in the times of Hezekiah, who ſmote the Philiſtines unto Gaza, and the borders thereof, 2 Kings xviii. 8. or however in the times of Nebuchadnezzar, according to the prophecy of Jeremiah, ch. xxv. 20. as alſo in the times of Alexander the Great, who, after he had taken Tyre, beſieged Gaza, and after two months ſiege took it, as Diodorus Siculus relates[p]; the wall being undermined and thrown down, he entered in at the ruins of it, as Curtius[q] ſays; in the times of the Maccabees the ſuburbs of it were burnt by Jonathan, and the place taken, 1 Maccab. xi. 61, 62: which ſhall devour the palaces thereof; the palaces of the governor, and of other great men in it; the governor of it, when Alexander took it, was Batis; and the ſtately towers of it, of which there were many. This city was about fifteen miles ſouth of Aſcalon, and about four or five north of the river Bezor, and at a ſmall diſtance from the Mediterranean. It was ſituated on an eminence, ſurrounded with the moſt beautiful and fertile vallies, watered by the above-mentioned river, and a number of other ſprings; and at a farther diſtance encompaſſed on the inland ſide with hills, all planted with variety of fine fruit-trees. The city itſelf was ſtrong, both by its ſituation, and by the ſtout walls and ſtately towers that ſurrounded it, and built after the Philiſtine manner[r]. Arrian alſo ſays[s], it was a great city built on high ground, and encompaſſed with a ſtrong wall; and was diſtant from the ſea at leaſt twenty furlongs, or two miles and a half; ſee the note on Acts viii. 26.

℣. 8. I will cut off the inhabitants from Aſhdod, &c.] The ſame with Azotus. Acts viii. 40. another principal city of the Philiſtines: this perhaps was fulfilled when Tartan was ſent againſt it by Sargon king of Aſſyria, and took it, Iſ. xx. 1. or however in the times of the Maccabees, when Jonathan took it, and burnt it, and the cities round about it; and took their ſpoils, and burnt the temple of Dagon, and thoſe that fled to it; and what with thoſe that were burnt, and thoſe that fell by the ſword, there periſhed about eight thouſand, 1 Maccab. x. 84, 85. this was ſo ſtrong a place, that, according to Herodotus [t], it held out a ſiege of twenty-nine years, under Pſammitichus king of Egypt. It was, according to Diodorus Siculus [u], two hundred and ſeventy furlongs, or thirty four miles from Gaza before-mentioned; and it was about eight or nine from Aſhkelon, and fourteen or fifteen from Ekron after-mentioned: and him that holdeth the ſcepter from Aſhkelon; another of the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines, whoſe king or governor ſhould be cut off, with the inhabitants of it; this was done by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xlvii. 5, 6, 7. This place was about fifteen miles from Gaza, Mr. Sandys [w] ſays ten, but it was eight or nine miles from Aſhdod; and, as Joſephus [x] ſays, was five hundred and twenty furlongs from Jeruſalem. It was the birth place of Herod the Great, who from thence is called an Aſhkelonite; but the king or governor of it was cut off before his time. It was governed by kings formerly. Juſtin [y] makes mention of a king of Aſhkelon; according to the Samaritan interpreter, Gen. xx. 1. it is the ſame with Gerar, which had a king in the times of Abraham; hence a ſcepter is here aſcribed to it: and I will turn mine hand againſt Ekron; to deſtroy that; another of the chief cities of the Philiſtines. It was about ten miles from Gath; four of the five lordſhips are here mentioned, but not Gath, which was the fifth; ſee 1 Sam. vi. 17, 18. becauſe, as Kimchi ſays, it was in the hands of Judah. All theſe places were inhabited by heathens, and guilty of groſs idolatry, which muſt be one of the tranſgreſſions for which they were puniſhed. Gaza was a place much given to idolatry, as it was even in after-times; when other neighbouring cities embraced the chriſtian religion, the inhabitants of it were violent perſecutors; hence that ſaying of Gregory Nazianzen [z], "who knows not the madneſs of the inhabitants of "Gaza?" here ſtood the temple of the god Marnas [a], which with the Syrians ſignified the lord of men: at Aſhdod or Azotus ſtood the temple of Dagon, where he was worſhipped, 1 Sam. v. 2. 1 Mac. x. 84. Near Aſhkelon, as Diodorus Siculus [b] relates, was a large and deep lake full of fiſhes; and by it was a temple of a famous goddeſs, called by the Syrians Derceto, who had a woman's face, but the reſt of her body in the form of a fiſh; being, as the fable goes, changed into one upon her caſting herſelf into the above lake on a certain occaſion; hence the Syrians abſtained from fiſhes, and worſhipped them as gods. Herodotus [c] calls this city a city of Syria, and ſpeaks of a temple dedicated to Urania Venus; and in the Talmud [d] mention is made of the temple of Zeripha, or of a molten image at Aſhkelon; and beſides idolatry, this place ſeems to have been famous for witchcraft; for it is ſaid [e], that Simeon ben Shetach hung on one day at Aſhkelon fourſcore women for being witches; and at Ekron, Baal-zebub or the god of the fly was worſhipped: and the remnant of the Philiſtines ſhall periſh, ſaith the Lord God; all the other towns and cities belonging to them, beſides thoſe mentioned; which very likely had its accompliſhment in the times of the Maccabees, when they fell into the hands of the Jews.

℣. 9. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of Tyrus, &c.] Or Tyre, a very ancient city in Paleſtine; of which ſee the note on Iſ. xxiii. 1: and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; ſee the note on ℣. 3: becauſe they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom; ſuch of the Iſraelites that fell into their hands, or fled to them for ſhelter, they delivered up to the Edomites their implacable adverſaries, or ſold them to them, as they did to the Grecians, Joel iii. 6: and remembered not the brotherly covenant; either the covenant and agreement that ſhould be among brethren, as the Jews and Edomites were; which the Tyrians ſhould have remembered, and perſuaded them to live peaceably; and not have delivered the one into the hands of the other, to be uſed in a cruel manner as ſlaves: or elſe the covenant made between Hiram king of Tyre, and David king of Iſrael, and which was renewed between Hiram and Solomon, on account of which they called each other brethren, 2 Sam. v. 11. 1 Kings v. 1, 12. and ix. 13. The Phœnicians, of whom the Tyrians were the principal, are noted for being faithleſs and treacherous [f]. Punica fides [g] was the ſame as French faith now; the perfidy of Hannibal is well known [h]. Cicero [i] ſays the Carthaginians, which were a colony of the Tyrians, were a deceitful and lying people; and Virgil [k] calls the Tyrians themſelves, Tyrios bilingues, double-tongued, which Servius interprets deceitful, as referring more to the mind than to the tongue; and obſerves from Livy, the perfidy of the Phœnicians in general, that they have nothing true nor ſacred among them; no fear of God, no regard to an oath, nor any religion; and which are the three or four tranſgreſſions for which they are ſaid here they ſhould be puniſhed; for beſides their ill uſage of the Jews, their idolatry no doubt came into the account: the god that was worſhipped at Tyre was Hercules, by whom was meant the ſun, as Macrobius [l] obſerves; and as there were ſeveral heathen gods of this name, he whom the Tyrians worſhipped is the fourth of the name with Cicero [m]; the ſame is the Melicarthus of Sanchoniatho [n], which ſignifies the king of the city, by which Bochart [o] thinks Tyre is intended. To be a prieſt of Hercules, was the ſecond honour to that of king, as Juſtin [p] obſerves; and ſo careful were the Tyrians of this deity, that they uſed to chain him that he might not depart from them; ſee Jer. x. 4. and a moſt magnificent temple they had in honour of him, and which they pretended was exceeding ancient, as old as the city itſelf, the antiquity of which they ſpeak extravagantly of. Herodotus[q] ſays he ſaw this temple, and which was greatly ornamented, and particularly had two pillars, one of gold, and another of emerald; and enquiring of the prieſts, they told him it was built when their city was, ten thouſand three hundred years before that time; but according to their own hiſtorians[r], Hiram who lived in the days of Solomon built the temple of Hercules, as well as that of Aſtarte; for tho' ſhe is called the goddeſs of the Sidonians, ſhe was alſo worſhipped by the Tyrians; as he alſo ornamented the temple of Jupiter Olympius, and annexed it to the city, which deity alſo it ſeems had worſhip paid it in this place.

℣. 10. But I will ſend a fire on the wall of Tyrus, &c.] An enemy to deſtroy the walls of it: this was done either by Salmaneſer king of the Aſſyrians, in the times of Eulæus king of the Tyrians, of whoſe expedition againſt it Joſephus[s] makes mention: or by Nebuchadnezzar, who took it after thirteen years ſiege of it, in the time of Ithobalus[t]: or by Alexander, by whom it was taken, as Curtius[u] relates, after it had been beſieged ſeven months: which ſhall devour the palaces thereof; of the governor, the great men and merchants in it. Alexander ordered all to be ſlain but thoſe that fled to the temples, and fire to be put to the houſes; which made it a moſt deſolate place, as the above hiſtorian has recorded.

℣. 11. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of Edom, &c.] Or the Edomites, the poſterity of Eſau, whoſe name was Edom, ſo called from the red pottage he ſold his birth-right for to his brother Jacob: and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; ſee the note on ℣. 3. Among theſe three or four tranſgreſſions, not only what follows is included, but their idolatry; for that the Edomites had their idols is certain, tho' what they were cannot be ſaid; ſee 2 Chron. xxv. 14: becauſe he did purſue his brother with the ſword; not Eſau his brother Jacob; for tho' he purpoſed in his heart to ſlay him, which obliged him to flee, and frighted him upon his return, by meeting him with four hundred men, yet he never purſued him with the ſword; but his poſterity the Edomites, not only would not ſuffer the Iſraelites their brethren to paſs by their borders, but came out againſt them with a large army, Numb. xx. 18, 19, 20. and in the times of Ahaz they came againſt Judah with the ſword, and ſmote them, and carried away captives, 2 Chron. xxviii. 17. and were at the taking and deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and aſſiſted and encouraged in it, Pſ. cxxxvii. 7. Obad. ℣. 11—14. tho' to theſe later inſtances the prophet could have no reſpect, becauſe they were after his time: and did caſt off all pity; bowels of compaſſion, natural affection, ſuch as ought to be between brethren, even all humanity: or corrupted, or deſtroyed all pity[w]; ſhewed none, but extinguiſhed all ſparks of it, as their behaviour to the Iſraelites ſhewed, when upon their borders in the wilderneſs: and his anger did tear perpetually; it was deeply rooted in them; it began in their firſt father Eſau, on account of the bleſſing and birthright Jacob got from him; and it deſcended from father to ſon in all generations, and was vented in a moſt cruel manner, like the ravening of a lion, or any other beaſt of prey: and kept his wrath for ever; reſerved it in their breaſts till they had an opportunity of ſhewing it, as Eſau their father propoſed to do, Gen. xxvii. 41.

℣. 12. But I will ſend a fire upon Teman, &c.] A principal city of Edom or Idumea, ſo called from Teman a grandſon of Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 11. Jerom[x] ſays there was in his time a village called Theman, five miles diſtant from the city Petra, and had a Roman garriſon; and ſo ſays Euſebius[y], who places it in Arabia Petræa; it is put for the whole country; it ſignifies the ſouth. So the Targum renders it, "a fire in the ſouth." The fire ſignifies an enemy that ſhould be ſent into it, and deſtroy it: this was Nebuchadnezzar, who, as Joſephus[z] ſays, five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem led his army into Cæleſyria, and took it; and fought againſt the Ammonites and Moabites, and very probably at the ſame time againſt the Edomites: which ſhall devour the palaces of Bozrah; another famous city of the Edomites; there was one of this name in Moab; either there were two cities ſo called, one in Edom, and another in Moab; or rather this city lay, as Jarchi ſays, between Edom and Moab; and ſo ſometimes is placed to one, and ſometimes to another, as it might belong to the one and to the other, according to the event of war. It is the ſame with Bezer in the wilderneſs, appointed a Levitical city, and a city of refuge by Joſhua, ch. xx. 8. and belonged to the tribe of Reuben; but being on the borders of that tribe, and of Moab and Edom, it is aſcribed to each, as they at different times made themſelves maſters of it. It is the ſame with Boſtra, which Ptolemy[a] places in Arabia Petræa; and being on the confines of Arabia Deſerta, and ſurrounded on all ſides with wild deſerts, it is commonly ſpoken of as ſituated in a wilderneſs. Jerom[b] ſpeaks of it as a city of Arabia, in the deſert, to the ſouth, looking to Damaſcus; and according to the Perſian[c] geographer, it is four days journey ſouthward from Damaſcus; and Euſebius places it at the diſtance of twenty-four miles from Adraa or Edrei. The deſtruction of this place is propheſied of by Jeremiah, ch. xlviii. 24. and xlix. 13. and perhaps theſe prophecies were accompliſhed when Nebuchadnezzar made war with the Ammonites and Edomites, as before obſerved; or however in the times of the Maccabees, when Judas Maccabeus took this city, put all the males to the ſword, plundered it, and then ſet fire to it, which literally fulfilled this prophecy, 1 Maccab. v. 28. It was afterwards rebuilt, and became a conſiderable city; in the time of the above Perſian geographer[d], it had a very ſtrong caſtle belonging to it, a gate twenty cubits high, and one of the largeſt baſons or pools of water in all the eaſt. In the fourth century there were biſhops of this place, which aſſiſted in the councils of Nice, Antioch, Epheſus, and Chalcedon, as Reland [e] obſerves; tho' he thinks that Boſtra is not to be confounded with the Bezer of Reuben, or with the Bozra of Moab and Edom; tho' they ſeem to be all one and the ſame place.

℣. 13. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of the children of Ammon, &c.] Theſe are the deſcendents of Ben-Ammi, a ſon of Lot's, by one of his daughters, Gen. xix. 38. are diſtinguiſhed from the Ammonites, 2 Chron. xx. 1. were near neighbours of the Jews, but great enemies to them, tho' a-kin: and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; ſee the note on ℣. 3. Among theſe tranſgreſſions, for which God would puniſh theſe people, are to be reckoned, not only their ill treatment of the Gileadites after-mentioned, but other ſins, which are all included in this number, and particularly their idolatry; for idolaters they were, though the children of Lot; and originally might have had better inſtruction, from which they departed. Moloch or Milcom, which ſignifies a king, was the abomination or idol of the Ammonites, 1 Kings xi. 5, 7. The image of this idol, according to the Jews, had ſeven chapels, and he was within them; and his face was the face of a calf or ox; and his hands were ſtretched out as a man ſtretches out his hands to receive any thing of his friend; and they ſet it on fire within, for it was hollow; and every one according to his offering went in to theſe chapels; he that offered a fowl, went into the firſt chapel; he that offered a ſheep, into the ſecond chapel; if a lamb, into the third; a calf into the fourth; a bullock into the fifth; an ox into the ſixth; but he that offered his ſon, they brought him into the ſeventh; and they put the child before Moloch, and kindled a fire in the inſide of him, until his hands were like fire; and then they took the child, and put him within its arms; and beat upon tabrets or drums, that the cry of the child might not be heard by the father [f]. Benjamin of Tudela [g] reports, that in his time at Gibal, the border of the children of Ammon, a day's journey from Tripoli, was found the remains of a temple of the children of Ammon; and an idol of theirs ſitting upon a throne; and it was made of ſtone, and covered with gold; and there were two women ſitting, one on its right-hand, and the other on its left; and before it an altar, on which they uſed to ſacrifice and burn incenſe to it, as in the times of the children of Ammon. Chemoſh alſo was worſhipped by the Ammonites, Judg. xi. 24. which was alſo the god of the Moabites; of which ſee the note on Jer. xlviii. 7: becauſe they have ript up the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border; this Hazael king of Syria did, according to Eliſha's prophecy; and very likely the children of Ammon might join with him, inaſmuch as they bordered on the countries which he ſmote, 2 Kings viii. 12. and x. 32, 33. This was an inſtance of ſhocking cruelty and inhumanity, to deſtroy at once the innocent and the impotent, tho' frequently done by enemies, 2 Kings xv. 16. Hoſ. xiii. 16. The reaſon of it was not only that they might poſſeſs their land, but keep it when they had got it; there being no heir to claim it, or moleſt them in the poſſeſſion of it; ſee Jer. xlix. 1. tho' ſome read the words, becauſe they divided, or cleaved the mountain of Gilead [h]; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi, tho' they mention the other ſenſe: this they did to get into the land of Gilead, as Hannibal cut thro' the Alps; or rather to remove the borders of it, and lay it even with their own, and ſo enlarge theirs; which, as Kimchi ſays, was a very great iniquity, being one of the curſes written in the law, Deut. xxvii. 17. thus one ſin leads on to another. Some by mountains underſtand towers or fortified cities, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve; ſuch as were built on mountains, which ſenſe is approved by Guſſetius [i].

℣. 14. But I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, &c.] Which was the metropolis of the children of Ammon, and their royal city, 2 Sam. xii. 26. This is to be underſtood of an enemy that ſhould deſtroy it, perhaps Nebuchadnezzar; or of war being kindled and raiſed in their country; this place being put for the whole; ſee the note on Jer. xlix. 2: and it ſhall devour the palaces thereof; the palaces of the king, and his nobles: with ſhouting in the day of battel; with the noiſe of ſoldiers when they make their onſet, or have gained the victory: ſee Jer. xlix. 2: with a tempeſt in the day of the whirlwind; denoting that this judgment ſhould come ſuddenly, and at an unawares, with great force, irreſiſtibly, and a tempeſt added to fire, if literally taken, muſt ſpread the deſolation more abundantly, and make it more terrible.

℣. 15. And their king ſhall go into captivity, &c.] Not only the common people that are left of the ſword ſhall be carried captive, but their king alſo. This was Baalis their laſt king, who was acceſſary to the murder of Gedaliah, Jer. xl. 14. whom the king of Babylon had ſet over the remnant of the Jews left in Judea; which might provoke him to ſend Nebuzaradan his general againſt him, who put his country to fire and ſword, deſtroyed his chief city Rabbah, and carried him and his nobles into captivity. Some underſtand this of Milchom, or Moloch the god of the children of Ammon, who ſhould be ſo far from ſaving them, that he himſelf ſhould be taken and carried off; it being uſual with the conquerors to carry away with them the gods of the nations they conquered; ſee Jer. xlviii. 7. and xlix. 3. So Ptolemy Euergetes king of Egypt having conquered Callinicus king of Syria, carried captive into Egypt the gods he then took, Dan. xi. 8. and it was uſual with the Romans to carry the gods of the nations captive which they conquered, and to carry them in their triumphs as ſuch; ſo Marcellus was blamed for rendring the city of Rome envied and hated by other nations, becauſe not men only, but the gods alſo were carried in pomp as captives: and of Paulus Æmylius it is ſaid, that the firſt day of his triumph was ſcarce ſufficient for the paſſing along of the captive ſtatues, pictures and coloſſes, which were drawn on two hundred and fifty chariots [k]: he and his princes together, ſaith the Lord; which is repeated, and eſpecially the laſt words added, for the confirmation of it. The Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions read, their prieſts and their princes, as in Jer. xlix. 3. This was fulfilled five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as Joſephus [l] relates.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the prophet foretels the calamities that ſhould come upon the Moabites for their tranſgreſſions, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and the deſtruction of Judah and Jeruſalem for their iniquities, ℣. 4, 5. alſo the judgments of God that ſhould come upon Iſrael the ten tribes for their ſins, which ſins are enumerated; their oppreſſion of the poor, their lewdneſs and idolatry, ℣. 6, 7, 8. and which are aggravated by the bleſſings of goodneſs beſtowed upon them, both temporal and ſpiritual, ℣. 9, 10, 11, 12. wherefore they are threatened with ruin, which would be inevitable, notwithſtanding their ſwiftneſs, ſtrength and courage, and their ſkill in ſhooting arrows, and riding horſes, ℣. 13, 14, 15, 16.

℣. 1. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of Moab, &c.] Or the Moabites, who deſcended from the eldeſt ſon of Lot, by one of his daughters; and tho' related, were great enemies to the Iſraelites; they ſent for Balaam to curſe them when on their borders, and greatly oppreſſed them in the times of the judges: and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; ſee the note on ch. i. 3. Idolatry, as well as the ſin next charged, muſt be one of theſe four tranſgreſſions: the idols of Moab were Chemoſh and Baal-peor; of the former ſee the note on Jer. xlviii. 7. and of the latter ſee the note on Hoſ. ix. 10: becauſe he burnt the bones of the king of Edom into lime; either like to lime, or for lime; he burnt them thoroughly, till they came to powder as ſmall and as white as lime, and uſed them inſtead of it to plaſter the walls of his palace, by way of contempt, as the Targum; and ſo Jarchi and Kimchi: this is thought probable by Quinquarboreus [m], for which he is blamed by Sanctius, who obſerves, there is no foundation for it in ſcripture; and that the aſhes of the bones of one man would not be ſufficient to plaſter a wall; and beſides, could never be brought to ſuch a conſiſtence, as to be fit for ſuch a purpoſe; yet if it only means bare burning them, ſo as that they became like lime, as the colour of it, it could not be thought ſo very barbarous and inhuman, ſince it was the uſage of ſome nations, eſpecially the Romans, to burn their dead: no doubt ſomething ſhocking is intended, and which uſage to the dead is reſented by the Lord. Sir Paul Rycaut [n] relates a piece of barbarity ſimilar to this, that the city of Philadelphia was built with the bones of the beſieged, by the prince that took it by ſtorm. Kimchi thinks, as other interprets alſo do, that it refers to the hiſtory in 2 Kings iii. 27. where the king of Moab is ſaid to offer his eldeſt ſon that ſhould have reigned in his ſtead for a burnt-offering; which he underſtands, not of the king of Moab's ſon, but of the king of Edom's ſon, here called a king, becauſe he was to have ſucceeded his father in the kingdom; but it ſeems rather to be the king of Moab's own ſon that he offered; nor is it likely that the king of Edom's ſonw as in his lands; for he would have broke thro' into the king of Edom, but could not; and then did this raſh action; not in wrath and fury, but in a religious way. The prophet here refers to ſome fact, notorious in thoſe times, the truth of which is not to be queſtioned, tho' we have no other account of it in ſcripture; very probably it was the ſame king of Moab that did it, and the ſame king of Edom that was ſo uſed, mentioned in the above hiſtory; the king of Moab being enraged at him for joining with the kings of Iſrael and Judah againſt him, who afterwards falling into his hands, he uſed him in this barbarous manner; or very likely being poſſeſſed of his country after his death, or however of his grave, he took him out of it, and burnt his bones to lime, in revenge of what he had done to him. This was a very cruel action thus to uſe an human body, and this not the body of a private perſon, but of a king; and was an act of impiety, as well as of inhumanity, to take the bones of the dead out of his grave, and burn them; and which tho' done to an heathen prince, God who is the creator of all, and governor of the whole world, and whoſe vicegerents princes are, reſented; and therefore threatend the Moabites with utter deſtruction for it.

℣. 2. But I will ſend a fire upon Moab, &c.] Either on the whole country, or on ſome particular city ſo called, as in all the other prophecies; and there was a city called Moab, now Areopolis, ſee the note on Jer. xlviii. 4. tho' it may be put for the whole country, into which an enemy ſhould be ſent to deſtroy it, even Nebuchadnezzar: and it ſhall devour the palaces of Kerioth; a principal city in the land of Moab; according to Kimchi, it was the royal city, and therefore mention is made of the palaces of it, here being the palace of the king and his princes; ſee Jer. xlviii. 24. tho' the word may be rendered cities, as it is by the Septuagint and Arabic verſions; and ſo the Targum, “and “ſhall conſume the palaces of the fortified place;” and ſo may ſignify all the cities of Moab, and their palaces: or however may be put for them: and Moab ſhall die with tumult, with ſhouting, and with the ſound of the trumpet; that is, the Moabites ſhall die, not in their beds, and in peace, but in war, amidſt the howlings of the wounded, the ſhouts of ſoldiers, the claſhing of arms, and the ſound of trumpets.

℣. 3. And I will cut off the judge from the midſt thereof, &c.] Either from the midſt of Moab, the country in general; or from Kerioth in particular, ſo Kimchi; meaning their principal governor, their king, as Aben Ezra; for kings ſometimes have acted as judges, took the bench, and ſat and adminiſtered juſtice to their ſubjects: and I will ſlay all the princes thereof with him, ſaith the Lord; the king, and the princes of the blood, and his nobles; ſo that there ſhould be none to ſucceed him, or to protect and defend the people; the deſtruction ſhould be an entire one, and inevitable, for the mouth of the Lord had ſpoken it. This was fulfilled at the ſame time as the prophecy againſt the children of Ammon by Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem [o], which is next threatened.

℣. 4. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of Judah, &c.] With whom Benjamin muſt be joined; for the two tribes are meant as diſtinct from the ten tribes, under the name of Iſrael, following. The prophet proceeds from the heathens round about to the people of God themſelves, for the ill uſage of whom chiefly the above nations are threatened with ruin, leſt they ſhould promiſe themſelves impunity in ſin; tho' if they rightly conſidered things, they could not expect it; ſince, if the heathens, ignorant of the will of God, and his law, were puniſhed for their ſins, then much more thoſe who knew it, and did it not, Luke xii. 47. and he begins with Judah, partly becauſe he was of that tribe, leſt he ſhould be charged with flattery and partiality; and partly becauſe of the order of his prophecy, which being chiefly concerned with Iſrael, it was proper that what he had to ſay to Judah ſhould be delivered firſt: and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; the prophet retains the ſame form as in his prophecies againſt the heathen nations; his own people, and God's profeſſing people being guilty of numerous tranſgreſſions, as well as they, and more aggravated than theirs; ſee the note on ch. i. 3: becauſe they have deſpiſed the law of the Lord; a law ſo holy, juſt and good, and ſo righteous, as no other nation had; and yet was not only not obſerved, but contemned: other nations ſinned againſt the light of nature, and are not charged with breaches of the law of God, which was not given them; but theſe people had it, yet lightly eſteemed it; counted it as a ſtrange thing; walked not according to it, but caſt it away from them; which was a great affront to the ſovereignty of God, and a trampling upon his legiſlative power and authority: and have not kept his commandments; or ſtatutes [p]; the ordinances of the ceremonial law, which he appointed them to obſerve for the honour of his name, as parts of his worſhip; and to lead them into the deſigns of his grace and ſalvation by the Meſſiah: and their lies cauſed them to err; either their idols, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; which are lying vanities, and deceive, and by which they were made to err from the pure worſhip of the living and true God to ſuperſtition and idolatry; or the words of the falſe prophets, as Kimchi; the falſe doctrines they taught, contrary to the word of God, directing them to ſeek for life by their own works; and promiſing them peace, when deſtruction was at hand, and daubing with untempered morter; and as no lie is of the truth, but againſt it, ſo one untruth leads on to another: after the which their fathers have walked; after which lies, idols and errors, as in Ur of the Chaldees, in Egypt, in the wilderneſs, and even in later times: this was no excuſe to them that they followed the way of their anceſtors, but rather an aggravation of their guilt, that they imitated them, took no warning by them; but filled up the meaſure of their iniquities, and ſhewed themſelves to be a ſeed of evil doers, a generation of wicked men, the ſons of rebellious parents.

[n] The preſent ſtate of the Greek church, ch. 2.

[o] Joſeph. Antiq. l. 10. c. 9. §. 7. Vid. Judith, i. 12.

℣. 5. But I will ſend a fire upon Judah, &c.] An enemy, Nebuchadnezzar, who ſhould burn, waſte and deſtroy all that were in his way: and it ſhall devour the palaces of Jeruſalem; the chief city of Judah, the royal city, where ſtood the temple, the palace of the Moſt High, and the palaces of the king and his nobles; theſe were burnt with fire when it was taken by the Chaldean army, about two hundred years after this prophecy, Jer. lii. 13.

℣. 6. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of Iſrael, &c.] The ten tribes rent from the houſe of David in the times of Rehoboam, and who departed from the true worſhip of God, and ſet up calves at Dan and Bethel: and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof; the following part of this prophecy is taken up in pointing at the ſins and puniſhment of Iſrael; now the prophet is come to the main buſineſs he was ſent to do: becauſe they ſold the righteous for ſilver; meaning not any particular perſon, as Joſeph ſold by his brethren, for in that they were all concerned, Judah as well as the reſt; nor Chriſt, as others [q], ſold for thirty pieces of ſilver; ſince the perſons here charged with it, and the times in which it was done, will not agree with that caſe; but the ſenſe is, that the judges of Iſrael were ſo corrupt, that for a piece of money they would give a cauſe againſt a righteous man, and in favour of an unjuſt man that bribed them: and the poor for a pair of ſhoes; that is, for a mere trifle they would pervert juſtice; if two men came before them with a cauſe, and both poor; yet if one could but give a pair of ſhoes, or any thing he could part with, tho' he could not give money; ſo mean and ſordid were they, they would take it, and give the cauſe for him, however unjuſt it was.

℣. 7. That pant after the duſt of the earth on the head of the poor, &c.] Either were greedy after money, the duſt of the earth, and even that ſmall portion of it the poor were poſſeſſed of; they could not be eaſy that they ſhould enjoy that little of it they did, but were deſirous to get it out of their hands by oppreſſion and injuſtice: or they were eagerly deſirous of throwing the poor upon the earth, and trampling upon them, and dragging them thro' the duſt of it, thereby filling their heads, and covering their faces with it; and cauſed them to put their mouths in the duſt, and be humble ſuppliants to them. Some think there is an alluſion to an ancient cuſtom, which Joſeph ben Gorion [r] ſpeaks of, that a guilty perſon ſhould ſtand before the judges, clad in black, and his head covered with duſt; and this theſe judges deſired here might be done by the rich, that the poor might be accuſed by them, from whom they expected gifts: and turn aſide the way of the meek; decline doing them juſtice, pervert it, and hinder the courſe of it, denying it to thoſe who are humble, meek and modeſt; or elſe by one means or another turned them from the good ways in which they were walking, and by degrees at length brought them to ſuch impudence and immodeſty, as is next expreſſed, ſo Aben Ezra: and a man and his father will go in unto the ſame maid, to profane my holy name; that is, will be guilty of ſuch uncleanneſs, as not only to have and enjoy the ſame harlot, but of ſuch inceſt, as that the ſon would lie with his father's wife, and the father lie with his ſon's wife; a ſin which was not named among the Gentiles, 1 Cor. v. 1. and whereby the name of God was blaſphemed among them, as if their religion taught them and encouraged them in ſuch filthy actions; ſee Rom. ii. 24.

℣. 8. And they laid themſelves down upon cloaths laid to pledge, by every altar, &c.] That is, the cloaths they took in pledge of poor people, which they ſhould have reſtored before ſun-ſetting, Exod.

xxii. 26, 27. theſe they ſpread by every altar, of which they had many erected to their idols, and on theſe as on carpets they ſlept by them, as was uſual with the Gentiles; who not only in common uſed to lie and ſleep on garments, or carpets, or ſkins ſpread on the floor [s], but upon ſuch in the temples of their idols, in order to obtain good dreams: ſo in the temple of Amphiaraus in Greece, after purgations and ſacrifices to him, and to the gods whoſe names were engraven on the ſame altar, they ſlew a ram, and ſpread the ſkin, on which they laid themſelves down, and had dreams, the ſignification and events of which they preſently interpreted [t]; and Jerom ſays [u], they uſed to ſpread the ſkins of the ſacrifices, and lie upon them, that they might by dreams know things to come, which cuſtom in the temple of Æſculapius continued to his times; and this cuſtom might be imitated by the Jews; and ſo they are deſcribed by ſuch, who ſleep in the temples of idols, in the Vulgate Latin verſion of Iſ. lxv. 4. ſee the note there; but very falſe it is what Strabo [w] ſays, that the Jews were taught this cuſtom by Moſes; telling them that ſuch as lived ſoberly and righteouſly ought to ſleep in the temple, where they might expect good dreams for themſelves and others, as good gifts and ſigns from God, which others might not expect: or elſe the ſenſe is, they laid themſelves down on theſe cloaths, and feaſted on them; it being their cuſtom at meals not to ſit upright, but to recline on couches; or as the manner of the Turks and other eaſtern nations to ſit on carpets; and it was alſo the cuſtom of the heathens to feaſt in their temples, and by their altars, in honour of their gods. So Herodotus relates [x], that at a feſtival of Juno with the Argives, the mother of Cleobis and Biton prayed the goddeſs, whom they had drawn to the temple, oxen not being ready, that ſhe would give to them what was beſt for men; after which prayer, it is ſaid, they ſacrificed and feaſted; and the young men falling aſleep in the temple, never roſe more, but finiſhed this life; the deity judging it better for a man to die, than to live; and this cuſtom of feaſting in idols temples obtained in the times of the apoſtles, as appears from 1 Cor. viii. 10. and which was now obſerved by the Iſraelites, with this aggravation of their ſin; that they laid themſelves on the garments of the poor they had taken for a pawn, when they were performing their idolatrous rites; which muſt be very provoking to God: and they drink the wine of the condemned in the houſe of their God; either wine which uſed to be given to condemned malefactors to cheer and refreſh them; which cuſtom among the Jews was founded on Prov. xxxi. 6, 7. ſee the note there. The manner was to put a grain of frankincenſe into a cup of wine, which they gave to the malefactor juſt as he was going to be executed, that his mind might be diſturbed and become inſenſible; and which was uſually the free gift of honourable women, out of compaſſion to the ſufferer; and if they did it not, it was provided at the expence of the public [y]; but this ſeems to be done rather to intoxicate and ſtupify them, that they might not feel their pain and miſery, than to cheer; and is thought to be the potion which was offered to Chriſt, and he refuſed, Mark xv. 23. but whether ſuch a cuſtom obtained in the times of the prophet is a queſtion; nor does it ſeem very likely that theſe men would chuſe ſuch ſort of wine; wherefore rather wine bought with the money they received by the fines and amercements of thoſe they unjuſtly condemned, is intended. The Targum renders it, the wine of rapine; and this they were not content to drink only in their own houſes, but drank it at their feſtivals in the temples of their idols, ſuch as were built for the calves of Dan and Bethel, and other idols.

℣. 9. Yet deſtroyed I the Amorite before them, &c.] Here the Lord by the prophet reckons up the many favours and bleſſings he had beſtowed upon Iſrael, which was an aggravation of their ſins, and ſhewed them to be guilty of great ingratitude, and a juſtification of him in his puniſhment of them. He drove out the ſeven nations of Canaanites from before them, to make way for them, and deſtroyed them, of which the Amorite was a principal, and is here put for all the reſt: whoſe height was like the height of the cedars; being both tall of ſtature, and in great honour and dignity with the other nations, and in very opulent and flouriſhing circumſtances: and he was ſtrong as the oaks; not only like the tall cedars of Lebanon for their height and largeneſs of ſtature, but like the ſturdy oaks for the ſtrength of their bodies, being of the race of the giants, Numb. xiii. 28, 32, 33. Deut. iii. 11: yet I deſtroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath; that is, utterly deſtroyed him, root and branch, ſo that nothing of him remained; ſtill perſiſting in the metaphor of a tree. Jarchi interprets it of their ſuperior and inferior princes; but it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of children with their parents, the one being the fruit, the other the root; and both being deſtroyed, there muſt be utter ruin.

℣. 10. Alſo I brought you up from the land of Egypt, &c.] Where they were bond-ſlaves, and in great affliction and diſtreſs, and unable to help themſelves; but the Lord wrought deliverance for them, and brought them out of this houſe of bondage with an high hand, and a mighty arm: and led you forty years thro' the wilderneſs; going before them in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night; providing them with all things neceſſary, with food and raiment, and protecting them from all their enemies: to poſſeſs the land of the Amorite; the whole land of Canaan, ſo called from a principal nation of it.

℣. 11. And I raiſed up your ſons for prophets, &c.] Such as Moſes, Joſhua, and the ſeventy elders, and others; not only to foretel things to come, but to teach and inſtruct the people in the doctrines and duties of religion, and to warn them of their ſins, and the danger of them: and of your young men for Nazarites; as Sampſon, Samuel, and others; whoſe vow not only obliged them from ſhaving their hair, but to abſtain from drinking wine, and eating grapes, which the youthful age is inclined unto; but ſuch grace was given them, as enabled them to deny themſelves ſenſual gratifications, and to be examples of piety and conſtant attendance on the ſervice of God, and inſtructing the people. The Targum is, "of your "young men for teachers;" theſe were the ſpiritual mercies, as the former were the temporal ones, the Lord beſtowed on theſe people, for the truth of which he appeals to them: is it not even thus, O ye children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord? can ye deny it? the thing was too notorious to be contradicted.

℣. 12. But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink, &c.] Contrary to their vow and calling, and in contempt of it, and to make them like themſelves; they either perſuaded them, or forced them to it: and commanded the prophets, ſaying, propheſy not; hard and heavy things, judgments and denunciations of vengeance, only ſmooth things; by this authoritative language it appears, that this is ſaid of the rulers and governors of the people, as king, princes, and prieſts; ſee ch. vii. 12, 13.

℣. 13. Behold, I am preſſed under you, &c.] With the weight of their ſins, with which they had made him to ſerve, and had wearied him; his patience was quite wore out, he could bear them no longer: as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves; as a cart in harveſt-time, in which the ſheaves of corn are carried home; when one ſheaf is laid upon another, till they can lay no more, and the cart is loaded, and over-loaded with them, and ready to break, or be preſſed into the earth with them: thus Jehovah repreſents himſelf as loaded and burdened with the ſins of theſe people, and therefore would viſit for them, and inflict deſerved puniſhment. Some render it actively, behold, I preſs[a], or am about to preſs your place, as a cart full of ſheaves preſſeth[a]; the horſe or horſes which draw it, eſpecially the laſt; or the ground it goes upon; or as a cart ſtuck with iron ſpikes, and loaded with ſtones, being drawn over a corn-floor, preſſes the full ſheaves, and beats out the grain, which was their way of preſſing it: ſo the Lord ſignifies he would afflict and diſtreſs this people, bring them into ſtrait circumſtances, by a cloſe ſiege, and other judgments, which ſhould ruin and deſtroy them; and which was firſt begun by Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, and finiſhed by Salmaneſer, who carried away the ten tribes captive. So the Targum, "behold, I bring diſtreſs upon you, and it ſhall "ſtraiten you in your place, as a cart is ſtraitened "which is loaded with ſheaves."

℣. 14. Therefore the flight ſhall periſh from the ſwift, &c.] They ſhould be ſo ſtraitened and cooped up, and be ſo loaded with preſſures, that thoſe, as ſwift of foot as Aſahel, ſhould not be able to make their eſcape by fleeing: and the ſtrong ſhall not ſtrengthen his force; ſhould not increaſe it, or muſter it up, and exert it to ſuch a degree, as to be able to defend and ſecure himſelf from the enemy: neither ſhall the mighty deliver himſelf; his ſoul or life; a ſoldier, a man of war, an expert and courageous officer at the head of his troop, or even the general of the army; ſee Pſ. xxxiii. 16.

℣. 15. Neither ſhall he ſtand that handleth the bow, &c.] That is, at ſome diſtance, and can make uſe of his inſtruments of war afar off; yet will not think it ſafe to ſtand his ground, but will betake himſelf to his heels as faſt as he can to ſave himſelf: and he that is ſwift of foot ſhall not deliver himſelf; this is repeated, leſt any ſhould place confidence in their agility, and to ſhew how complete and inevitable the affliction will be: neither ſhall he that rideth the horſe deliver himſelf; by fleeing on horſe-back, no more than he that is on foot; no ways that can be deviſed or thought on, would preſerve from this general calamity; ſee Pſ. xxxiii. 17.

℣. 16. And he that is courageous among the mighty, &c.] Or ſtrong in his heart[b]; one that is of a great heart, famous for courage and bravery, that excels in it among the mighty; the moſt valiant ſoldiers and officers: ſhall flee away naked in that day; ſhall throw away his armour, nay put off his cloaths, as being both an hindrance to him in his flight, and that he may make the better ſpeed: ſaith the Lord; which is added to ſhew the certainty of all this; it might be depended upon that ſo it would be, ſince the Lord God of truth had ſpoken it; and it was fulfilled about fourſcore years after this prophecy.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter, the prophet goes on with his prophecy againſt Iſrael, whom God had highly favoured, and yet ſinned againſt him, and therefore muſt expect to be puniſhed by him; and the rather, ſince he and they were not agreed; and therefore there could be no communion between them, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and by various ſimilies are ſet forth the cauſe of divine judgments, the certain deſign of them, and their continuance till the end is anſwered; which ſhould be attended to, ſince every thing of this kind is of God, who giving his prophets notice of it, they are under an abſolute neceſſity of declaring it; nor ſhould they be blamed for it, ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. and even the heathen nations are appealed unto as witneſſes of the ſins of Iſrael, that cauſed ſuch a denunciation of wrath; their tumults, oppreſſion, injuſtice, violence and robbery, ℣. 9, 10. wherefore an adverſary is threatened to be ſent among them, that ſhould utterly deſtroy them, ſo that few ſhould eſcape, ℣. 11, 12. particularly their idolatry and luxury ſeem to have been reigning ſins, which had a great hand in bringing on their ruin, and for which the Lord would puniſh them, ℣. 13, 14, 15.

℣. 1. Hear this word, that the Lord hath ſpoken againſt you, O children of Iſrael, &c.] The prophecy againſt Iſrael begins in the preceding chapter, where notice is taken of their ſins, at leaſt ſome of them, and of their aggravated circumſtances, and ſure deſtruction; and here they are called upon to hearken and liſten to what the Lord by his prophet had ſpoken, and was about to ſpeak unto them; and to receive this word, as the Targum; to receive it as the word of God, and not men, and with all humility and reverence; and to take it, and apply it to themſelves, to whom it juſtly belonged; and to make a proper uſe and improvement of it, by humiliation and reformation. A word this was, againſt the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt; it was but a family that went down into Egypt, and tho' it greatly increaſed there, it was no more when it was brought up from thence: a family under the peculiar care of Jehovah, as the bringing them out of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage, when greatly diſtreſſed there, abundantly ſhews; and which was a wonderful bleſſing and favour; and therefore often mentioned, and led on to many other bleſſings and mercies: a family which was the Lord's own, and therefore he had a right to chaſtiſe and correct them for their ſins. It ſeems by this phraſe, the whole family, as if the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin were included; though the prophecy ſeems chiefly intended againſt the ten tribes, which went by the name of Iſrael, ever ſince the breach in Rehoboam's time, as diſtinct from Judah.

ỳ. 2. You only have I known of all the families of the earth, &c.] All the families or nations of the earth, and all the inhabitants of it, are known by the Lord, as he is the omniſcient God; but none had been known by him as a family, or a nation, with that love and affection as this family had been, or diſtinguiſhed by his favours and bleſſings as they, not only temporal, but ſpiritual; beſides the land of Canaan, and all the good things in it, they had the law of the Lord, his word, worſhip, and ordinances among them; he choſe them for himſelf above all people, and gave peculiar marks of his affection to them, and ſpecial inſtances of his goodneſs, and of his care over them, and concern for them; ſee Deut. iv. 6, 7, 8. and vii. 6, 7. Pſ. cxlvii. 19, 20. Rom. ix. 4, 5. Therefore I will puniſh you for all your iniquities; or viſit upon you[c], or againſt you; in a way of chaſtiſement and correction: they were a family he had highly favoured, and yet departed from him; children he had brought up in a tender manner, and brought out of a moſt miſerable condition, and yet rebelled againſt him; he had followed and loaded them with his benefits, and they had proved ungrateful to him; he had given them a revelation of his mind and will, and they had rejected it, and therefore knowing, and not doing it, were worthy of more ſtripes; their ſins were more aggravated than others, being againſt goodneſs and mercy, light and knowledge; and therefore the Lord was determined to make an example of them; ſee 1 Pet. iv. 17.

ỳ. 3. Can two walk together, except they be agreed?] Unleſs they meet together, and appoint time and place, when and where they ſhall ſet out, what road they will take, and whither they will go; without ſuch conſultation and agreement, it cannot be thought they ſhould walk together; and not amicably, unleſs united in friendſhip, and are of the ſame affection to each other, and of the ſame ſentiments one with another; or it is much if they don't fall out by the way. The deſign of theſe words is to ſhew, that without friendſhip there's no fellowſhip, and without concord no communion; as this is the caſe between man and man, ſo between God and man; and that Iſrael could not expect that God ſhould walk with them, and ſhew himſelf friendly to them, and continue his favours with them, when they walked contrary to him; when they were ſo diſagreeable to him in their ſentiments of religion, in their worſhip, and the rites of it, and in the whole of their conduct and behaviour. And to a ſpiritual walk with God, and communion with him, agreement is requiſite. God and man were originally chief friends, but ſin ſet them at variance; a reconciliation became neceſſary to their walking together again; which was ſet on foot, not by man, who had no inclination to it, nor knew how to go about it, if he had, and much leſs able to effect it; but by the Lord, the offended party: it began in his thoughts, which were thoughts of peace; it was ſet on foot by him in the council of peace, and concluded in the covenant of peace; and his Son was ſent to bring it about; and through his obedience, ſufferings, and death, through his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction, the agreement is made on the part of God, his juſtice is ſatisfied; but ſtill it is neceſſary man ſhould be agreed too; this is brought out by the Spirit of God, who ſhews the ſinner the enmity of his mind, the ſin and danger of it, ſlays this enmity, and puts in new principles of light, life, and love; when the ſoul is reconciled to God's way of ſalvation, and loves the Lord, and delights in him; and both being thus agreed, the one by the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, and the other by the Spirit of Chriſt; ſee Rom. v. 10. they walk comfortably together: the ſaint walks with God, not only as in his ſight and preſence, but by faith, and in his fear, in the ways and ordinances of the Lord; and particularly is frequent in prayer and meditation, in which much of his walk with God lies: and God walks with him; he grants his gracious preſence; manifeſts his love and favour to him; talks with him by the way; diſcloſes the ſecrets of his heart; and indulges him with nearneſs and communion with him; but all is founded on mutual agreement. And ſo it muſt be between men and men, that walk in a religious way; regenerate and unregenerate perſons cannot walk together, there being no concord, 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. nor can all ſorts of profeſſors; they muſt agree in the way Chriſt, and in the fundamental principles of religion; and in worſhip, and the manner of it; and in all the ordinances of the goſpel, and the manner of adminiſtring them.

ỳ. 4. Will a lion roar in the foreſt when he hath no prey? &c.] He will not, unleſs he has it in his ſight, or in his paws; he roars when he firſt ſees it, whereby he terrifies the creature, that it cannot move till he comes up to it; and when he has got it in his paws, he roars over it, to invite others to partake with him. Now prophecy from the Lord is compared to the roaring of a lion, ch. i. 2. and this is never in a way of judgment without a cauſe; the ſin of men, or of a nation, which makes them a prey to the wrath and fury of God. Will a young lion cry, or give forth his voice out of his den, if he have taken nothing? that is, if the old lion has taken nothing, and brought nothing unto him; which ſignifies the ſame as before; unleſs by the young lion is meant the prophets of the Lord, who never propheſy but when they have a commiſſion from him, and a people are pointed out to them as the juſt prey of his wrath and vengeance. All the images here uſed are very natural; the lion is for the moſt part in woods and foreſts, hence called the lion out of the foreſt, Jer. v. 6. as he is by Theocritus[d]; where his voice is heard, but not unleſs he is in ſight of his prey, or has got it, even tho' ever ſo hungry; but when he has it in view, he roars ſo terribly, that, as Baſil[e] obſerves, many animals that could eſcape him thro' their ſwiftneſs, yet are ſo affrighted at his roaring, that they have no power to move; and they have their dens either in caves or in thickets, where are the ſhe-lioneſs and the young lions, to whom the prey is brought; ſee Nah. ii. 11, 12.

℣. 5. Can a bird fall in a ſnare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? &c.] No, there muſt be a ſnare ſet, or a bird can never be taken in it; and that is done, not by chance, but with the deſign of the fowler; yea, with the knowledge and will of God himſelf, Matt. x. 29, the deſign of this is to ſhew, that no judgment or affliction comes upon a people, or they into one, by chance, or without the appointment of God; they are his nets and ſnares, which he on purpoſe ſpreads and ſets for perſons, to take them in; and unleſs he did do ſo, they would not fall into any; ſee Job v. 6, 7. and xxiii. 14. and Ezek. xii. 13. Shall one take up a ſnare from the earth; the Targum adds, out of its time; and have taken nothing at all? when men ſet a ſnare to catch any thing, do they take it up before any thing is caught? they do not; they let it ſtand till ſomething is enſnared in it, and ſo their end anſwered, and then they take it up, and not before. And thus when God denounces or brings a judgment, or an affliction, upon a people, does he remove it, before the end is anſwered by it? he does not; if the end is to bring men to a ſenſe of ſin, and humiliation for it; or to bring near to God, who have been wandring from him; or to try their graces, or take away their ſin; when ſuch an end is anſwered, then, and not till then, is the ſnare taken up, or the affliction removed; till ſuch an end is brought about, the diſtreſs is continued, or the threatening of it; and of this Iſrael is hereby aſſured.

℣. 6. Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, &c.] Meaning not any trumpet blown, as the ſilver trumpet for the gathering of the people to worſhip, or the jubilee trumpet which proclaimed liberty to them, or any other, expreſſive of joy and gladneſs; but the ſound of the trumpet, the alarm of war, or what is blown by the watchmen on the walls, deſcrying an enemy, or ſome danger, near: and the people not be afraid? they muſt, they uſually are, leſt their lives, and their childrens, ſhould be taken away, and their ſubſtance become a prey to the enemy: or, and the people not run together[f]? into ſome one place for ſhelter, or to conſult together, how to provide for their ſafety, and ſecure themſelves from danger. So when the prophets of the Lord, by his order, lift up their voice like a trumpet, to ſhew his people their tranſgreſſions; or when, as watchmen, they blow the trumpet, to give notice of approaching danger; can they hear ſuch denunciations of his wrath for their ſins, and not tremble at them? or not take ſome ways and methods to eſcape it? Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it? which is not to be underſtood of the evil of ſin, of which God is not the author, it being contrary to his nature and will; and tho' he permits it to be done by others, yet he never does it himſelf, nor ſo much as tempts men to it, Jam. i. 13, 14. unleſs the words ſhould be rendered, as they may be, ſhall there be evil in a city, and ſhall not the Lord do or work[g]? ſhall ſin be committed in a city, all ſorts of ſin, in the moſt bold and extravagant manner, and will not the Lord do ſomething to ſhew his reſentment of it? is it not time for him to ariſe and work for his name-ſake? will he not viſit for theſe things, and be avenged on ſuch a city, and the inhabitants of it? but this may be interpreted of the evil of affliction or judgment; which, wherever it comes, is by the order and appointment of God, and is inflicted by him; thus evil, as well as good, comes out of the mouth and hand of the Moſt High; and he creates the evil of adverſity, as well as makes peace and proſperity; ſee Job ii. 10. Lam. iii. 38. Iſ. xlv. 7.

℣. 7. Surely, the Lord God will do nothing, &c.] In the world, in a nation or city; no remarkable event has happened, or ſhall happen, to the ſons of men: but he revealeth his ſecret unto his ſervants the prophets; what he willed and determined to do, which was a ſecret in his own breaſt, till revealed; and this generally, and for the moſt part, he makes known to thoſe that fear and ſerve him; and eſpecially to whom he employs in public ſervice, as his prophets and miniſters, previous to his accompliſhment of it: thus he revealed to Noah, the drowning of the old world by the flood; to Abraham the burning of Sodom and Gomorrha; and to the ſame ſervant and friend of his, the affliction of his poſterity four hundred years in a ſtrange land, and then to be brought out with great ſubſtance; to Abijah the Shilonite, the rending of ten tribes from the houſe of David; to Jeremiah, the ſeventy years captivity of the Jews in Babylon; to Iſaiah, their deliverance from thence, thro' Cyrus by name; to Daniel, the four monarchies, the nature, riſe, and fall of them; and to John, the diſciple of Chriſt, all the material things that ſhould come to paſs, relating to the church and world, from the firſt times of the goſpel, to the ſecond coming of Chriſt; which that book is a Revelation of, that bears that name; ſee Gen. xviii. 17. and ſo that grand affair, which God has brought about in the world, the ſalvation of his people by his Son, which was a ſecret hid in his heart before the world began, this he revealed to his ſervants, before it was effected; not only the ſcheme of it, but the author of it, whom he very early gave notice of; and who was ſpoken of by the mouth of all the prophets, from the beginning of the world; declaring who and what he was, the Son of God; that he ſhould be incarnate, and born of a virgin; when he ſhould appear, and where, and in what part of the world; alſo in what way and manner he ſhould obtain ſalvation, by his obedience and ſufferings; and all the circumſtances relating thereunto, are moſt minutely and exactly declared by him. Yea, God reveals unto his ſaints in common, the ſecret of his purpoſes, reſpecting their election, redemption, and regeneration, which is made known in effectual vocation; and of the bleſſings of his grace in the covenant, and alſo of his providences; and of his love, grace, and mercy; and of his goſpel, and the myſteries of it; thus he deals with them as his friends, rather than as his ſervants; ſee Pſ. xxv. 14. John xv. 15.

℣. 8. The lion hath roared, who will not fear? &c.] Amos ſaid this from his own experience, who having been an herdſman in the wilderneſs of Tekoa, had often heard a lion roar, which had put him into a pannic, both for himſelf, and the cattel he kept; the figure is explained in the next clauſe: the Lord God hath ſpoken, who can but propheſy? whether it be to foretel future events, which the Lord has made known ſhall come to paſs; or to preach the word, which is to propheſy to edification, to exhortation, and comfort, 1 Cor. xiv. 3. or to perform the more private exerciſes of religion, as ſinging of pſalms, praying, &c. 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2, 3. 1 Cor. xi. 4, 5. theſe things who can forbear doing, to whom the Lord has ſpoken either in a dream or viſion, or in his word, and by his Spirit; and to whom he has given a call and commiſſion, and gifts and graces, qualifying them for ſuch ſervice? who that has the fear of God in his heart, and his glory in view, and the good of others, that can refrain from it? nay, it is of dangerous conſequence to refuſe it; for if the roaring of a lion is ſo terrible, and if the wrath of an earthly king is as the roaring of a lion, much more the wrath and diſpleaſure of the King of kings. Jonah declined propheſying, when the Lord ſpoke to him, but what was the conſequence of it? the prophet by this ſeems to juſtify himſelf in propheſying, and that he ought not to be blamed for it, ſeeing the Lord had given him the word, and therefore he ought to publiſh it. This may be particularly applied to the miniſters of the word, who have a call, a charge and gifts from Chriſt, and on whom there is a neceſſity laid to preach the goſpel; and who ſhould not ſhun to declare it on any account; nor can they, who have it in their hearts, and as fire in their bones; who have ſeen and heard, and handled of the word of life, let what will be the conſequence of it; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 11. Acts iv. 20. and v. 20, 29. 1 Cor. ix. 16.

℣. 9. Publiſh in the palaces at Aſhdod, and in the palaces in the land of Egypt, &c.] This is ſpoken to the prophets, to publiſh and declare in all the courts of the Philiſtines and Egyptians, and among all the princes and great men therein, the ſins of the people of Iſrael, and the puniſhment God threatened them with; and let them, even theſe very heathens, judge whether there was not a juſt proportion between them, and whether their ſins did not deſerve ſuch calamities to be brought upon them, the Lord by his prophets had denounced. And ſay, aſſemble yourſelves on the mountains of Samaria; the metropolis of the ten tribes, Iſ. vii. 9. and which was built upon a mountain, and ſeveral others were about it, and joined to it; where theſe princes of Aſhdod or Azotus in Paleſtine, and of Egypt, are called to leave their courts, and meet together, to behold the iniquities committed by Iſrael, and to ſit in judgment upon them, and declare their ſenſe of what was juſt and fitting to be done to ſuch a people: and behold the great tumults in the midſt thereof; the riots of its inhabitants, the noiſe of the mob committing all manner of outrages and wickedneſs: and the oppreſſed in the midſt thereof; the poor, the fatherleſs, and the widow, injured in their perſons and properties, plundered of their ſubſtance, or defrauded of it.

℣. 10. For they know not to do right, &c.] What is juſt and right between man and man, no not in one ſingle inſtance; they did not regard it, or advert to it; they were under no concern about it; and were ſo much under the power of their luſts, that they knew not how to do it; and had uſed themſelves ſo long to ſuch wicked and unjuſt ways, that they had loſt at leaſt the practical knowledge of doing juſtice; they knew what was right in the theory, but not in the practice; bribes blinded their eyes; for this ſeems to deſign judges, civil magiſtrates, ſuch who had the adminiſtration of juſtice, and the execution of the laws in their hands. The Targum is, "they know not to execute the law; ſee Jer. iv. 22. Who ſtore up violence and robbery in their palaces; treaſured up riches in their palaces, gotten in a violent way, by oppreſſion and injuſtice; and which was no other, nor better, than robbery. This ſhows that perſons in power and authority, that lived in palaces, in great ſplendor and grandeur, are here meant.

℣. 11. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God, &c.] Becauſe of theſe tumults and riots, oppreſſion and injuſtice, violence and robbery: an adverſary there ſhall be even round about the land; not Tyre, as Theodoret renders the word; but the king of Aſſyria, who invaded the land of Iſrael in the days of Hoſhea, took Samaria, and carried Iſrael captive, and placed them in foreign countries, 2 Kings xvii. 6: and he ſhall bring down thy ſtrength from thee; take away their riches, demoliſh their fortreſſes, and ſtrip them of every thing in which they put their confidence: and thy palaces ſhall be ſpoiled; plundered of the treaſures laid up in them, and pulled down to the ground; and a juſt retaliation this, for their being the repoſitories of ill-gotten ſubſtance and wealth.

℣. 12. Thus ſaith the Lord, as the ſhepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion, &c.] Or what the lion has left, to ſhew to his maſter that it had been ſeized and torn by a beaſt of prey; for otherwiſe it is a moſt daring thing, and not uſual for a ſhepherd to take any thing out of a lion's mouth, tho' David did: and here it is ſaid to be not a whole ſheep, or a lamb, but two legs, or a piece of an ear; the body of the creature being devoured by the lion, only ſome offal left he cared not for; two ſhanks of the legs that had no fleſh upon them, and the griſtle of the ear, as the Targum; having ſatisfied his hunger with the beſt of it: ſignifying hereby, that only a few of the Iſraelites ſhould eſcape the enemy, and thoſe poor and inſignificant, he made no account of; and this in a miraculous manner, it being like taking any thing out of the mouth of a lion, to which a powerful enemy is compared, and particularly the king of Aſſyria, Jer. l. 17: ſo ſhall the children of Iſrael be taken out that dwell in Samaria; only a few of them, and thoſe the pooreſt; and their eſcape will be next to a miracle, when the city will be taken; even ſuch as are weak and ſickly, or faint-hearted: being in a corner of a bed; who either through ſickneſs lie there, or ſlothfulneſs, danger being near; or thro' poverty, having only a corner or a piece of a bed to lie on; or thro' cowardice they hid themſelves in one part of it: and in Damaſcus in a couch; or in a bed of Damaſcus[h], the chief city in Syria, taken much about the ſame time as Samaria was; and where ſome of the Iſraelites might betake themſelves, and think themſelves ſecure as perſons laid on a couch: or at the bed's feet[i], as ſome render it; or in a corner of a couch[k], as before. The Targum paraphraſes it, "that dwell in Samaria, ℣. 13. Hear ye, and teſtify in the houſe of Jacob, &c.] The prophets and prieſts, whoſe buſineſs it was to ſpeak to the people from the Lord, and declare his will to them, and to admoniſh them of their ſin and danger, are here called upon to hearken to what the Lord was about to ſay, and to teſtify and publiſh it to the people of Iſrael, the poſterity of Jacob, tho' ſadly degenerated: ſaith the Lord God, the God of hoſts; the eternal Jehovah, the being of beings, the God of the whole earth, the God of the armies above and below; and being ſo great, ought to be heard with the greateſt attention and reverence, in what follows.

℣. 14. That in the day that I ſhall viſit the tranſgreſſions of Iſrael upon him, &c.] The three or four mentioned in the preceding chapter, the great multitude of them, their profaneneſs, uncleanneſs, and luxury, their injuſtice and oppreſſion of the poor; when he ſhould viſit and puniſh for theſe ſins, as he would by the hand of the Aſſyrian, he would not forget their idolatry; tho' no notice is taken of this before, in the appeal to the heathen princes, who were likewiſe guilty of it: I will alſo viſit the altars of Bethel; where one of the calves Jeroboam made, was ſet up and worſhipped; and where was an altar erected, and ſacrifice offered on it, 1 Kings xii. 28—33. and here the plural number is put for the ſingular; tho' it may be, that in proceſs of time more altars might be ſet up as they increaſed in idolatry, and as ſeems from Hoſ. viii. 11. and x. 1. and now the Lord would ſhew his reſentment at them, and puniſh thoſe that worſhipped and ſacrificed there. So the Targum, “ that “ worſhip at the altars in Bethel.” And the horns of the altar ſhall be cut off, and fall to the ground; for it ſeems this altar was made after the form of that at Jeruſalem, with four horns at the four corners of it; and which were reckoned the more principal parts of it, and the more ſacred, where the blood of the ſacrifices was poured, and to which perſons in diſtreſs fled and laid hold of for refuge; but now theſe ſhould be of no uſe unto them, ſince they would be entirely demoliſhed by the enemy, and laid level with the ground.

℣. 15. And I will ſmite the winter-houſe with the ſummer-houſe, &c.] Both the one and the other ſhall fall to the ground, being beat down by the enemy, or ſhook and made to fall by the earthquake predicted, ch. i. 1. as Kimchi thinks: kings and great perſonages had houſes in the city in the winter-ſeaſon, in which they lived for warmth; and others in the country in the ſummer-time, to which they retired for the benefit of the air; or they had in one and the ſame houſe, a ſummer and a winter-parlour; ſee Judg. iii. 20. Jer. xxxvi. 22. it ſignifies, that the deſtruction ſhould reach city and country, and deprive them of what was for their comfort and pleaſure: and the houſes of ivory ſhall periſh; or of the tooth [l]; the elephant's tooth, of which ivory is made. Ahab made an houſe of ivory; and perhaps more were made by others afterwards, following his example, 1 Kings xxii. 39. not that theſe houſes were made wholly of ivory, only covered with it, as the Targum here paraphraſes it; or they were cieled or wainſcotted with it, or were inlaid and entrailed with it, and were reckoned very curious work; but ſhould be demoliſhed, and periſh in the general ruin: and the great houſes ſhall have an end, ſaith the Lord; the houſes of princes, nobles, and other perſons of figure and diſtinction; houſes great in building, or many in number, as Kimchi obſerves, and as the word [m] will bear to be rendered; theſe, which the builders and owners of them thought would have continued many ages, and have perpetuated their names to poſterity, ſhould now be thrown down, and be no more; of which they might aſſure themſelves, ſince the Lord had ſaid it.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter, the great ones or the people of Iſrael are threatened with calamities for their oppreſſion of the poor, ℣. 1, 2, 3, and in an ironical manner are reproved for their idolatry, ℣. 4, 5. then follows an enumeration of ſeveral judgments that had been upon them, yet had had no effect on them, to bring them to repentance, nor even mercies, ℣. 6—11. and notwithſtanding all this, in a wonderful gracious manner, they are called upon to prepare to meet their God, who is deſcribed by his power, greatneſs, and goodneſs, ℣. 12, 13.

℣. 1. Hear this word, ye kine of Baſhan, &c.] Or cows of Baſhan [n]; a country beyond Jordan, inhabited by the tribes of Gad and Reuben, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, very fruitful of paſturage, and where abundance of fat cattel were brought up; to whom perſons of diſtinction, and of the firſt rank, are here compared. Aben Ezra, Jarchi, and Kimchi, interpret them of the wives of the king, princes, miniſters of ſtate, and great men; and ſo it may be thought that Amos an herdſman, in his ruſtic manner, compliments the court-ladies with this epithet, for their plumpneſs, wantonneſs, and petulancy. Tho' it may be the princes and great men themſelves may be rather intended, and be ſo called for their effeminacy, and perhaps with ſome regard to the calves they worſhipped; and chiefly becauſe being fat and flouriſhing, and abounding with wealth and riches, they became wanton and miſchievous; like fat cattel broke down their fences, and would be under no reſtraint of the laws of God and man; entered into their neighbours fields, ſeized on their property, and ſpoiled them of it. So the Targum paraphraſes it, “ ye rich of ſub- “ ſtance.” In like manner, the principal men among the Jews, in the times of Chriſt, are called bulls of Baſhan, Pſ. xxii. 12. That are in the mountains of Samaria; like cattel grazing on a mountain; the metaphor is ſtill continued: Samaria was the principal city of Ephraim, the metropolis of the ten tribes, Iſ. vii. 9. ſituated on a mountain; Mr. Maundrel [o] ſays upon a long mount, of an oval figure, having firſt a fruitful valley, and then a ring of hills running about it. Here the kings of Iſrael had their palace, and kept their court, and where their princes and nobles reſided. Ahab

Ahab is ſaid to be king of Samaria, 1 Kings xxi. 1. Which oppreſs the poor, which cruſh the needy; by laying heavy taxes upon them; exacting more of them than they are able to pay; leſſening their wages for work done, or withholding it from them; or by taking from them that little they have, and ſo reducing them to the utmoſt extremity, and refuſing to do them juſtice in courts of judicature: which ſay to their maſters, bring, and let us drink; Kimchi, who interprets theſe words of the wives of great men, ſuppoſes their huſbands are here addreſſed, who are, and acknowledged to be, their maſters or lords; ſee 1 Pet. iii. 6. whom they call upon to bring them money taken from the poor, or for which they have ſold them, that they may have wherewith to eat and drink, fare ſumptuouſly, and live in a grand manner, feaſting themſelves and their viſiters: or theſe are the words of inferior officers to ſuperior ones, deſiring they might have leave to pillage the poor, that ſo they might live in a more gay and ſplendid manner, and in rioting and drunkenneſs, in chambering and wantonneſs. So the Targum, "give us power, that "we may ſpoil it." Or rather theſe words are directed to the maſters of the poor, who had power over them, had them in their clutches, in whoſe debt they were; or they had ſomething againſt them, and therefore theſe corrupt judges, and wicked magiſtrates, deſire they might be brought before them; who for a bribe would give the cauſe againſt them, right or wrong, ſo long as they got ſomething to feaſt themſelves with; or they are ſpoken by the rich, to the maſters of the poor, to whom they had ſold them, to bring them the purchaſe-money, that they might indulge and gratify their ſenſual appetites; ſee ch. ii. 6, 7. and Mic. iii. 1, 2, 3.

ỿ. 2. The Lord God hath ſworn by his holineſs, &c.] That is, by himſelf, holineſs being his nature, and an eſſential attribute of his; this is done to aſcertain the truth of what is after-ſaid, and that men may be aſſured of the certain performance of it. Some render it, by his holy place, and interpret it of heaven; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi; which is not likely; ſee Matt. v. 34. Jam. v. 12. The Targum is, "the Lord God hath ſworn by his "word in his holineſs." That lo, the days ſhall come upon you; ſpeedily, ſwiftly, and at an unawares: that he will take you away with hooks, and your poſterity with fiſh-hooks; the enemy, the king of Aſſyria, or God by him, would take them out of their own land, as fiſh out of water, out of their own element, and carry them captive into a ſtrange land, both them and their poſterity; and which ſhould be as eaſily done, as fiſh are taken with the hook, even tho' they were as the kine of Baſhan. The word for fiſh-hooks ſignifies thorns [p], and is by ſome ſo rendered; theſe perhaps being uſed in angling, before iron hooks were invented. The Targum is, "that people ſhall take you away "on their ſhields, and your daughters in fiſhermens [q] boats;" ſee Jer. xvi. 16.

ỿ. 3. And ye ſhall go out at the breaches, &c.] Not at the gates of the city, as they had uſed to do at pleaſure; but at the breaches of the walls of it, made by the enemy, in order to make their eſcape, if poſſible: they who had broke down the fences of law and juſtice, and injured the poor and needy, ſhall now have the walls of their city broken down, and they themſelves expoſed to the moſt imminent danger, and glad to get out of them to ſave their lives: every cow at that which is before her; every woman, as Jarchi and Kimchi; or every great perſon, compared to the kine of Baſhan, ſhall make up as faſt as he can to the breach before him, to get out; ſhall follow one another, as quick as they can, and clamber on one another's backs, as ſuch cattel do, to get out firſt; which ſhows the hurry and confuſion they ſhould be in, upon the taking of their city Samaria: and ye ſhall caſt them into the palace, ſaith the Lord; either their children, or their ſubſtance, which they ſhall caſt into the royal palace, or fort, or citadel, for ſafety. Some render it, ye ſhall caſt yourſelves; ſo Abarbinel; that is, ſuch as could not get out at the breaches, ſhould betake themſelves to the palace or fort for their ſecurity. The Targum of the whole is, "and they ſhall break down the wall upon "you, and bring you out, gathered every one "before him, and carry you beyond the moun"tains of Armenia." And ſo ſome others, taking it to be the name of a place, render it, ye ſhall be caſt into Armon, or Mona; which Bochart [r] ſuſpects to be the ſame with Minni, mentioned with Ararat, a mountain in Armenia, Jer. li. 27.

ỿ. 4. Come to Bethel, and tranſgreſs, &c.] This, and what follows, are ironical and ſarcaſtic ſpeeches, not giving liberty to ſin, but in this way reproving for it: Bethel was one of the places where the calves were placed and worſhipped; and here they are bid to go thither, and go on with, and continue in their idolatrous worſhip, by which they tranſgreſſed the law of God, and mark what would be the iſſue of it. The ſenſe is the ſame with Eccl. xi. 9. ſee Ezek. xx. 39. At Gilgal multiply tranſgreſſion; that is, multiply acts of idolatry: Gilgal was a place where high-places and altars were erected, and idols worſhipped; as it had formerly been a place of religious worſhip of the true God, the ten tribes made uſe of it in the times of their apoſtacy for idolatrous worſhip; ſee Hoſ. iv. 15. and ix. 15. and xii. 11. And bring your ſacrifices every morning; and offer them to your idols, as you were wont formerly to offer them unto the true God, according to the law of Moſes, Exod. xxix. 38, 39: and your tithes after three years; the third year after the ſabbatical year, was the year of tithing; and after the tithe of the increaſe of the fruits of the earth, there was Maaſer ſheni the ſecond tithe, the ſame with Maaſer ani the poor's tithe, which was given to the Levite, the ſtranger, the fatherleſs, and the widow, to eat with them, Deut. xiv. 22—28. and xxvi. 12. and this they are ſarcaſtically bid to obſerve in their idolatrous way. It is in the Hebrew text, after three days; and ſo the Targum, "your tithes in three days;" days being put for years, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve. It may be rendered, after three years of days [s]; three complete years.

ỿ. 5. And offer a ſacrifice of thankſgiving with leaven, &c.] Which ſome obſerve was contrary to the law, which forbids all leaven in a meat-offering; or burning it in any offering, Lev. ii. 11. which the word [t] here uſed ſuggeſts was done by theſe idolaters, as well as eat by them, their prieſts not liking to eat unleavened bread; but though it was forbidden in the meat-offering, was allowed, yea ordered with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving, Lev. vii. 13. So Abarbinel underſtands it here, as what was according to law, but ironically commanded to be offered to idols: and proclaim and publiſh the free-offerings; let all know of them when you make your free-will offerings, and invite them to partake of them: for this liketh you, O ye children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord God; or ye love to offer ſuch ſacrifices to your idols, rather than to the Lord God; preferring theſe to him, and delighting more in the worſhip of them, than of him.

℣. 6. And I alſo have given you cleanneſs of teeth in all your cities, &c.] Meaning a famine, having no food to foul them with, or to ſtick in them. This was not the famine in Samaria, 2 Kings vi. 25. for that was only in that city, and for a ſhort time, whilſt beſieged; whereas this was in all the cities in Iſrael; rather therefore it deſigns the famine predicted by Eliſha, which ſhould be upon the land for ſeven years, 2 Kings viii. 1: and want of bread in all your places; this is the ſame with the former clauſe, and explains it, and ſtill makes the famine more general, being not only in their cities, but in all their places of abode, their towns and villages: yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord; this judgment had no influence upon them, to bring them to a ſenſe of their evils, particularly their idolatry, and to repentance for them, and to reclaim them from them, and return them to the Lord, and to his worſhip, as the Targum paraphraſes it.

℣. 7. And alſo I have withholden the rain from you, &c.] As he did for the ſpace of three years ſucceſſively in the days of Ahab, as predicted by Elijah, 1 Kings xvii. 1. and xviii. 1. the conſequences of which are very bad to men and beaſt, and bring on a ſcarcity of food for both, and a famine if long withheld: when there were yet three months to the harveſt; that is, three months before the harveſt, as Jarchi; when, as Kimchi obſerves, there was need of rain: this was the latter rain, which was uſually given and expected about this time, and on which the goodneſs of the crop, and ſo of the harveſt, greatly depended: theſe three months before barley-harveſt, were December, January and February, that being in March; and before the wheat-harveſt, February, March and April, that being in May uſually: and I cauſed it to rain upon one city; and cauſed it not to rain upon another city; ſo that it might appear to be not by the courſe of nature, or thro' the influence of the planets, or by chance; but was according to the direction of divine providence, the hand of God was manifeſtly in it: yea one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not, withered; one piece of ground or field had a plentiful ſhower on it, whereby it became fruitful; and another field or cloſe on the other ſide of the hedge or partition had none, whereby what did ſpring up withered away and came to nothing: or one inheritance [u], or farm, as ſome render it; one man's eſtate was well watered with rain from heaven, and brought forth much fruit; and another man's eſtate, for want of it, was barren, and brought forth nothing: thus God was pleaſed to do in his providence, to ſhew his ſovereignty, and to chaſtiſe men for their ſins; and in ſuch a manner, as that they might, if not blind, eaſily perceive his hand in it.

℣. 8. So two or three cities wandered unto one city to drink water, &c.] Two or three cities, that is, the inhabitants of them, being without water, went up and down in queſt of any city or place where they could find water for themſelves and cattel to drink: but they were not ſatisfied; could not get enough for their preſent uſe, and much leſs to carry back with them to ſupply them for any length of time; ſuch a ſcarcity there was of it in other parts; ſee 1 Kings xviii. 5, 6: yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord; this had no more effect upon them than the other, to relinquiſh their former courſes, and return unto the Lord by humiliation and repentance.

℣. 9. I have ſmitten you with blaſting and mildew, &c.] Blaſting is what we commonly call blights, generally occaſioned by an eaſt wind; and ſo Kimchi interprets the word here uſed; and the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, a burning wind; which cauſes the buds and leaves of trees to ſhrivel up as if they were burnt with fire. Mildew is a kind of clammy dew, which falling upon corn, &c. corrupts and deſtroys by its moiſture; and is a kind of jaundice to the fruits of the earth; and has its name as that from yellowneſs, in the Hebrew language: when the Lord is ſaid to ſmite them with theſe, the ſenſe is, that he ſent theſe upon the fruits of their gardens, fields and vineyards, which conſumed them: when your gardens, and your vineyards, and your fig-trees, and your olive-trees increaſed, the palmer-worm devoured them; juſt when they were budding and bloſſoming, and bringing forth fruit; and ſo what the blaſting and mildew did not conſume, that the palmer-worm, a kind of locuſt, did; which has its name from its biting and cutting off the leaves and branches of trees, as of thoſe mentioned, vines, olives and fig-trees, with which the land of Canaan abounded, the cutting off which was a great calamity. The Targum is, "the multitude of your gardens, &c. "the palmer-worm hath eaten:" yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord; this diſpenſation of providence was alſo without its deſired fruit and effect; ſee the note on ℣. 6.

℣. 10. I have ſent among you the peſtilence, after the manner of Egypt, &c.] Like that which was ſent among the firſt-born of Egypt, and cut them off in one night; or when in the way of Egypt, as the Targum; either as in the wilderneſs, when they came out of Egypt, ſo Jarchi interprets it; ſee Numb. xvi. 46—49. or the Lord ſent the peſtilence as they went in the way to Egypt for help and ſuccour, or for ſhelter, or for food in time of famine; for they went thither, as Kimchi ſays, becauſe of the famine, to fetch food from thence; and this was diſpleaſing to the Lord, and he ſent the plague among them, which cut them off in the way: your young men have I ſlain with the ſword; of the enemy in battel; or as they were in the way to Egypt, being ſent there to fetch food, but were intercepted by the enemy: and have taken away your horſes; on which they rode to Egypt on the above errand; or rather which they brought up from thence, contrary to the command of God: and have made the ſtink of your camps to come up unto your noſtrils; ſuch numbers of their armies being ſlain, and theſe lying unburied, the ſmell of them was very noiſome: yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord; ſtill they continued obſtinate and impenitent; ſee the note on ℣. 6.

℣. 11. I have overthrown ſome of you, as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, &c.] Either their houſes were burnt, or their bodies conſumed by fire from heaven, with lightening; not whole cities, but the habitations of ſome particular perſons, or they themſelves: and ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning; ſome eſcaped ſuch an awful calamity, their houſes were not conſumed, whilſt others were; and their perſons were ſafe, whilſt others juſt by them were ſtruck dead at once: yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord; neither the judgments of God on themſelves and others, had any effect upon them to humble and reclaim them: ſuch diſpenſations, without the grace of God is exerted, rather harden than ſoften; and inſtead of bringing men to repentance, cauſe them to blaſpheme; ſee Rev. xvi. 8, 9, 10, 11. nor will the mercy and goodneſs of God, which ſhould lead perſons to repentance, attain that end, unleſs accompanied with the Spirit and grace of God; who, notwithſtanding ſuch mercies and deliverances, will remain ſenſeleſs, ſtupid, obdurate and impenitent; ſee Rev. ix. 20, 21.

[u] חלקה fundus, Mercerus, Vatablus; hæreditas, Targum.

℣. 12. Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Iſrael, &c.] What he would do is not expreſsly and particularly ſaid; it is commonly underſtood to be ſomething in a way of judgment, and worſe than what he had done, ſince they had no effect upon them; or theſe things ſhould be done over again, until an utter end was made of them; or the reference is to ch. iii. 11—15. and iv. 2, 3. and the following words are uſually interpreted, either ironically, ſince the Lord was coming forth as an enemy to iſſue the controverſy with them; they are called upon to meet him in an hoſtile way, and muſter up all their forces, exert all their power and ſtrength, and make uſe of their beſt weapons and military ſkill, and ſee what would be the conſequence of all this; feeble worms ſet in oppoſition to the mighty God; thorns and briers he can eaſily go thro', and burn up quickly: or elſe they are ſeriouſly addreſſed, and exhorted to meet the Lord in the way of his judgments, by humiliation, repentance and reformation; not knowing but that after all he may be gracious and merciful to them, and turn away the fierceneſs of his anger from them; ſee ch. v. 15. but I rather think the words are a promiſe or intimation of doing ſomething to Iſrael in a way of ſpecial grace and kindneſs, notwithſtanding their conduct and behaviour, and the ineffectualneſs both of judgments and providential mercies; for the words may be rendered, as the ſame particle ſhould be in Hoſ. ii. 15. notwithſtanding, or nevertheleſs thus will I do unto thee [*]; what I have from all eternity purpoſed and reſolved to do, and what I have promiſed again and again by the mouth of all the holy prophets from the beginning of the world I would do; namely ſend my Son to be thy Saviour and Redeemer: and becauſe I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Iſrael; the Meſſiah that was then to come was God, and ſo equal to the work of redemption and ſalvation he was to do; and the God of ſpiritual and myſtical Iſrael, even all the elect, Jews and Gentiles, to be redeemedby him; was to be their Immanuel, God in their nature, and therefore to be met with the utmoſt joy and pleaſure; ſee Zech. ix. 9. for this meeting him is not to be underſtood in an hoſtile way, and as ſpoken ironically to the enemies of Chriſt to oppoſe him, encounter with him, and mark the iſſue of it, who in time would cauſe them to be brought before him and ſlain, as ſome interpret the words; but in a friendly manner, as he was met by thoſe that were waiting for his coming, ſuch as Simeon and others; and by thoſe John the Baptiſt called upon to prepare the way of the Lord; and as he was by his own diſciples, who embraced him by faith, received him with joy, and left all and followed him; and as all ſuch are prepared to meet him who are made truly ſenſible of ſin, and of their own righteouſneſs as inſufficient to juſtify from it, and have ſeen the glory, fulneſs and ſuitableneſs of his ſalvation. Chriſt is to be met with in his houſe and ordinances; and men are prepared for it, when the deſires of their hearts are towards him, and their graces are exerciſed on him; which preparation is from himſelf: he'll be met at his ſecond coming by his ſpiritual Iſrael; and they will be prepared for it, who believe it, love it, and long for it; have their loins girt, and their lights burning, and they waiting for their Lord's coming; ſee Matt. xxv. 1—10. Luke xii. 35, 36. and ſo at the hour of death, which is the day of the Lord; a preparation and readineſs for which lies not in external humiliation, outward reformation, a moral righteouſneſs, or a bare profeſſion of religion, and ſubmiſſion to ordinances; but in regeneration, in faith in Chriſt, and ſpiritual knowledge of him; in a being waſhed in his blood, and clothed with his righteouſneſs; for which readineſs all truly ſenſible ſinners will be concerned, and which is all from the grace of God; ſee Matt. xxiv. 43, 44. The Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions read it, prepare to call upon thy God; and the Targum paraphraſes it, " to receive the doctrine of the law " of thy God;" rather the doctrine of the goſpel; but the former ſenſe is beſt; for the confirmation of which it may be obſerved, that when God is ſaid to do a thing to any, it is uſually in a way of grace; and that when preparation is made to meet a divine perſon, it is always meant of the Son of God; and that it is a common thing in prophecy, that when the Lord is threatning men with his judgments, to throw in a promiſe or prophecy of the Meſſiah, for the comfort of his people.

℣. 13. For lo, he that formeth the mountains, &c.] Theſe words are a deſcription of the glorious perſon thy God and Saviour to be met; he is the creator of all things, that formed the mountains, and ſo was before them, as in Prov. viii. 25, 26. and able to ſurmount and remove all mountains of difficulties that lay in his way of working out ſalvation for his people: and createth the wind; or ſpirit; not the holy Spirit, which is increated; but either angels, whom he makes ſpirits; or the ſpirit and ſoul of man, he is the creator of; or rather the natural wind is meant, which is his creature, he holds in his fiſts, reſtrains and commands at his pleaſure, Matt. viii. 26, 27: and declareth unto man what is his thought; not what is man's thought, tho' he knows what is in man without any information, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, and can reveal them to men, and convince them that he knows them, Matt. ix. 4. but rather the thought of God, the meditation of his heart concerning the ſalvation of men; his thoughts of peace, which are the deep things of God, and which Chriſt lying in the boſom of his Father was privy to, and has declared, John i. 18. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions reading the words wrong, render them, declaring claring to men his Chriſt; which, tho' true of God, is not the ſenſe of this clauſe. The Targum is, "what are his works[x]?" his works of creation, providence, redemption and grace: that maketh the morning darkneſs; or darkneſs morning, or the morning out of darkneſs[y]; being the day-ſpring from on high, the morning-ſtar, the ſun of righteouſneſs, that riſing made the goſpel day, after a long night of Jewiſh and Gentile darkneſs; and who made the ſame diſpenſation a morning to one, and darkneſs to another, John ix. 39. The Septuagint verſion is, making the morning and the cloud; the Vulgate Latin verſion, making the morning-cloud; his coming was as the morning, Hoſ. vi. 3: and treadeth upon the high places of the earth; the land of Iſrael, which is Immanuel's land, is ſaid by the Jews to be higher than other lands; Jeruſalem higher than any part of Judea, and the mountain the temple was built on higher than Jeruſalem: here Chriſt trod in the days of his fleſh, and from the mount of Olives aſcended to heaven, after he had trampled upon and ſpoiled principalities and powers, ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places, and when he led captivity captive. Jarchi interprets it of humbling the mighty and proud, who are compared to the high places of the earth. The Targum is, "to declare to men what are his works, "to prepare light for the righteous as the morning-light, who goes and prepares darkneſs for "the wicked, that he may break the wicked of "the earth:" the Lord, the God of hoſts is his name; he is the Jehovah, the Lord our righteouſneſs, the God and governor of the armies of heaven, the hoſts of angels, and to whom all creatures on earth are ſubject; all power in heaven and earth belongs unto him; this is Iſrael's God, his Redeemer and Saviour, he is called upon to prepare to meet.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter the prophet exhorts Iſrael to hear his lamentation over them for their impending ruin, ℣. 1, 2, 3. nevertheleſs to ſeek the Lord, and all that is good; to forſake their idols, and repent of their ſins, in hopes of finding mercy, and living comfortably; or otherwiſe they muſt expect the wrath of God for their iniquities, eſpecially their oppreſſion of the poor, ℣. 4—15. otherwiſe it would be a time of weeping and wailing, of darkneſs and diſtreſs; however they might harden or flatter themſelves, or make a jeſt of it, ℣. 16—20. for all their ſacrifices and ceremonial worſhip would ſignify nothing, ſo long as they continued their idolatry with them, ℣. 21—26. and therefore ſhould ſurely go into captivity, ℣. 27.

℣. 1. Hear ye the word which I take up againſt you, &c.] And which was not his own word, but the word of the Lord; and which he took up by his direction as a heavy burden, as ſome prophecies are called, and this was; and which, tho' againſt them, a reproof for their ſins, and denunciation of puniſhment for them, yet was to be heard; for every word of God is pure, and to be hearkened to, whether for us, or againſt us; ſince the whole is profitable, either for doctrine and inſtruction in righteouſneſs, or for reproof and correction. It may be rendered, which I take up concerning you, or over you[z]: even a lamentation, O houſe of Iſrael; a mournful ditty, an elegiac ſong over the houſe of Iſrael, now expiring, and as it were dead. This word was like Ezekiel's roll, in which were written lamentation, and mourning, and wo, Ezek. ii. 10. full of mournful matter, miſery and diſtreſs, as follows:

℣. 2. The virgin of Iſrael is fallen, &c.] The kingdom of Iſrael, ſo called becauſe it had never been ſubdued, or become ſubject to a foreign power ſince it was a kingdom; or becauſe conſidered in its eccleſiaſtic ſtate, it had been eſpouſed to the Lord as a chaſte virgin; and perhaps this may be ironically ſpoken, and refers to its preſent adulterate and degenerated ſtate, worſhipping the calves at Dan and Bethel; or elſe becauſe of its wealth and riches, and the ſplendor and gaiety in which it appeared; but now as it had fallen into ſin and iniquity, it ſhould quickly fall by it, and on account of it, into ruin and miſery; and becauſe of the certainty of it, it is repreſented as if it was already fallen: ſhe ſhall no more riſe; and become a kingdom again, as it never has as yet, ſince the ten tribes were carried away captive by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, to which calamity this prophecy refers. The Targum is, "ſhall not riſe again this "year;" very impertinently; better Kimchi and Ben Melech, for a long time; ſince as they think, and many others, that the ten tribes ſhall return again, as may ſeem when all Iſrael ſhall be converted and ſaved, and repoſſeſs their own land; ſee Hoſ. i. 10, 11. and iii. 5. Rom. xi. 25, 26. Abendana produces a paſſage out of Zohar, in which theſe words are interpreted, that the virgin of Iſrael ſhould not riſe again of herſelf, ſhe not having power to prevail over her enemies; but God will raiſe her up out of the duſt, when he ſhall raiſe up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, who ſhall reign in future time over all the tribes together, as it is ſaid ch. ix. 11: ſhe is forſaken upon her land; by her people, her princes, and her God; or proſtrate on the ground, as the Targum; ſhe was caſt upon the ground, and daſhed to pieces by the enemy as an earthen veſſel, and there left, her ruin being irrecoverable; ſo whatever is caſt and ſcattered, or daſhed to pieces on the ground, and left, is expreſſed by the word here uſed, as Jarchi obſerves: there is none to raiſe her up; her princes and people are either ſlain by the ſword, famine and peſtilence, or carried captive, and ſo can yield her no aſſiſtance; her idols, whom ſhe worſhipped cannot, and her God ſhe forſook, will not.

℣. 3. For thus ſaith the Lord God, &c.] This is a reaſon why there were none to raiſe her up: ſince the city that went out by a thouſand, ſhall leave an hundred; that is, the city in which there were a thouſand perſons conſtantly going in and out; or which ſent, or cauſed to go out, or furniſhed a thouſand men upon occaſion for war, had only an hundred perſons left in it; or there remained but an hundred of the thouſand they ſent out, the reſt being deſtroyed by one means or another: and that which went forth by an hundred, ſhall leave ten to the houſe of Iſrael; where there were an hundred perſons going out and coming in continually; or which ſent out an hundred men to the army to fight their battels, had now only ten remaining; to ſuch a ſmall number were they reduced all over the land, ſo that there were none, or not a number ſufficient to raiſe up Iſrael to its former ſtate and glory.

℣. 4. For thus ſaith the Lord unto the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] Or yet [a], notwithſtanding all this, tho' ſuch judgments were threatened and denounced, and ſuch deſolations ſhould certainly come, in caſe of impenitence, and an obſtinate continuance in a courſe of ſin; yet hopes are given of finding mercy and kindneſs upon repentance and reformation, at leaſt to the remnant of them; ſee ℣. 15: ſeek ye me, and ye ſhall live; ſeek my fear, as the Targum; fear and reverence, ſerve and worſhip the Lord God; return unto him by repentance; ſeek to him by prayer and ſupplication; acknowledge your ſins, and humble yourſelves before him, and implore his pardoning grace and mercy: and ye ſhall live; in your own land, and not be carried out of it; live comfortably, in great plenty of good things; and live ſpiritually, enjoying the favour of God, and his preſence in his ordinances, and live eternally in the world to come.

℣. 5. But ſeek not Bethel, &c.] Don't go to Bethel, the place where one of Jeroboam's calves was ſet up and worſhipped, to conſult the oracle, idols and prieſts there; or to perform religious worſhip, which will be your ruin, if not prevented by another courſe of living: nor enter into Gilgal; another place of idolatry, where idols were ſet up and worſhipped; ſee the note on ch. iv. 4: and paſs not to Beer-ſheba; a place in the further part of the land of Iſrael; it formerly belonged to Judah, but was now in the hands of the ten tribes, and where idolatrous worſhip was practiſed; ſee ch. viii. 14. it having been a place where Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob had dwelt, and worſhipped the true God: for Gilgal ſhall ſurely go into captivity; that is, the inhabitants of it; they will not be able with their idols and idol-worſhip to ſave themſelves, and therefore go not thither. There is an elegant paronomaſia here [b], as there is alſo in the next words: and Bethel ſhall come to nought; which alſo was called Bethaven, the houſe of vanity, or of an idol, which is nothing in the world; and therefore becauſe of the idolatry in it, ſhould come to nothing, be utterly deſtroyed, and the inhabitants of it. So the Targum, "they that "are in Gilgal, and worſhip calves in Bethel."

℣. 6. Seek the Lord, and ye ſhall live, &c.] This is repeated to ſtir up unto it, becauſe of their backwardneſs and ſlothfulneſs, and to ſhew the importance and neceſſity of it. By the Lord may be meant the Meſſiah, Iſrael's God that was to come, and they were to prepare to meet, ch. iv. 12. and the rather, ſince life ſpiritual and eternal is only to be had from him, and he is to be ſought unto for it, and all the bleſſings of it, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, reſt and ſalvation, as well as temporal deliverance, and all outward mercies: leſt he break out like fire in the houſe of Joſeph, and devour it; that is, leſt his wrath and fury break out like fire, as the Targum, by ſending an enemy to invade the land, deſtroy it, and carry the inhabitants of it captive; even all the ten tribes, who frequently go by the name of Ephraim the ſon of Joſeph, that being the principal tribe, and the firſt king of them being of it: and there be none to quench it in Bethel; the calf worſhipped there, and the prieſts that officiated would not be able to avert the ſtroke of divine vengeance, or turn back the enemy, and ſave the land from ruin. The Targum is, "and there be none to quench it, becauſe "of your ſins, who have been ſerving idols in "Bethel."

℣. 7. Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, &c.] This ſeems to be ſpoken to kings and judges, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi obſerve; in whoſe hands is the adminiſtration of juſtice, and who often pervert it; as theſe did here addreſſed and complained of; that which was the moſt uſeful and ſalubrious, and ſo the moſt deſirable to the commonwealth, namely juſt judgment, was changed into the reverſe, what was as bitter and as diſagreeable as wormwood; or hemlock, as it might be rendered, and as it is in ch. vi. 12. even injuſtice: and leave off righteouſneſs in the earth; leave off doing it among men: or rather, leave it on the earth [c]; who caſt it down to the ground, trampled upon it, and there left it; which is expreſſive not only of their neglect, but of their contempt of it; ſee Dan. viii. 12.

℣. 8. Seek him that maketh the ſeven ſtars, &c.] Which ſome connect with the preceding words, without a ſupplement, they leave righteouſneſs on the ground, who maketh the ſeven ſtars; underſtanding it of Chriſt, the Lord our righteouſneſs, who is made unto us righteouſneſs, whom the Jews rejected and deſpiſed, tho' the maker of the heavens and the conſtellations in them. Some continue, and ſupply the words thus, and remember not him that maketh the ſeven ſtars, as Kimchi; or forget him, as Japhet in Aben Ezra. The Targum is, "they ceaſe to fear him that maketh," &c. they have no regard unto him, no awe and reverence of him, or they would not act ſo unjuſtly as they do. There is but one word for the ſeven ſtars in the original text, which ſignifies that conſtellation called the Pleiades, and ſo the ſame word is rendered Job ix. 9. and xxxviii. 31. and the Vergiliæ, becauſe they appear in the ſpring of the year, when they yield their ſweet influences, which the ſcripture aſcribes to them, and are deſirable; hence they have their name in Hebrew from a word which ſignifies deſire: and Orion; another conſtellation; for Aben Ezra ſays, it is not one ſtar, but many; and as he, with the ancients he mentions, takes the former to be the tail of Aries, and the head of Taurus; ſo this to be the heart of Scorpio. This conſtellation appears in winter, and is a ſign of bad weather. Virgil calls it, Nimboſus Orion; and it has its name in Hebrew from unſettledneſs and inconſtancy, the weather being then very variable. Amos being an herdſman had obſerved the appearances and effects of theſe conſtellations, and adored the maker of them, whom others neglected: and turneth the ſhadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night; maketh the conſtant revolution of day and night, and the days longer in the ſummer, and ſhorter in winter, as Kimchi interprets it; and alſo the various changes of proſperity and adverſity, turning the one into the other when he pleaſes: that calleth for the waters of the ſea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth; as in the time of the univerſal deluge, luge, to which ſome Jewiſh writers apply this, as Jarchi obſerves; or rather draws up by the heat of the ſun the waters of the ſea into the air, and forms them into clouds, where they loſe their ſaltneſs, and become ſweet; and then lets them down in plentiful and gentle ſhowers, to water, refreſh and fructify the earth; which is an inſtance of divine power, wiſdom and goodneſs. The Targum is, “who commands many armies to be gathered “like the waters of the ſea, and ſcatters them “upon the face of the earth.” Some, who underſtand theſe words of Chriſt our righteouſneſs, interpret the whole myſtically of his raiſing up the twelve apoſtles, comparable to ſtars; and of his turning the Gentiles, who were darkneſs itſelf, to the light of the goſpel; and of his giving up the Jews, who were formerly light, to judicial blindneſs and darkneſs; and of his watering the earth with large ſhowers of the divine word. The Lord is his name; he is the true Jehovah, that can and does do all this.

℣. 9. That ſtrengtheneth the ſpoiled againſt the ſtrong, &c.] Such as have been taken by an enemy, who have been ſtripped of their armour, and ſpoiled of all their goods and ſubſtance, and have no friends nor allies, nor any thing to help themſelves with; the Lord can ſupply them with ſtrength, furniſh them with weapons, and ſend them helpers, ſo that they ſhall riſe up againſt their conquerors and ſpoilers, and in their turn ſubdue them. The Targum is, “that ſtrengthens “the weak againſt the ſtrong;” or cauſes the weak to prevail over the ſtrong. A learned man, from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, chooſes to render it, who intends, or deſigns deſtruction to the ſtrong[d]; that is, in his ſecret purpoſes, and which he brings about in providence; tho' he is doubtful whether it may not have the ſignification of recreation and refreſhment, and whether the conſtruction and circumſtances will admit of it; and ſome do ſo tranſlate it, who refreſhes himſelf with deſtruction againſt the ſtrong[e]; takes delight and pleaſure in it; it is a recreation to him; ſo that the ſpoiled ſhall come againſt the fortreſs; lay ſiege to it, and take it, in which the ſpoiler thought himſelf ſecure, with the ſpoil and ſubſtance he had taken from the ſpoiled; ſuch ſudden changes and viciſſitudes can God bring upon men, when he pleaſes. Some apply this to the Romans ſtrengthened againſt the Jews, and beſieging their fortified city Jeruſalem; but not very aptly.

℣. 10. They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, &c.] Openly and publickly in the courts of judicature: wicked judges hated the prophets of the Lord, ſuch as Amos, who faithfully reproved them for the perverſion of juſtice, even when they were upon the bench: or the people were ſo corrupt and degenerate, that they hated thoſe faithful judges who reproved them for their vices in the open courts of juſtice, when they came before them. The former ſenſe ſeems beſt, and more agreeable to the context: and they abhor him that ſpeaketh uprightly; not only hate him, but abhor him, can't bear the ſight of him, or to hear his name mentioned that ſpeaks out his mind freely and honeſtly, and tells them of their ſins, and adviſes them to repent of them, and leave them.

℣. 11. Foraſmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, &c.] This ſeems to be ſpoken to the princes, judges and civil magiſtrates, as Kimchi obſerves; who oppreſſed the poor and needy, and cruſhed them to the ground, trampled upon them, ſtripped them of the little ſubſtance they had, and left them deſtitute; exerciſing a cruel and tyrannical power over them, they having none to ſtand by them, and deliver them: and ye take from him burdens of wheat; which perhaps he had been gleaning in the field, and was carrying home for the ſupport of his family; or which he had gotten with great labour, and was all he had in the world: this they took away from him, for the payment of pretended debts, or law-ſuits; or as not in right belonging to him, but taken out of fields where he ſhould not have entered: ye have built houſes of hewn ſtones; in a very grand and pompous manner for themſelves and their children, with money they had extorted from the poor, and got by oppreſſion and injuſtice: but ye ſhall not dwell in them; at leaſt but a very ſhort time; for quickly and ſuddenly the enemy will come and turn you out of them, and deſtroy them, which would be a juſt retaliation for their ſpoiling the houſes of the poor: ye have planted pleaſant vineyards; well ſituated and filled with the choiceſt vines, which promiſe a large produce of the beſt wine: but ye ſhall not drink wine of them; for before the grapes are fully ripe they ſhould be either taken away by death, or be carried captive, and others ſhould dwell in their houſes, and drink the wine of their vineyards.

℣. 12. For I know your manifold tranſgreſſions, and your mighty ſins, &c.] Their ſins were numerous, and of the firſt magnitude, attended with very heavy aggravations; and theſe with all their circumſtances were well known to the omniſcient God, and therefore he determined to puniſh them as he had threatened. Some of their tranſgreſſions are pointed out, as follow: they afflict the juſt; who are ſo both in a moral and evangelic ſenſe; not comparatively only, but really; and particularly whoſe cauſe was juſt, and yet were vexed and diſtreſſed by unjuſt judges, who gave the cauſe againſt them, made them pay all coſts and charges, and ſeverely mulcted them: they take a bribe; of thoſe that were againſt the juſt, and gave the cauſe for them. The word ſignifies a ranſom[f]. The Targum renders it, falſe mammon, corrupt and unjuſt judges are here taxed: and they turn aſide the poor in the gate from their right; in the court of judicature, where they ſhould have done them juſtice, ſuch courts being uſually held in the gates of cities; but inſtead of that they perverted their judgment, and did them wrong.

℣. 13. Therefore the prudent ſhall keep ſilence at that time, &c.] Not the prophets of the Lord, whoſe buſineſs it was at all times to reprove, and not hold their peace, let the conſequence be what it would; tho' the Targum calls them teachers; but private perſons, whoſe wiſdom it would be to ſay nothing; ſince reproof would do no good to theſe perſons, and they would bring a great deal of hatred, ill-will, and trouble upon themſelves, as well as would hear the name of God blaſphemed, which would be very afflictive to them: or the ſenſe is, they would not ſpeak to God on the behalf of theſe wicked men, knowing the decree was gone forth; nor ſay one murmuring word at it, believing it was in righteouſneſs; and being ſtruck alſo with the awfulneſs of God's righteous judgments: for it is an evil time; in which ſin abounded, and miſeries and calamities on account of it.

℣. 14. Seek good, and not evil, &c.] Seek not unto, or after evil perſons, and evil things; not the company and converſation of evil men, which is infectious and dangerous; nor any thing that is evil, or has the appearance of it, eſpecially the evil of evils, ſin; which is hateful to God, contrary to his nature and will; is evil in its own nature, and bad in its conſequences, and therefore not to be ſought, but ſhunned and avoided; but ſeek that which is good, perſons and things: ſeek the ſummum bonum, the chief good, God, who is eſſentially, perfectly, immutably and communicatively good, the fountain of all goodneſs, and the portion of his people; ſeek Chriſt the good Saviour and ſacrifice, the good ſhepherd, and the good Samaritan, who is good in all his relations, as a father, huſband and friend, and in whom all good things are laid up; ſeek the good Spirit of God, who works good things in his people, and ſhews good things to them, and is the comforter of them; ſeek to him for aſſiſtance in prayer, and to help in the exerciſe of every grace, and in the diſcharge of every duty, and as the guide into all truth, and to eternal glory; ſeek the good ways of God, the way of truth, the path of faith and holineſs, and eſpecially the good way to the Father, the way of life and ſalvation by Chriſt; ſeek the good word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, the promiſes contained in them, and the goſpel of them; ſeek the company of good men, and that good part that ſhall not be taken away, the true grace of God, the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs; ſeek the glories of another world, the goodneſs of God laid up, the beſt things which are reſerved to laſt: that ye may live; comfortably, ſpiritually and eternally, which is the conſequence of all this; ſee the notes on ℣. 4, 6: and ſo the Lord, the God of hoſts, ſhall be with you, as ye have ſpoken; as they uſed to ſay, and boaſted of; tho' they had not the temple, the ark of the teſtimony, the ſymbols of the divine preſence, as Judah had; but this they would have in reality, both his gracious preſence here, and his glorious preſence hereafter, did they truly and rightly ſeek thoſe things; than which nothing is more deſireable to good men, or can make them more comfortable, or more happy. The Targum is, "ſeek to do well, "and not to do ill, that ye may live; and then "the word of the Lord God of hoſts ſhall be "your help, as ye have ſaid."

℣. 15. Hate the evil, and love the good, &c.] Evil is not only not to be ſought, but to be hated, eſpecially the evil of ſin, becauſe of its evil nature, and pernicious effects and conſequences; and if it was for no other reaſon, but becauſe it is hateful and abominable unto God, therefore they that love him, ſhould hate evil, even with a perfect hatred; as all good men do, tho' it is preſent with them, and cleaves unto them, and they do it, Pſ. xcvii. 10. Rom. vii. 15. and xii. 9. and good is to be loved for its goodneſs ſake, and the good effects of it; a good God is to be loved, and all good men, and all good things; the good word of God, and his commands and ordinances, and highly to be eſteemed, and affectionately regarded: and eſtabliſh judgment in the gate; openly, publickly, in every court of judicature, which uſed to be kept in the gates of cities; not only execute judgment and juſtice in all caſes brought into court, but let it have its conſtant courſe, and be always practiſed according to the ſettled laws of it: it may be that the Lord God of hoſts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joſeph; who ſhould eſcape the fire that ſhould break out of his houſe, and devour it, even the ten tribes, ℣. 6. ſuch of them as ſhould ſeek the Lord, and that which is good; for in the worſt of times God reſerves a remnant for himſelf, as in the times of Elijah, Iſaiah, Chriſt and his apoſtles; a remnant according to the election of grace, to whom he has been gracious in the choice and reſerve he has made of them; in the ſtores of grace he has laid up for them; in the proviſion and miſſion of his Son as a Saviour; and in waiting the time of their converſion, when he is gracious to them, in regenerating, quickening, pardoning and juſtifying of them; and ſtill will be in the viſits of his love; in the ſupplies of his grace, in ſupporting them under afflictions, temptations, deſertions, &c. and in giving them his word and ordinances for their comfort and relief: nor is this may be, to be underſtood in a way of doubt or heſitation, but of good hope, yea of a holy confidence; and ſo ſome render it, without doubt the Lord God of hoſts will be gracious [g], &c. ſee Zeph. ii. 3.

℣. 16. Therefore the Lord, the God of hoſts, the Lord ſaith thus, &c.] The connexion of theſe words is not with thoſe that immediately precede, but with the whole context; ſeeing neither promiſes nor threats, exhortations, good advice, and intimations of grace and mercy, had no effect, at leaſt upon the generality of the people, therefore the Lord declared, as follows: wailing ſhall be in all ſtreets; in all the ſtreets of the towns and cities of Iſrael, becauſe of the ſlain and wounded in them: and they ſhall ſay in all the high-ways, alas! alas! in the ſeveral roads throughout the country, as travellers paſs on, and perſons flee from the enemy; they ſhall lament the ſtate of the kingdom, and cry wo, wo unto it; in what a miſerable condition and circumſtances it is in: and they ſhall call the huſbandmen to mourning; who uſed to be better employed in tilling their land, plowing, ſowing, reaping, and gathering in the fruits of the earth; but now ſhould have no work to do, all being deſtroyed, either by the hand of God, by blaſting, and mildew, and vermine, or by the trampling and forage of the enemy; and ſo there would be juſt occaſion for mourning: and ſuch as are ſkilful of lamentation, for wailing; that have got the art of mourning, and were expert in making moans, and uſing plaintive tones, and who aſſiſted at funerals, and other doleful occaſions; and who are made uſe of to this day in ſome countries, particularly in Ireland; and were by the old Romans, by whom they were called Siticines, Præfici and Præficæ; and theſe mourning men and women were alſo employed among the Jews at ſuch times; ſee Matt. ix. 23. in Jer. ix. 17. the mourning women are called cunning women; and ſo Lucian [h] calls them σοφιςας των θρηνων, ſophiſts at lamentations, artiſts at them, well ſkilled therein, ſuch as thoſe are here directed to be called for. Mr. Lively our countryman puts both clauſes together, and renders them thus, the huſbandmen ſhall call to mourning and wailing, ſuch as are ſkilful of lamentation; to aſſiſt them therein, becauſe of the loſs of the fruits of the earth; and ſuch a verſion is confirmed by Jarchi, tho' he paraphraſes it to a different ſenſe; "companies of huſbandmen ſhall meet thoſe that "plow in the fields with the voice of mourners "that cry in the ſtreets."

[h] Dialog. περι πενθ.

℣. 17. And in all vineyards ſhall be wailing, &c.] The vines being deſtroyed, and no grapes to be gathered, and put into the preſs; when there uſed to be great ſhoutings, and large expreſſions of joy at the gathering in of the vintage, and preſſing the grapes; but now there ſhall be a different tone; ſee Jer. xlviii. 32, 33: for I will paſs thro' thee, ſaith the Lord; thro' their cities, towns and country, fields and vineyards, and deſtroy all in his way, as he paſſed thro' Egypt, when he deſtroyed their firſt born.

℣. 18. Wo unto you that deſire the day of the Lord, &c.] Either the day of Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, as Cocceius interprets it; and which was deſired by the people of Iſrael, not on account of ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, but that they might be delivered by him from outward troubles and enemies, and enjoy temporal felicity; they had a notion of him as a temporal Saviour and Redeemer, in whoſe days they ſhould poſſeſs much outward happineſs, and therefore deſired his coming; ſee Mal. iii. 1, 2. or elſe the day of the Lord's judgments upon them, ſpoken of by the prophet, and which they were threatened with, but did not believe it would ever come; and therefore in a ſcoffing, jeering manner expreſſed their deſire of it, to ſhew their diſbelief of it, and that they were in no pain or fear about it, like thoſe in Iſ. v. 19: to what end is it for you? why do you deſire it? what benefit do you expect to get by it? the day of the Lord is darkneſs, and not light; it will bring on affliction, calamities, miſeries and diſtreſs, which are often in ſcripture expreſſed by darkneſs, and not proſperity and happineſs, which are ſometimes ſignified by light; ſee Iſ. v. 30. and viii. 22. Eſth. viii. 16. and even the day of the coming of Chriſt were to the unbelieving Jews darkneſs, and not light; they were blinded in it, and given up to judicial blindneſs and darkneſs; they hating and rejecting the light of Chriſt, and his goſpel, and which iſſued in great calamities, in the utter ruin and deſtruction of that people, John iii. 19, 20. and ix. 39.

℣. 19. As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him, &c.] That is, ſhould the day of the Lord come as they deſired, they would not be the better for it; it would be only going from one trouble to another, like eſcaping Scylla, and falling into Charybdis: or as if a man upon the ſight of a lion, and at his yell, ſhould take to his heels, and flee from the face of him, as the phraſe is [i], and a bear, a leſs generous, and more cruel and voracious creature, eſpecially when bereaved of its whelps, ſhould meet him, and ſeize him: or ſhould he get clear of them both, or went into the houſe, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a ſerpent bit him; ſhould he get into a houſe, and ſo eſcape the lion and the bear, and lean upon the wall of the houſe to ſupport and eaſe him, being out of breath in running from theſe creatures; yet a ſerpent lurking in the wall of an old houſe bites him, and the venom and poiſon of it iſſues in his death; ſo he gains nothing by fleeing from the lion, or eſcaping the bear. Theſe proverbial expreſſions ſignify, that the Iſraelites would be no gainers by the day of the Lord, but rather fall into greater evils, and more diſtreſſing calamities. Some Jewiſh writers interpret the lion and the bear of Laban and Eſau; the lion (they ſay [k]) is Laban, who purſued after Jacob to take away his life; the bear is Eſau, who ſtood in the way to kill all that came, the mother with the children; but are much better interpreted of the Chaldeans, Perſians and Grecians, by Jerom; whoſe words are, "fleeing "from the face of Nebuchadnezzar the lion, ye "will be met by Ahaſuerus, under whom was the "hiſtory of Eſther; or the empire of the Aſſyrians "and Chaldeans being deſtroyed, the Medes and "Perſians ſhall ariſe; and when upon the reign "of Cyrus ye ſhall have returned, and at the command of Darius ſhall have begun to build the "houſe of the Lord, and have confidence in the "temple, ſo as to reſt in it, lean your weary hands "on its walls; then ſhall come Alexander king of "the Macedonians, or Antiochus ſirnamed Epiphanes, "who ſhall abide in the temple, and bite like a "ſerpent, not without in Babylon, and in Suſa, but "within the borders of the holy land; by which "it appears, that the day ye deſire is not a day of "light and joy, but of darkneſs and ſorrow." The interpretation is pretty and ingenious enough, ſince the characters of the lion, bear and ſerpent agree with the reſpective perſons and people mentioned; Nebuchadnezzar is often compared to a lion, Jer. iv. 7. and l. 17. and the Babylonian and Chaldean monarchy is repreſented by one in Dan. vii. 4. and the Perſian monarchy by a bear, ℣. 5. to which the Perſians are compared, the Jews ſay [l], becauſe they eat and drink like a bear, are as fat as bears, and hairy like them, and as reſtleſs as they; and ſo the Perſians were noted for their luxury and luſt, as well as their cruelty; and wearing long hair, are called hairy perſons in the Delphic oracle, which Herodotus [m] interprets of them; ſee the note on Dan. vii. 5. and Antiochus may not unfitly be compared to a ſerpent; ſee Dan. viii. 23, 24, 25. and xi. 23. ſee the notes there: but what is to be objected to this ſenſe is, that the words are ſpoken to the ten tribes, or Iſrael, who were carried captive by the Aſſyrians; and not the two tribes, or the Jews, who fell into the hands, firſt of the Chaldeans, then the Perſians, and then the Grecians, particularly into the hands of Antiochus; ſee Dan. vii. 4, 5. Ezra i. 1.

℣. 20. Shall not the day of the Lord be darkneſs, and not light? &c.] The deſign of ſuch a queſtion is ſtrongly to affirm, that in this day of the Lord ſpoken of, there ſhould be nothing but miſery and diſtreſs, and no proſperity and happineſs, at leaſt to the wicked Iſraelites, or the unbelieving Jews: even very dark, and no brightneſs in it? ſignifying that there ſhould be no deliverance, nor the leaſt glimmering view or hope of it; that the calamity ſhould be ſo very great, and the deſtruction ſo entire, that there ſhould be no mixture of mercy, nor the leaſt appearance of relief.

℣. 21. I hate, I deſpiſe your feaſt days, &c.] Kimchi thinks this is ſaid, and what follows, with reſpect to the kingdom of the houſe of Judah, which kept the feaſt the Lord commanded; but it is not neceſſary ſo to underſtand it; for doubtleſs the ten tribes imitated the worſhip at Jeruſalem, and kept the feaſts as the Jews did there, in the obſervance of which they truſted; but the Lord rejects their vain confidence, and lets them know that theſe were no ways acceptable to him; and were ſo far from atoning for their ſins, that they were hated, abhorred, and deſpiſed by him, being obſerved in ſuch a manner, and with ſuch a view as they were. And I will not ſmell in your ſolemn aſſemblies; a ſweet ſavour of reſt, as in Gen. viii. 21. take no pleaſure in their duties and ſervices performed, in their ſolemn aſſemblies convened together for religious purpoſes, nor accept of them; but, on the contrary, diſlike and abhor them; ſee Iſ. i. 11—14.

℣. 22. Though ye offer me burnt-offerings, and your meat-offerings, I will not accept them, &c.] The daily burnt-offerings, morning and night, and others, which were wholly the Lord's; and the Minchah, or bread-offering, which went along with them; in which they thought to do God ſervice, and to merit his favour; but inſtead of that they were unacceptable to him, being neither offered up in a proper place, if in a right manner according to the law of Moſes; however not in the faith of the great ſacrifice Chriſt; nor attended with repentance towards God: neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beaſts; even tho' their peace-offerings were of the beſt of the herd. Aben Ezra ſays, the creature here meant, is the ſame which in the Iſhmaelitiſh or Arabic language is called جاموس Giamus, a creature bigger than an ox, and like one, which is called a buffle or buffalo. And ſo Ben Melech ſays, it means one of the kinds of the larger cattel; for not a lamb, a ram, or a ſheep, is meant, as the word is ſometimes rendered by the Septuagint, but a creature like an ox; not larger, or the wild ox, as the above Hebrew writers, but ſmaller; with which agrees the deſcription Bellonius[n] gives of the Syrian bubalus or buffalo, which he calls a ſmall ox, full bodied, little, ſmooth, ſleek, fat, and well made; and is no doubt the ſame the Arabs call almari, from its ſmoothneſs.

℣. 23. Take thou away from me the noiſe of thy ſongs, &c.] The ten tribes, very probably, imitated the temple-muſic at Jeruſalem, both vocal and inſtrumental, and had their ſongs and hymns of praiſe, which they ſung to certain tunes; but the muſic of theſe is called a noiſe, being very diſagreeable to the Lord, as coming from ſuch carnal and wicked perſons; and therefore he deſires it might ceaſe, be took away, and he be no more troubled with it: for I will not hear the melody of thy viols; which may be put for all inſtruments of muſic uſed by them, as violins, harps, pſalteries, &c. the ſound of which, how melodious ſoever, the Lord would turn a deaf ear unto, and not regard.

℣. 24. But let judgments run down as waters, &c.] Or roll[o]; in abundance, with great rapidity, bearing down all before them, which nothing can reſiſt; ſignifying the plenty of juſtice done in the land, the full and free exerciſe of it, without any ſtoppage or intermiſſion: and righteouſneſs as a mighty ſtream; the ſame thing expreſſed in different words; tho' ſome think that not the execution of judgment and juſtice by men is here exhorted to, but the vindictive juſtice of God is threatened; which like a mighty torrent of water ſhould come down, overwhelm, bear away, and deſtroy all before it, even all the tranſgreſſors in Iſrael.

℣. 25. Have ye offered unto me ſacrifices and offerings, &c.] No; they were not offered to God, but to devils, to the golden calf, and to the hoſt of heaven: ſo their fathers did in the wilderneſs forty years; where ſacrifices were omitted during that time, a round number for a broken one, it being about thirty-eight years; and theſe their children were imitators of them, and offered ſacrifice to idols too, and therefore deſerved puniſhment as they: even ye, O houſe of Iſrael; the ten tribes, who are here particularly charged and threatened; ſee Acts vii. 42. and the note there.

℣. 26. But ye have born the tabernacle of your Moloch, &c.] The god of the Ammonites; ſee the note on ch. i. 13. and on Jer. vii. 31. called theirs, becauſe they alſo worſhipped it, and cauſed their ſeed to paſs thro' the fire to it; and which was carried by them in a ſhrine, or portable tent or chapel. Or it may be rendered, but ye have born Siccuth your king[p]; and ſo Siccuth may be taken for the name of an idol, as it is by Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, to whom they gave the title of king, as another idol went by the name of the queen of heaven; perhaps by one was meant the ſun, and by the other the moon. And Chiun, your images; Moloch or Siccuth was one, and Chiun another image, or rather the ſame; and this the ſame with Chevan, which in the Arabic and Perſic languages is the name of Saturn, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſay; and is ſo rendered by Montanus here; and who in the Egyptian tongue was called Revan, or Rephan, or Remphan; as by the Septuagint here, and in Acts vii. 43. The ſtar of your god, which ye made to yourſelves; or the ſtar your god[q]; meaning the ſame with Chiun or Saturn; perhaps the ſame with the ſtar that fell from the air or ſky, mentioned by Sanchoniatho[r]; which Aſtarte, the wife of Chronus or Saturn, is ſaid to take and conſecrate in Tyre; this they made for themſelves, and worſhipped as a deity. The Targum is, "ye have "born the tabernacle of your prieſts, Chiun your "image, the ſtar your god, which ye have made "to yourſelves." Various are the ſenſes put upon the word Chiun. Some read it Cavan, and take it to ſignify a cake; in which ſenſe the word is uſed in Jer. vii. 18. and xliv. 19. and render it, the cake of your images[s]; and ſuppoſe that it had the image of their gods impreſſed upon it. Calmet interprets it, the pedeſtal of your images[t]; and indeed the word has the ſignification of a baſis, and is ſo rendered by ſome[u]; and is applicable to Moloch their king, a king being the baſis and foundation of the kingdom and people; and to the ſun, intended by that deity, which is the baſis of the celeſtial bodies, and of all things on earth. Some take Moloch and Chiun to be diſtinct deities, the one to be the ſun, the other the moon; but they ſeem rather to be the ſame, and both to be the Egyptian ox, and the calf of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, the image of which was carried in portable tents or tabernacles, in cheſts or ſhrines; ſuch as the Succoth-benoth, or tabernacles of Venus, 2 Kings xvii. 30. and thoſe of Diana's, Acts xix. 24. the firſt of theſe portable temples we read of, is one drawn by oxen in Phœnicia, mentioned by Sanchoniatho[w]; not that the Iſraelites carried ſuch a tent or tabernacle during their travels through the wilderneſs, whatever they might do the few days they worſhipped the calf; but this is to be underſtood of their poſterity in after-times, in the times of Amos; and alſo when Salmaneſer carried them captive beyond Damaſcus, as follows. It may be further obſerved, for the confirmation and illuſtration of what has been ſaid concerning Chiun, that the Egyptian Anubis, which Plutarch[x] ſays is the ſame with Saturn, is called by him Kyon, which ſeems to be no other than this word Chiun: and whereas Stephen calls it Rephan, this is not a corruption of the word, reading Rephan or Revan for Chevan; nor has he reſpect to Rimmon, the god of the Syrians, but it is the Egyptian name for Saturn; which the Septuagint interpreters might chuſe to make uſe of, they interpreting for the king of Egypt: and Diodorus Siculus[y] makes mention of an Egyptian king called Remphis, whom Braunius[z] takes to be this very Chiun; ſee Acts vii. 43. but Rephas or Rephan, was the ſame with Chronus or Saturn, from whence came the Rephaim[a], who dwelt in Aſhtaroth-Carnaim, a town of Ham or Chronus; ſee Gen. xiv. 5. Some[b], who take Siccuth for an idol, render it in the future, ye ſhall carry, &c. and take it to be a prediction of Amos, that the Iſraelites ſhould, with great reproach and ignominy, be obliged by the Aſſyrians, as they were led captive, to carry on their ſhoulders the idols they had worſhipped, and in vain had truſted in, as uſed to be done in triumphs; ſee the note on ch. i. 15.

℣. 27. Therefore will I cauſe you to go into captivity beyond Damaſcus, &c.] The chief city of Syria; and which, as Aben Ezra ſays, lay to the eaſt of the land of Iſrael, and was a very ſtrong and fortified place: and Syria being in alliance with Iſrael, the Iſraelites might think of fleeing thither for refuge, in the time of their diſtreſs; but they are here told, that they ſhould be taken captive, and be carried to places far more remote than that: Stephen ſays, beyond Babylon; as they were, for they were carried into Media, to Halah and Habor by the river of Gozan, to the cities of the Medes; their way to which lay through Syria and Babylon; ſee Acts vii. 43. and the note there: ſaith the Lord, whoſe name is the God of hoſts; and therefore is able to do what he threatens; and it might be depended upon it would be certainly done, as it is clear, beyond all contradiction, it has been done; ſee 2 Kings xvii. 6.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter ſeems to be directed both to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and the ten tribes of Iſrael, under the names of Zion and Samaria, and to the principal men in both; who are reproved and threatened for their carnal ſecurity and ſelf-confidence, being in no fear of the evil day, tho' they had no reaſon for it no more than other people, ℣. 1, 2, 3. are charged with wantonneſs, luxury, intemperance, and want of ſympathy with thoſe in diſtreſs, ℣. 4, 5, 6. therefore are threatened to be carried captive firſt, and their city to be delivered up; which, for the certainty of it, is not only ſaid, but ſwore to, ℣. 7, 8. and a great mortality in every houſe, and the deſtruction of all houſes, both great and ſmall, ℣. 9, 10, 11. and ſince a reformation of them ſeemed impracticable, and not to be expected, but they gloried in their wealth, and boaſted of their ſtrength, therefore they ſhould be afflicted by a foreign nation raiſed againſt them, which affliction ſhould be general, from one end of the country to the other, ℣. 12, 13, 14.

℣. 1. Wo to them that are at eaſe in Zion, &c.] Or ſecure[c] there; which was a ſtrong hold, the city of David, the ſeat of the kings of Judah; where their court was kept, and the princes and chief men reſided, and thought themſelves ſafe, the place being well fortified with walls, towers, and bulwarks: or at eaſe; that is, in eaſy, proſperous, comfortable circumſtances of life; as Job was before his troubles, and others he mentions, Job xvi. 12. and xii. 5. and xxi. 23. tho' to be in ſuch a ſtate is not criminal, but a bleſſing of providential goodneſs, for which men ſhould be thankful, and make uſe of it aright: but wo to the rich in Zion[d], as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, when they have nothing elſe but temporal riches; this is all their portion, and the whole of their conſolation, Luke vi. 24. when they truſt in theſe uncertain riches, and conſume them on their luſts, as deſcribed in the following verſes; are unconcerned at the troubles of others, and give them no relief, but deſpiſe them, Job xii. 5. Pſ. cxxiii. 4. and even are thoughtleſs about their own future ſtate, and put away the evil day far from them, Luke xii. 19, 20. and ſuch are they, who like Moab are at eaſe from their youth, as to their ſpiritual ſtate, Jer. xlviii. 11. never had any true ſight of ſin, or ſenſe of danger; never complain of a body of ſin, or are concerned about ſins of omiſſion or commiſſion; nor troubled with the temptations of ſatan, and have no fears and doubts about their happineſs; and ſuch there be who yet are in Zion, or in a church-ſtate, which Zion often ſignifies; and being there, truſt in it, and in the privileges of it, and ſo are ſecure, and at eaſe; ſuch are the fooliſh virgins and hypocrites, who place their confidence in a profeſſion of religion, in being church-members, and in their ſubmiſſion to external ordinances, and ſo cry, peace, peace, to themſelves, when deſtruction is at hand: and are moreover at eaſe, and wholly unconcerned about the affairs of Zion, both temporal and ſpiritual, and eſpecially the latter; they don't trouble themſelves about the doctrines they hear, whether truth or error; and about the ſucceſs of them, whether they are made uſeful for converſion and edification; and about the continuance of a goſpel-miniſtry, and a ſucceſſion in it; and about the diſcipline of the church of God, and the walk of profeſſors; or about what trials and afflictions are like to come upon the churches; or about the judgments of God in the earth: and therefore ſuch carnal ſecure perſons are either called upon to awake out of their ſleep, and come off of their beds of eaſe, and ſhake off their vain confidence and carnal ſecurity; for the word may be rendered, ho [e], as a note of calling, as in Iſ. lv. 1. Zech. ii. 6. or a threatening of calamity is denounced upon them, that the day of the Lord ſhould come upon them as a thief in the night, or as a ſnare upon them that dwell on earth, and they be ſurprized with the midnight-cry, and with the terrors of devouring flames, as the fooliſh virgins and hypocrites in Zion will, Matt. xxv. 6, 7. Iſ. xxxiii. 14. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions render it, who deſpiſe Zion, or neglect her; and the word is ſometimes uſed of inſolent perſons, and to expreſs their inſolence; ſee Iſ. xxxvii. 29. and ſo may be underſtood, not of the Jews in Jeruſalem, but of the ten tribes, as the following clauſe; who deſpiſed Zion, the city of ſolemnities, the temple, and the worſhip of God there, and ſet up the calves at Dan and Bethel, and worſhipped them; and therefore a wo is denounced upon them. And truſt in the mountain of Samaria; in the city of Samaria, built on a mountain, a ſtrong fortified city, where they thought themſelves ſafe; the royal city of the kings of Iſrael, the head of Ephraim, and the metropolis of the ten tribes, who here are intended: tho' the words may be rendered, and the ſenſe given a little different from this, as wo to the confident ones, that are in Samaria [f]; not that put their truſt in Samaria, but dwell there; but however are confident in their own ſtrength, wealth, and might. The Targum is, “that truſt in the “fortreſs of Samaria;” ſee 1 Kings xvi. 24. Which are named the chief of the nations; the perſons at eaſe in Zion, and truſted in Samaria, were the principal men of both nations, Judah and Iſrael; or theſe cities of Zion and Samaria, were the chief of the ſaid nations: Zion, which was near Jeruſalem, and includes it, was the metropolis of Judea; as Samaria was the head-city of Ephraim, or the ten tribes. The Targum is, “that put the name of “their children, as the name of the children of “the nations;” as the Jews did in after-times, giving their children the names of Alexander, Antipater, &c. To whom the houſe of Iſrael came; meaning not to the ſeven nations, of which the two named cities were chief, into which Iſrael entered, and took poſſeſſion of, and dwelt in; for Samaria never belonged to them, but was built by Omri king of Iſrael, long after the entrance of the Iſraelites into the land of Canaan, 1 Kings xvi. 24. but the cities of Zion and Samaria, into which the whole houſe of Iſrael came, or had recourſe unto, at certain times: the ten tribes came to Samaria, where their kings reſided, the court was kept, and the ſeats of judgment were; and the two tribes came to Zion, to Jeruſalem, to the temple there, to worſhip the Lord.

℣. 2. Paſs ye unto Calneh, and ſee, &c.] What is become of that city, which was in the land of Shinar, an ancient city, as early as the days of Nimrod, and built by him, and was with others the beginning of his kingdom, Gen. x. 10. it belonged to Babylon, and is by Jarchi here interpreted by it, being put for Babel, as he ſuppoſes. According to Jerom [g], it is the ſame city, ſometimes called Seleucia, in his days Cteſiphon; very probably it had been lately taken by the king of Aſſyria, and therefore made mention of; ſee Iſ. x. 9. where it is called Calno. And from thence go ye to Hamath the great; the ſame with Antiochia, as Jarchi and Jerom; called the great, to diſtinguiſh it from Hamath the leſs, ſometimes called Epiphania; or from Hamath-Zobah, near Tadmor, or Palmyra, in the wilderneſs, 2 Chron. viii. 3, 4. tho' it might be ſo called with reſpect to its own grandeur and magnificence; as Sidon is called, Sidon the great, tho' there was no other, Joſh. xi. 8. for it was a royal city; we read of Toi king of Hamath, in the times of David, 2 Sam. viii. 9, 10. It is placed by Joſephus [h], on the north of the land of Canaan; and ſo it appears to be, and to be between Damaſcus and the Mediterranean ſea, from Ezek. xlvii. 15, 16, 17. and xlviii. 1. Abu'lſeda [i], a learned prince, who reigned in Hamath, and ſhould know its ſituation, places it on the Orontes, between Hems and Apamea, that river ſurrounding it on the eaſt and north. The learned Vitringa [k] thinks, that neither Antiochia nor Epiphania are meant, but the city Emiſſa; which Ammianus Marcellinus [l] makes mention of along with Damaſcus, as a famous city in Syria, equal to Tyre, Sidon, and Berytus: and of the ſame opinion was Theodoret [m] among the ancients, and ſo Calmet [n] of late. And ſo Hamath and Damaſcus are mentioned together as recovered by Jeroboam, 2 Kings xiv. 28. very probably the kingdom of Hamath became ſubject to the kings of Damaſcus; ſee Jer. xlix. 23. but be it what place it will, it is very likely it had been lately ſpoiled by the king of Aſſyria; ſee Iſ. xxxvii. 13. Then go down to Gath of the Philiſtines; one of their five principalities, and a chief one, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from other Gaths, as Gath-Hepher, Gath-Rimmon. It ſtood about five or ſix miles ſouth of Jamnia, about fourteen ſouth of Joppa, and thirty-two weſt of Jeruſalem. A village of this name is ſhewn, as Jerom [o] ſays, five miles from Eleutheropolis, as you go to Dioſpolis or Lydda, and is taken to be the ſame place. It is famous for being the birth-place of Goliah; and is called in 2 Sam. viii. 1. compared with 1 Chron. xviii. 1. Metheg-Ammah, or the bridle of Ammah, or Metheg and her mother; that is, Gath and her daughters. Reland [p] thinks Gath is the city Cadytis of Herodotus [q], who ſays it is a city of the Syrians, called Paleſtines or Philiſtines, and ſpeaks of the mountains of it; and this city was not far from the mountainous country of Judea: now this city had been taken by Hazael king of Syria, and its wall was broke down by Uzziah king of Judah, 2 Kings xii. 17. 2 Chron. xvi. 6. Be they better than theſe kingdoms? or their border greater than your border? that is, do Calneh, Hamath, and Gath, excel in dignity and grandeur, in wealth and ſtrength, the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah? or are they of a larger circumference, and exceed them in length and breadth? no, they did not; and therefore the more ungrateful were Iſrael and Judah to ſin againſt the Lord as they had done, who had given them ſuch rich and large kingdoms, and therefore might expect to be taken and ſpoiled as well as they: tho' ſome think there is a change of number and perſons in the text, and that the ſenſe is, are you better than theſe kingdoms, or your border greater than theirs? and if not, you may expect to fare as they; ſee a like expreſſion in Nahum iii. 8.

℣. 3. Ye that put far away the evil day, &c.] The day of Iſrael's captivity, threatened by the Lord, and propheſied of by the prophets; by this prophet, and by Hoſhea and others: this they endeavoured to put out of their minds and thoughts, and ſuppoſed it to be at a great diſtance, yea, hoped it never would be; and like the Jews, with reſpect to their captivity, and the deſtruction of their city, ſaid it was not near, but prolonged, yea, would never come to paſs, Ezek. xi. 3. and xii. 22. ſo ſome men put far from them the day of death; which tho' to a good man is better than the day of his birth, yet to a wicked man is an evil and terrible day; he don't care to hear or ſpeak, or think of it, leſt it ſhould damp his carnal joys and pleaſures: as alſo the day of Chriſt's coming to judgment; which tho' a good man haſtens to in his affections, deſires, and prayers, wicked men ſet at the greateſt diſtance, yea ſcoff at it, as believing it never will be, and to ſhew that they are in no pain or uneaſineſs about it; ſee Iſ. lvi. 12. Matt. xxiv. 48. 2 Pet. iii. 4—12. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, who are ſeparated to the evil day; appointed to it; fore-ordained to this condemnation; deſtined to ruin and deſtruction for their ſins; ſee Prov. xvi. 4. And cauſe the ſeat of violence to come near; boldly venture upon the commiſſion of acts of injuſtice, rapine, and violence, on a preſumption the evil day threatened will never come; or place themſelves on the bench in courts of judicature, and there, without any manner of concern, commit the greateſt acts of unrighteouſneſs, as believing they ſhall never be called to an account for them by God or man.

℣. 4. That lie upon beds of ivory, &c.] That were made of it, or inlaid with it, or covered with it, as the Targum; nor was it improbable that theſe were made wholly of ivory, for ſuch beds we read of: Timæus ſays [r], the Agrigentines had beds entirely made of ivory; and Horace [s] alſo ſpeaks of ſuch beds: and if any credit can be given to the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem on Gen. l. 1. Joſeph made his father Jacob to lie on a bed of ivory. Indeed, the Latin interpreters of theſe Targums render it a cedar-bed; but Buxtorf [t] conjectures that ivory is meant, by the word uſed; and ſo Bochart [u] tranſlates it; on theſe they lay either for ſleep and reſt, or to eat their meals. And ſtretch themſelves upon their couches; for the ſame purpoſes, living in great ſplendor, and indulging themſelves in eaſe and ſloth; as it was the cuſtom of the eaſtern countries, and is of the Arabs now; that they make little or no uſe of chairs, but either ſitting croſs-legged, or lying at length, have couches to lie on at their meals; and when they indulge to eaſe, they cover or ſpread their floors with carpets, which for the moſt part are of the richeſt materials. Along the ſides of the wall or floor, a range of narrow beds or matraſſes is often placed upon theſe carpets; and for their further eaſe and convenience, ſeveral velvet or damaſk bolſters are placed upon theſe, or matraſſes [w], to lean upon, and take their eaſe; ſee Ezek. xiii. 18. and thus, and in ſome ſuch like manner, did the principal men of the people of Iſrael indulge themſelves. Some render it, abound with ſuperfluities; the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, are laſcivious; and the Arabic verſion, burn in luſt; and ſo ſome of the Jewiſh writers interpret it of their committing adulteries, and all uncleanneſs, on their beds and couches. And eat the lambs out of the flock; pick the beſt and fatteſt of them for their uſe: ſo the Targum, "eat the fat of the ſheep:" and the calves out of the midſt of the ſtall; where they are put, and kept to be fattened; from thence they took what they liked beſt, and perhaps not out of their own flocks and ſtalls, but out of others, and with which they pampered themſelves to exceſs.

℣. 5. That chant to the ſound of the viol, &c.] Or pſaltery; an inſtrument of twelve cords, and that gave twelve ſounds, as Joſephus [x] ſays, being ſtricken with the fingers; and to theſe ſounds theſe men chanted or quivered, made like ſounds with their voice, which they raiſed higher or lower, according to the ſound of the inſtrument: they particularized, as the word ſignifies [y]; or obſerved the diviſions and diſtinctions of notes and ſounds, by the modulation of their voice: and invent to themſelves inſtruments of muſic like David; not content with old ones, ſuch as were uſed in former times, they invented new inſtruments and new tunes, and new ſongs to ſing to them; as David made ſongs, and invented ſeveral inſtruments of muſic to ſing them upon and to, in religious worſhip, and for the praiſe and glory of God; ſo theſe men invented new ones to indulge their carnal mirth and jollity, in which they thought themſelves to be juſtified by the example of David.

℣. 6. That drink wine in bowls, &c.] Not in ſmall cups or glaſſes, but in large bowls, that they might drink freely, even to drunkenneſs; hence we read of the drunkards of Ephraim, or the ten tribes, Iſ. xxviii. 1. or drink in bowls of wine; which is much to the ſame ſenſe. The Targum is, "that drink wine in ſilver vials." And anoint themſelves with the chief ointments; which Jarchi ſays was balſam, and the beſt is that which grew about Jericho; this they did not for moderate refreſhment, but for pleaſure, and to indulge themſelves in luxury: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph; or the breach of him [z]; that was made upon him by ſome enemy or another: either what had been already made; Kimchi thinks it reſpects the carrying captive of ſome before the reign of Jeroboam; or it may regard the diſtreſs Pul king of Aſſyria gave to Iſrael, in the times of Menahem; or the carrying captive the inhabitants of ſeveral places by Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, in the times of Pekah, 2 Kings xv. 19, 29. or elſe, as Jarchi thinks, this refers to ſome breach and affliction to come, which theſe men were unconcerned about; even what they heard from the mouth of the prophets ſhould come to them; that the kingdom of the houſe of Iſrael ſhould ceaſe, and be utterly took away, Hoſ. i. 4, 6. which was fulfilled by Salmaneſer, who carried Iſrael captive into the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6. but the prophecy of this did not trouble them, or make them ſick at heart, as the word [a] ſignifies, nor any preſent affliction that might attend them; they did not weep with them that weep, were men of hard hearts, that had no ſympathy with their brethren and fellow-creatures. It is thought that here is ſome alluſion to the carriage of Joſeph's brethren to him, when in the pit, and ſold by them into Egypt; or to the chief butler's forgetfulneſs of him, when advanced, and amidſt his cups.

℣. 7. Therefore now ſhall they go captive with the firſt that go captive, &c.] That is, theſe men, who were the firſt and chief in the nation, who would not believe the day of Iſrael's captivity would ever come; or however, had very diſtant apprehenſions of it; but indulged and gratified their ſeveral ſenſes of taſting, hearing, ſmelling, in a carnal way, and had no ſympathy with, and compaſſion upon their afflicted brethren; theſe ſhould be the firſt the enemy ſhould lay hold upon, and carry captive; as we find the royal family, the princes and nobles, the courtiers and chief tradeſmen, were the firſt that were carried captive of the Jews, in Jeconiah's captivity, 2 Kings xxiv. 12, 14. And the banquet of them that ſtretched themſelves ſhall be removed; that ſtretched themſelves upon couches, ℣. 4. they ſhall have no more banquets or feaſting-bouts to attend to, by ſtretching themſelves out, and lying upon couches at their eaſe, theſe ſhall be taken from them; and be glad of bread and water in an enemy's country, without a couch to recline upon. Some underſtand this of a funeral-banquet, as in Jer. xvi. 5. and ſo the ſenſe is, that when they die, they ſhall not have that honour done to their memory, as to have a funeral-feaſt provided for thoſe that attend their burial, as was cuſtomary. Kimchi interprets it, the mourning of ſuch ſhall draw nigh [b]; and according to his father Joſeph Kimchi, the word in the Arabic language ſignifies to lift up the voice, either in mourning or joy; and ſo may ſignify, that as all feaſts, and the joy that attends them, ſhould be removed, which is the ſenſe of the Targum, inſtead of that, mourning ſhould take place; or they ſhould be deprived of the common ceremony at death, of mourning men and women.

℣. 8. The Lord God hath ſworn by himſelf, &c.] Becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, Heb. vi. 13. which ſhows the importance and certainty of the thing ſworn to, and is as follows: ſaith the Lord, the God of hoſts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob; or the pride of Jacob [c]; of Iſrael, of the ten tribes, remarkable for their pride; hence called the crown of pride, Iſ. xxviii. 3. it may include all that was glorious, valuable, and excellent among them, of which they were proud; their kingdom, riches, wealth, and ſtrength, their fortified cities and towns: if Judah is comprehended in this, it may regard the temple, which was their excellency, and in which they gloried. So the Targum paraphraſes it, "the houſe of the ſanctuary of the houſe of Jacob;" and in like manner Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech interpret it. And hate his palaces; the palaces of the king and nobles, and great men, which ſhould fall into the enemies hand, and be plundered and deſtroyed; which is meant by the Lord's abhorrence and hatred of them, this being an evidence of it. Therefore will I deliver up the city, with all that is therein; or with its fulneſs [d]; with all its inhabitants and riches; according to Jarchi, the city of Jeruſalem is meant; though rather the city of Samaria, unleſs both are intended, city for cities; ſince the chief men both of Iſrael and Judah ſeem to be addreſſed, ℣. 1.

℣. 9. And it ſhall come to paſs, &c.] When the city is delivered up and taken: if there remain: who are not carried captive, or deſtroyed by the ſword: ten men in one houſe; that is, many, a certain number for an uncertain: that they ſhall die; either with famine, or by the peſtilence, tho' they have eſcaped the other calamities; ſo general ſhall the deſtruction be, by one means or another.

℣. 10. And a man's uncle ſhall take him up, &c.] That is, his father's brother, as Kimchi; or his near kinſman, as the Targum; to whom the right of inheritance belongs, and alſo the care of his funeral; he ſhall take up the dead man himſelf, in order to inter him, there being none to employ in ſuch ſervice; the mortality being ſo univerſal, either thro' the peſtilence raging every where, or thro' the earthquake, men being killed by the fall of houſes upon them; which Aben Ezra takes to be the caſe here; ſee ℣. 11. and ch. i. 1. and iii. 13. And he that burneth him; which may be read disjunctively, or he that burneth him [e]; his mother's brother, according to Judah ben Karis in Aben Ezra; for which there ſeems to be no foundation. The Targum renders it in connexion with the preceding clauſe, "ſhall take him up from the burning;" and ſo Jarchi interprets of a man's being found, and taken up in a houſe, burnt by the enemy at the taking of the city: but it is beſt to underſtand it of one, whoſe buſineſs it was to burn the dead; which tho' not commonly uſed among the Jews, ſometimes was, 1 Sam. xxxi. 12. and ſo ſhould be at this time, partly becauſe of the infection, and to ſtop the contagion; and chiefly becauſe a ſingle man could not well carry whole bodies to the grave, to bury them; and therefore firſt burnt their fleſh, and then buried their bones, as follows: to bring out the bones out of the houſe; in order to bury them: and ſhall ſay unto him that is by the ſides of the houſe; or in the corner of it [f], as the Targum; either the uncle ſhall ſay to the burner, that is ſearching the houſe for the dead; or the uncle and burner being one and the ſame perſon, ſhall ſay to the only ſurviving one of the ten, that is got into ſome corner of the houſe thro' fear or melancholy, under ſuch a ſad calamity, is there yet any with thee? any dead corpſe to be brought out and burned, and buried? and he ſhall ſay, no; there are no more: or there is an end of them all [g]; the laſt has been brought out: or as the Targum, "they are periſhed;" they are all dead, and carried out: then ſhall he ſay, hold thy tongue; leſt the neighbours ſhould hear, and be diſcouraged at the number of the dead in one houſe; or ſay not one word againſt the providence of God, nor murmur and repine at his hand, ſince it is juſt and righteous: for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord; being forbid by their ſuperiors; or it is not right to do it by way of complaint, ſince our ſins have deſerved ſuch judgments to come upon us; or it will be to no purpoſe to make mention tion of the name of the Lord, and pray unto him to turn away his hand, ſince deſtruction is determined, the decree is gone forth. The Targum is, "he ſhall ſay, remove (that is, the dead) ſince "while they lived they did not pray in the name "of the Lord." And ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions make this to be the reaſon of the mortality, becauſe they remembered not the name of the Lord; or called not upon it.

℣. 11. For behold, the Lord commandeth, &c.] Hath determined and ordered the judgment before, and what follows: Kimchi paraphraſes it, hath decreed the earthquake, as in ch. iii. 15. of which he underſtands the following: and he will ſmite the great houſe with breaches; or droppings [h]; ſo that the rain ſhall drop through: and the little houſe with clefts; ſo that it ſhall fall to ruin; that is, he ſhall ſmite the houſes both of great and ſmall, of the princes, and of the common people, either with an earthquake, ſo that they ſhall part aſunder and fall; or being left without inhabitants, ſhall of courſe become deſolate, there being none to repair their breaches. Some underſtand by the great houſe, the ten tribes of Iſrael; and by the little houſe, the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin; to which ſenſe the Targum ſeems to incline, "he will ſmite the "great kingdom with a mighty ſtroke, and the "little kingdom with a weak ſtroke."

℣. 12. Shall horſes run upon the rocks? or will one plow there with oxen? &c.] Will any man be ſo weak and fooliſh, to propoſe or attempt a race for horſes upon rocks, where they and their riders would be in danger of breaking their necks? or would any man act ſo unwiſe a part, as to take a yoke of oxen to plow with them upon a rock, where no impreſſion can be made? as vain and fruitleſs a thing it would be, to attempt to bring ſuch perſons under a conviction of their ſins, and to repentance for them, and reformation from them, who are given up to a judicial hardneſs of heart, like that of a rock, as are the perſons deſcribed in the next clauſe; or as ſuch methods with horſes and oxen would be contrary to all the rules of reaſon and prudence, ſo as contrary a part do ſuch perſons act, whoſe characters are next given, and there is no probability of bringing them to a better ſenſe and practice of things. For ye have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteouſneſs into hemlock; that which would be beneficial to a nation, than which nothing is more ſo, as the exerciſe of juſtice and judgment, into that which is bitter and pernicious to it, as injuſtice and oppreſſion; ſee ch. v. 7.

℣. 13. Ye which rejoice in a thing of nought, &c.] In their wealth and riches, which are things that are not, becauſe of the uncertainty of them; and in compariſon of true riches, have no ſolidity and ſubſtance in them, Prov. xxiii. 5. or in any of the things of this world, the luſts of it, the honours of it, human wiſdom or ſtrength; all are things of nought, of no worth, give no ſatisfaction, and are of no continuance, and not to be gloried in, Jer. ix. 23. or in their idols, for an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4. and yet they rejoiced in them, Acts vii. 41. or in their own works of righteouſneſs, as men of a phariſaical temper do, as theſe people were; theſe indeed are ſomething, when done in obedience to the will of God, and according to that, and from right principles, and in the exerciſe of faith and love, and with a view to the glory of God, and as they are evidences of true grace, and profitable to men, and tend to glorify God, and ſerve the intereſt of religion; but they are things of nought, and not to be rejoiced and gloried in, in the buſineſs of juſtification before God, and in the affair of ſalvation: the ſame may be ſaid of a mere outward profeſſion of religion depended on, and all external rites and ceremonies, or ſubmiſſion to outward ordinances, whether legal or evangelical. The phraſe may be rendered, in that which is no word [i]; is not the word of God, nor according to it; indeed every thing ſhort of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him, are things of nought, and not to be rejoiced in, Phil. iii. 3, 4, 5. and iv. 4. Which ſay, have we not taken to us horns by our own ſtrength? by which we have puſhed our enemies, got victory over them, and obtained power, dominion, and authority; all which horns are an emblem of. So Sanchoniatho [k] ſays, Aſtarte put upon her own head, a bull's head, as an enſign of royalty, or a mark of ſovereignty; by which, as Biſhop Cumberland [l] thinks, is plainly meant the bull's horns, ſince it is certain that a horn in the eaſtern languages, is an emblem or expreſſion noting royal power, as in 1 Sam. ii. 10. and in other places; ſee Dan. vii. 24. thus the kings of Egypt wore horns, as Diodorus relates; and perhaps for the ſame reaſon the Egyptians adorned Iſis with horns [m]. And all this they aſcribed not to God, but to themſelves. The Targum interprets horns by riches; but it rather ſignifies victory [n], and power and government, which they took to themſelves, and imputed to their own ſtrength, valour, and courage: very probably here is an alluſion to their enſigns, banners, ſhields or helmets, on which horns might be figured or engraven, being the arms of Ephraim, the ſon of Joſeph, the chief of the ten tribes, who are here ſpoken of. Ephraim is often put for the ten tribes, or the kingdom of Iſrael; and Joſeph, whoſe ſon he was, his glory was like the firſtling of a bullock, and his horns are ſaid to be like the horns of unicorns; with them, it is promiſed, he ſhall puſh the people together, to the ends of the earth, and they are the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and they are the thouſands of Manaſſeh, Deut. xxxiii. 17. and it may be, as the lion ſeems to be the enſign of the tribe of Judah, to which he is by Jacob compared; ſo the ox or the unicorn might be the enſign of the tribe of Ephraim: and ſo the ancient Jews, as Aben Ezra on Numb. ii. 2. obſerves, ſay, that the form of a man was on the ſtandard of Reuben; and the form of a lion on the ſtandard of Judah; and the form of an ox on the ſtandard of Ephraim, &c. and others [o] of them ſay, that the ſtandard of Joſeph was died very black, and was figured for the two princes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh; upon the ſtandard of Ephraim was figured an ox, becauſe the firſtling of a bullock; and on the ſtandard of Manaſſeh was figured an unicorn, becauſe his horns are like the horns of unicorns. Now the Iſraelites, or thoſe of the ten tribes, at the head of which Ephraim was, ſet up their banners, not in the name of the Lord, but in their own ſtrength; and attributed their conqueſts and dominions to their own conduct and courage, the horns of their own ſtrength, and not to God [p]. And this alſo is the language of ſuch perſons, who aſcribe regeneration and converſion, faith, repentance, the cleanſing of a man's heart, and the reformation of his life, yea his whole ſalvation, to the power and ſtrength of his free-will, when man has no ſtrength at all to effect any of theſe things; theſe are all vain boaſts, and very diſagreeable and offenſive to the Lord; and for ſuch like things, perſons ſtand here reproved by him, and threatened with woes; for wo muſt be here ſupplied from ℣. 1.

℣. 14. But behold, I will raiſe up againſt you a nation, O houſe of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord, the God of hoſts, &c.] The Aſſyrian nation, under its king Salmaneſer; who invaded Iſrael, came up to Samaria, and after a three years-ſiege took it, and carried Iſrael captive into foreign lands, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6: and they ſhall afflict you; by battels, ſieges, forages, plunders, and burning of cities and towns, and putting the inhabitants to the ſword: from the entring in of Hamath, unto the river of the wilderneſs; from Hamath the leſs, ſaid by Joſephus [q] and Jerom [r] to be called Epiphania in their times from Antiochus Epiphanes; it was at the entrance on the land of Iſrael, and at the northern border of it; ſo that the river of the wilderneſs, whatever is meant by it, lay to the ſouth; by which it appears, that this affliction and diſtreſs would be very general, from one end of it to the other. Some, by this river, underſtand the river of Egypt, at the entrance of Egypt in the wilderneſs of Ethan; Sihor or Nile; which, Jarchi ſays, lay ſouth-weſt of Iſrael, as Hamath lay north-weſt of it. And a late traveller [s] obſerves, that the ſouth and ſouth-weſt border of the tribe of Judah, containing within it the whole, or the greateſt part of what was called the way of the ſpies, Numb. xxi. 1. and afterwards Idumea, extended itſelf from the Elenitic gulf of the Red-ſea, along by that of Hieroopolis, quite to the Nile weſtward; the Nile conſequently, in this view and ſituation, either with regard to the barrenneſs of the Philiſtines, or to the poſition of it with reſpect to the land of promiſe, or to the river Euphrates, may, with propriety enough, be called the river of the wilderneſs, Amos vi. 14. as this diſtrict, which lies beyond the eaſtern or Aſiatic banks of the Nile, from the parallel of Memphis, even to Peluſium, (the land of Goſhen only excepted) is all of it dry, barren, and inhoſpitable; or if the ſituation be more regarded, it may be called, as it is rendered by the Septuagint, the weſtern torrent or river. Tho' ſome [t] take this to be the river Boſor or Bezor, that parts the tribes of Judah and Simeon, and diſcharges itſelf into the Mediterranean between Gaza, or rather Majuma and Anthedon. Tho' Kimchi takes this river to be the ſea of the plain, the ſame with the ſalt or dead ſea, Deut. iii. 17. which may ſeem likely, ſince Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh, king of Iſrael, under whom Amos propheſied, had reſtored the coaſt of Iſrael, from the entring of Hamath unto the ſea of the plain, 2 Kings xiv. 25. with which they were elevated, and of which they boaſted; but now they ſhould have affliction and diſtreſs in the ſame places, and which ſhould extend as far.

CHAP. VII.

IN this and the two following chapters, are the viſions of Amos, in number five; three of which are contained in this chapter, and with which it begins. The firſt is of the graſhoppers or locuſts eating up the after-graſs of the land, which are ſtopped at the interceſſion of the prophet, ℣. 1, 2, 3. the ſecond is of fire the Lord called for to contend by, whoſe devouring flames are made to ceaſe by the ſame interpoſition, ℣. 4, 5, 6. and the other is of the plumb-line, ſignifying the utter deſtruction of the people of Iſrael, according to the righteous judgment of God, ℣. 7, 8, 9. upon the delivery of which prophecies and viſions, the prieſt of Bethel forms a charge againſt the prophet to the king; and adviſes Amos to flee into Judea, and propheſy there, and not at Bethel, being willing to be rid of him at any rate, ℣. 10, 11, 12, 13. next follows the prophet's vindication of himſelf, ſhewing his divine call to the prophetic office, and his miſſion and expreſs order he had from the Lord to propheſy unto Iſrael, ℣. 14, 15. and concludes with a denunciation of divine judgments on the prieſts family, and upon the whole land of Iſrael, ℣. 16, 17.

℣. 1. Thus hath the Lord ſhewed unto me, &c.] What follows in this and the two chapters, before the prophet delivered what he heard from the Lord; now what he ſaw, the ſame thing, the ruin of the ten tribes, is here expreſſed as before, but in a different form; before in prophecy, here in viſion, the more to affect and work upon the hearts of the people: and behold, he formed graſhoppers; or locuſts [u], as the word is rendered, Iſ. xxxiii. 4. and ſo the Septuagint here, and other verſions. Kimchi interprets it, and behold, a collection or ſwarm of locuſts; and the Targum, a creation of them. Tho' Aben Ezra takes the word to be a verb, and not a noun, and the ſenſe to be, agreeable to our verſion, he ſhewed me the bleſſed God, who was forming locuſts; it appeared to Amos, in the viſion of prophecy, as if the Lord was making locuſts, large and great ones, and many of them; not that this was really done, only viſionally, and was an emblem of the Aſſyrian army, prepared and ready to devour the land of Iſrael; ſee Joel i. 4. Nah. iii. 17. And this was in the beginning of the ſhooting up of the latter growth; and lo, it was the latter growth after the king's mowings; when the firſt graſs was mowed down, and the firſt crop gathered in, for the uſe of the king's cattel; as the after-graſs was juſt ſpringing up, and promiſed a ſecond crop, theſe graſhoppers or locuſts were forming, which threatened the deſtruction of it. This muſt be towards the cloſe of the ſummer, and when autumn was coming on, at which time naturaliſts tell us, that locuſts breed. So Ariſtole[w] ſays, they bring forth at the going out of the ſummer; and of one ſort of them he ſays, their eggs periſh in the waters of autumn, or when it is a wet autumn; but in a dry autumn there is a large increaſe of them: and ſo Pliny ſays[x], they breed in the autumn-ſeaſon, and lie under the earth all the winter, and appear in the ſpring: and Columella obſerves[y], that locuſts are moſt ſuitably and commodiouſly fed with graſs in autumn; which is called cordum or the latter graſs, that comes or ſprings late in the year; ſuch as this now was. The Mahometans ſpeak[z] much of God being the maker of locuſts; they ſay he made them of the clay which was left at the formation of Adam; and repreſent him ſaying, I am God, nor is there any Lord of locuſts beſides me, who feed them, and ſend them for food to the people, or as a puniſhment to them, as I pleaſe: they call them the army of the moſt high God, and will not ſuffer any to kill them; ſee the note on Rev. ix. 3. whether all this is founded on this paſſage of ſcripture, I cannot ſay; however, there is no reaſon from thence, to make the locuſts ſo peculiarly the workmanſhip of God as they do, ſince this was only in a viſionary way; tho' it may be obſerved, that it is with great propriety, agreeable to the nature of theſe creatures, that God is repreſented as forming them at ſuch a ſeaſon of the year. Some, by the king's mowings, underſtand the carrying captive the ten tribes by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, ſo Ribera; after which things were in a flouriſhing ſtate, or at leaſt began to be ſo, in the two tribes under Hezekiah, when they were threatened with ruin by the army of Sennacherib, from which there was a deliverance: but as this viſion, and the reſt, only reſpect the ten tribes of Iſrael, the king's mowings of the firſt crop, may ſignify the diſtreſſes of the people of Iſrael, in the times of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael, by Hazael and Benhadad kings of Syria, 2 Kings xiii. 3, 4, 22. when things revived again, like the ſhooting up of the after-graſs, in the reign of Joaſh, and eſpecially of Jeroboam his ſon, who reſtored the coaſt of Iſrael, the Lord having compaſſion on them, 2 Kings xiii. 25. and xiv. 25, 26. but after his death things grew worſe; his ſon reigned but ſix months, and he that ſlew him but one; and in the reign of Menahem that ſucceeded him, an invaſion of the land was made by Pul king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xv. 19. which is generally thought to be intended here. Or elſe, as others, it may refer to the troubles in the interregnum, after the death of Jeroboam, to his ſons mounting the throne, the ſpace of eleven years, when, and afterwards, Iſrael was in a declining ſtate.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs, that when they had made an end of eating the graſs of the land, &c.] That is, the graſhoppers or locuſts; when in the viſion it ſeemed to the prophet that almoſt all the graſs of the land was eat up, and they were going to ſeize upon the corn, and other fruits of the earth: this ſignifies not Sennacherib's invaſion of the land of Judea, but Pul's invaſion of the land of Iſrael, whoſe army ſeemed like theſe locuſts; and ſpreading themſelves over the land, threatened it with deſolation, as theſe locuſts ſeemed to have wholly conſumed all the graſs of the land; then the prophet ſaid what follows: then I ſaid, O Lord God, forgive I beſeech thee; the ſins of the people, as the Targum, which were the cauſe of theſe locuſts coming, or of the Aſſyrian army invading the land; and the prophet prays that God would avert this judgment, ſignified in this viſion, or remove it, which is often in ſcripture meant by the forgiveneſs of ſin, Exod. xxxii. 31, 32. Numb. xiv. 19. 1 Kings viii. 33, 34, 36, 37, 39. this is the buſineſs of the prophets and miniſters of the Lord, to intercede for a people when ruin is near; and happy is that people, when they have ſuch to ſtand up in the breach for them. The argument the prophet uſes is, by whom ſhall Jacob ariſe? for he is ſmall; or little[a]; like the firſt ſhooting up of the graſs, after it has been mown: or as Noldius[b] renders it, how otherwiſe ſhould Jacob ſtand? and ſo Kimchi, how ſhould there be a ſtanding for him? that is, unleſs God forgives his ſin, and turns away his wrath, how ſhall he ſtand up under the weight of his ſins, which muſt lie upon him, unleſs forgiven? and how ſhall he bear the wrath and indignation of God for them? and ſo if any ſinner is not forgiven, how ſhall he ſtand before God to ſerve and worſhip him now? or at his tribunal with confidence hereafter? or ſuſtain his wrath and diſpleaſure to all eternity? ſee Pſ. cxxx. 3, 4. or, who of or in Jacob ſhall ſtand[c]? not one will be left; all muſt be cut off, if God forgive not; for all are ſinners, there are none without ſin: or, who ſhall ſtand for Jacob[d]? or intercede for him? it will be to no purpoſe, if God is inexorable: ſo the Targum, "who will ſtand and aſk pardon for "their ſins?" or, who will raiſe up Jacob[e]? from that low condition in which he is, or likely to be in, if God forgive not, and does not avert the judgment threatened, to a high and glorious ſtate of proſperity and happineſs; for if all are cut off, there will be none left to be inſtruments of ſuch a work: for he is ſmall; few in number, and greatly weakened by one calamity or another; and if this ſhould take place, would be fewer and weaker ſtill. So the church of Chriſt, which is often ſignified by Jacob, is ſometimes in a very low eſtate; the number of converts few; has but a little ſtrength to bear afflictions, perform duty, and withſtand enemies; it is a day of ſmall things with it, with reſpect to light and knowledge, and the exerciſe of grace, eſpecially faith; when ſome like the prophet are concerned for it, by whom it ſhall ariſe, the God of Jacob can cauſe it to ariſe, and can raiſe up inſtruments for ſuch ſervice, and make his miniſters, and the miniſtry of the word and ordinances, means of increaſing the number, ſtature, ſpiritual light, knowledge, grace, and ſtrength of his people.

℣. 3. The Lord repented for this, &c.] He heard the prayer of the prophet, and at his interceſſion averted the threatened judgment; thus the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man avails much, Jam. v. 16. this is ſpoken after the manner of men; as men, when they repent of a thing, deſiſt from it, ſo the Lord deſiſted from going on with this judgment; he did not change his mind, but changed the diſpenſations of his providence according to his mind and will: it ſhall not be, ſaith the Lord;

Lord; theſe graſhoppers or locuſts, the Aſſyrian army ſhall not at this time deſtroy the land of Iſrael: Pul king of Aſſyria took a ſum of money of the king of Iſrael, and ſo turned back, and ſtayed not in the land, 2 Kings xv. 19, 20.

℣. 4. Thus hath the Lord ſhewed unto me, &c.] Another viſion after this manner: and behold, the Lord God called to contend by fire; gave out that he would have a controverſy with his people Iſrael, and proclaimed the time when he would try the cauſe with them, and that by fire: or he called his family, as Jarchi; that is, his angels, as Kimchi, to cauſe fire to deſcend upon Iſrael, as upon Sodom and Gomorrha; ſo other Rabbins, Kimchi mentions: or as he interprets it, the ſcorching heat of the ſun, like fire, that reſtrained the rain, dried up the plants, and leſſened the waters of the river, and ſo brought on a general drought, and in conſequence famine: or rather a foreign army, involving them in war, burning their cities and towns; ſee ch. i. 4, 7, 10, 12, 14: and it devoured the great deep; it ſeemed as if it did; as the fire from heaven, in Elijah's time, licked up the water in the trench, 1 Kings xviii. 38. ſo this coming at God's command, ſeemed to dry up the whole ocean; by which may be meant the multitude of people, nations, and kingdoms, ſubdued by the Aſſyrians; ſee Rev. xvii. 15: and did eat up a part; a part of the field, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra; of the king's field, ℣. 1. as Kimchi; ſhewing, as he obſerves, that the reigning king was a bad king, and that this was for his ſin: or rather, a part of the land of Iſrael; and ſo refers, as is generally thought, to Tiglath-Pileſer's invaſion of the land, who carried captive a part of it, 2 Kings xv. 29.

℣. 5. Then ſaid I, O Lord God, ceaſe, I beſeech thee, &c.] From deſtroying the land; ſuffer not this calamity to proceed any further; uſing the ſame argument as before: by whom ſhall Jacob ariſe? for he is ſmall; ſee the note on ℣. 2.

℣. 6. The Lord repented for this, &c.] He heard the prophet's prayer, and deſiſted from going on with the threatened deſtruction: this alſo ſhall not be, ſaith the Lord God; the whole land ſhall not be deſtroyed, only a part of it carried captive.

℣. 7. Thus he ſhewed me, &c.] A third viſion, which was in the following manner: and behold, the Lord ſtood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand; this wall was the people of Iſrael, who were built up as a wall, firm and ſtrong; and ſo ſtood againſt their enemies, whilſt ſupported by the Lord, and he ſtood by them. The Septuagint verſion is, an adamantine-wall. In their conſtitution, both civil and eccleſiaſtic, they were formed according to the good and righteous laws of God, which may be ſignified by the plumb-line; and ſo the Targum renders it, the wall of judgment. And now the Lord appears ſtanding upon this wall, to trample it down, and not to ſupport it; and with a plumb-line in his hand, to examine and try, whether this wall was as it was firſt erected; whether it did not bulge out, and vary from its former ſtructure, and was not according to the line and rule of his divine word, which was a rule of righteouſneſs.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſaid unto me, Amos, what ſeeſt thou? &c.] This queſtion was put to him, the rather, ſince he was ſilent, and did not upon this viſion, as the former, make any ſupplication to the Lord; as alſo, becauſe this viſion portended ſomething of moment and importance, which he would have the prophet attend to: and I ſaid, a plumb-line; the ſame word as before, and is differently rendered, as already obſerved. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, a plaſterer's or maſon's trowel; with which they lay their plaſter and morter on in building: the Septuagint, an adamant: and which, by Pliny[f], is called Anachites; a word in ſound near to this here uſed: the Targum renders it, judgment: but Jarchi and Aben Ezra obſerve, that in the Arabic tongue it ſignifies lead or tin, as it does[g]; and ſo a line with lead at the end of it. Then ſaid the Lord, behold, I will ſet a plumb-line in the midſt of my people Iſrael; take an exact account of their actions, and ſee how they agree or diſagree with the rule of the word; and in the moſt ſtrict and righteous manner deal with them for their ſins and tranſgreſſions, lay judgment to the line, and righteouſneſs to the plummet, Iſ. xxviii. 17. I will not again paſs by them any more; wink at their ſins, and overlook their tranſgreſſions, by not correcting and puniſhing for them; or will not pardon them, but inflict puniſhment on them. So the Targum, "behold, I will exerciſe judgment "in the midſt of my people Iſrael, and I will not "add any more to pardon them." Tho' ſome underſtand it of God's making ſuch an utter end of them, that he ſhould no more paſs thro' them[h], to deſtroy them, having done it at once, and thoroughly.

℣. 9. And the high places of Iſaac ſhall be deſolate, &c.] Such as the ten tribes of Iſrael, who deſcended from Iſaac, built at Beerſheba, in imitation of Iſaac, and pleading his example; who worſhipped there, tho' not idols, as they, but the true God; and in commemoration of his being bound upon an altar on mount Moriah: but theſe, as the Septuagint verſion renders it, were high places of laughter; ridiculous in the eyes of the Lord, deſpiſed by him, and ſo ſhould be made deſolate: and the ſanctuaries of Iſrael ſhall be laid waſte; the temples built for the calves at Dan and Bethel, and other places: and I will riſe againſt the houſe of Jeroboam with the ſword; or as the Targum, "I will raiſe up againſt "the houſe of Jeroboam thoſe that ſlay with the "ſword;" this was fulfilled by Shallum, who conſpired againſt Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam, and ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead, which put an end to the family of Jeroboam, 2 Kings xv. 10.

℣. 10. Then Amaziah the prieſt of Bethel, &c.] The Targum calls him, the prince or preſident of Bethel; and the word uſed ſignifies both a prince and a prieſt; and very probably this man had the care of the civil as well as religious matters in Bethel. Aben Ezra ſtiles him, the prieſt of Baal; he was one that ſucceeded the prieſts that Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat placed here, to offer ſacrifices to the calf he ſet up in this place, 1 Kings xii. 32. who hearing the above three viſions of Amos delivered, and fearing that he would alienate the people from the idolatrous worſhip he was at the head of, and frighten them from an attendance on it, which would leſſen his eſteem with the people, and alſo his worldly gain and profit; and obſerving that Amos did not make any interceſſion for the averting of the judgment threatened in the laſt viſion, as in the other two, and which particularly concerned the king's family: he ſent to Jeroboam king of Iſrael; either letters or meſſengers, or both; who, it ſeems was not at this time at Bethel, but at ſome other place; perhaps Samaria, which was not a great way from hence: ſaying, Amos hath conſpired againſt thee in the midſt of the land of Iſrael; he ſpeaks of Amos as if he was well known to the king, and perhaps he might be, having long propheſied in the land of Iſrael, and near the court; and repreſents him as a ſeditious perſon, not as affecting the crown and kingdom himſelf, but as ſtirring up a ſpirit of rebellion among the people; taking off their affections from their prince, and them from their allegiance to him, by repreſenting him as a wicked perſon that would in a little time be cut off; and this he did not privately, and in a corner, but publickly, in the midſt of the land, and before all the people of Iſrael; and this was no new and unuſual thing to repreſent good men, and eſpecially miniſters of the word, as enemies to the civil government, when none are truer friends to it, or more quiet under it: the land is not able to bear all his words; either to withſtand the power of them; they'll have ſuch an influence upon the people, if timely care is not taken, as to cauſe them both to reject the eſtabliſhed religion and worſhip at Dan and Bethel, and to riſe up in arms againſt the civil government, and dethrone him the king; ſuch terrible things he ſays to the people, as will frighten them, and put them upon taking ſuch meaſures as theſe: or elſe the prophet's words were ſo intolerable, that his good ſubjects, the inhabitants of the land, could not bear them; and if he did not give orders himſelf to take away his life, they would riſe up againſt him, and diſpatch him themſelves.

℣. 11. For thus Amos ſaith, Jeroboam ſhall die by the ſword, &c.] Which was not ſaying truth; for Amos ſaid not that Jeroboam ſhould die by the ſword, but that God would raiſe up the ſword againſt his houſe or family; nor did Jeroboam die by the ſword, but his ſon Zachariah did: and Iſrael ſhall ſurely be led away captive out of their own land; this was true; Amos did ſay this, and he afterwards confirms it. This is the amount of the charge brought againſt the prophet, which has ſome truth and ſome falſhood mixed together; and by which method the prieſt hoped to gain his point, and get the prophet either baniſhed, or put to death.

℣. 12. Alſo Amaziah ſaid unto Amos, &c.] Either at the ſame time; or it may be, after he had waited for the king's anſwer, and received none; or what did not come up to his expectations and wiſhes. We have no account of any anſwer the king returned; who either gave no heed to the repreſentations of the prieſt, or had a better opinion of the prophet, and did not credit the things imputed to him; which the prieſt obſerving, took another way to get rid of the prophet, and that by flattery: O thou ſeer; that ſeeſt viſions, and foretels things to come. This title, which of right belonged to him, and is given to the true prophets of God ſometimes, is here given to Amos, either ſeriouſly or ironically: go flee thee away into the land of Judah; to which he belonged, and where the temple ſtood, and the true worſhip of God was performed; and where the king, princes and people were on his ſide of the queſtion; and where his prophecies would be received, and he careſſed for them, being againſt the ten tribes, with whom they were at variance, and where alſo he would be ſafe; for he ſuggeſts, that in giving this advice, he conſulted his good and ſafety; for if he ſtaid here long, king Jeroboam would certainly take away his life; and therefore he adviſed him to flee with all haſte to his own country: and there eat bread, and propheſy there; he took him for a mercenary man like himſelf, and that he propheſied for bread; which he intimates he would never be able to get in the land of Iſrael, but in all probability might in the land of Judea.

℣. 13. But propheſy not again any more at Bethel, &c.] He might propheſy any where, if he did not there, for what the prieſt cared, that ſo his honour and intereſt were not hurt. The reaſons he gave, were, for it is the king's chapel; or ſanctuary [i]; where a temple was built for the idol-calf, and where the king worſhipped it, and attended all other religious ſervice: and it is the king's court; or the houſe of the kingdom [k]; the ſeat of it, where the king had a royal palace, and ſometimes reſided here, and kept his court, as well as at Samaria; often coming hither to worſhip, it being nearer to him than Dan, where the other calf was placed; intimating hereby, that the king would never ſuffer ſuch a troubleſome man as he to be ſo near him; and by propheſying to interrupt him, either in his religious or civil affairs; and therefore adviſes him by all means to depart, if he had any regard to his life or peace.

℣. 14. Then anſwered Amos, and ſaid to Amaziah, &c.] With much freedom, boldneſs and intrepidity, and yet with modeſty and humility; not at all moved by his frowns or his flatteries: I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's ſon; he was not a prophet originally, or from his youth, as Kimchi; he was not born and bred one; neither his father was a prophet, by whom he could get any inſtructions in the myſtery of propheſying; nor was he a diſciple of any of the prophets, or brought up in any of their ſchools, as ſome were; he was no prophet till the Lord called him immediately, at once, from his ſecular employment to this office; and therefore did not take it up to get a livelihood by. Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it, that he was not one of the falſe prophets that propheſied for hire, and took a reward: but I was an herdſman, and a gatherer of ſycomore fruit; that is, originally: this was the employment he was brought up in from his youth, and was in it when he was called to be a prophet; he looked after cattel, both great and ſmall; and at a certain time of the year uſed to gather ſycomore fruit, which was a kind of figs; and by its name had the reſemblance both of figs and mulberries. Some take it to be what were called Egyptian figs; theſe he gathered, either for the uſe of his maſters, or for food for himſelf, or for the cattel, or both: or he was an opener of them, as the Septuagint; he cut them, and made inciſions in them; for as Pliny [l], Dioſcorides [m] and Theophraſtus [n] obſerve, this fruit muſt be cut or ſcratched, either with the nail, or with iron, or it will not ripen; but four days after after being ſcratched or cut will become ripe. Mr. Norden[o], a late traveller in Egypt, has given us a very particular account of this tree and its fruit. "This ſycamore (he ſays) is of the height "of a beech, and bears its fruit in a manner quite "different from other trees; it has them on the "trunk itſelf, which ſhoots out little ſprigs in "form of grape-ſtalks; at the end of which grow "the fruit cloſe to one another, almoſt like "bunches of grapes. The tree is always green, "and bears fruit ſeveral times in the year, with-"out obſerving any certain ſeaſons: for I have "ſeen (ſays he) ſome ſycamores that have given "fruit two months after others. The fruit has "the figure and ſmell of real figs, but is inferior "to them in the taſte, having a diſguſtful ſweet-"neſs. Its colour is an yellow, inclining to an "oker, ſhadowed by a fleſh colour. In the inſide "it reſembles the common figs, excepting that "it has a blackiſh colouring with yellow ſpots. "This ſort of tree is pretty common in Egypt; "the people for the greater part live upon its "fruit, and think themſelves well regaled when "they have a piece of bread, a couple of ſyca-"more-figs, and a pitcher filled with water from "the Nile." This account in ſeveral things agrees with what Pliny[p] and Solinus[q] relate of this tree and its fruit; very likely there might be many of theſe trees in Judea; there ſeem to have been great numbers of them in Solomon's time, 1 Kings x. 27. and perhaps it was one of theſe that Zaccheus climbed, in order to ſee Chriſt, Luke xix. 4. for this ſort of trees delight in vales and plains, ſuch as were the plains of Jericho; and in the Talmud[r] we read of ſycamore-trees in Jericho; and of the men of Jericho allowing the branches of them to be cut down for ſacred uſes. Theſe alſo grew in lower Galilee, but not in upper Galilee; and that they were frequent in the land of Iſrael appears from the rules the Miſnic doctors[s] give about the planting and cutting them down; and now in the opening of theſe trees, and making inciſions in them, and in gathering the fruit of them Amos might be concerned. Kimchi and Ben Melech ſay, the word ſignifies to mix, and that his buſineſs was to mix theſe together with other fruit. Aben Ezra obſerves, that in the Arabic language it ſignifies to dry; and then his work was after he had gathered them to lay them a drying. Some render the word, a ſearcher[t] of them; as if his employment was to look out for them, and ſeek them where they were to be got: however, be this as it will, the prophet ſuggeſts that he had been uſed to a low life, and to mean fare, with which he was contented; and did not take up this buſineſs of propheſying for bread, and could return to his former employment without any regret to get a maintenance, if ſo was the will of God. The Targum gives it a different ſenſe, "for I am a "maſter of cattel, and have ſycamores in the "fields;" and ſo Jarchi, Kimchi and Ben Melech repreſent him, as ſuggeſting that he was rich, and had no need of bread to be given him, or to propheſy for that.

℣. 15. And the Lord took me as I followed the flock, &c.] Or from behind it[u]; a deſcription of a ſhepherd, ſuch an one Amos was, and in this employ when the Lord called him, and took him to be a prophet; he did not ſeek after it, nor did he take this honour to himſelf; by which it appears, that his miſſion was divine, and that he did not enter on this work with lucrative views: thus God took David in a like ſtate of life, and made him king of Iſrael; and Eliſha from the plow, and made him a prophet: and Chriſt took ſeveral of his diſciples from being fiſhermen, and made them fiſhers of men, or miniſters of the word; and ſo their call appeared more clear and manifeſt. And the Lord ſaid unto me; in a viſion or dream by night; or by an articulate voice he heard; or by an impulſe upon his ſpirit, which comes from the Spirit of God: go, propheſy unto my people Iſrael; for ſo they were by profeſſion, and notwithſtanding their apoſtacy; as yet they were not called Lo-ammi; to theſe the prophet was bid to go out of the land of Judea, where he was a herdſman, and propheſy in the name of the Lord to them; wherefore what he did was in obedience to the command of God, and he did but his duty; and what he in this and the preceding verſe declares, is a ſufficient vindication of himſelf, his character and conduct; and having done this, he has ſomething to ſay to the prieſt, as follows:

℣. 16. Now therefore hear thou the word of the Lord, &c.] Which I have from him concerning thee, and which he has pronounced upon thee and thy family: thou ſayeſt, propheſy not againſt Iſrael; when God has bid me propheſy: and drop not thy word againſt the houſe of Iſaac; ſay nothing againſt it, tho' in ever ſo ſoft and gentle a manner: it deſigns the ſame thing as before, only in different words; and is a prohibition of the prophet, to propheſy againſt the ten tribes, that deſcended from Iſaac, in the line of Jacob. So the Targum paraphraſes it, "thou ſhalt not teach a-"gainſt the houſe of Iſaac;" or deliver out any prophecy or doctrine that is againſt them, or threatens them with any calamity. Jarchi ſays, the phraſe is expreſſive of prophecy; ſee Deut. xxxii. 2. Ezek. xxi. 2.

℣. 17. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord, &c.] For withſtanding the prophet of the Lord, and forbidding him to ſpeak in his name againſt the idolatry of Iſrael, as well as for his own idolatry: thy wife ſhall be an harlot in the city; either of Bethel or Samaria; either thro' force, being raviſhed by the ſoldiers upon taking and plundering the city; ſo Theodoret and others: or rather of choice; either thro' poverty to get bread, or thro' a vicious inclination, and that in a public manner: the meaning is, that ſhe ſhould be a common ſtrumpet; which muſt be a great affliction to him, and a juſt puniſhment for his idolatry, or ſpiritual adultery; this muſt be before the ſiege and taking of Samaria, ſince by that time the prieſt's wife would be too old to be uſed as an harlot: and thy ſons and thy daughters ſhall fall by the ſword; either of Shallum, who ſmote Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam with the ſword, before the people, and very probably many of his friends with him, among whom this family was; or of Menahem, who ſlew Shallum, and deſtroyed many places that opened not to him, with their inhabitants, and ript up the women with child; or in the after invaſions by Pul, Tiglath-Pileſer, and Salmaneſer, 2 Kings xv. 10, 14, 16, 19, 29. and xvii. 5, 6: and thy land ſhall be divided by line; either the whole land of Iſrael he lived in, or the land that was in the poſſeſſion of this prieſt, and was his own property; this ſhould be meaſured with a line, and be parted among foreigners, that ſhould invade the land, and ſubdue it; a juſt puniſhment of the ſins he had been guilty of, in getting large poſſeſſions in an ill manner: and thou ſhalt die in a polluted land; not in his own land, reckoned holy, but in a heathen land, which was accounted defiled, becauſe the inhabitants of it were uncircumciſed and idolaters, and he was no better; perhaps the land of Aſſyria, whither he might with others be carried captive; or ſome other land he was forced to flee into; and Iſrael ſhall ſurely go into captivity forth of his land; as he had before propheſied, and here confirms it; and which was fulfilled in the times of Hoſhea king of Iſrael, by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xvii. 6.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter a fourth viſion is delivered, the viſion of a baſket of ſummer fruit; ſignifying the deſtruction of the ten tribes, for which they were ripe, and which would quickly come upon them, ℣. 1, 2, 3. the rich are reproved for their oppreſſion of the poor, their covetouſneſs and earthly-mindedneſs, ℣. 4, 5, 6. for which they are threatned with entire ruin, ſudden calamities, and very mournful times, inſtead of light, joy, and gladneſs, ℣. 7, 8, 9, 10. and particularly with a famine of hearing the word of God, ℣. 11, 12. the conſequence of which would be, a fainting of the young men and virgins for thirſt, and the utter and irrecoverable ruin of all idolaters, ℣. 13, 14.

℣. 1. Thus hath the Lord God ſhewed unto me, &c.] Another viſion, which is the fourth, and after the following manner: and behold, a baſket of ſummer-fruit; not of the firſt ripe fruit, but of ſuch as were gathered at the cloſe of the ſummer, when autumn began. So the Targum, "the laſt "of the ſummer-fruit;" ſuch as were fully ripe, and would not keep till winter; or if kept, would rot; but muſt be eat directly, as ſome ſort of apples, grapes, &c. denoting the people of Iſrael being ripe for deſtruction, and would be quickly devoured by their enemies; and that as they had had a ſummer of proſperity, they would now have a ſharp winter of adverſity.

℣. 2. And he ſaid, Amos, what ſeeſt thou? &c.] To quicken his attention, who might diſregard it as a common thing; and in order to lead him into the deſign of it, and ſhew him what it was an emblem of: and I ſaid, a baſket of ſummer-fruit; ſome render it a hook [w], ſuch as they pull down branches with to gather the fruit; and the word ſo ſignifies in the Arabic language [x]; but the other is the more received ſenſe of the word: then ſaid the Lord unto me; by way of explanation of the viſion: the end is come upon my people Iſrael; the end of the kingdom of Iſrael; of their commonwealth and church-ſtate; of all their outward happineſs and glory; their ſummer was ended, and they not ſaved, Jer. viii. 20. all their proſperity was over; and as the Targum, their "final puniſhment was come," the laſt deſtruction threatened them [y]: I will not again paſs by them any more; paſs by their offences, and forgive their ſins; or paſs by their perſons, without taking notice of them, ſo as to afflict and puniſh them for their iniquities: or, paſs thro' them any more [z]; now making an utter end of them; ſee the note on ch. vii. 8.

℣. 3. And the ſongs of the temple ſhall be howlings in that day, ſaith the Lord God, &c.] Not the ſongs ſung by the Levites in the temple of Jeruſalem, for this prophecy reſpects the ten tribes only; but thoſe, in imitation of them, ſung in the temple at Bethel, and other idol-temples; or profane ſongs in the palaces of princes and nobles; that is, inſtead of theſe, there ſhould be howlings for the calamities come upon them. So the Targum, "they "ſhall howl, inſtead of a ſong, in their houſes "then;" particularly becauſe of the ſlain in them, as follows; ſee ch. v. 23: there ſhall be many dead bodies in every place; in all houſes and palaces, in all towns and cities; and eſpecially in Samaria, during the ſiege, and when taken, partly thro' the famine, and partly thro' the ſword: they ſhall caſt them forth with ſilence; they that have the care of burying the dead bodies, ſhall either caſt them out of the houſes upon the bier or cart in which they are carried to the grave, or into the pit or grave without any funeral lamentation: or, they ſhall caſt them forth, and ſay, be ſilent; that is, as Kimchi explains it, "one of them that caſts them forth, "ſhall ſay to his companion, be ſilent;" ſay not one word againſt God and his providence, ſince this is righteouſly come upon us; or ſay nothing of the number of the dead, leſt the hearts of thoſe that hear ſhould become tender, and be diſcouraged, as Aben Ezra; or the enemy ſhould be encouraged to go on with the ſiege.

℣. 4. Hear this, O ye that ſwallow up the needy, &c.] Like a man that pants after a draught of water when thirſty, and when he has got it, greedily ſwallows it down at one gulp; ſo theſe rich men ſwallowed up the poor, their labours, gains, and profits, and perſons too; got all into their own hands, and made them bondſmen and ſlaves to them; ſee ch. ii. 7. theſe are called upon to hear this dreadful calamity threatened, and to conſider what then would become of them, and their ill-got riches; and ſuggeſting, that their oppreſſion of the needy was one cauſe of this deſtruction of the land: even to make the poor of the land to fail; or ceaſe [a]; to die for want of the neceſſaries of life, being obliged to ſuch hard labour; ſo unmercifully uſed, their faces ground, and pinched with neceſſity; and ſo ſadly paid for their work, that they could not live by it.

℣. 5. Saying, when will the new moon be gone, that we may ſell corn? &c.] The firſt day of every month, on which it was forbid to ſell any thing, or do any worldly buſineſs, being appointed and uſed for religious ſervice; ſee 2 Kings iv. 23. and which theſe carnal earthly-minded men were weary of, and wanted to have over, that they might be ſelling their corn, and getting money, which they preferred to the worſhip of God. Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it of the month of harveſt, when the poor found what to eat in the fields; when they gleaned there, and got a ſufficiency of bread, and ſo had no need to buy corn; and hence theſe rich miſers, that hoarded up the corn, are repreſented as wiſhing the harveſt-month over, that they might ſell their corn to the poor, having had, during that month, no demand for it; and ſo the Targum renders it, the month of corn: or the month of intercalation, as Jarchi underſtands it; every three years a month was intercalated, to bring their feaſts right to the ſeaſon of the year; and that year was a month longer than the reſt, and made proviſion dearer; and then the ſenſe is, when will the year of intercalation come, that we may have a better price for our corn? but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt. And the ſabbath, that we may ſet forth wheat; in the ſhops or markets, for ſale: or open wheat [b]; the granaries and treaſures of it, to be ſeen and ſold. Now the ſabbath, or ſeventh day of the week, as no ſervile work was to be done on it, ſo no trade or commerce was to be carried on on that day; which made it a long and wearisome one to worldly men, who wiſhed it over, that they might be about their worldly buſineſs. Kimchi and Ben Melech, by ſabbath, underſtand a week, which theſe men put off the poor unto, when the price of corn would riſe; and ſo from week to week refuſed to ſell, and longed till the week came when it would be dearer. The Targum and Jarchi interpret it of the ſeventh year-ſabbath, when there was no plowing, nor ſowing, nor reaping, and ſo no ſelling of corn, but the people lived upon what the earth brought forth of itſelf. But the firſt ſenſe here is alſo beſt. Making the ephah ſmall; a dry meaſure, that held three ſeahs, or about a buſhel of ours, with which they meaſured their corn and their wheat; ſo that beſides the exorbitant price they required, they did not give due meaſure: and the ſhekel great; that is, the weight, or ſhekel-ſtone, with which they weighed the money the poor gave for their corn and wheat; this was made heavier than it ſhould be, and ſo of courſe the money weighed againſt it was too light, and the poor were obliged to make it up with more; and thus they cheated them, both in their meaſure, and in their money: and falſifying the balances by deceit; contrary to the law in Deut. xxv. 13, 14, 15. Ezek. xlv. 10.

ỳ. 6. That we may buy the poor for ſilver, &c.] Thus making them pay dear for their proviſions, and uſing them in this fraudulent manner, by which they would not be able to ſupport themſelves and their families; they might purchaſe them and theirs for ſlaves, at ſo ſmall a price as a piece of ſilver, or a ſingle ſhekel, worth about half a crown; and this was their end and deſign, in uſing them after this manner; ſee Lev. xxv. 39, 40: and the needy for a pair of ſhoes; ſee ch. ii. 6: and ſell the refuſe of the wheat; not only did they ſell the poor, corn and wheat at a dear rate, and in ſcanty meaſure, but the worſt of it, and ſuch as was not fit to make bread of, only to be given to the cattel; and by reducing the poor to extreme poverty, they obliged them to take that of them at their own price. It may be rendered, the fall of wheat [c]; that which fell under the ſieve, when the wheat was ſifted, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech obſerve.

ỳ. 7. The Lord hath ſworn by the excellency of Jacob, &c.] Not by the ark, as R. Japhet; nor by the temple, as Kimchi; but by himſelf; which ſenſe Kimchi alſo mentions, and Aben Ezra; the God of Jacob and his glory, the moſt excellent of all Jacob's enjoyments, and of whom he had reaſon to boaſt and glory; ſee ch. vi. 8: ſurely I will never forget any of their works; their wicked works, eſpecially thoſe now mentioned; God forgets when he forgives them, or ſuffers them to go unpuniſhed; but tho' he had done ſo long, he would do ſo no more; on which they might depend, ſince he had not only ſaid it, but ſwore to it.

ỳ. 8. Shall not the land tremble for this, &c.] For this wickedneſs committed, in uſing the poor with ſo much inhumanity? may not an earthquake be expected? and which happened two years after Amos began to propheſy, ch. i. 1. or that the earth ſhould gape and ſwallow up theſe men alive, guilty of ſuch enormities? or ſhall not the inhabitants of the land tremble at ſuch judgments, which the Lord hath ſworn he will bring upon it? and every one mourn that dwelleth therein? at the hearing of them, and eſpecially when they ſhall come upon them: as the calamity would be general, the mourning ſhould be univerſal: and it ſhall riſe up wholly as a flood; that is, the calamity threatened ſhall riſe up at once like a flood of waters, like Noah's flood, and cover the whole land, and waſh off and utterly deſtroy man and beaſt: and it ſhall be caſt out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt; or the river of Egypt, the Nile, which overflows at certain times, and caſts up its waters and its mud, and drowns all the country; ſo that the whole country, during its continuance, looks like a ſea: it overflows both its banks, both towards Lybia or Africa, and towards Arabia, and on each ſide about two days journey, as Herodotus [d] relates; and this it does regularly every year, in the ſummer ſolſtice, in the higher and middle Egypt, where it ſeldom rains, and its flood is neceſſary; but is not ſo large in the lower Egypt, where it more frequently rains, and the country needs it not. Strabo [e] ſays, this flood remains more than forty days, and then it decreaſes by little and little, as it increaſed; and within ſixty days the fields are ſeen and dried up; and the ſooner that is, the ſooner they plow and ſow, and have the better harveſts. Herodotus [f] ſays, it continues a hundred days, and is near the ſame in returning; and he ſays, unleſs it riſes to ſixteen, or at leaſt fifteen cubits, it will not overflow the country [g]: and according to Pliny [h], the proper increaſe of the waters is ſixteen cubits; if only they ariſe to twelve, it is a famine; if to thirteen, it is hunger; if to fourteen, it brings chearfulneſs; if to fifteen, ſecurity; and if to ſixteen, delights. But Strabo [i] relates, that the fertility by it is different at different times; before the times of Petronius, the greateſt fertility was when the Nile aroſe to the fourteenth cubit; and when to the eighteenth, it was a famine: but when he was governor of that country, when it only reached the twelfth cubit, there was great fruitfulneſs; and when it came to the eighth (the eighteenth I ſuppoſe it ſhould be) no famine was perceived. An Arabic writer[k] gives an account of the Nilometry, or meaſures of the Nile, from the year of Chriſt 622 to 1497; and he ſays, that when the depth of the channel of the Nile is fourteen fathom, an harveſt may be expected, that will amount to one year's proviſion; but if it increaſes to ſixteen, the corn will be ſufficient for two years; leſs than fourteen, a ſcarcity; and more than eighteen makes a famine. Upon the whole it ſeems, that ſixteen cubits have been reckoned the ſtandard that portends plenty, for many generations, to which no addition has appeared to have been made during the ſpace of five hundred years. "This we learn, ſays Dr. Shaw[l], "not only from the ſixteen children that attend "the ſtatue of the Nile, but from Pliny alſo; and "likewiſe from a medal of Hadrian in the great "braſs, where we ſee the figure of the Nile, with "a boy upon it, pointing to the number 16. Yet "in the fourth century, which it will be difficult "to account for, fifteen cubits only are recorded "by the emperor Julian[m], as the height of the "Nile's inundation; whereas, in the middle of "the ſixth century, in the time of Juſtinian, Procopius[n] informs us, that the riſe of the Nile ex"ceeded eighteen cubits; in the ſeventh century, "after Egypt was ſubdued by the Saracens, the "amount was ſixteen or ſeventeen cubits; and at "preſent, when the river riſes to ſixteen cubits, "the Egyptians make great rejoicings, and call "out, wafaa Allah, that is, God has given them "all they wanted." The river begins to ſwell in May, yet no public notice is taken of it till the 28th or 29th of June; by which time it is uſually riſen to the height of ſix or eight pikes (or cubits, ϖηχος, a Turkiſh meaſure of 26 inches); and then public criers proclaim it through the capital, and other cities, and continue in the ſame manner till it riſes to ſixteen pikes; then they cut down the dam of the great canal. If the water increaſes to the height of twenty-three or twenty-four pikes, it is judged moſt favourable; but if it exceed that, it does a great deal of miſchief, not only by overflowing houſes, and drowning cattel, but alſo by ingendring a great number of inſects, which deſtroy the fruits of the earth[o]. And a late learned traveller[p] tells us, that "eighteen pikes is an in"different Nile (for ſo high it is riſen when they "declare it but ſixteen); twenty is middling; "twenty-two is a good Nile, beyond which it "ſeldom riſes; it is ſaid, if it riſes above twenty"four pikes, it is looked on as an inundation, "and is of bad conſequence." And to ſuch a flood the alluſion is here. Thus the land of Iſrael ſhould be overwhelmed, and plunged into the utmoſt diſtreſs, and ſink into utter ruin, by this judgment coming upon them; even the Aſſyrian army like a flood, ſpreading themſelves over all the land, and deſtroying it. So the Targum, "a "king ſhall come up againſt it with his army, "large as the waters of a river, and ſhall cover it "wholly, and expel the inhabitants of it, and "ſhall plunge as the river of Egypt;" ſee Iſ. viii. 7, 8.

℣. 9. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord God, &c.] When this deluge and deſolation of the land ſhall be, now ſpoken of: that I will cauſe the ſun to go down at noon; or to be ſo dark as if it was ſet; as at the time of our Lord's crucifixion, to which many of the ancient fathers refer this prophecy, though it has reſpect to other times and things. Jarchi interprets it of the kingdom of the houſe David. It doubtleſs deſigns the kingdom of Iſrael, their whole policy civil and eccleſiaſtic, and the deſtruction of it; particularly their king, princes, and nobles, that ſhould be in great adverſity, and that ſuddenly and unexpectedly; it being a fine ſun-ſhine morning with them, and they in great proſperity, and yet by noon their ſun would be ſet, and they in the utmoſt darkneſs and diſtreſs. And I will darken the earth in a clear day; the land of Iſrael, the people of it, the common people, who ſhould have their ſhare in this calamity and affliction; and tho' it had been a clear day with them, and they promiſed themſelves much and long felicity, yet on a ſudden their light would be turned into darkneſs, and their joy into ſadneſs and ſorrow.

℣. 10. And I will turn your feaſts into mourning, and all your ſongs into lamentation, &c.] Either their religious feaſts, the feaſts of pentecoſt, tabernacles, and paſſover; at which three feaſts there were eclipſes of the ſun, a few years after this prophecy of Amos, as biſhop Uſher[q] obſerves: the firſt was an eclipſe of the ſun, about ten digits, in the year of the Julian period 3923, June 24th, at the feaſt of Pentecoſt; the next was almoſt twelve digits, about eleven years after, on November 8th, 3934, at the feaſt of the Tabernacles; and the third was more than eleven digits in the following year, 3935, on May 5th, at the feaſt of the Paſſover; which the above prophecy may literally refer to, and which might occaſion great ſorrow and concern, and eſpecially at what they might be thought to forebode: but particularly this was fulfilled, when theſe feaſts could not be obſerved any longer, nor the ſongs uſed at them ſung any more; or elſe their feaſts, and ſongs at them, in their own houſes, in which they indulged themſelves in mirth and jollity; but now inſtead thereof, there would be mourning and lamentation for the loſs of their friends, and being carried captive into a ſtrange land. And I will bring up ſackcloth upon all loins; of high and low, rich and poor; even thoſe that uſed to be covered with ſilk and rich embroideries: ſackcloth was a coarſe cloth put on in times of mourning for the dead, or on account of public calamities: and baldneſs upon every head; the hair being either ſhaved off, or pulled off; both which were ſometimes done, as a token of mourning: and I will make it as the mourning of an only ſon; as when parents mourn for an only ſon, which is generally carried to the greateſt height, and continued longeſt, as well as is moſt ſincere and paſſionate; the caſe being exceeding cutting and afflictive, as this is hereby repreſented to be: and the end thereof as a bitter day; a day of bitter calamity, and of bitter wailing and mourning, in the bitterneſs of their ſpirits; tho' the beginning of the day was bright and clear, a fine ſun-ſhine, yet the end of it dark and bitter, diſtreſſing and ſorrowful, it being the end of the people of Iſrael, as in ℣. 2.

℣. 11. Behold the days come, ſaith the Lord God, &c.] Which Kimchi interprets of all the days of the ſecond houſe or temple after Malachi, when prophecy ceaſed; but it rather has reſpect to the time of Salmaneſer's carrying captive the ten tribes; when they had no more prophets nor prophecy among them, or any to tell how long their captivity ſhould laſt, or when it would be better times with them, Pſ. lxxiv. 9: that I will ſend a famine in the land; which, in a literal ſenſe, is one of God's arrows he has in his quiver, and ſends out when he pleaſes; or one of his ſore judgments, which he ſometimes orders to come upon a people for their ſins: but here is meant, not a famine of bread, or thro' want of that, which is very dreadful; as was the famine of Samaria, when an aſs's head was ſold for fourſcore pieces of ſilver, and a certain meaſure of dove's dung for five pieces of ſilver, 2 Kings vi. 25. and as were the famines of Jeruſalem, when taken both by the Chaldeans and Romans, when delicate women boiled and eat their own children, Lam. iv. 8, 9, 10: nor a thirſt for water; which is more diſtreſſing and tormenting than hunger; and to be ſlain with thirſt, is to be deſtroyed in the moſt afflictive manner, Hoſ. ii. 3. Lyſimachus is ſaid to part with his kingdom for a draught of water; and the torments of hell are ſet forth by a violent thirſt for it, Luke xvi. 24. but ſomething worſe than either of theſe is here threatned: but of hearing the words of the Lord; the word of prophecy, and the preaching of the word, or explaining the ſcriptures. Of this bleſſing the ten tribes were deprived at their captivity, and have been ever ſince; and the Jews, upon their rejection of Chriſt, have had the kingdom of God, the goſpel of the kingdom, the word and ordinances of God, taken from them, and remain ſo to this day; the ſeven churches of Aſia have had their candleſtick removed out of its place, and this famine continues in thoſe parts to this time; and by the ſymptoms upon us, we may juſtly fear it will be our caſe ere long. The words of the Lord are the ſcriptures, which come from him, and are concerning him; the doctrines of grace contained in them, the wholeſome words of Chriſt: hearing them, ſignifies the preaching of them, Iſ. liii. 1. Gal. iii. 2. by which hearing comes, and is a great bleſſing, and ſhould be attended to, as being the means of converſion, regeneration, the knowledge of Chriſt, faith in him, and the joy of it. Now to be deprived of hearing the goſpel is a ſpiritual famine, for that is food, bread, meat, milk, honey, yea a feaſt; it is food that is ſavoury, wholeſome, nouriſhing, ſatisfying, ſtrengthening, and comforting; and when this is took away a famine enſues; as when a church-ſtate is diſſolved, miniſters are ordered to preach no more in ſuch a place, or are ſcattered by perſecution, or removed by death, and none raiſed up in their ſtead; or when error prevails, to the ſuppreſſing of truth: all which is done, or ſuffered to be done, for indifference to the word of God, unfruitfulneſs under it, and contempt of it, and oppoſition to it; which is a dreadful caſe, when ſuch a famine is; for the glory, riches, and light of a nation are gone; bread for their ſouls is no more; and the means of converſion, knowledge, comfort, &c. ceaſe; and people in courſe muſt die, for lack of theſe things; ſee Iſ. iii. 1. Hoſ. iv. 6.

Theſe, according to ſome, deſign the congregation of Iſrael; who are like to beautiful virgins, as the Targum paraphraſes it; and the principal men of it, the maſters of the aſſemblies: or, as others, ſuch who were truſting to their own righteouſneſs, and ſeeking after that which they could never attain juſtification by, and did not hunger and thirſt after the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſo periſhed.

℣. 14. They that ſwear by the ſin of Samaria, &c.] The calf at Bethel, which was near Samaria, and which the Samaritans worſhipped; and was ſet up by their kings, and the worſhip of it encouraged by their example, and which is called the calf of Samaria. Hoſ. viii. 5, 6. the making of it was the effect of ſin, and the occaſion of leading into it, and ought to have been had in deteſtation and abhorrence, as ſin ſhould; and yet by this the Iſraelites ſwore, as they had uſed to do by the living God; ſo ſetting up this idol on an equality with him: and ſay, thy God, O Dan, liveth; the other calf, which was ſet up in Dan; and to this they gave the epithet of the living God, which only belonged to the God of Iſrael: and the manner of Beerſheba; or, the way of Beerſheba [r]; the long journey or pilgrimage of thoſe at Beerſheba; who choſe to go to Dan, rather than Bethel, to worſhip; imagining they ſhewed greater devotion and religion, by going from one extreme part of the land to the other, for the ſake of it. Dan was on the northern border of the land of Judea, about four miles from Paneas, as you go to Tyre [s]; and Beerſheba was on the ſouthern border of the land, twenty miles from Hebron [t]; and the diſtance of theſe two places was about one hundred and ſixty miles [u]. And by this religious peregrination men ſwore; or rather by the God of Beerſheba, as the

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter contains the fifth and laſt viſion the prophet ſaw; which repreſents the certain deſolation of the land, city, and temple, and the ſlaughter of all ſorts of perſons, high and low, none ſhould eſcape it, ℣. 1. be they where they would, they ſhould be found out, whether in hell or heaven, on the tops of the higheſt mountains, or in the bottom of the ſea, or in a foreign land, ſince the eyes of the Lord were upon them for evil, ℣. 2, 3, 4. nor could they hope to eſcape, when they conſidered his greatneſs and his power, and what he could do, and had done; and how they had behaved towards him, even though they were the people he had brought out of Egypt, ℣. 5, 6, 7. but tho' the ſinful kingdom ſhould be deſtroyed, yet not utterly, a remnant ſhould be ſaved, ℣. 8, 9, 10. and the chapter is concluded with gracious promiſes of raiſing up the tabernacle of David fallen down, and of the return of the people of Iſrael to their own land; and of their ſettlement and continuance in it, never more to depart from it, ℣. 11—15.

℣. 1. And I ſaw the Lord ſtanding upon the altar, &c.] Either upon the altar of burnt-offerings in the temple of Jeruſalem, whither he had removed from the cherubim; ſignifying his being about to depart, and that he was diſpleaſed, and would not be appeaſed by ſacrifice: ſo the Targum, "ſaid Amos the prophet, I ſaw the glory of the Lord removing from the cherub, and it dwelt upon the altar;" and the viſion may refer to the deſtruction of the Jews, their city and temple, either by the Chaldeans, or by the Romans: or rather, ſince the prophecy in general, and this viſion in particular, ſeems to reſpect the ten tribes only; it was upon the altar at Bethel the Lord was ſeen ſtanding, as offended at the ſacrifices there offered, and to hinder them from ſacrificing them, as well as to take vengeance on thoſe that offered them, 1 Kings xiii. 1, 2: and he ſaid; the Lord ſaid, either to the prophet in viſion, or to one of the angels, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; or to the executioners of his vengeance, the enemies of the people of Iſrael: ſmite the lintel of the door, that the poſts may ſhake; the upper lintel, on which pomegranates and flowers were carved, and therefore called caphtor, as Kimchi thinks; this was the lintel of the door, either of the temple at Jeruſalem, as the Jewiſh writers generally ſuppoſe; or rather of the temple at Bethel, ſee 1 Kings xii. 31. Amos vii. 10, 13. which was to be ſmitten with ſuch force, that the poſts thereof ſhould ſhake; ſignifying the deſtruction of the whole building in a ſhort time, and that none ſhould be able to go in and out thereat: and cut them in the head all of them, and I will ſlay the laſt of them with the ſword; which ſhows that the lintel and door-poſts are not to be taken literally, but figuratively, and that the ſmiting and cutting of them intend the deſtruction of men; by the head, the king, and the princes, and nobles, or the prieſts; and by the laſt of them, the common people, the meaner ſort, or thoſe that were left of them, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi: he that fleeth of them ſhall not flee away; he that attempts to make his eſcape, and ſhall flee for his life, ſhall not get clear, but either be ſtopped, or purſued and taken: and he that eſcapeth of them ſhall not be delivered; he that does get out of the hands of thoſe that deſtroy with the ſword, ſhall not be delivered from death, but ſhall die by famine or peſtilence. The Targum is, "and he ſaid, unleſs the people of the houſe of Iſrael return to the law, the candleſtick ſhall be extinguiſhed, king Joſiah ſhall be killed, and the houſe deſtroyed, and the courts diſſipated, and the veſſels of the houſe of the ſanctuary ſhall go into captivity; and the reſt of them I will ſlay with the ſword, &c." refering the whole to the Jews, and to the deſtruction of the temple at Jeruſalem.

℣. 2. Though they dig into hell, thence ſhall mine hand take them, &c.] That is, they that endeavour to make their eſcape from their enemies, though they ſeek for places of the greateſt ſecrecy and privacy; not hell the place of the damned; nor the grave the repoſitory of the dead; neither of which they choſe to be in, but rather ſought to eſcape them; but the deepeſt and darkeſt caverns, the utmoſt receſſes of the earth, the very center of it; which could they get into, would not ſecure them from the power and providence of God, and from their enemies in purſuit of them, by his permiſſion: though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down; the ſummit of the higheſt mountains, and get as near to heaven, and at as great a diſtance from men as can be, and yet all in vain. The Targum is, "if they think to be hid as it were in hell, from thence their enemies ſhall take them by my word; and if they aſcend the high mountains, to the top of heaven, thence will I bring them;" ſee Pſal. cxxxix. 8.

℣. 3. And though they hide themſelves in the top of Carmel, &c.] One of the higheſt mountains in the land of Iſrael; in the woods upon it, and caves in it: I will ſearch and take them out from thence; by directing their enemies where to find them: ſo the Targum, "if they think to be hid in the tops of the towers of caſtles, thither will I command the ſearchers, and they ſhall ſearch them:" and though they be hid from my ſight in the bottom of the ſea; get into ſhips, going by ſea to diſtant parts; or make their eſcape to iſles upon the ſea afar off, where they may think themſelves ſafe: thence will I command the ſerpent, and he ſhall bite them; the dragon that is in the ſea, Iſ. xxvii. 1. the great whale, in the ſea, or the leviathan, ſo Aben Ezra, Kimchi and Ben Melech; and is that kind of whale which is called the Zygæna, as Bochart chart[w] thinks; and which he, from various writers, deſcribes as very monſtrous, horrible and terrible, having five rows of teeth, and very numerous; and which not only devours other large fiſhes, but men ſwimming it meets with; and having ſuch teeth, with great propriety may be ſaid to bite. It appears from hence, that there are ſea-ſerpents, as well as land ones, to which the alluſion is. Erick Pantoppidan, the preſent biſhop of Bergen[x], ſpeaks of a ſee-ormen, or ſea-ſnake, in the northern ſeas, which he deſcribes as very monſtrous and very terrible to ſea-faring men, being of ſeven or eight folds, each fold a fathom diſtant; nay, of the length of a cable, an hundred fathom, or ſix hundred Engliſh feet; yea of one as thick as a pipe of wine, with twenty-five folds. Some ſuch terrible creature is here reſpected, tho' figuratively underſtood, and deſigns ſome crafty, powerful and cruel enemy. The Targum paraphraſes it, tho' hid "in the iſles of the ſea, thither will I "command the people ſtrong like ſerpents, and "they ſhall kill them;" ſee Pſ. cxxxix. 9.

℣. 4. And tho' they go into captivity before their enemies, &c.] Alluding to the manner in which captives are led, being put before their enemies, and ſo carried in triumph; ſee Lam. i. 5. tho' ſome think this refers to their going voluntarily into a foreign country, in order to eſcape danger, as Johanan the ſon of Kareah with the Jews went into Egypt, Jer. xliii. 6, 7. in whom Kimchi inſtances: thence will I command the ſword, and it ſhall ſlay them; or them that kill with the ſword, as the Targum; ſo that tho' they thought by going into another country, or into an enemy's country of their own accord, to eſcape the ſword of the enemy, or to curry favour with them, yet ſhould not eſcape: and I will ſet mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good; this is the true reaſon, why let them be where they will they cannot be ſafe, becauſe the eyes of the omniſcient God, which are every where, in heaven, earth, hell and the ſea, are ſet upon them, for their ruin and deſtruction; and there's no fleeing from his preſence, or getting out of his ſight, or eſcaping his hand. The Targum is, "my word ſhall be againſt them."

℣. 5. And the Lord God of hoſts is he that toucheth the land, and it ſhall melt, &c.] Which is another reaſon why it is impoſſible to eſcape the hands of a ſin-revenging God, becauſe he is omnipotent as well as omniſcient; he is the Lord of all the armies above and below; and if he but touch the land, any particular country, as the land of Iſrael, it ſhakes and trembles, and falls into a flow of water, or melts like wax; as when he toucheth the hills and mountains they ſmoke, being like fuel to fire; ſee Pſ. civ. 32. and cxliv. 5: and all that dwell therein ſhall mourn; their houſes deſtroyed, their ſubſtance conſumed, and all that is near and dear to them ſwallowed up: and it ſhall riſe up wholly like a flood, and ſhall be drowned as by the flood of Egypt; ſee the note on ch. viii. 8.

℣. 6. It is he that buildeth his ſtories in the heaven, &c.] The three elements, according to Aben Ezra, fire, air and water; the orbs, as Kimchi, one above another; a word near a-kin to this is rendered his chambers, which are the clouds, Pſ. civ. 3, 13. perhaps the heaven, and the heaven of heavens, which are three ſtories high, may be meant; we read of the third heaven, 2 Cor. xii. 2. and particularly the throne of God is in the higheſt heaven; and the aſcents[y] to it, as it may be rendered. The Targum is, "who cauſeth to dwell "in an high fortreſs, the Shekinah of his glory:" and hath founded his troop in the earth; this Kimchi interprets of the three above elements. So the words are tranſlated in the biſhops bible in queen Elizabeth's time, "he buildeth his ſpheres in the "heaven, and hath laid the foundation of his globe "of elements in the earth." Aben Ezra interprets it of animals; it may take in the whole compaſs of created beings on earth; ſo Jarchi explains it of the collection of his creatures; tho' he takes notice of another ſenſe given, a collection of the righteous, which are the foundation of the earth, and for whoſe ſake all things ſtand. Abarbinel interprets it of the whole of the tribe of Iſrael; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it of his congregation or church on earth: he beautifies his elect, which are his bundle[z], as it may be rendered; who are bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord their God, and are cloſely knit and united as to God and Chriſt, ſo to one another; and perhaps is the beſt ſenſe of the words[a]: he that calleth for the waters of the ſea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth, the Lord is his name; either to drown it, as at the general deluge; or to water and refreſh it, as he does by exhaling water from the ſea, and then letting it down in plentiful ſhowers upon the earth; ſee the note on ch. v. 8. now all theſe things are obſerved to ſhew the power of God, and that therefore there can be no hope of eſcaping out of his hands.

℣. 7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord? &c.] And therefore had no reaſon to think they ſhould be delivered, becauſe they were the children of Iſrael, of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; ſince they were no more to God than the children of the Ethiopians, having behaved like them; and were become as black as they thro' ſin, and were idolaters like them; and ſo accuſtomed to ſin, and hardened in it, that they could no more change their courſe and cuſtom of ſinning, than the Ethiopian could change his ſkin, Jer. xiii. 23. The Ethiopians are repreſented by Diodorus Siculus[b] as very religious, that is, very idolatrous; and as the firſt that worſhipped the gods, and offered ſacrifice to them; hence they were very pleaſing to them, and in high eſteem with them; wherefore Homer[c] ſpeaks of Jupiter, and the other gods going to Ethiopia to an anniverſary feaſt, and calls them the blameleſs Ethiopians; and ſo Lucian[d] ſpeaks of the gods as gone abroad, perhaps to the other ſide of the ocean, to viſit the honeſt Ethiopians; for they are often uſed to viſit them, and, as he wittily obſerves, even ſometimes without being invited. Jarchi ſuggeſts the ſenſe to be, that they were as creatures upon the ſame foot, and of the ſame deſcent with other nations; and paraphraſes it thus, “from the ſons of Noah ye came as the “reſt of the nations.” Kimchi takes the meaning to be this, “as the children of the Ethiopians are “ſervants, ſo ſhould ye be unto me.” The Targum is very foreign from the ſenſe, “are ye not “reckoned as beloved children before me, O houſe “of Iſrael;” the firſt ſenſe is beſt: have not I brought up Iſrael out of the land of Egypt? and therefore it was ungrateful in them to behave as they have done; nor can they have any dependence on this, or argue from hence that they ſhall be indulged with other favours, or be continued in their land, ſince the like has been done for other nations, as follows: and the Philiſtines from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir? that is, have I not brought up the one from the one place, and the other from the other? the Philiſtines and Caphtorim are mentioned together as brethren, Gen. x. 14. and the Avim which dwelt in the land of Paleſtine in Hazerim unto Azzah were deſtroyed by the Caphtorim, who dwelt in their ſtead, Deut. ii. 23. from whom it ſeems by this the Philiſtines were delivered, who are called the remnant of the country of Caphtor, Jer. xlvii. 4. Aben Ezra underſtands it, as if the Iſraelites were not only brought out of Egypt, but alſo from the Philiſtines, and from Caphtor: others take theſe two places, Caphtor and Kir, to be the original of the Philiſtines and Syrians, and not where they had been captives, but now delivered: ſo Japhet, “ye are “the children of one father, God, who brought “you out of Egypt, and not as the Philiſtines from “Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir, who were “mixed together;” and R. Joſeph Kimchi, thus, “from Caphtor came deſtroyers to the Philiſtines, “who deſtroyed them; and from Kir came Tiglath-Pileſer the deſtroyer to the Syrians, who “carried them captive there.” Of the captivity of the Philiſtines, and their deliverance from the Caphtorim, we no where read; the captivity of the Syrians in Kir, Amos propheſied of ch. i. 5. and if he ſpeaks here of their deliverance from it, he muſt live at leaſt to the times of Ahaz; for in his times it was they were carried captive thither, 2 Kings xvi. 9. Caphtor ſome take to be Cyprus, becauſe it ſeems to be an iſland, Jer. xlvii. 4. but by it the Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions underſtand Cappadocia; and the Cappadocians uſed to be called by the Greeks and Perſians Syrians, as Herodotus [e], and others obſerve. Bochart [f] is of opinion, that that part of Cappadocia is intended, which is called Colchis; and the rather, ſince he finds a city in that country called Side, which in the Greek tongue ſignifies a pomegranate, as Caphtor does in Hebrew; and he ſuppoſes the richneſs of the country led the Caphtorim thither, who having ſtaid a while, returned to Paleſtine, and there ſettled; which expedition he thinks is wrapped up in the fable of the Greek poets, concerning that of Typhon out of Egypt to Colchis, and from thence to Paleſtine; and indeed the Jewiſh Targumiſts [g] every where render Caphtorim by Cappadocians, and Caphtor by Cappadocia, or Caphutkia; but then by it they underſtand a place in Egypt, even Peluſium, now called Damiata; for the Jewiſh writers ſay [h], Caphutkia is Caphtor, in the Arabic language Damiata; ſo Benjamin of Tudela ſays [i], in two days I came to Damiata, this is Caphtor; and no doubt the Caphtorim were in Egypt originally, ſince they deſcended from Mizraim: but Calmet [k] will have it, that the iſland of Crete is meant by Caphtor; and obſerves, that the Philiſtines were at firſt called ſtrangers in Paleſtine, their proper name being Cherethites, or Cretians, as in Ezek. xxv. 16. Zeph. ii. 5. as the Septuagint render that name of theirs; and that the language, manners, arms, religion, and gods of the Philiſtines and Cretians are much the ſame; he finds a city in Crete called Aptera, which he thinks has a ſenſible relation to Caphtor; and that the city of Gaza in Paleſtine went by the name of Minoa, becauſe of Minos king of Crete, who coming into that country, called this ancient city by his own name. The Targum and Vulgate Latin verſion render Kir by Cyrene, by which muſt be meant, not Cyrene in Africa, but in Media; ſo Kir is mentioned along with Elam or Perſia in Iſ. xxii. 6. whither the people of Syria were carried captive by Tiglath-Pileſer, as predicted in ch. i. 5. and, as the above writer obſerves [l], not certainly into the country of Cyrene near Egypt, where that prince was poſſeſſed of nothing; but to Iberia or Albania, where the river Kir or Cyrus runs, which diſcharges itſelf into the Caſpian ſea; and Joſephus [m] ſays, they were tranſported into upper Media; and the above author thinks, that the prophet Amos in this paſſage probably intended to comprehend under the word Cyr or Kir the people beyond the Euphrates, and thoſe of Meſopotamia from whence the Aramæans in reality came, who were deſcended from Aram the ſon of Shem; and he adds, we have no certain knowledge of their coming in particular out of this country, where the river Cyrus flows: and upon the whole it is difficult to determine, whether this is to be underſtood of the origin of theſe people, or of their deliverance from captivity; the latter may ſeem probable, ſince it is certain, that the prophet ſpeaks of the deliverance of Iſrael from the captivity of Egypt; and it is as certain, that the Syrians were carried captive to Kir, and no doubt from thence delivered; tho' we have no account of the Philiſtines being captives to Caphtor, and of their deliverance from thence; however, doubtleſs theſe were things well known to Amos, and in his times, he here ſpeaks of. In ſome of our Engliſh copies it is read Aſſyrians inſtead of Syrians, very wrongly; for Aram, and not Aſhur, is the word here uſed.

ỷ. 9. For lo I will command, &c.] What follows; which is expreſſive of afflictive and trying diſpenſations of providence, which are according to the will of God, by his appointment and order, and over-ruled for his glory, and the good of his people: and I will ſift the houſe of Iſrael among all nations, as corn is ſifted in a ſieve; this is to be underſtood of ſpiritual Iſrael, of thoſe who are Iſraelites indeed, who are like to corns of wheat, firſt die before they live; die unto ſin, and live unto righteouſneſs; grow up gradually, and produce much fruit; or like to wheat for their choiceneſs and excellency, being the choſen of God and precious, and the excellent in the earth; and for their whiteneſs and purity, as clothed with Chriſt's righteouſneſs, waſhed in his blood, and ſanctified by his Spirit; and for their ſubſtance and fulneſs, being filled out of Chriſt's fulneſs, and with all the fulneſs of God, with the Spirit and his graces, and with all the fruits of righteouſneſs; and for weight and ſolidity, not as chaff driven to and fro, but are firm and conſtant, ſettled and eſtabliſhed in divine things; and yet have the chaff of ſin cleaving to them, and have need of the flail and fan of affliction; and this is the ſieve the Lord takes into his hands, and ſifts them with; whereby ſometimes they are greatly unſettled, and toſſed to and fro, have no reſt and eaſe, but are greatly diſtreſſed on all ſides, and are thoroughly ſearched and tried, and the chaff looſened and ſeparated from them; and ſometimes the Lord ſuffers them to be ſifted by the temptations of ſatan, whereby they are brought into doubts and fears, and are very wavering and uncomfortable, are ſadly harraſſed and buffetted, and in great danger, were it not for the grace of God, and the interceſſion of the Mediator, Luke xxii. 31: yet ſhall not the leaſt grain fall upon the earth; or the leaſt ſtone [p]; which is in the ſpiritual building, and laid on the rock and foundation Chriſt; or the leaſt corn of wheat, ſo called becauſe of its weight, ſolidity and ſubſtance. The meaning is, that the leaſt true Iſraelite, or child of God, who is the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven, and has the leaſt ſhare of grace and ſpiritual knowledge, that is even leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, ſhall not be loſt and periſh; tho' they fall in Adam, yet they are preſerved in Chriſt; tho' they fall into actual ſins and tranſgreſſions, and ſometimes into groſs ones, and from a degree of ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith, yet not totally and finally, or ſo as to periſh for ever; no not an hair of their head ſhall fall to the ground, or they be hurt and ruined; ſee 1 Sam. xiv. 45. 1 Kings i. 52. for they are beloved of God with an everlaſting love, ordained by him to eternal life, adopted into his family, juſtified by his grace, and are kept by his power, according to his promiſe, which never fails; they are Chriſt's property, given him of his Father, to whom he ſtands in the relation of head and huſband; are the purchaſe of his blood, cloſely united to him, and for whom he intercedes, and makes preparations in heaven. The Spirit of God is their ſanctifier and ſealer; he dwells in them as their earneſt of heaven; and the glory of all the divine perſons is concerned in their ſalvation; hence it is, that not one of them ſhall ever periſh.

ỷ. 10. All the ſinners of my people ſhall die by the ſword, &c.] By the ſword of the Aſſyrians, and of others, into whoſe countries they ſhall flee for ſhelter, ỷ. 1, 4. even all ſuch who are notorious ſinners, abandoned to their luſts, obſtinate and incorrigible; live in ſin, and continue therein; repent not of ſin, diſbelieve the prophets of the Lord, and defy his threatnings, and put away the evil day far from them: which ſay, the evil ſhall not overtake, nor prevent us; the evil threatened by the prophet, the ſword of the enemy, the deſolation of their land, and captivity in a foreign land; theſe evils, if they came at all, which they gave little credit to, yet would not in their days; they would never come ſo near them, or ſo cloſe to their heels as to overtake them, and ſeize them, or to get before them, and ſtop them fleeing from them; they promiſed themſelves impunity, and were in no pain about the judgments threatened them; ſo daring and impudent, ſo irreligious and atheiſtical were they in their thoughts, words and actions; and therefore ſhould all and every one of them be deſtroyed.

ỷ. 11. In that day will I raiſe up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, &c.] Not in the day of Iſrael's ruin, but in the famous goſpel-day, ſo often ſpoken of by the prophets; and this prophecy is referred to the times of the Meſſiah by the ancient [q] Jews; and one of the names they give him is taken from hence, Bar-Naphli [r], the ſon of the fallen. R. Nachman ſaid to R. Iſaac, haſt thou heard when Bar-Naphli comes? to whom he ſaid, who is Bar-Naphli? he replied, the Meſſiah; you may call the Meſſiah Bar-Naphli; for is it not written, in that day will I raiſe up the tabernacle of David that is fallen down? and they call him ſo, not becauſe the ſon of Adam; but becauſe he was the ſon of David, and was to ſpring from his family, when fallen into a low and mean condition; yea they ſometimes ſeem by the tabernacle of David to underſtand the dead body of the Meſſiah to be raiſed, whoſe human nature is by the New Teſtament-writers called a tabernacle, Heb. viii. 2. and ix. 11. ſee John i. 14. for having mentioned [s] that paſſage in Jer. xxx. 9. they ſhall ſerve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raiſe up unto them; add, whom I will raiſe up out of the duſt; as it is ſaid, I will raiſe up the tabernacle of David that is fallen down; but elſewhere [t] it is better interpreted of the Meſſiah's raiſing up Iſrael his people out of captivity; they ſay, "her huſband ſhall come and raiſe her out "of the duſt; as it is ſaid, I will raiſe up the tabernacle of David, &c. in the day the king Meſſiah ſhall gather the captivity from the ends of "the world to the ends of it, according to Deut.

"xxx. 4." and which they underſtand of their preſent captivity and deliverance from it, as in ℣. 14. Tobit [u] ſeems to have reference to this paſſage, when he thus exhorts Zion, "praiſe the everlaſting king, that his tabernacle may be built again in thee;" and expreſſes [w] his faith in it, that ſo it would be, "afterwards they (the Jews) ſhall return from all places of their captivity, and build up Jeruſalem gloriouſly; and the houſe of God ſhall be built in it, as the prophets have ſpoken concerning it, for ever;" agreeable to which Jarchi paraphraſes it, "in the day appointed for redemption;" and ſo the apoſtle James quotes it, and applies it to the firſt times of the goſpel, Acts xv. 15, 16, 17. The Targum interprets this tabernacle of the kingdom of the houſe of David: this was in a low eſtate and condition when Jeſus the Meſſiah came, he being the carpenter's ſon; but it is to be underſtood of the ſpiritual kingdom of Chriſt, the church; Chriſt is meant by David, whoſe ſon he is, and of whom David was an eminent type, and is often called by his name, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. and xxxvii. 24, 25. Hoſ. iii. 5. and the church by his tabernacle, which is of his building, where he dwells, and keeps his court; and which in the preſent ſtate is moveable from place to place: and this at the time of Chriſt's coming was much fallen, and greatly decayed, thro' ſad corruption in doctrine by the Phariſees and Sadducees; thro' neglect of worſhip, and formality in it, and the introduction of things into it God never commanded; thro' the wicked lives of profeſſors, and the ſmall number of truly godly perſons; but God, according to this promiſe and prophecy, raiſed it up again by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt and his apoſtles, and by the converſion of many of the Jews, and by bringing in great numbers of the Gentiles, who coaleſced in one church-ſtate, which made it flouriſhing, grand and magnificent; and thus the prophecy was in part fulfilled, as the apoſtle has applied it in the above-mentioned place: but it will have a further and greater accompliſhment ſtill in the latter day, both in the ſpiritual and perſonal reign of Chriſt: and tho' this tabernacle or church of Chriſt is fallen to decay again, and is in a very ruinous condition; the doctrines of the goſpel being greatly departed from; the ordinances of it changed, or not attended to; great declenſions as to the exerciſe of grace among the people of God; and many breaches and diviſions among them; the outward converſation of many profeſſors very bad, and few inſtances of converſion; yet the Lord will raiſe it up again, and make it very glorious: he will cloſe up the breaches thereof, and will raiſe up his ruins; the doctrines of the goſpel will be revived and received; the ordinances of it will be adminiſtred in their purity, as they were firſt delivered; great numbers will be converted, both of Jews and Gentiles; and there will be much holineſs, ſpirituality and brotherly love among the ſaints: and I will build it as in the days of old; religion ſhall flouriſh as in the days of David and Solomon; the chriſtian church will be reſtored to its priſtine glory, as in the times of the apoſtles.

℣. 12. That they may poſſeſs the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, which are called by my name, &c.] Or that theſe may be poſſeſſed; that is, by David or Chriſt, who ſhall have the heathen given him for his inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the earth for his poſſeſſion, Pſ. ii. 8. when the remnant, according to the election of grace, in thoſe nations that have been the greateſt enemies to Chriſt and his goſpel, ſignified by Edom, ſhall be converted, and call upon the name of the Lord, and worſhip him; and be called by his name, chriſtians, and ſo become his inheritance and poſſeſſion. The Targum underſtands by the heathen or people, all the people of the houſe of Iſrael; and Kimchi, Aben Ezra and Ben Melech think the words are to be inverted, thus, "that all the people on whom my name is called may poſſeſs the remnant of Edom;" and the former ſays, that all the Edomites ſhall be deſtroyed in the days of the Meſſiah, but Iſrael ſhall inherit their land; and Aben Ezra ſays, that if this prophecy is interpreted of the Meſſiah, the matter is clear; as it is in the ſenſe we have given, and as the apoſtle explains it, Acts xv. 17. ſee the note there. Some render the words, that the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, that are (i. e. ſhall be) called by my name, may poſſeſs me the Lord [x]. The truth and certainty of its performance is expreſſed in the following clauſe, ſaith the Lord, that doth this; whoſe word is true, whoſe power is great, whoſe grace is efficacious, to accompliſh all that is here promiſed and foretold.

℣. 13. Behold, the days come, ſaith the Lord, &c.] Or are coming [y]; and which will commence upon the accompliſhment of the above things, when the church of Chriſt is raiſed up and eſtabliſhed, the Jews converted, and the Gentiles brought in: that the plowman ſhall overtake the reaper; or meet the reaper [z]; or come up to him, or touch him, as it may be rendered; and ſo the Targum; that is, before the reaper has well cut down the corn, or it is ſcarce gathered in, the plowman ſhall be ready to plow up the ground again, that it may be ſown, and produce another crop: and the treaders of grapes him that ſoweth ſeed; or draweth ſeed [a]; out of his baſket, and ſcatters it in the land; ſignifying that there ſhould be ſuch an abundance of grapes in the vintage, that they would continue preſſing till ſeed-time; and the whole denotes a great affluence of temporal good things, as an emblem of ſpiritual ones; ſee Lev. xxvi. 5. where ſomething of the like nature is promiſed, and expreſſed in much the ſame manner: and the mountains ſhall drop ſweet wine; or new wine [b]; intimating that there ſhall be abundance of vines grow upon the mountains, which will produce large quantities of wine, ſo that they ſhall ſeem to drop or flow with it: and all the hills ſhall melt; with liquors; either with wine or honey, or rather with milk, being covered with flocks and herds, which ſhall yield abundance of milk; by all which, plenty of ſpiritual things, as the word and ordinances, and rich ſupplies of grace, as well as of temporal things, is meant; ſee Joel iii. 18.

℣. 14. And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Iſrael, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, and their return from thence, with whom ſome of the ten tribes of Iſrael were mixed; for they were not then ſo planted in their own land, as no more to be pulled up again, as is here promiſed; for they afterwards were diſpoſſeſſed of it by the Romans, and carried captive, and diſperſed among the nations again; but the captivity both of Judah and Iſrael is meant, their preſent captivity, which will be brought back, and they will be delivered from it, and return to their own land, and poſſeſs it as long as it is a land; ſee Jer. xxx. 3, 10, 18. as well as be freed from the bondage of ſin, ſatan and the law, under which they have been detained ſome hundreds of years; but now ſhall be delivered into the glorious liberty of the children of God, of chriſtians, with which Chriſt has made them free: and they ſhall build the waſte cities, and inhabit them; literally the cities in Judea waſted by the Turks, and others; and myſtically the churches of Chriſt, of which ſaints are fellow-citizens, and will be in a deſolate condition before the converſion of the Jews, and the gathering in the fulneſs of the Gentiles; but by theſe means will be rebuilt, and be in a flouriſhing condition, and full of inhabitants: and they ſhall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof: they ſhall alſo make gardens, and eat the fruit of them; which, as before, will be literally true; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe may ſignify the churches of Chriſt compared to vineyards and gardens, which will be planted every where, and be ſet with pleaſant and fruitful plants, and will turn to the advantage of thoſe who have been inſtruments in planting them; ſee Cant. vi. 2. and vii. 12. and viii. 11, 12. 1 Cor. ix. 7.

℣. 15. And I will plant them upon their land, &c.] The land of Iſrael, as trees are planted; and they ſhall take root and flouriſh, and abound with all good things, temporal and ſpiritual: and they ſhall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, ſaith the Lord thy God; by which it appears, that this is a prophecy of things yet to come; ſince the Jews upon their return to their own land after the Babyloniſh captivity were pulled up again, and rooted out of it by the Romans, and remain ſo to this day; but when they ſhall return again, they'll never more be removed from it; and of this they may be aſſured, becauſe it is the land the Lord has given them, and it ſhall not be taken away from them any more; and, becauſe he will now appear to be the Lord their God, the Lo-ammi will be taken off from them; they'll be owned to be the Lord's people, and he'll be known by them to be their covenant-God; which will enſure all the above bleſſings to them, of whatſoever kind; for this is either ſaid to the prophet, the Lord thy God, or to Iſrael; and either way it ſerves to confirm the ſame thing.

O B A D I A H.

THE title of this book, in the Hebrew copies, is uſually Sepher Obadiah, the book of Obadiah: the Vulgate Latin verſion calls it, the prophecy of Obadiah; and ſo the Arabic verſion: and in the Syriac verſion it is, the prophecy of the prophet Obadiah. His name ſignifies, a ſervant or worſhipper of the Lord. Who he was, what his parentage, and in what age he lived, are things uncertain. The Seder Olam Zuta [a] places him in the reign of Jehoſhaphat; and he is thought by ſome to be that Obadiah, that was one of the princes he ſent to teach the people, 2 Chron. xvii. 7. The ancient Jewiſh Rabbins take him to be the ſame with him that lived in the times of Ahab, and in his court, who hid the prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them, 1 Kings xviii. 3, 4. to which Aben Ezra objects, becauſe he is not called a prophet, only one that feared the Lord; whereas to be a prophet, is ſomething greater. They alſo ſay he was an Edomite by birth, but was proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, and ſo a fit perſon to be employed in propheſying againſt Edom; and it is a tradition with them, that his widow is the woman whoſe cruiſe of oil Eliſha multiplied, 2 Kings iv. 1. Some have been of opinion, that he was the captain of the third fifty, whoſe life Elijah ſpared in the times of Ahaziah; and who upon that left the king's ſervice, and followed the prophet, and became a diſciple of his; ſo Pſeudo-Epiphanius [b], and Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis [c]; who ſay, that he was of Sychem, a city of Samaria, and of the field of Bethachamar, or Bethaccaron. Others would have him to be one of the overſeers of the workmen in the houſe of the Lord, in the times of Joſiah, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12. to which Mr. Lively [d] inclines; though others, going according to the order of the books in the canon of ſcripture, which is not to be depended on, place him earlier, and make him cotemporary with Hoſea, Joel, and Amos, as Grotius [e], Huetius [f], and Lightfoot [g]: but he ſeems rather to be cotemporary with Jeremiah and Ezekiel, with whoſe prophecies this agrees, as may be obſerved by comparing it with Jer. xlix. and Ezek. xxv. and to have lived and propheſied after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans; in which the Edomites, againſt whom he propheſies, had a concern; ſee ℣. 11, 12, 13, 14. Pſ. cxxxvii. 7. though Dr. Lightfoot thinks theſe prophecies refer either to the ſacking of Jeruſalem by Shiſhak king of Egypt, 1 Kings xiv. 25. or by the Philiſtines and Arabians, 2 Chron. xxi. 16, 17. or by Joaſh king of Iſrael, 2 Chron. xxv. 21. ſo that upon the whole, it is not certain; and as Aben Ezra and Kimchi own, it is not known, in what age this prophet lived: Biſhop Uſher [h] places his prophecy in the 12th year of Jeconiah's captivity. However, there is no doubt to be made of the authenticity of the prophecy; as may be concluded, not only from the title of it, and the ſolemn manner in which it begins; but from the matter of it, and the accompliſhment of what is contained in it; as well as from the teſtimony borne to it in the New Teſtament, in which not only the book of the minor prophets, in which this ſtands, is quoted, Acts vii. 42. but a paſſage in it, ℣. 8. is referred to in 1 Cor. i. 19. as is thought by ſome learned men. I have only to obſerve, that according to Pſeudo-Epiphanius [i], he died in Bethachamar, where he is ſaid to be born, and was buried in the ſepulchre of his anceſtors; but, according to Jerom [k] and Iſidore [l], his ſepulchre is in Sebaſte or Samaria; which remained to the times of Jerom, near thoſe of the prophet Eliſha and John the Baptiſt. Monſieur Thevenot [m] ſays, that John Baptiſt here lies buried, between the prophets Eliſha and Abdias.

THIS prophecy of Obadiah is the leaſt of the minor prophets, conſiſting but of one chapter; the ſubject of it is Edom, whoſe deſtruction is foretold, and is to be conſidered as a type of the enemies of Chriſt and his kingdom, and eſpecially of the Roman antichriſt. After the preface, the rumour of war, and preparation for it, which would iſſue in the ruin of Edom, are obſerved, ℣. 1, 2. becauſe of their pride, confidence, and ſecurity, ℣. 3, 4. which ſhould be complete and entire, ℣. 5, 6. notwithſtanding their allies, who would deceive them; and the wiſdom of their wiſe men, which ſhould be deſtroyed; and the ſtrength of their mighty men, who would be diſmayed, ℣. 7, 8, 9. and this ſhould come upon them, chiefly becauſe of their ill-uſage of the Jews at the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, which is enlarged upon, ℣. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. and this would be, when all the nations round about them would be deſtroyed, ℣. 15, 16. and then deliverance is promiſed to the Jews, who ſhould not only enjoy their own poſſeſſions, but the land of the Edomites, waſted by them, ℣. 17, 18, 19, 20. and the book is concluded with a glorious prophecy of the kingdom of the Meſſiah, ℣. 21.

℣. 1. The viſion of Obadiah, &c.] Or the prophecy, as the Targum; which was delivered unto him by the Lord in a viſion; it was not what he fanſied or dreamed of, but what he ſaw, what he had a clear diſcovery and revelation of made unto his mind; hence prophets are ſometimes called ſeers. This was a ſingle prophecy; tho' ſometimes a book, conſiſting of various prophecies, is called a viſion; as the prophecies of Iſaiah, are called the viſion of Iſaiah, ch. i. 1. Thus ſaith the Lord

Lord God, concerning Edom; by the mouth of this prophet, who was divinely inſpired by him; for Obadiah ſaid not what follows of himſelf, but in the name of the Lord; and is a proof of the divine authority of this book; the ſubject-matter of which is Edom or Idumea, as in the Septuagint verſion; a neighbouring country to the Jews, and very troubleſome to them, being their implacable enemies, tho' their brethren; and were a type of the enemies of the chriſtian church, thoſe falſe brethren, the antichriſtian ſtates; and particularly the head of them, the Romiſh antichriſt, whoſe picture is here drawn, and whoſe deſtruction is propheſied of, under the name of Edom; for what has been literally fulfilled in Idumea, will be myſtically accompliſhed in antichriſt. The Jews generally underſtand by Edom, Rome, and the chriſtians in general; which, if applied only to the antichriſtians, is not amiſs. We have heard a rumour from the Lord; or a report[n]; a meſſage from him, brought by the Spirit of God, as a Spirit of prophecy; that is, I Obadiah, and Jeremiah, and other prophets, as Iſaiah and Amos, who have had orders to propheſy againſt Edom; ſee Jer. xlix. 14. ſo the angels, or goſpel-miniſters, will have a rumour or meſſage concerning the fall of antichriſt, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 9: and an embaſſador is ſent among the heathen; either by the Lord, as Jeremiah the prophet, according to ſome; or an angel, as others; or an impulſe upon the minds of the Chaldeans, ſtirring them up to war againſt the Edomites: or elſe by Nebuchadnezzar to the nations in alliance with him, to join him in his expedition againſt them; or a herald ſent by him to his own people, to ſummon them together to this war, and to encourage them in it: ariſe ye, and let us riſe up in battel againſt her; come up from all parts, join together, and invade the land of Idumea, and give battel to the inhabitants of it, and deſtroy them; ſo the kings of the earth will ſtir up one another to hate the whore of Rome, and make her deſolate, Rom. xvii. 16.

℣. 2. Behold, I have made thee ſmall among the heathen, &c.] Or a little one, or thing[o]; their number few, and their country not large, as Aben Ezra, eſpecially in compariſon of other nations; and therefore had no reaſon to be ſo proud, inſolent, and ſecure, as they are afterwards ſaid to be: or rather, I will make thee; the paſt for the future, after the prophetic manner, as Kimchi; that is, weak and feeble, as the Targum; reduce their numbers, deſtroy their towns and cities, and bring them into a low and miſerable condition: or the ſenſe is, that he would make them look little, mean, and abject in the ſight of their enemies; who would conclude upon a view of them, that they ſhould have no trouble in ſubduing them, and therefore ſhould attack them without fear, and as ſure of ſucceſs: thou art greatly deſpiſed; in the eyes of the nations round about; by their enemies, who looked upon them with contempt, becauſe of the ſmalneſs of their number, their defenceleſs ſtate, and want of ſtrength to ſupport and defend themſelves; ſee Jer. xlix. 15. and ſo the pope of Rome is little and deſpicable in the eyes of the monarchs of the earth; and the antichriſtian Edom will be more ſo at the time of its general ruin.

℣. 3. The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, &c.] The Edomites were proud of their wealth and riches, which they had by robberies amaſſed together; and of their military ſkill and courage, and of their friends and allies; and eſpecially of their fortreſſes and faſtneſſes, both natural and artificial; and therefore thought themſelves ſecure, and that no enemy could come at them to hurt them, and this deceived them: thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the rock; their country was called Arabia Petræa, the rocky; and their metropolis, Petra, the rock: Jerom ſays, that they that inhabited the ſouthern part of the country, dwelt in caves cut out of the rock, to ſkreen them from the heat of the ſun: or, thou that dwelleſt in the circumferences of the rock[p]; round about it, on the top of it, in a tower built there, as Kimchi and Ben Melech: Aben Ezra thinks that caph, the note of ſimilitude, is wanting; and that the ſenſe is, thou thoughteſt that mount Seir could ſecure thee, as they that dwell in the clefts of a rock: whoſe habitation is high; upon high rocks and mountains, ſuch as mount Seir was, where Eſau dwelt, and his poſterity after him. The Targum is, "thou art like to an eagle that dwells in "the clefts of the rock, whoſe habitation is in "an high place;" this they were proud of, thinking themſelves ſafe, which deceived them; hence it follows: that ſaith in thine heart, who ſhall bring me down to the ground? what enemy ever ſo warlike and powerful, will venture to invade my land, or beſiege me in my ſtrong-hold? or if he ſhould, he can never take it, or take me from thence, conquer, and ſubdue me. Of the pride, confidence, and ſecurity of myſtical Edom or antichriſt, ſee Rev. xviii. 7.

℣. 4. Tho' thou exalteſt thyſelf as the eagle, &c.] That ſoars aloft, flies on high, even out of ſight, higher than any other bird does: or, exalteſt thy habitation; and makeſt it as high as the eagle's neſt; ſee Jer. xlix. 16: and tho' thou ſet thy neſt among the ſtars; even higher than the eagle's; an hyperbolical expreſſion, ſuppoſing that which never was or can be done; yet if it was poſſible, would not ſecure from danger: or ſhould their caſtles and fortreſſes be built upon the top of the higheſt mountains, which ſeem to reach the heavens, and be among the ſtars: thence will I bring thee down, ſaith the Lord; this is ſaid in anſwer to the queſtion put, or bold challenge made, in the preceding verſe; if men cannot do it, God will; and if he employs inſtruments to effect it, it ſhall be done by them; all ſeeming difficulties are eaſily ſurmounted by an omnipotent Being; what are the heights of mountains, or the ſtrength of fortreſſes, to him? thus the whore of Rome ſits upon ſeven mountains, and myſtical Babylon reigns over the kings of the earth; yet ſhall be thrown down and found no more, for the Lord is ſtrong that judgeth her, Rev. xvii. 9, 18. and xviii. 8, 21.

℣. 5. If thieves came to thee, if robbers by night, &c.] Whether the one came by day, and the other by night, or both by night, the ſame being meant by different words, whoſe intent is to plunder and ſteal, and carry off what they can; thy condition would not be worſe, nor ſo bad as now it is: for how art thou cut off? from being a nation, wholly deſtroyed; thy people killed, or carried captive; thy fortreſſes demoliſhed, towns and cities levelled with the ground, and all thy wealth and ſubſtance carried off, and nothing left: theſe are either the words of God, or of the prophet, ſetting forth their utter ruin, as if it was already; or of the nations round about, wondring at their ſudden deſtruction. Some render it, how ſilent art thou [q]? that is, under all theſe calamities: or, how art thou aſleep? or ſtupified? as the Targum and Jarchi; not to be upon thy guard againſt the incurſions of the enemy, but careleſs, ſecure and ſtupid, and now ſtripped of every thing: had common thieves and robbers broke in upon thee, would they not have ſtolen till they had enough? as much as they came for, or could carry off; they ſeldom ſtrip an houſe into which they enter of every thing in it; they come for ſome particular things, and meeting with them, they go off, and leave the reſt: if the grape-gatherers come to thee, would they not leave ſome grapes? that is, if men ſhould come into thy vineyards, and gather the grapes, and carry them off by force or ſtealth, would they take them all away? doubtleſs they would leave ſome behind; ſome would be hid under the boughs, and be left unobſerved by them: or the alluſion is to gatherers of grapes, who gather them for the owners, and at their direction, who were wont to leave ſome cluſters for the poor to glean after them; but in the caſe of Edom 'tis ſuggeſted that nothing ſhould be left, all ſhould be clean carried off; the deſtruction would be complete and entire. The Targum is, "if ſpoilers as grape-gatherers ſhould "come unto thee," &c. ſee Jer. xlix. 9.

ỳ. 6. How are the things of Eſau ſearched out? &c.] Or how are the Eſauites, the poſterity of Eſau, ſought out? tho' they dwelt in the clefts of the rocks, and hid themſelves in caves and dens, yet their enemies ſearched them, and found them, and plucked them out from thence, ſo that none eſcaped: how are his hid things ſought up? his riches, wealth and treaſure, hid in fortreſſes, in rocks and caves, where they were thought to be ſafe, and judged inacceſſible; or that an enemy would not have ventured in ſearch of them there; and yet theſe ſhould be ſought after, and found by the greedy, and diligent, and venturous ſoldier, and carried off; which was the caſe of the Edomites by the Chaldeans, and will be of the antichriſtian ſtates by the kings of the earth, Rev. xvii. 16. ſee Jer. xlix. 10.

ỳ. 7. All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border, &c.] Or of thy covenant [r]; that are in league with thee; thine allies, even all of them, prove treacherous to thee, in whom thou truſtedſt; when they ſent their embaſſadors to them, they received them kindly, promiſed great things to them, diſmiſſed them honourably, accompanied them to the borders of their country, but never ſtood to their engagements: or thoſe allies came and joined their forces with the Edomites, and went out with them to meet the enemy, as if they would fight with them, and for them; but when they came to the border of the land they left them, and departed into their own country; or went over to the enemy; or theſe confederates were the inſtruments of expelling them out of their own land, and ſending them to the border of it, and carrying them captive; or they followed them to the border of the land, when they were carried captive, as if they lamented their caſe, when they were aſſiſting to the enemy, as Kimchi; ſo deceitful were they. The Targum is to the ſame purpoſe, "from the border all thy confederates carried thee captive [s]:" the men that were at peace with thee, have deceived thee, and prevailed againſt thee; outwitted them in their treaties of peace, and got the advantage of them; or they proved treacherous to them, and joined the enemy againſt them; or they perſuaded them to declare themſelves enemies to the Chaldeans, which proved their ruin; and ſo they prevailed againſt them: they that eat thy bread; ſo the Targum and Kimchi ſupply it; or it may be ſupplied from the preceding clauſe, the men of thy bread; who received ſubſidies from them, were maintained by them, and quartered among them: have laid a wound under thee; inſtead of ſupporting them, ſecretly did that which was wounding to them. The word ſignifies both a wound and a plaſter; they pretended to lay a plaſter to heal, but made a wound; or made the wound worſe. The Targum is, "they "laid a ſtumbling-block under thee;" at which they ſtumbled and fell: or ſnares, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, whereby they brought them to ruin: there is none underſtanding in him; in Eſau, or the Edomites; they were ſo ſtupid, that they could not ſee into the deſigns of their pretended friends, and prevent the execution of them, and their ill effects.

ỳ. 8. Shall I not in that day, ſaith the Lord, even deſtroy the wiſe men out of Edom? &c.] When they ſhall be invaded by the enemy, and treacherouſly dealt with by their allies; ſo that there ſhall be no wiſe counſellors at court to give advice what proper methods ſhould be taken at ſuch a ſeaſon; they ſhould either be taken off by death, or their wiſdom ſhould be turned into folly, and they be rendered incapable of giving right counſel: and underſtanding out of the mount of Eſau? that is, men of underſtanding, as the Targum, ſhould be deſtroyed out of Edom or Idumea, which was a mountainous country; ſuch as were well verſed in politics, or underſtood military affairs, and how to conduct at ſuch a critical time; to form ſchemes, and concert meaſures, and wiſely put them in execution; and to be deprived of all ſuch muſt be a great loſs at ſuch a time, and add to their diſtreſs and calamity; ſee Jer. xlix. 7.

ỳ. 9. And thy mighty men, O Teman, ſhall be diſmayed, &c.] Teman was one part of the country of Edom, ſo called from Teman a ſon of Eliphaz, and grandſon of Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 11. and which it ſeems had been famous for men of might and courage: it abounded with brave officers, and courageous ſoldiers, who ſhould now be quite diſpirited, and have no heart to go out againſt the enemy; and inſtead of defending their country, ſhould throw away their arms, and run away in a fright. The Targum and Vulgate Latin verſion render it, "thy mighty men that inhabit the ſouth;" or are on the ſouth, the ſouthern part of Edom, and ſo lay fartheſt off from the Chaldeans, who came from the north; yet theſe ſhould be at once intimidated upon the rumour of their approach and invaſion: that every one of the mount of Eſau may be cut off by ſlaughter; that ſo there might be none to reſiſt and ſtop the enemy, or defend their country; but that all might fall by the ſword of the enemy, and none be left, even every mighty man, as Jarchi interprets it, thro' the greatneſs of the ſlaughter that ſhould be made.

[s] So R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 51. 2. and 52. 1.

℣. 10. For thy violence againſt thy brother Jacob, &c.] Which is aggravated by being againſt Jacob, an honeſt, plain-hearted man, and whom the Lord loved; his brother, his own brother, a twin-brother, yea his only brother; yet this is to be underſtood, not ſo much of the violence of Eſau againſt Jacob perſonally, tho' there is an alluſion to that; as of the violence of the poſterity of the one againſt the poſterity of the other; and not ſingly of the violence ſhewn at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, but in general of the anger they bore, the wrath they ſhewed, and the injuries they did to their brethren the Jews, on all occaſions, whenever they had an opportunity, of which the following is a notorious inſtance; and for which more eſpecially, as well as for the above things, they are threatened with ruin: ſhame ſhall cover thee; as a garment; they ſhall be filled with bluſhing, and covered with confuſion, when convicted of their ſin, and puniſhed for it: and thou ſhalt be cut off for ever; from being a nation; either by Nebuchadnezzar; or in the times of the Maccabees by Hyrcanus, when they were ſubdued by the Jews, and were incorporated among them, and never ſince was a ſeparate people or kingdom.

℣. 11. In the day thou ſtoodſt on the other ſide, &c.] Aloof off, as a ſpectator of the ruin of Jeruſalem, and that with delight and pleaſure; when they ſhould, as brethren and neighbours, have aſſiſted againſt the common enemy; but inſtead of this they ſtood at a diſtance; or they went over to the other ſide, and joined the enemy, and ſtood in oppoſition to their brethren the Jews: in the day that the ſtrangers carried away captive his forces; that is, at the time that the Chaldeans took Jeruſalem, and carried captive as many of the forces of the Jews as fell into their hands; or when "the "people ſpoiled his ſubſtance," as the Targum; plundered the city of all its wealth and riches: and foreigners entered into his gates; the gates of their cities, particularly Jeruſalem; even ſuch who came from a far country, the Babylonians, who were aliens and ſtrangers from the commonwealth of Iſrael; whereas the Edomites were their near neighbours, and allied to them by blood, tho' not of the ſame religion; and by whom they helped againſt a foreign enemy, inſtead of being uſed by them as they were: and caſt lots upon Jeruſalem; either to know when they ſhould make their attack upon it; or elſe having taken it, the generals of the Chaldean army caſt lots upon the captives to divide them among them, ſo Kimchi; ſee Joel iii. 3. Nah. iii. 10. or rather, the ſoldiers caſt lots for the diviſion of the plunder of the city, as was uſual at ſuch times: even thou waſt as one of them; the Edomites joined the Chaldeans, entered into the city with them, ſhewed as much wrath, ſpite and malice as they did, and were as buſy in dividing the ſpoil. So Aben Ezra interprets theſe and the following verſes of the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar; but Kimchi expounds them of the deſtruction of them by the Romans, at which he ſuppoſes many Edomites to be preſent, and rejoiced at it: could this be ſupported, the connexion would be more clear and cloſe between theſe words and thoſe that follow, which reſpect the goſpel-diſpenſation, beginning at ℣. 17. but the Edomites were not in being then; and that there were many of them in the Roman army, and that Titus himſelf was one, is all fabulous.

℣. 12. But thou ſhouldſt not have looked on the day of thy brother, &c.] The day of his calamity, diſtreſs and deſtruction, as afterwards explained; that is, with delight and ſatisfaction, as pleaſed with it, and rejoicing at it; but rather ſhould have grieved and mourned, and as fearing their turn would be next: or, do not look [t]; ſo ſome read it in the imperative, and in like manner all the following clauſes: in the day that he became a ſtranger; were carried into a ſtrange country, and became ſtrangers to their own: or, in the day of his alienation [u]; from their country, city, houſes, and the houſe and worſhip of God; and when ſtrange, ſurprizing and unheard of things were done unto them, and among them: neither ſhouldſt thou have rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their deſtruction; the deſtruction of the Jews, of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, by the Chaldeans: this explains what is meant by the Edomites looking upon the day of the calamity of the Jews, that it was with pleaſure and complacency, having had a good-will to have deſtroyed them themſelves, but it was not in the power of their hands; and now being done by a foreign enemy, they could not forbear expreſſing their joy on that occaſion, which was very cruel and brutal; and this alſo ſhews that Obadiah propheſied after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar: neither ſhouldſt thou have ſpoken proudly in the day of diſtreſs; or magnified thy mouth [w]; opened it wide in virulent ſcoffing, and inſulting language; ſaying with the greateſt fervour and vehemence, and as loud as it could be ſaid, raſe it, raſe it to the foundation thereof, Pſ. cxxxvii. 7.

℣. 13. Thou ſhouldſt not have entered into the gate of my people in the day of their calamity, &c.] Or gates, as the Targum; the gates of any of their cities, and particularly thoſe of Jeruſalem; into which the Edomites entered along with the Chaldeans, exulting over the Jews, and inſulting them, and joining with the enemy in diſtreſſing and plundering them: yea thou ſhouldſt not have looked on their affliction in the day of their calamity; which is repeated, as being exceeding cruel and inhuman, and what was highly reſented by the Lord; that inſtead of looking upon the affliction of his people and their brethren with an eye of pity and compaſſion, they looked upon it with the utmoſt pleaſure and delight: nor laid hands on their ſubſtance in the day of their calamity; or on their forces [x]; they laid violent hands on their armed men, and either killed or took them captive; and they laid hands on their goods, their wealth and riches, and made a ſpoil of them. The phraſe, in the day of their calamity, is three times uſed in this verſe, to ſhew the greatneſs of it; and as an aggravation of the ſin of the Edomites, in behaving and doing as they did at ſuch a time.

℣. 14. Neither ſhouldſt thou have ſtood in the croſs-way, &c.] In a place where two or more roads met, to ſtop the Jews that fled, let them take which road they would: or, in the breach [y]; that is, of the walls of the city, to cut off thoſe of his

his that did eſcape; ſuch of the Jews that eſcaped the ſword of the Chaldeans in the city, and attempted to get away thro' the breaches of the walls of it, or that took different roads to make their eſcape; theſe were intercepted and ſtopped by the Edomites, who poſted themſelves at theſe breaches, or at places where two or more ways met, and cut them off; ſo that thoſe that eſcaped the ſword of the enemy fell by theirs; which was exceeding barbarous and cruel: neither ſhouldſt thou have delivered up thoſe of his that did remain in the day of their diſtreſs; or ſhut up [z]; they ſhut them up in their houſes, or ſtopped up all the avenues and ways by which they might eſcape, even ſuch as remained of thoſe that were killed or carried captive; theſe falling into the hands of the Edomites, ſome they cut off, and others they delivered up into the hands of the Chaldeans. Of the joy and rejoicing of the myſtical Edomites, the papiſts, thoſe falſe brethren and antichriſtians, at the deſtruction of the faithful witneſſes and true chriſtians, and of their cruelty and inhumanity to them, ſee Rev. xi. 7, 8, 9, 10.

ỿ. 15. For the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen, &c.] That is, the time was at hand, fixed and determined by the Lord, and he had ſpoken of by his prophets, when he would puniſh all the heathens round about for their ſins; as the Egyptians, Philiſtines, Tyrians, Ammonites, Moabites, and others; and ſo the Edomites among the reſt; for this is mentioned for their ſakes, and to ſhew that their puniſhment was inevitable, and that they could not expect to eſcape in the general ruin; ſee Jer. xxv. 17—26. This deſtruction of Edom here propheſied of, and of all the heathen, was accompliſhed about five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſo that it might be truly ſaid to be near; and ſome time within this ſpace Obadiah ſeems to have propheſied; and the day of the Lord is not far off upon the Pagans, Mahometans, and all the antichriſtian ſtates, when myſtical Edom or Rome will be deſtroyed; ſee Rev. xvi. 19. and xvii. 14. and xix. 19, 20, 21: as thou haſt done, it ſhall be done unto thee, thy reward ſhall return upon thine own head; this is particularly directed to Edom, upon whom the day of the Lord's vengeance ſhall come; when he puniſhed the heathens, then the Edomites ſhould be retaliated in their own way; and as they had rejoiced at the deſtruction of the Jews, and had inſulted them in their calamities, and barbarouſly uſed them, they ſhould be treated in like manner; ſee Ezek. xxxv. 15. and thus will myſtical Babylon, or the myſtical Edomites be dealt with, even after the ſame manner, as they have dealt with the truly godly, the faithful profeſſors of Chriſt, Rev. xviii. 6.

ỿ. 16. For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, ſo ſhall all the heathen drink continually, &c.] Which is either ſpoken to the Edomites; and the ſenſe be, according to the Targum, "as ye have "rejoiced at the blow (given unto, or at the ſubverſion and deſtruction) of the mountain of my "holineſs, all people ſhall drink the cup of their "vengeance;" or puniſhment; and to the ſame ſenſe Jarchi and Japhet interpret it; and ſo Kimchi, "as ye have made a feaſt, rejoicing at the deſtruction of my holy mountain, ſo thou and all nations ſhall drink of the cup of trembling;" but Aben Ezra thinks the words are ſpoken to the Iſraelites, "as ye have drank the cup, ſo ſhall all "nations;" the cup of vengeance began with them, and ſo went round the nations, according to the prophecy in Jer. xxv. 17, 18, &c. for if judgment begins at the houſe and people of God, it may be expected it will reach to others; wherefore Edom had no reaſon to rejoice at the deſtruction of the Jews, ſince they might be aſſured by that, the ſame would be their caſe ere long; and with this difference, that whereas the Jews only drank this cup for a while, during the ſeventy years captivity, theſe nations, and the Edomites among the reſt, ſhould be continually drinking it: yea, they ſhall drink, and they ſhall ſwallow down; not only drink of the cup, but drink it up; not only take it into their mouths, but ſwallow it down their throats; not only ſip at it, but ſup it up [a], as it may be rendered. The phraſe denotes the fulneſs of their puniſhment, and their utter and entire ruin and deſtruction, which the next clauſe confirms: and they ſhall be as tho' they had not been; as now are the Philiſtines, Moabites, Ammonites, and ſo the Edomites; their names are not heard of in the world, only as they are read in the bible; and thus it ſhall be with myſtical Babylon or Edom, it ſhall be thrown down, and found no more, Rev. xviii. 21.

ỿ. 17. But upon mount Zion ſhall be deliverance, &c.] Not only by Cyrus, at the end of the ſeventy years captivity; and by the Maccabees from the Idumeans, and other enemies; but by the Meſſiah; for not merely temporal deliverance is here intended, unleſs as a ſhadow, type and figure; but ſpiritual deliverance from the law, ſin, ſatan, the world, death, hell, and wrath to come, by Chriſt; who is the deliverer that ſhould both come to Zion, and out of Zion, and who has wrought the above deliverance for Zion, his church and people; and where it is preached and proclaimed, and where thoſe who are delivered come and dwell: or, upon mount Zion ſhall be an eſcape; or, they that eſcape [b]; the pollutions of the world, the vengeance of divine juſtice, the curſes of the law, and the damnation of hell, by fleeing to Chriſt for refuge: and there ſhall be holineſs; that is, on mount Zion, on the church, which is the holy hill of God, and where only holy perſons ſhould dwell; and for whomſoever deliverance is wrought out, ſooner or later there will be in them holineſs, both of heart and life; and indeed without this, complete deliverance and ſalvation, which will be in heaven, will not be enjoyed; hence thoſe that are choſen to this ſalvation, are choſen thro' ſanctification of the Spirit; and ſuch as are redeemed and delivered by Chriſt, are purified to be a peculiar people, zealous of good works; and are in conſequence of ſuch deliverance and redemption, called with an holy calling, and have principles of holineſs implanted in them, and live holy lives and converſations; and ſuch kind of holineſs, as it appeared in Zion, in the churches of Chriſt in the firſt times of the goſpel, ſo it will be more conſpicuous among them in the latter day; ſee Iſ. iv. 3. and lii. 1. Zech. xiv. 20, 21. or, there ſhall be an holy one, or thing [c]; the holy Jeſus, who is holy in both his natures, in all his offices, works and words; the Lamb that ſhould, and has been ſeen on mount Zion; and the holy Spirit of God, who dwells and abides in his church, and among his people, to anoint and aſſiſt the miniſters of the word; to accompany the word with power, and make it ſucceſsful; and to ſanctify and comfort the Lord's people in Zion; and there are the holy word of God, the doctrines of grace according to godlineſs preached, and the ſacred ordinances of baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper adminiſtred. The Targum is, "and they ſhall "be holy;" the Lord's people: and ſo Kimchi interprets it of Iſrael being holy to the Lord. And the houſe of Jacob ſhall poſſeſs their poſſeſſions; that is, either the Iſraelites ſhall poſſeſs the poſſeſſions of the heathens, particularly of the Edomites; ſo the Targum, "and they of the houſe of Jacob ſhall "poſſeſs the ſubſtance of the people that poſſeſſed "them;" ſee Amos, ix. 11, 12. which was fulfilled ſpiritually in the firſt times of the goſpel, when the apoſtles, who were of the houſe of Jacob, and were Iſraelites indeed, preached the goſpel to the Gentiles, and were the means of converting many of them, and of bringing them into the goſpel-church; which may be called the houſe of Jacob, when they and theirs become their poſſeſſion, and Chriſt, the maſter of this houſe, had the heathen given him for his inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the earth for his poſſeſſion, Pſ. ii. 8. or elſe the ſenſe is, that the people of God, true chriſtians, ſhall in goſpel-times poſſeſs their own poſſeſſions; God himſelf, who is their portion and inheritance, and ſhall enjoy communion with him; Chriſt, and all that are his, all ſpiritual bleſſings in him; the Spirit and his graces, as the earneſt of a future and eternal inheritance; exceeding great and precious promiſes they are heirs of, and a kingdom and glory hereafter; of which the poſſeſſions in the land of Canaan, reſtored to the right owners of them in the year of jubilee, were a type. R. Moſes ſays, this prophecy has reſpect to the times of Hezekiah; in which he is followed by Grotius, very wrongly; R. Jeſhuah better, to the times of the ſecond temple; but Japhet beſt of all, to time to come, to the times of the Meſſiah, to which it no doubt belongs: here begin the prophecies concerning Chriſt, his church, and kingdom.

℣. 18. And the houſe of Jacob ſhall be a fire, and the houſe of Joſeph a flame, &c.] The former may denote the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter the ten tribes, which after the ſeparation in Rehoboam's time were called Ephraim, and ſometimes Joſeph; tho' they may here ſignify one and the ſame, ſince all the tribes will be united, and become one people at the time the prophecy refers to: the meaning is, that the people of Judah and Iſrael ſhall have ſtrength and power to conquer and deſtroy their enemies, with as much eaſe as flames of fire conſume chaff or ſtubble, or any ſuch combuſtible matter they light upon, as it follows: and the houſe of Eſau for ſtubble, and they ſhall kindle in them, and devour them; that is, the Iſraelites ſhall fall upon the Edomites, who will be no more able to withſtand them, than ſtubble can ſtand before devouring flames of fire, and ſhall utterly waſte and deſtroy them: and there ſhall not be any remaining of the houſe of Eſau; they ſhall all be cut off by, or ſwallowed up among the Jews; not ſo much as a torch-bearer left, one that carries the lights before an army, as the Septuagint and Arabic verſions; which verſions, and the cuſtom alluded to, ſerve very much to illuſtrate the paſſage. It was a cuſtom with the Greeks, as we are told [d], when armies were about to engage, that before the firſt enſigns ſtood a prophet or prieſt, bearing branches of laurels and garlands, who was called Pyrophorus, or the torch-bearer, becauſe he held a lamp or torch; and it was accounted a moſt criminal thing to do him any hurt, ſeeing he performed the office of an embaſſador; for thoſe ſort of men were prieſts of Mars, and ſacred to him, ſo that thoſe that were conquerors always ſpared them: hence, when a total deſtruction of an army, place, or people was hyperbolically expreſſed, it uſed to be ſaid, not ſo much as a torch-bearer or fire-carrier eſcaped [e]; hence this phraſe was proverbially uſed of the moſt entire defeat of an army, or ruin of a people. So Philo [f] the Jew, ſpeaking of the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt at the Red ſea, ſays, there was not ſo much as a torch-bearer left, to declare the calamity to the Egyptians; and thus here, ſo general ſhould be the deſtruction of the Edomites, that not one ſhould be left, no not a perſon in ſuch a poſt and office as deſcribed. The Targum of the whole is, "and they of the houſe "of Jacob ſhall be ſtrong as fire, and they of the "houſe of Joſeph ſtrong like a flame, but they "of the houſe of Eſau ſhall be weak as ſtubble; "and they ſhall have power over them, and kill "them, and there ſhall be none left of the houſe "of Eſau." This was fulfilled literally, either by Judas Maccabæus, when he went againſt the children of Eſau in Idumea, and ſmote them, and took their ſpoil, 1 Maccab. v. 3. or rather by Hyrcanus, who took the cities of Idumea, ſubdued all the Edomites, but permitted them to live in their own country, provided they would be circumciſed, and conform to the Jewiſh laws; which they did, as Joſephus ſays [g], and coaleſced and became one people with them, and were reckoned as Jews, and no more as Edomites. But this prophecy had its accompliſhment ſpiritually, either in the firſt times of the goſpel, when the apoſtles, who were Jews and Iſraelites, went forth into the Gentile world, and among the enemies of Chriſt, preaching the word, which is like fire; and when attended with the Spirit of judgment and of burning, enlightens the conſciences of men, melts their hearts, conſumes their luſts, and is as a refiner's fire to them, for their purification; or if not, it irritates, provokes, torments, and diſtreſſes, as fire does; and is either the ſavour of life unto life, or the ſavour of death unto death; ſee Iſ. iv. 4. Jer. xxiii. 29. Rev. xi. 5. or rather it will have its full and final accompliſhment in the deſtruction of antichriſt, here ſignified by Eſau and Edom, which will be by burning myſtical Babylon, the whore of Rome; the beaſt and falſe prophet will be burnt with fire; the day of the Lord will burn like an oven, and all the wicked will be as ſtumble, which will be burnt by it, root and branch, ſo that none will remain; ſee Rev. xvii. 16. and xviii. 8. and xix. 20. Mal. iv. 2. compare with this Zech. xii. 6. Kimchi on Amos, ix. 12. ſays, this ſhall be in the days of the Meſſiah, the Edomites ſhall be all conſumed, and the Iſraelites ſhall inherit their land; for the Lord hath ſpoken it, and therefore it ſhall moſt certainly be accompliſhed; what God has ſaid ſhall be done, he'll not alter the thing that is gone out of his lips; heaven and earth ſhall ſooner paſs away, than one word of his.

℣. 19. And they of the ſouth ſhall poſſeſs the land of Eſau, &c.] That is, thoſe Jews that ſhall dwell in the ſouthern part of the land of Judea, ſhall ſeize upon the country of Idumea, lying contiguous to them; they ſhall enlarge their border, and take that into their poſſeſſion: and they of the plain, the Philiſtines; or of Sephela; they that ſhall inhabit the plain, or champain country of Judea, as the parts of Lydda, Emmaus, and Sharon were; theſe ſhall poſſeſs the country of the Philiſtines, lying near unto them, as Azotus, Gaza, Aſhkelon, Gath and Ekron: and they ſhall poſſeſs the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria; all the countries that the ten tribes inhabited, in the times of their idolatry, before their captivity, which the Jews ſhall now be reſtored unto: and Benjamin ſhall poſſeſs Gilead; that tribe ſhall be ſo enlarged as to take in the country of Gilead, which lay beyond Jordan, formerly poſſeſſed by the half tribe of Manaſſeh. Some think this was fulfilled in the times of the Maccabees, when ſeveral of theſe places were taken by Judas, 1 Maccab. v. 17, 36, 68. but ſince the land of Judea, and the countries adjacent to it, were never as yet inhabited by the Jews in the form and manner here mentioned; it rather reſpects their ſettlement in their own land, in the latter day, when their borders will be greatly enlarged; ſee Ezek. xlviii. Zech. x. 10. or it may regard the enlargement of the church of Chriſt, either in the firſt times of the goſpel, when that was ſpread in thoſe parts, and met with ſucceſs; ſee Acts viii. 6, 8. and ix. 31, 35. or rather in the latter day, when Chriſt's kingdom will be from ſea to ſea, and his dominion from the river to the ends of the earth, Pſ. lxxii. 8. and to which alſo the following words belong.

℣. 20. And the captivity of this hoſt of the children of Iſrael ſhall poſſeſs that of the Canaanites, even unto Zarephath, &c.] That is, the hoſt or army, the great number of the children of Iſrael, that have been carried captive, upon their return ſhall poſſeſs that part of the land of Iſrael which was inhabited formerly by the Canaanites, even as far as to Zarephath, ſaid to belong to Zidon, 1 Kings xvii. 10. and called Sarepta of Sidon; ſee Luke iv. 26. It is mentioned by Pliny [h] along with Sidon, where glaſs was made; and perhaps this place might have its name from the melting of glaſs in it, from צרף which ſignifies to melt metals, glaſs, &c. it is called by Joſephus [i], Sarephtha; who ſays it was not far from Sidon and Tyre, and lay between them: according to an Arabic geographer [k], it was twenty miles from Tyre, and ten from Sidon. Here the prophet Elijah dwelt for a time; and in the times of Jerom [l] was ſhown a little tower, ſaid to be his habitation, which travellers viſited. Mr. Maundrel [m] ſpeaks of this place as three hours journey from Sidon, and is now called "Sarphan, ſuppoſed, he ſays, to be the ancient Sarephath, or Sarepta, ſo famous for the reſidence and miracles of the prophet Elijah; the place ſhewn us for this city, conſiſted of only a few houſes on the tops of the mountains, within about half a mile of the ſea; but it is more probable, the principal part of the city ſtood below, in the ſpace between the hills and the ſea, there being ruins ſtill to be ſeen in that place, of a conſiderable extent." It was once a place very famous for wine; the wine of Sarepta is often made mention of by writers [n]; perhaps vines might grow upon the hills and mountains about it; and this being a city of Phœnicia, on the northern border of the land of Iſrael, is very fitly obſerved as the limit of the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites this way. And the captivity of Jeruſalem which is in Sepharad, ſhall poſſeſs the cities of the ſouth; the Jews, who were carried captive into Babylon, to Sepharad; ſome place, tho' unknown, perhaps in the land of Babylon. Calmet [o] conjectures it may be Sippara or Sipparat in Meſopotamia, a little above the diviſion of the Euphrates: and the Septuagint verſion renders it, Ephratha; which perhaps is a corruption of the Euphrates in the preſent copies: the Vulgate Latin verſion tranſlates it, Boſphorus; and ſo Jerom, who ſays, that the Hebrew that taught him, aſſured him that Boſphorus was called Sepharad; whither Adrian is ſaid to carry the Jews captive. Kimchi and Aben Ezra interpret it of the preſent captivity of theirs by Titus, who upon their return to their land ſhall poſſeſs the ſouthern part of it, which originally belonged to the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 20, 21. If Sepharad, in the Aſſyrian language, ſignifies a border, as Jerom ſays it does, it denotes, as ſome think, that part of Arabia which borders on the ſouth of Judea, that ſhall be inhabited by the Jews. Some render the words, the captivity of Jeruſalem ſhall poſſeſs that which is in Sepharad, and the cities of the ſouth; but this is contrary to the accents, unleſs the words ſhall poſſeſs be repeated, and ſo two clauſes made, the captivity of Jeruſalem ſhall poſſeſs that which is in Sepharad; they ſhall poſſeſs the cities of the ſouth. The Targum and Syriac verſion, inſtead of Sepharad, have Spain; and ſo the Jewiſh writers generally interpret it. By the Canaanites they think are meant the Germans, and the country of Germany; by Zarephath, France; and by Sepharad, Spain; ſo Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, fanſying that they who are now captives in theſe countries, ſhall one day poſſeſs them: but the prophecy only reſpects their ſettlement in their own land, and ſome parts adjacent to it; or rather the enlargement of the church of Chriſt in the world. A late learned writer [p] is of opinion, that ſome reſpect may be had to this paſſage in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, in which the former makes mention of five brethren that he had, Luke xvi. 28. and are by the ſaid writer thus reckoned: 1. the houſe of Jacob; 2. the houſe of Joſeph, which are ſaid to poſſeſs the ſouth, with the mountains of Eſau, and the plain; 3. Benjamin, which ſhall poſſeſs Gilead; 4. the captives from the Aſſyrian captivity; 5. the captives from the Jeruſalem-captivity, namely, by Titus Veſpaſian, who ſhall poſſeſs the cities of the ſouth.

℣. 21. And ſaviours ſhall come upon mount Zion, &c.] Which, according to ſome, is to be underſtood literally, either of Zorobabel and Joſhuah, after the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, who were the reſtorers of their civil and church-ſtate; or rather of Judas Maccabeus and his brethren, who ſaved the people of the Jews from Antiochus and his generals, called ſaviours, as the judges of old were, Neh. ix. 27. but it is beſt to interpret theſe ſaviours of the apoſtles of Chriſt, and miniſters of the word; and eſpecially of the preachers of the goſpel in the latter days; called ſaviours, becauſe they publiſh ſalvation, preach the goſpel of it, ſhew unto men the way of ſalvation; and ſo they, and the word preached by them, are the means and inſtruments of the ſalvation of men; otherwiſe Chriſt is the only Saviour of God's appointing and ſending, and who came to effect ſalvation, and is become the author of it, nor is it in any other; ſee 1 Tim. iv. 16. Ezek. xxxiii. 9. Rom. i. 16. Jam. i. 19. theſe in great numbers, in the latter day, will appear on mount Zion, or in the church of Chriſt, and ſhall openly and publickly, as on a mountain, declare the everlaſting goſpel; theſe will be with Chriſt the Lamb, among the 144,000 upon mount Zion, Rev. xiv. 1, 6. Kimchi and Ben Melech ſay, theſe are the king Meſſiah and his companions, the ſeven ſhepherds and eight principal men, Mic. v. 5. Aben Ezra ſays, the words refer to time to come; according to Baal-batturim on Gen. xxxii. 4. they will be fulfilled about the end of the ſixth millennium, when they expect the Meſſiah; and they are applied to the times of the Meſſiah, both by ancient and more modern Jews. In their ancient book of Zohar [q] it is ſaid, “ when “ the Meſſiah ſhall ariſe, Jacob ſhall take his portion above and below; and Eſau ſhall be utterly deſtroyed, and ſhall have no portion and “ inheritance in the world, according to ỷ. 18. “ but Jacob ſhall inherit two worlds, this world, “ and the world to come; and of that time it is “ written, and ſaviours ſhall come upon mount Zion, “ &c.” So in the Jeruſalem Talmud [r], “ ſays R. “ Hona, we don't find that Jacob our father went “ to Seir (ſee Gen. xxxiii. 14.) R. Joden, the ſon “ of Rabbi, ſays, in future times (the world to “ come, the days of the Meſſiah) is it not ſaid, “ and ſaviours ſhall come upon mount Zion, to judge “ the mount of Eſau?” And to much the ſame purpoſe it is ſaid in one of their ancient Midraſſes [s] or expoſitions, “ we have turned over all the ſcripture, and we don't find that Jacob ſtood with “ Eſau on Seir; he (God) ſaid, until now it is “ with me to make judges and ſaviours ſtand, to “ take vengeance on that man, as it is ſaid, and “ ſaviours ſhall come up, &c.” And the Cabaliſtic writers [t] thus paraphraſe the words, “ and ſaviours “ ſhall come up; who are the Lord of hoſts, and “ the God of hoſts: on mount Zion; which is the “ myſtery of the living God: to judge the mount “ of Eſau; which is mount Seir.” So Maimonides [u], quoting the paſſage in Numb. xxiv. 18. Seir alſo ſhall be a poſſeſſion for his enemies, adds, by way of explanation, this is the king Meſſiah, of whom it is ſaid, and ſaviours ſhall come upon mount Zion. The work and buſineſs of theſe ſaviours will be, to judge the mount of Eſau; to take vengeance on the Edomites, for their ill-uſage of the children of Judah, as the Jewiſh commentators generally interpret it: or rather, as goſpel-miniſters are theſe ſaviours, it expreſſes their buſineſs; which as it is to declare that whoever believes in Chriſt ſhall be ſaved, ſo that whoever does not ſhall be damned; and to convince impenitent and unbelieving ſinners of their ſin and danger, and their need of Chriſt, judging and condemning thoſe that remain ſo: and moreover, as Eſau and Edom ſignify antichriſt, the ſenſe is, that they ſhall publiſh and proclaim the judgment of God upon antichriſt, declare it to be near, yea to be done; and ſhall expreſs their approbation of the juſtice of God in it, and ſhall call upon the ſaints to rejoice at it, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 9. and xvi. 5, 6. and xviii. 1, 20. yea, theſe ſaviours may include the chriſtian princes, that ſhall pour out the vials of God's wrath upon the antichriſtian ſtates. And the kingdom ſhall be the Lord's; the Lord Chriſt's, who is the one Jehovah with the Father and Spirit; meaning not the government of the world, to which he has a natural right as Creator, and which is generally aſcribed to Jehovah the Father; nor the government of the church in this preſent ſtate, which is Chriſt's already, and ever was: but the government of it in the latter day, when he will take to himſelf his great power and reign; when his kingdom will be more viſible, ſpiritual, glorious, and extenſive; when the kingdoms of this world will become his, the Pagan, Papal, and Mahometan kingdoms, even all the kingdoms and nations of the earth; he'll be king over all the earth; there will be but one Lord and King, and whoſe kingdom is an everlaſting one; it ſhall never come into other hands; this will continue till the perſonal reign takes place, and that will iſſue in the ultimate glory; ſee Rev. xi. 15, 17. and xv. 3, 4. Zech. xiv. 9. Pſ. lxxii. 8, 9, 10.

J O N A H.

THIS book in the Hebrew copies is called Sepher Jonah, the book of Jonah; by the Vulgate Latin verſion, the prophecy of Jonah; and in the Syriac verſion, the prophecy of the prophet Jonah. His name ſignifies a dove, derived from a root which ſignifies to oppreſs; becauſe it is a creature liable to oppreſſion, and to become the prey of others. Hillerus [a] derives the word from a root which ſignifies to be fair and beautiful, as this creature is. This name is very ſuitable to a prophet and miniſter of the Lord, who ought to be wiſe as ſerpents, and harmleſs as doves; and who mourn over their own ſins, and the ſins of others. Jonah did not always in his conduct anſwer to his name, particularly when he was ſo angry at the Lord's ſparing the Ninevites, and ſo impatient for the loſs of his gourd. His father's name was Amittai, as in ch. i. 1. and in 2 Kings xiv. 25. from whence it alſo appears, that he was of Geth-hepher, a town in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 13. and was a part of Galilee, Iſ. ix. 1. and ſo R. Jochanan in Abendana affirms, that he was of the tribe of Zebulun, and of Geth-hepher, which was in that tribe; which confutes that notion of the Phariſees in the times of Chriſt, that no prophet came out of Galilee, John vii. 52. The Jews [b] have a tradition, that his mother was the widow of Sarepta, whoſe ſon Elijah raiſed from the dead, which was this prophet; and who is ſaid to be the ſon of Amittai, that is, truth; becauſe his mother thereby knew and believed that the word of the Lord in the mouth of Elijah was truth, 1 Kings xvii. 23, 24. but his being an Hebrew contradicts this, ch. i. 9. for Sarepta was a city of Sidon, and he muſt have been a Sidonian if born of her, and not an Hebrew; but be this as it will, it is certain he was a prophet of the Lord; and this book, which bears his name, and very probably was written by him, its divine authority is confirmed by the teſtimony of Chriſt, of whom Jonah was a type; ſee Matt. xii. 39, 40, 41. and indeed the principal deſign of this book is to ſet forth in himſelf the type of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, by his being three days in the whale's belly, and then delivered from it; and to declare the grace and mercy of God to repenting ſinners, and to ſignify the calling of the Gentiles after the death and reſurrection of Chriſt; and is a very profitable book to inſtruct us about the power and goodneſs of God; the nature of repentance, and the effects of it; the imperfection and infirmities of the beſt of men in this life; and the call and miſſion of the miniſters of the word, and the neceſſity of their conformity and attendance to it. Cyprian the martyr was converted from idolatry by hearing this prophecy read and explained by Cæcilius. If this prophet was the ſon of the widow of Sarepta; or the perſon Eliſha ſent to anoint Jehu, according to the tradition of the Jews [c], he was born in the times of Ahab, and lived in the reigns of Joram and Jehu; and according to biſhop Lloyd [d], he propheſied in the latter end of Jehu's reign; where Mr. Whiſton [e] alſo places him, about 860 years before Chriſt; or in the beginning of the reign of Jehoahaz, when Iſrael was greatly oppreſſed by Hazael king of Syria, 2 Kings xiii. 22. at which time he might propheſy of the victories and ſucceſs of Jeroboam the ſecond, and grandſon of Jehoahaz, 2 Kings xiv. 25. and if ſo, he is more ancient than Iſaiah, Hoſea, Amos, Joel and Micah, whoſe cotemporary he is generally thought to be. Pſeudo-Epiphanius [f] as he gives a wrong account of the place of the birth of this prophet, ſo of the place of his burial; which he makes to be in the land of Saar, and in the cave of Kenan, the father of Caleb and Othniel; but it is more likely that he died and was buried at Geth, where he was born; and where, Jerom [g] ſays, his grave was ſhewn in his time, about two miles from Zippore, in the way to Tiberias; with which account Iſidore [h] agrees; and ſo Benjamin Tudelenſis [i] ſays, his ſepulchre was on a hill near Zippore. Monſieur Thevenot [k] ſays, not far from Nazareth the tomb of Jonas is now to be ſeen, to which the Turks bear a great reſpect.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter gives an account of the call and miſſion of Jonah to go to Nineveh, and propheſy there, and the reaſon of it, ℣. 1, 2. his diſobedience to it, ℣. 3. God's reſentment of it, by ſending a ſtorm into the ſea where he was, which terrified the mariners, and put the ſhip in danger of being loſt, ℣. 4, 5. The diſcovery of Jonah and his diſobedience as the cauſe of the tempeſt, and how it was made, ℣. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. The caſting of him into the ſea at his own motion, and with his own conſent, tho' with great reluctance in the mariners, ℣. 11—16. The preparation of a fiſh for him, which ſwallowed him up, and in which he lived three days and three nights, ℣. 17.

℣. 1. Now the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the ſon of Amittai, &c.] Or, and the word of the Lord

Lord was[l]; not that this is to be conſidered as connected with ſomething the prophet had on his mind, and in his thoughts when he began to write this book; or as a part detached from a prophecy not now extant; for it is no unuſual thing with the Hebrews to begin books after this manner, eſpecially hiſtorical ones, of which kind this chiefly is, as the books of Ruth, 1 and 2 Sam. and Eſther; beſides, the ו Vau is here not copulative, but converſive; doing its office by changing the future tenſe into the paſt; which otherwiſe muſt have been rendered, the word of the Lord ſhall be, or ſhall come; which would not only give another, but a wrong ſenſe. The word of the Lord often ſignifies a prophecy from the Lord; and ſo the Targum renders it, “the word of prophecy “from the Lord;” and it may be ſo interpreted, ſince Jonah under a ſpirit of prophecy foretold that Nineveh ſhould be deſtroyed within forty days; tho' the phraſe here rather ſignifies the order and command of the Lord to the prophet to do as is expreſſed in the next verſe, whoſe name was Jonah the ſon of Amittai; of whom ſee the argument of the book. Who his father Amittai was, is not known: if the rule of the Jews would hold good, that when a prophet mentions his own name, and the name of his father, he is a prophet, the ſon of a prophet, then Amittai was one; but this is not to be depended on. The Syriac verſion calls him the ſon of Mathai, or Matthew; tho' the Arabians have a notion, that Mathai is his mother's name; and obſerve that none are called after their mothers, but Jonas and Jeſus Chriſt: but the right name is Amittai, and ſignifies my truth; and to be ſons of truth is an agreeable character of the prophets and miniſters of the word, who ſhould be given to truth, poſſeſſed of it, and publiſh it: ſaying, as follows:

℣. 2. Ariſe, go to Nineveh that great city, &c.] That is, ariſe from the place where he was, and leave the buſineſs he was about, and prepare for a long journey to the place mentioned, and be as expeditious in it as poſſible. Nineveh was the metropolis of the Aſſyrian empire at this time; it was an ancient city, built by Aſhur, not by Nimrod; tho' he by ſome is ſaid to go into Aſhur or Aſſyria, and build it, Gen. x. 11. and called it after the name of his ſon Ninus; for it ſignifies the manſion or palace of Ninus; and by moſt profane writers is called Ninus; according to Diodorus Siculus[m], and Strabo[n], it was built by Ninus himſelf in Aſſyria, in that part of it called by him Adiabena. It is ſaid to be a great city, as it muſt, to be three days journey in compaſs, and to have in it ſix-ſcore thouſand infants, beſides men and women, ch. iii. 3. and iv. 11. It is allowed by Strabo[o] to be larger than Babylon. Diodorus[p] ſays, that it was in compaſs four hundred and fourſcore furlongs, which make ſixty miles; and had a wall an hundred feet high, and ſo broad, that three chariots or carriages might go abreaſt upon it; and it had fifteen hundred towers, two hundred feet high. Aben Ezra calls it the royal city of Aſſyria, which is at this day deſtroyed; and the wiſe men of Iſrael, in the country of Greece, ſay it is called Urtia; but whether ſo or no, he knew not: and cry againſt it; or propheſy againſt it, as the Targum; he was to lift up his voice, and cry aloud, as he paſſed along in it, that the inhabitants might hear him; and the more to affect them, and to ſhew that he was in earneſt, and what he delivered was intereſting to them, and of the greateſt moment and importance: what he was to cry, preach or publiſh, ſee ch. iii. 2, 4: for their wickedneſs is come up before me; it was come to a very great height; it reached to the heavens; it was not only ſeen and known by the Lord, as all things are; but the cry of it was come up to him; it called aloud for vengeance, for immediate vengeance; the meaſure of it being filled up, and the inhabitants ripe for deſtruction; it was committed openly and boldly, with much impudence, in the ſight of the Lord, as well as againſt him; and was no more to be ſuffered and connived at: it intends and includes their idolatry, bloodſhed, oppreſſion, rapine, fraud and lying; ſee ch. iii. 8. and Nahum iii. 1.

℣. 3. But Jonah roſe up to flee unto Tarſhiſh from the preſence of the Lord, &c.] He was not obedient to the heavenly viſion; he roſe up, but not to go to Nineveh, but to Tarſhiſh, the reverſe of it; to the ſea, as the Targum, the Mediterranean-ſea, which lay weſt, as Nineveh was to the eaſt. Tarſhiſh ſometimes is uſed for the ſea; ſee Pſ. xlviii. 7. he determined to go to ſea; he did not care where, or to what place he might find a ſhip bound; or to Tarſus in Cilicia, the birth-place of the apoſtle Paul, Acts xxii. 3. ſo Joſephus[q] and Saadiah Gaon; or to Tunis in Africa, as R. Melaſſer in Aben Ezra; or to Carthage, as Theodoret, and others; or Tarteſſus in Spain, as others. Among this difference of interpreters, it is hard to ſay what place it was: it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of Tarſus. The prophet had better knowledge of God, and of the perfections of his nature, than to imagine he could flee from his general preſence, which is every where, and from which there is no fleeing, Pſ. cxxxix. 7. but his view was to flee out of that land, where he granted his ſpecial preſence to his people; and from that place where were the ſymbols of his preſence, the ark, the mercy-ſeat and cherubim, and in which he ſtood, and miniſtred before the Lord; but now upon this order quitted his poſt, and deſerted his ſtation. The reaſons given of his conduct are various. The Jewiſh writers ſuppoſe, that he conſulted more the glory of Iſrael than the glory of God; that he was fearful, ſhould he do as he was bid, the word of the Lord would be carried from Judea into the Gentile world, and there remain; that he was of opinion that the heathens would repent of their ſins at his preaching, tho' Iſrael did not, which would turn to the reproach and condemnation of the latter; ſee Matt. xii. 41. and that he knew that the ſpirit of prophecy did not dwell upon any out of the land of Iſrael, and therefore got as faſt as he could out of it, that he might not be further urged with ſuch a meſſage; which notion is confuted by the inſtances of Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Daniel; to this ſenſe the Targum inclines, which adds, “leſt he ſhould pro-“pheſy in the name of the Lord:” but there is no need to ſeek for reaſons, and which are given by others; ſuch as going out of his own country into a foreign one; the length of the journey; the oppoſition and difficulties he might expect to meet with; and the riſque he ſhould run of his life, by propheſying in and againſt the metropolis of the Aſſyrian empire, where the king's court and palace were; and he not only an heathen, but a ſovereign and arbitrary prince; when the true reaſons are ſuggeſted by the prophet himſelf; as that he ſuppoſed the people would repent; he knew that God was gracious and merciful, and upon their repentance would not inflict the puniſhment pronounced; and he ſhould be reckoned a falſe prophet, ch. iv. 2: and went down to Joppa; a ſea-port town in the tribe of Dan, upon the Mediterranean-ſea, where was a haven of ſhips, formerly called Japho, Joſh. xix. 16. at this time Joppa, as it was in the times of the apoſtles: here Peter raiſed Dorcas to life, and from hence he was ſent for by Cornelius, Acts ix. 36. and x. 5. it is now called Jaffa; of which Monſieur Thevenot [r] ſays, "it is a town built upon the top of a rock, "whereof there remains no more at preſent but "ſome towers; and the port of it was at the "foot of the ſaid rock.—It is at preſent a place "of few inhabitants; and all that is to be ſeen "of it is a little caſtle with two towers, one round, "and another ſquare; and a great tower ſeparate "from it on one ſide. There are no houſes by "the ſea-ſide, but five grots cut in the rock, of "which the fourth is in a place of retreat for "chriſtians.—There is a harbour ſtill in the ſame "place where it was formerly, but there is ſo "little water in it, that none but ſmall barks can "enter." It was a very ancient city, ſaid [s] to be older than the flood; and built on a hill ſo high, that Strabo ſays [t] Jeruſalem might be ſeen from thence, which was forty miles from it. It had its name from Jope the daughter of Æolus, the wife of Cepheus, the founder of it [u]. Jonah went hither, either from Jeruſalem, or from Geth-hepher, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve: if from the former, it was forty miles to Joppa, as Jerom ſays; and if from the latter, it is ſuppoſed to be about fifty: a journey of this length muſt be ſome time in performing, which ſhews with what deliberation and reſolution he ſinned in diſobeying the divine command: and he found a ſhip going to Tarſhiſh; juſt ready to put to ſea, and bound for this place; providence ſeemed to favour him, and anſwer to his wiſhes; from whence it may be obſerved, that the goodneſs of an action, and its acceptableneſs to God, are not to be concluded from its wiſhed-for ſucceſs: ſo he paid the fare thereof; the freight of the ſhip; the whole of it, according to Jarchi; that haſte and a quicker diſpatch might be made, and no ſtay for paſſengers or goods; but that it might be put under ſail directly, and he be the ſooner out of the land; which, if true, would ſhew him to be a man of ſubſtance; and agrees with a notion of the Jews, and ſerves to illuſtrate and confirm it, that the ſpirit of prophecy does not dwell upon any but a rich man; for which reaſon the above interpreter catches at it; but Aben Ezra more truly obſerves, that he paid his part, what came to his ſhare, what was uſual to be paid for a paſſage to ſuch a place: and whereas it might be uſual then as now, not to pay till they were arrived at port, and went out of the ſhip; he paid his fare at entrance, to ſecure his paſſage, leſt thro' any pretence he ſhould not be took in upon ſailing; ſo determined was he to fly from God, and diſobey his orders: and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarſhiſh from the preſence of the Lord; having paid his fare, he entered the ſhip directly, leſt he ſhould be left behind; and went down into the cabin perhaps, to go along with the mariners and merchants, all heathens, to Tarſhiſh, whither they were bound, in order to be clear of any freſh order from the Lord, to go and propheſy againſt Nineveh: here again the Targum adds, "leſt he ſhould propheſy "in the name of the Lord."

℣. 4. But the Lord ſent out a great wind into the ſea, &c.] He took a wind out of his treaſures, and hurled it, as the word [w] ſignifies, into the ſea: into that ſea [x]; that part of it where the ſhip was Jonah was in. Winds are at the command of God, which he raiſes at his pleaſure, and fulfil his will, and are ſervants of his that obey his orders: this here was ſent in purſuit of Jonah to ſtop him in his voyage, when he thought he had got clear off, and was ſafe enough. The Jews ſay [y], this was done when he had been one day's voyage: and there was a great tempeſt in the ſea; which cauſed the waves to riſe and roar, and become very tumultuous: this wind was an extraordinary one, like that lælaps or ſtorm of wind which came down into the ſea when the diſciples of Chriſt were on it in a ſhip; or like the euro-clydon, in which the apoſtle Paul was: ſo that the ſhip was like to be broken; it was in danger of it; it ſeemed as if it would, the waves of the ſea were ſo ſtrong, and beat ſo hard upon it. It is in the original text, the ſhip thought it ſhould be broken [z]; that is, the men in it; they that had the management of it, thought nothing leſs but that it would be daſhed to pieces, and all their goods and lives loſt; ſo great was the hurricane occaſioned by the wind the Lord ſent. It may be rendered, that ſhip [a] was like, &c. The Jews [b] have a notion, that other ſhips paſſed to and fro in great tranquillity, and this only was in diſtreſs.

℣. 5. Then the mariners were afraid, &c.] Perceiving that the ſtorm was not an ordinary, but a preternatural one; and that the ſhip and all in it were in extreme danger, and no probability of being ſaved. This ſhews that the ſtorm muſt be very violent, to frighten ſuch men who were uſed to the ſea, and to ſtorms, and were naturally bold and intrepid. The word uſed ſignifies ſalters, ſo called from the ſalt ſea they uſed, as they are by us mariners, from mare the ſea; tho' R. Japhet in Aben Ezra thinks the commodity they carried in their veſſel was ſalt: and cried every man to his god; to help them, and ſave them out of their diſtreſs. In the ſhip it ſeems were men of different nations, and who worſhipped different gods. It was a notion of the Jews, and which Jarchi mentions as his own, that there were men of the ſeventy nations of the earth in it; and as each of them had a different god, they ſeparately called upon them. The polytheiſm of the pagans is to be condemned, and ſhews the great uncertainty of their religion; yet this appears to be agreeable to the light of nature that there is a God, and that God is to be prayed unto, and called upon, eſpecially in time of trouble: and caſt forth the wares that were in the ſhip into the ſea, to lighten it of them; or, the veſſels, veſſels [c], a word the Hebrews uſe for all ſorts of goods, utenſils, &c. it includes with others, their military weapons they had to defend themſelves, their proviſions, the ſhip's ſtores or goods it was freighted with; finding their prayers to their gods were ineffectual, they betook themſelves to this prudential method to lighten the ſhip, that they might be able to keep its head above water. So the Targum, "when they ſaw there was no "profit in them;" that is, in the gods they called upon, then they did this; the other was a matter of religion, this a point of prudence; ſuch a ſtep the mariners took that belonged to the ſhip in which the apoſtle Paul was, Acts xxvii. 18, 19, 38: but Jonah was gone down into the ſides of the ſhip; into one of its ſides, into a cabin there; the loweſt ſide, as the Targum: and he lay, and was faſt aſleep; even ſnored, as ſome verſions have it: it may ſeem ſtrange he ſhould, when the wind was ſo ſtrong and boiſterous; the ſea roaring; the waves beating; the ſhip rolling about; the mariners hurrying from place to place, and calling to each other to do their duty; and the paſſengers crying; and above all, that he ſhould fall into ſo ſound a ſleep, and continue in it, when he had ſuch a guilty conſcience. This ſhews that he was aſleep in a ſpiritual, as well as in a corporal ſenſe.

℣. 6. So the ſhip-maſter came to him, &c.] The maſter of the veſſel, who had the command of it; or the governor of it, as Jarchi; tho' Joſephus [d] diſtinguiſhes between the governor and the ſhip-maſter: the maſter of the ropers [e], as it may be rendered; of the ſailors, whoſe buſineſs it was to draw the ropes, to looſe or gather the ſails, at his command: miſſing him very probably, he ſought after him, and found him in the hold, in the bottom of the ſhip, on one ſide of it faſt aſleep: and ſaid unto him, what meaneſt thou, O ſleeper? this is not a time to ſleep, when the ſhip is like to be broke to pieces, all lives loſt, and thine own too: thus the prophet, who was ſent to rebuke the greateſt monarch in the world, is himſelf rebuked by a ſhip-maſter, and an heathen man. Such an expoſtulation as this is proper enough to be uſed with profeſſors of religion that are gotten in a ſpiritual ſenſe into a ſleepy and drowſy frame of ſpirit; it being an aggravation of it, eſpecially when the nation they are of, the church of Chriſt they belong to, and their own perſons alſo, are in danger; ſee Rom. xiii. 11. Eph. v. 14: ariſe, call upon thy God; the gods of this ſhip-maſter and his men were inſufficient to help them; they had ears, but they heard not; nor could they anſwer them, or relieve them; he is therefore deſirous the prophet would pray to his God, tho' he was unknown to him; or at leaſt it ſuggeſts, that it would better become him to awake, and be up, and praying to his God, than to lie ſleeping there; and the manner in which the words are expreſſed, without a copulative, ſhew the hurry of his ſpirit, the ardour of his mind, and the haſte he was in to have that done he adviſes to: every good man has a God to pray unto, a covenant-God and Father, and who is a prayer-hearing God; is able to help in time of need, and willing to do it; and it is the duty and intereſt of ſuch to call upon him in a time of trouble, yea they ſhould ariſe and ſtir up themſelves to this ſervice; and it may be obſerved, that the beſt of men may ſometimes be in ſuch a condition and circumſtances, as to need to be ſtirred up to it by others; ſee Luke xxii. 46: if ſo be that God will think upon us, that we periſh not; the ſupreme God; for the gods they had prayed to, they looked upon as mediators with the true God they knew not. The ſhip-maſter ſaw, that to all human probability they were all loſt men, juſt ready to periſh; that if they were ſaved, as who knew but they might upon Jonah's praying to his God; it muſt be owing to the kind thoughts of God towards them; to the ſerenity of his countenance, and gracious acceptance of prayer, and his being propitious and merciful thro' that means; all which ſeems to be the import of the word uſed: ſo the ſaving of ſinners in a loſt and periſhing condition, in which all men are, tho' all are not ſenſible of it, is owing to God's thoughts of peace, to his good will, free favour, and rich grace in Chriſt Jeſus, and thro' him, as the propitiatory ſacrifice. The Targum is, "if ſo be, mercy may be granted from the "Lord, and we periſh not."

℣. 7. And they ſaid every one to his fellow, &c.] That Jonah awoke, and roſe up, upon the ſhip-maſter's calling to him, is certain; but whether or no he called upon his God, is not; perhaps he did: and when his prayer was over, and the ſtorm ſtill continuing, the ſailors ſaid one to another, come, and let us caſt lots, that we may know for whoſe cauſe this evil is upon us; for obſerving ſomething very uncommon and extraordinary in the tempeſt, and all means, both natural and religious, failing to help them; and tho' they might know that they were every one of them ſinners, yet they ſuppoſed there muſt be ſome one notorious ſinner among them, that had committed ſome very enormous crime, which had drawn the divine reſentment upon them to ſuch a degree; and therefore they propoſed to caſt a lot, which was an appeal to the divine being, in order to find out the guilty perſon. That the heathens uſed the lot upon occaſion, is not only manifeſt from profane writers, but from the ſacred ſcriptures; as Haman, and other enemies of God's people; and the ſoldiers that attended the croſs of Chriſt, Eſth. ix. 24. Joel iii. 3. Obad. ℣. 11. Nah. iii. 10. Matt. xxvii. 35. Druſius reports from Xavierus, of ſome heathens ſailing to Japan, and other places in the Eaſt Indies, that they uſed to carry an idol with them, and by lots enquire of it whither they ſhould go; and whether they ſhould have proſperous winds, &c. ſo they caſt lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah; thro' the over-ruling providence and diſpoſing hand of God, which attended this affair; for not to enquire whether the uſe of the lot was lawful or no; or whether performed in that ſerious and ſolemn manner as it ſhould be, if uſed at all; it pleaſed God to interfere in this matter, to direct it to fall on Jonah, with whom he had a particular concern, being a prophet of his, and having diſobeyed his will; ſee Prov. xvi. 33. The Syriac verſion renders it, the lot of Jonah came up; that is, the piece of paper, or whatever it was, on which his name was written, was taken up firſt out of the veſſel in which the lots were put.

℣. 8. Then they ſaid unto him, tell us, we pray thee, &c.] They did not fall upon him at once in an outrageous manner, and throw him overboard; as it might be thought ſuch men would have done, conſidering what they had ſuffered and loſt by means of him; but they uſe him with great reſpect, tenderneſs and lenity: and intreat him to tell them, for whoſe cauſe this evil was upon them; or rather, as the Targum, "for what this "evil is upon us;" and ſo Noldius[f] renders the words; for their enquiry was not about the perſon for whoſe cauſe it was, that was determined by the lot; but on what account it was; what ſin it was he had been guilty of, which was the cauſe of it; for they ſuppoſed ſome great ſin muſt be committed, that had brought down the vengeance of God in ſuch a manner: what is thine occupation? trade or buſineſs? this queſtion they put, to know whether he had any, or was an idle man; or rather, whether it was an honeſt and lawful employment; whether it was by fraud or violence, by thieving and ſtealing he got his livelihood; or by conjuring, and uſing the magic art: or elſe the enquiry was about his preſent buſineſs, what he was going about; what he was to do at Tarſhiſh when he came there; whether he was not upon ſome ill deſign, and ſent on an unlawful errand, and going to do ſome ill thing, for which vengeance purſued him, and ſtopped him: and whence comeſt thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou? which queſtions ſeem to relate to the ſame thing, what nation he was of; and put by different perſons, who were eager to learn what countryman he was, that they might know who was the god he worſhipped, and gueſs at the crime he had been guilty of.

℣. 9. And he ſaid unto them, I am an Hebrew, &c.] He does not ſay a Jew, as the Targum wrongly renders it; for that would have been falſe, ſince he was of the tribe of Zebulun, which was in the kingdom of Iſrael, and not of Judah; nor does he ſay an Iſraelite, leſt he ſhould be thought to be in the idolatry of that people; but an Hebrew, which was common to both; and beſides, it not only declared what nation he was of, but what religion he profeſſed, and who was his God: and I fear the Lord, the God of heaven, which hath made the ſea, and the dry land; this anſwers to the other queſtion, what was his occupation or buſineſs? he was one that feared the Lord, that ſerved and worſhipped him; a prophet of the great God, as Joſephus[g] expreſſes it, and ſo Kimchi; the mighty Jehovah that made the heavens, and dwells in them; and from whence that ſtorm of wind came, which had ſo much diſtreſſed the ſhip, and ſtill continued; and who made the ſea, which was now ſo boiſterous and raging, and threatened them with ruin; and the dry land, where they would be glad to have been at that inſtant. By this deſcription of God, as the prophet deſigned to ſet him forth in his nature and works, ſo to diſtinguiſh him from the gods of heathens, who had only particular parts of the univerſe aſſigned to them, when his Jehovah was Lord of all; but where was the prophet's fear and reverence of God, when he fled from him, and diſobeyed him? it was not loſt, tho' not in exerciſe.

℣. 10. Then were the men exceedingly afraid, &c.] When they found he was an Hebrew, and that it was the God of the Hebrews that was angry; of whom they had heard much, and what great and wonderful things had been done by him, and now had an experience of his power and providence, and that it was for fleeing from his preſence that all this was; and therefore, ſince they had been guilty of greater ſins than this, as they might imagine, what would be done to them? and particularly it might fill them with dread and terror, when they heard of the deſtruction of Nineveh, the prophet was ſent to denounce; of which no doubt he told them, and they might from hence conclude it would certainly be: and ſaid unto him, why haſt thou done this? they wonder he ſhould act ſuch a fooliſh part as to flee from ſuch a God he had deſcribed to them, who was Lord of heaven, earth and ſea; and therefore could meet with him, and ſeize him be he where he would; and they reprove him for it, and the rather as it had involved them in ſo much diſtreſs and danger: for the men knew that he had fled from the preſence of the Lord, becauſe he had told them; not when he firſt entered into the ſhip, but now, tho' not before mentioned; for no doubt Jonah told the whole ſtory at length, tho' the whole is not recorded; how that he was ſent by the Lord with a meſſage to Nineveh, to denounce deſtruction to it; and that he refuſed to go, and fled from his face; and this was the true reaſon of the ſtorm.

℣. 11. Then ſaid they unto him, what ſhall we do unto thee, &c.] Tho' both by the lot, and his own confeſſion, they knew he was the guilty perſon, for whoſe ſake this ſtorm was; yet were unwilling to do any thing to him without his will and conſent, his counſel and advice; perceiving that he was a prophet of the God of the Hebrews, whom he had offended, and knew the mind and will of his God, and the nature of his offence againſt him, and what only would appeaſe him, they deſire him to tell what they ought to do; fearing, that tho' they had found out the man, they ſhould make a miſtake in their manner of dealing with him, and ſo continue the diſtreſs they were in, or increaſe it; their great concern being to be rid of the ſtorm: that the ſea may be calm unto us? or ſilent[h]? for the waves thereof made a hideous roaring, and lifted up themſelves ſo high, as was terrible to behold; and daſhed with ſuch vehemence againſt the ſhip, as threatened it every moment with deſtruction: (for the ſea wrought, and was tempeſtuous;) or, it went and ſwelled[i]; it was agitated to and fro, and was in a great ferment, and grew more and more ſtormy and tempeſtuous. Jonah's confeſſion of his ſin, and true repentance for it, were not ſufficient; more muſt be done to appeaſe an angry God; and what that was, the ſailors deſired to know. Theſe words are inſerted in a parentheſis with us, as if put by the writer of the book, pointing out the reaſon of the mens requeſt; but according to Kimchi, they are their own words, giving a reaſon why they were ſo preſſing upon him to know what they ſhould do with him, ſeeing the ſea was going and ſtormy[k]; or more and more ſtormy; which ſeems right.

℣. 12. And he ſaid unto them, take me up, and caſt me forth into the ſea, &c.] This he ſaid, not as chuſing rather to die than to go to Nineveh; or as having over-heard the men ſay, that they would caſt him into the ſea, as Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, greatly to the prejudice of the prophet's character; but as being truly ſenſible of his ſin, and that he righteouſly deſerved to die ſuch a death; and in love to the lives of innocent men, that they might be ſaved, and not periſh, thro' his default; and as a prophet knowing this to be the mind and will of God, he chearfully and in faith ſubmits to it, with a preſence of mind and courage ſuitable to his character. It was not fit he ſhould leap into the ſea and deſtroy himſelf; but that he ſhould die by the hand of juſtice, of which the ſhip-maſter and the ſhip's crew were the proper executioners: ſo ſhall the ſea be calm unto you; or ſilent, as before; it will ceaſe from its roaring, and do no further hurt and damage: for I know that for my ſake this great tempeſt is upon you; for the ſin he had committed in fleeing from God, this ſtorm was raiſed and continued; nor could it go off till they had done what he had directed them to; there was no other way of being clear of it. In this Jonah was a type of Chriſt, who willingly gave himſelf to ſuffer and die, that he might appeaſe divine wrath, ſatisfy juſtice, and ſave men; only with this difference, Jonah ſuffered for his own ſins, Chriſt for the ſins of others; Jonah to lay a ſtorm he himſelf had raiſed by his ſins, Chriſt to lay a ſtorm others had raiſed by their ſins.

℣. 13. Nevertheleſs, the men rowed hard to bring it to the land, but they could not, &c.] Or, they digged [l]; that is, the waters of the ſea with their oars; not by caſting anchor, as Abendana; they uſed all their ſkill, and exerted all their ſtrength; they laboured with all their might and main, as a man digs in a pit; they plowed the ocean, and furrowed the ſea, as the Latins ſpeak, but all in vain; they rowed againſt wind and tide; God, his purpoſes and providence were againſt them; and it was not poſſible for them to make land, and get the ſhip aſhore, which they were deſirous of, to ſave the life of Jonah, as well as their own; for ſeeing him penitent, they had compaſſion on him; his character and profeſſion as a prophet; the gravity of the man; the ſedateneſs of his countenance; his openneſs of mind, and his willingneſs to die, wrought greatly upon the men, that they would fain have ſaved him if they could; and perhaps being heathens, and not knowing thoroughly the nature of his offence, might think he did not deſerve to die; but all their endeavours to ſave him were to no purpoſe: for the ſea wrought, and was tempeſtuous againſt them; it grew more and more ſo; the ſtorm beat right againſt them, and drove them back faſter than they came; ſo that it was impoſſible to ſtand againſt it.

℣. 14. Wherefore they cried unto the Lord, &c.] Not unto their gods, but unto the true Jehovah, the God of Jonah, and of the Hebrews; whom they now, by this providence, and Jonah's diſcourſe, had ſome convictions and knowledge of, as the true God; and therefore direct their prayer to him, before they caſt the prophet into the ſea: and ſaid, we beſeech thee, O Lord, we beſeech thee; which repetition ſhews the ardour, vehemence and earneſtneſs of their minds in prayer: let us not periſh for this man's life; they were in the utmoſt perplexity of mind, not knowing well what to do; they ſaw they muſt periſh by the ſtorm, if they ſaved his life; and they were afraid they ſhould periſh, if they took it away; and which yet they were obliged to do; and therefore had no other way left but to pray to the Lord they might not periſh for it; or it be reckoned as their crime, and imputed to them, as follows: and lay not upon us innocent blood; for ſo it was to them; he had done no hurt to them ſince he had been with them, except in being the cauſe of the ſtorm, whereby they had ſuffered the loſs of their goods; however, had not been guilty of any thing worthy of death as they could obſerve; and as for his offence againſt God, they were not ſufficient judges of, and muſt leave it with him: the light of nature teaches men to be tender of the lives of fellow-creatures, and to avoid ſhedding of innocent blood: for thou, O Lord, haſt done as it pleaſed thee; it appeared to them to be the will of God, that he ſhould be caſt into the ſea; from the ſtorm that was raiſed on his account; from the determination of the lot; from the confeſſion of Jonah, and his declaration of the will of God in this matter, as a prophet of his: they did not pretend to account for it; it was a ſecret to them, why it ſhould be; but it was no other than what he would have done; and therefore they hoped no blame would be laid on them.

℣. 15. So they took up Jonah, and caſt him forth into the ſea, &c.] They took him out of the hold or cabin where he was, and brought him upon deck; they took him, not againſt his will, but with his full conſent, and according to the direction and advice he gave them: they, for there were more than one employed in this affair; one or more very probably took him by the legs, and others put their hands under his arm-holes, and ſo threw him into the ſea: and the ſea ceaſed from her raging; immediately, and became a calm; and the wind alſo ceaſed from blowing, which is ſuppoſed; the end being anſwered by the ſtorm, and the perſon found and obtained what was ſought after by it; it was ſtill and quiet. The ſtory the Jews [m] tell of his being let down into the ſea to his knees, upon which the ſea was calm, but became raging again upon his being taken up; and ſo at the ſecond time, to his navel; and the third time to his neck, is all fabulous; but he being wholly thrown in, it raged no more.

℣. 16. Then the men feared the Lord exceedingly, &c.] This was not a natural fear, as before, but a religious one; and not a ſervile fear, or a fear of puniſhment, but a reverential godly fear; for they feared him, not only becauſe they ſaw his power in raiſing and ſtilling the tempeſt, but his goodneſs to them in ſaving them: and offered a ſacrifice unto the Lord; a ſpiritual ſacrifice; the ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving for a ſafe deliverance from the ſtorm; for other ſort of ſacrifice they ſeemed not to have materials for; ſince they had thrown over-board what they had in the ſhip to lighten it, unleſs there might be any thing left fit for this purpoſe; but rather, if it is to be underſtood of a ceremonial ſacrifice, it was offered when they went out of the ſhip, according to the gloſs of Aben Ezra; or they ſolemnly declared they would, as ſoon as they came to land; to which ſenſe is the Targum, "and they ſaid they would "offer a ſacrifice:" and agreeable to this the words may be rendered, with what follows, thus, and offered a ſacrifice unto the Lord, that is, they made vows; they vowed that they would offer a ſacrifice [n], when arrived in their own country, or ſhould return to Judea, and come to Jeruſalem. So the Hebrew

Hebrew ו Vau is often uſed [o], as exegetical and explanative; tho' many interpreters underſtand the vows as diſtinct from the ſacrifice; and that they vowed that the God of the Hebrews ſhould be their God, and that they would for the future ſerve and worſhip him only; that they would become proſelytes, as Jarchi; or give alms to the poor, as Kimchi; as an evidence of their ſenſe of gratitude to God, the author of their mercies. If theſe men were truly converted, as it ſeems as if they were, they were great gainers by this providence; for tho' they loſt their worldly goods, they found what was infinitely better, God to be their God and portion, and all ſpiritual good things with him; and it may be obſerved of the wiſe and wonderful providence of God, that tho' Jonah refuſed to go and preach to the Gentiles at Nineveh, for which he was corrected; yet God made this diſpenſation a means of converting other Gentiles.

℣. 17. Now the Lord had prepared a great fiſh to ſwallow up Jonah, &c.] Not from the creation of the world, as ſay the Jews [p]; for this is to be underſtood, not of the formation or making of it; but of the ordering and diſpoſition of it by the providence of God to be near the ſhip, and its mouth open to receive Jonah, as ſoon as he was caſt forth from thence: and a great one it muſt be, to take him at once into its mouth, and ſwallow him down its throat, and retain him whole in its belly; and ſuch great fiſhes there are in the ſea, particularly the carcharias or dog-fiſh; the ſame with Triton's dog, ſaid to ſwallow Hercules, in which he was three days; and which fable perhaps took its riſe from hence. In Matt. xii. 40. it is ſaid to be a whale; but then that muſt be underſtood, not as the proper name of a fiſh, but as common to all great fiſhes; otherwiſe the whale, properly ſo called, it is ſaid, has not a ſwallow large enough to take down a man; tho' ſome deny this, and aſſert they are capable of it. Of the balæna, which is one kind of whale, it is reported [q], that when it apprehends its young ones in danger, will take them, and hide them within itſelf; and then afterwards throw them out again; and certain it is, that the whale is a very great fiſh, if not the greateſt. Pliny [r] ſpeaks of whales ſix hundred feet long, and three hundred and ſixty broad; and of the bones of a fiſh, which were brought to Rome from Joppa, and there ſhewn as a miracle, which were forty feet long; and ſaid to be the bones of the monſtrous fiſh to which Andromede at Joppa was expoſed [s]; which ſtory ſeems to be hammered out of this hiſtory of Jonah; and the ſame is reported by Solinus [t]; however, it is out of doubt that there are fiſhes capable of ſwallowing a man. Nierembergius [u] ſpeaks of a fiſh taken near Valencia in Spain, ſo large that a man on horſeback could ſtand in its mouth; the cavity of the brain held ſeven men; its jaw-bones, which were kept in the eſcurial, were ſeventeen feet long; and two carcaſes were found in its ſtomach: he ſays it was called piſcis mularis; but ſome learned men took it to be the dog-fiſh before-mentioned; and ſuch a large devouring creature is the ſhark, of which the preſent biſhop of Bergen [w], and others interpret this fiſh here; in which ſometimes has been found the body of a man, and even of a man in armour, as many writers [x] have obſerved. Some [y] think it was a crocodile, which, tho' a river-fiſh, yet, for the moſt part is at the entrance of rivers, and ſometimes goes into the ſea many miles, and is capable of ſwallowing a man; ſome are above thirty feet long; and in the belly of one of them, in the Indies, was found a woman with all her cloaths on [z]: and Jonah was in the belly of the fiſh three days and three nights; that is, one whole natural day, conſiſting of twenty-four hours, and part of two others; the Jews having no other way of expreſſing a natural day, but by day and night; and to this the antitype anſwers; namely, our Lord's being ſo long in the grave; of whoſe death, burial and reſurrection this was a type, as appears from Matt. xii. 40. for which reaſon Jonah was ſo miraculouſly preſerved; and a miracle it was, that he ſhould not in this time be digeſted in the ſtomach of the creature; that he was not ſuffocated in it, but breathed and lived; and that he was able to bear the ſtench of the creature's maw; and that he ſhould have his ſenſes, and be in ſuch a frame of mind, as both to pray and praiſe; but what is it that the power of God cannot do? Here ſome begin the ſecond chapter, and not amiſs.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains the prayer of Jonah, when in the fiſhes belly; the time when he prayed, the perſon he prayed unto; and the place where, are ſuggeſted in ℣. 1. and the latter deſcribed as a place of great ſtraitneſs and diſtreſs, and even as hell itſelf, ℣. 2. The condition he was in, when caſt into the ſea, and when in the belly of the fiſh, which is obſerved, the more to heighten the greatneſs of the deliverance, ℣. 3, 5, 6. The different frame of mind he was in, ſometimes almoſt in deſpair, and ready to faint; and preſently exerciſing faith and hope, remembring the goodneſs of the Lord, and reſolving to look again to him, ℣. 4, 7. The gracious regards of God to him, in receiving, hearing, and anſwering his prayer, and bringing up his life from corruption, ℣. 2, 6, 7. His reſolution, let others do what they would, to praiſe the Lord, and give him the glory of his ſalvation, ℣. 8, 9. and the chapter is concluded with the order for his deliverance, and the manner of it, ℣. 10.

℣. 1. Then Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God, out of the fiſhes belly.] Tho' Jonah had been a praying man, being a good man, and a prophet of the Lord; yet it ſeems he had not prayed for ſome time; being diſobedient to the will of God, he reſtrained prayer before him; all the while he was going to Joppa he prayed not; and how indeed could he have the face to pray to him, from whoſe face he was fleeing? and as ſoon as he was in the ſhip he fell aſleep, and there lay till he was waked by the ſhip-maſter, who called upon him to ariſe, and pray to his God; but whether he did or no, is not ſaid; and tho' it is very probable he might, when convicted of his ſin, and before he was caſt into the ſea, and as he was caſting into it, it is not recorded; but when he was in the fiſhes belly, then he prayed; where it is marvellous he ſhould, or could; it was ſtrange he ſhould be able to breathe, and more ſtrange to breathe ſpiritually; it was very wonderful he ſhould have the exerciſe of his reaſon, and more that he ſhould have the exerciſe of grace, as faith and hope, as it appears by the following prayer he had. Prayer may be performed any where, on a mountain, in a deſert, in the caves and dens of the earth, and in a priſon, as it has been; but this is the only time it ever was performed in ſuch a place. Jonah is the only man that ever prayed in a fiſhes belly: and he prayed unto the Lord as his God, not merely by creation, and as the God of nature and providence, the God of his life, and of his mercies; but as his covenant-God and Father; for tho' he had ſinned againſt the Lord, and had been ſorely chaſtized by him, yet he did not take his loving-kindneſs from him, nor ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail, or break his covenant with him; covenant-intereſt and relation ſtill continued; and Jonah had knowledge of it, and faith in it; and as this is an argument the Lord makes uſe of to engage backſliders to return unto him, it is a great encouragement to them ſo to do, Jer. iii. 14, 22. In this Jonah was a type of Chriſt, who, amidſt his agonies, ſorrows and ſufferings, prayed to his Father, and claimed his intereſt in him as his God, Heb. v. 7. Matt. xxvii. 46. What follows contains the ſum and ſubſtance of the prophet's thoughts, and the ejaculations of his mind when in the fiſhes belly; but were not put up in this form, but were reduced by him into it after he was delivered; as many of David's pſalms were put into the form and order they are after his deliverance from troubles, ſuitable to his thoughts of things when he was in them; and indeed the following account is an hiſtorical narration of facts, which were before and after his prayer, as well as of that itſelf.

℣. 2. And ſaid, &c.] Not unto the Lord in prayer, but to others, to whom he communicated what paſſed between God and him in this time of diſtreſs; how he prayed to him, and was heard by him; what a condition he had been in, and how he was delivered out of it; what was his frame of mind whilſt in it, ſometimes deſpairing, and ſometimes hoping; and how thankful he was for this ſalvation, and was determined to praiſe the Lord for it: I cried by reaſon of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me; or, out of my ſtrait [a]; being ſtraitened in his body, and as it were in a priſon in the fiſhes belly; and ſtraitened in his ſoul, being between hope and deſpair, and under the apprehenſions of the divine diſpleaſure. A time of affliction is a time for prayer; it brings thoſe to it, that have diſuſed it; it made Jonah cry to his God, if not with a loud voice, yet inwardly; and his cry was powerful and piercing, it reached the heavens, and entered into the ears of the Lord of hoſts, tho' out of the depths, and out of the belly of a fiſh, in the midſt of the ſea: out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardeſt my voice; or, out of the belly of the grave [b]; out of the midſt of it; that is, out of the belly of the fiſh, which was as a grave to him, as Jarchi obſerves; where he lay as out of the land of the living, as one dead, and being given up for dead: and it may alſo reſpect the frame of his mind, the horror and terror he was in, ariſing from a ſenſe of his ſins, and the apprehenſions he had of the wrath of God, which were as an hell in his conſcience; and amidſt all this he cried to God, and he heard him; and not only delivered him from the fiſhes belly, but from thoſe dreadful apprehenſions he had of his ſtate and condition; and ſpoke peace and pardon to him. This is a proof that this prayer or thankſgiving, be it called which it will, was compoſed, as to the form and order of it, after his deliverance; and theſe words are an appeal to God for the truth of what he had ſaid in the preceding clauſe, and not a repetition of it in prayer; or expreſſing the ſame thing in different words.

℣. 3. For thou hadſt caſt me into the deep, in the midſt of the ſeas, &c.] Tho' the mariners did this, yet Jonah aſcribes it to the Lord; he knew it was he, whom he had ſinned againſt and offended; that he was he that ſent the ſtorm after him into the ſea; that determined the lot to fall upon him; that it was not only by his permiſſion, but according to his will that he ſhould be caſt into it, and overcame the reluctance of the men to it, and ſo worked upon them that they did it; and therefore Jonah imputes it to him, and not to them; nor does he complain of it, or murmur at it; or cenſure it as an unrighteous action, or as hard, cruel and ſevere; but rather mentions it, to ſet off the greatneſs of his deliverance: and by this it appears, that it was far from ſhore when Jonah was caſt into the ſea, it was the great deep; and which alſo is confirmed by the large fiſh which ſwallowed him, which could not ſwim but in deep waters; and becauſe of the multitude of the waters, called ſeas, and in the heart [c] of them, as it may be rendered; and agreeably Chriſt the antitype of Jonah lay in the heart of the earth, Matt. xii. 40: and the floods compaſſed me about: all thy billows and thy waves paſſed over me; which was his caſe as ſoon as caſt into the ſea, before the fiſh had ſwallowed him, as well as after: this was literally true of Jonah, what David ſays figuratively concerning his afflictions, and from whom the prophet ſeems to borrow the expreſſions, Pſ. xlii. 7. and indeed he might uſe them alſo in a metaphorical ſenſe, with a view to the afflictions of body, and ſorrows of death, that compaſſed him; and to the billows and waves of divine wrath, which in his apprehenſion lay upon him, and rolled over him.

℣. 4. Then I ſaid, I am caſt out of thy ſight, &c.] Or, from before thine eyes [d]; the Targum, from before thy word; as David alſo ſaid in his diſtreſs, Pſ. xxxi. 22. not but that he knew he was in the reach, and under the eye of his omniſcience, which ſaw him in the fiſhes belly, in the depths of the ſea, for nothing can hide from that; but he thought he was no longer under the eye of his providence; and that he would no more care for him, but leave him in this forlorn condition, and not deliver him; and eſpecially he concluded, that he would no more look upon him with an eye of love, grace, and mercy, pity and compaſſion: theſe are the words of one in deſpair, or near unto it; and yet a beam of light, a ray of hope, breaks in, and a holy reſolution is formed, as follows: yet I will look again toward thy holy temple; not the temple at Jeruſalem, towards which men uſed to look when they prayed, being at a diſtance from it, 1 Kings viii. 29. tho' there may be an alluſion to ſuch a practice; for it can hardly be thought that Jonah, in the fiſh's belly, could tell which way the temple ſtood, and look towards that; but he looked upwards and heaven-wards, he looked up to God in his holy temple in heaven; and tho' he was afraid he would not look down upon him in a way of grace and mercy, he was reſolved to look up to God in the way of prayer and ſupplication; and particularly, for the further encouragement of his faith and hope, he looked to the Meſſiah, the antitype of the temple, ark, and mercy-ſeat, and for whoſe ſake he might hope his prayers would be heard and anſwered.

℣. 5. The waters compaſſed me about, even to the ſoul, &c.] Either when he was firſt caſt into the ſea, which almoſt ſuffocated him, and juſt ready to take away his life, could not breathe for them, as is the caſe of a man drowning; or theſe were the waters the fiſh drew into its belly, in ſuch large quantities, that they compaſſed him about, even to the endangering of his life there. So the Targum, "the waters ſurrounded me unto death." In this Jonah was a type of Chriſt in his afflictions and ſorrows, which were ſo many and heavy, that he is ſaid to be exceeding ſorrowful, or ſurrounded with ſorrow, even unto death, Matt. xxvi. 38. ſee alſo Pſ. lxix. 1. The depth cloſed me round about; the great deep, the waters of the ſea, both when he fell into it, and while in the belly of the fiſh: thus alſo Chriſt, his antitype, came into deep waters, where there was no ſtanding, and where floods of ſin, and of ungodly men, and of divine wrath, overflowed him; ſee Pſ. xviii. 4, 5. and lxix. 2. The weeds were wrapt about my head; the ſea-weeds, of which there are great quantities in it, which grow at the bottom of it, to which Jonah came, and from whence he roſe up again, before ſwallowed by the fiſh; or theſe weeds were drawn into the belly of the fiſh, along with the water which it took in, and were wrapt about the head of the prophet as he lay there; or the fiſh went down with him into the bottom of the ſea, and lay among thoſe weeds; and ſo they may be ſaid to be wrapt about him, he being there, as follows. The Targum is, "the ſea of Suph being over my head;" the ſame with the Red-ſea, which is ſo called, Pſ. cvi. 9. and elſewhere, and that from the weeds that were in it: and R. Japhet, as Aben Ezra obſerves, ſays, the ſea of Suph is mixt with the ſea of Joppa; that is, as a learned man [e] obſerves, by means of the river Rhinocorura, thro' which the lake of Sirbon mingles with the great ſea; and which lake itſelf is ſo called from the weeds in it; yea, was anciently called Suph, and the ſea of Suph, or mare Scirpeum, hence Sirbon: and the ſame writer thinks, that the father of Andromede, ſaid to be devoured by a whale about Joppa, had his name of Cepheus from hence.

℣. 6. I went down to the bottom of the mountains, &c.] Which are in the midſt of the ſea, whither the fiſh carried him, and where the waters are deep; or the bottom of rocks and promontories on the ſhore of the ſea; and ſuch vaſt rocks hanging over the ſea, whoſe bottoms were in it, it ſeems are on the ſhore of Joppa, near to which Jonah was caſt into the ſea, as Egeſippus [f] relates: the earth with her bars were about me for ever; that is, the earth with its cliffs and rocks on the ſea ſhore, which are as bars to the ſea, that it cannot overflow it; theſe were ſuch bars to Jonah, that could he have got clear of the fiſh's belly, and attempted to ſwim to ſhore, he could never get to it, or over theſe bars, the rocks and cliffs, which were ſo ſteep and high: yet haſt thou brought up my life from corruption, O Lord my God; notwithſtanding theſe difficulties, which were inſuperable by human power, and theſe ſeeming impoſſibilities of deliverance; yet the Lord brought him out of the fiſh's belly, as out of a grave, the pit of corruption, and where he muſt otherwiſe have lain and rotted, and freed his ſoul from thoſe terrors, which would have deſtroyed him; and by this alſo we learn, that this form of words was compoſed after he came to dry land: herein likewiſe he was a type of Chriſt, who, tho' laid in the grave, was not left there ſo long as to ſee corruption, Pſ. xvi. 10.

℣. 7. When my ſoul fainted within me, &c.] Covered with grief; overwhelmed with ſorrow; ready to faint and ſink at the ſight of his ſins; and under a ſenſe of the wrath and diſpleaſure of God, and being forſaken by him: I remembred the Lord; his covenant and promiſes, his former mercies and loving-kindneſs, the gracious experiences he had had of theſe in times paſt; he remembred he was a God gracious and merciful, and ready to forgive, healed the backſlidings of his people, and ſtill loved them freely, and tenderly received and embraced them, when they returned to him: and my prayer came in unto thee, into thine holy temple; into heaven itſelf, the habitation of God's holineſs, the temple where he dwells, and is worſhipped by holy angels and glorified ſaints; the prayer the prophet put up in the fiſh's belly, encouraged to it by remembring the mercy and goodneſs of God, aſcended from thence, and reached the ears of the Lord of hoſts in the higheſt heavens, and met with a kind reception, and had a gracious anſwer; ſee Pſ. iii. 4. and xxii. 6.

℣. 8. They that obſerve lying vanities, forſake their own mercy, &c.] They that worſhip idols, who are nothing, mere vanity and lies, and deceive thoſe that ſerve them, theſe forſake the God of their lives, and of their mercies; and ſo do all ſuch who ſerve divers luſts and pleaſures, and purſue the vanities of this life; and alſo thoſe who follow the dictates of carnal ſenſe and reaſon, to the neglect of the will of God, and obedience to his commands; which was Jonah's caſe, and is, I think, chiefly intended. The Targum, Syriac verſion, and ſo Jarchi, and moſt interpreters, underſtand it of worſhippers of idols in general; and Kimchi of the mariners of the ſhip, Jonah had been in; who promiſed to relinquiſh their idols, but did not; and vowed to ſerve the Lord, and ſacrifice to him, but did not perform what they promiſed. But I rather think Jonah reflects upon himſelf in particular, as well as leaves this as a general inſtruction to others; that ſhould they do as he had done, give way to an evil heart of unbelief, and attend to the ſuggeſtions of a vain mind, and conſult with fleſh and blood, and be directed thereby, to the diſregard of God and his will; they will find, as he had done to his coſt, that they forſake that God that has been gracious and merciful to them, and who is all goodneſs and mercy, Pſ. cxliv. 3. which to do is very ungrateful to him, and injurious to themſelves; and now he being ſenſible of his folly, and influenced by the grace and goodneſs of God to him, reſolves to do as follows:

℣. 9. But I will ſacrifice unto thee with the voice of thankſgiving, &c.] Not only offer up a legal ſacrifice in a ceremonial way, when he came to Jeruſalem; but along with it the ſpiritual ſacrifice of praiſe, which he knew was more acceptable unto God; and thus Chriſt, his antitype, upon his deliverance from his enemies, Pſ. xxii. 22, 25. and lxix. 30, 31: I will pay that I have vowed; when he was in his diſtreſs; as that he would ſacrifice after the above manner, or behave in a better manner for the future than he had done; and particularly would go to Nineveh, if the Lord thought fit to ſend him again: ſalvation is of the Lord; this was the ground of the faith and hope of Jonah when at the worſt, and the matter of his preſent praiſe and thankſgiving. There is one letter more in the word rendered ſalvation [g], than uſual, which increaſes the ſenſe; and denotes, that all kind of ſalvation is of the Lord, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal; not only this ſalvation from the devouring waves of the ſea, and from the grave of the fiſh's belly, was of the Lord; but his deliverance from the terrors of the Lord, and the ſenſe he had of his wrath; and the peace and pardon he now partook of were from the Lord, as well as eternal ſalvation in the world to come, and the hope of it. All temporal ſalvations and deliverances are from the Lord, and to him the glory of them belongs; and his name ſhould be praiſed on account of them; which Jonah reſolved to do for himſelf: and ſo is ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; it is of Jehovah the Father, as to the original ſpring and motive of it, which is his grace, and not mens works, and is owing to his wiſdom, and not mens, for the plan and form of it; it is of Jehovah the Son, as to the impetration of it, who only has wrought it out; and it is of Jehovah the Spirit, as to the application of it to particular perſons; and therefore the glory of it belongs to all the three perſons, and ſhould be given them. This is the epiphonema or concluſion of the prayer or thankſgiving; which ſhows that it was, as before obſerved, put into this form or order, after the ſalvation was wrought; tho' that is related afterwards, as it is proper it ſhould, and as the order of the narration required.

℣. 10. And the Lord ſpake unto the fiſh, &c.] Or gave orders to it; he that made it, could command it; all creatures are the ſervants of God, and do his will; what he ſays, is done; he ſo ordered it by his providence, that this fiſh ſhould come near the ſhore, and be ſo wrought upon by his power, that it could not retain Jonah any longer in its belly. It may be rendered [h], then the Lord ſpake, &c. after Jonah had finiſhed his prayer, or put up thoſe ejaculations, the ſubſtance of which is contained in the above narrative: and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land; not upon the ſhore of the Red-ſea, as ſome; much leſs upon the ſhore of Nineveh, which was not built upon the ſea-ſhore, but upon the river Tigris; and the fiſh muſt have carried him all round Africa, and part of Aſia, to have brought him to the banks of the Tigris; which could not have been done in three days time, nor in much greater. Joſephus [i] ſays, it was upon the ſhore of the Euxine ſea; but the neareſt part of it to Nineveh, was 1600 miles from Tarſus, which the whale, very ſlow in ſwimming, cannot be thought to go in three days; beſides, no very large fiſh ſwim in the Euxine ſea, becauſe of the ſtraits of the Propontis, thro' which they cannot paſs, as Bochart [k] from various writers has proved. It is more likely, as others, that it was on the Syrian ſhore, or in the bay of Iſſus, now called the gulf of Lajazzo; or near Alexandria, or Alexandretta, now Scanderoon. But why not on the ſhore of Paleſtine? and indeed, why not near the place from whence they ſailed? Huetius [l] and others think it probable, that this caſe of Jonah gave riſe to the ſtory of Arion, who was caſt into the ſea by the mariners, took up by a dolphin, and carried to Corinth. Jonah's deliverance was a type of our Lord's reſurrection from the dead on the third day, Matt. xii. 40. and a pledge of ours; for after this inſtance of divine power, why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible, that God ſhould raiſe the dead?

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter gives an account of the renewal of Jonah's meſſage to Nineveh, and of his faithful execution of it, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. and of the fruit and effect of it, the converſion of the Ninevites, their faith in God, repentance of their ſins, and reformation from them, ℣. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. and of God's approbation thereof, by revoking the ſentence he had pronounced upon them, ℣. 10.

℣. 1. And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the ſecond time, &c.] Jonah having been ſcourged by the Lord for his ſtubbornneſs and diſobedience, and being humbled under the mighty hand of God, is tried a ſecond time, whether he would go on the Lord's errand, and do his buſineſs; and his commiſſion is renewed, as it was neceſſary it ſhould; for it would have been unſafe and dangerous for him to have proceeded upon the former without a freſh warrant; as the Iſraelites, when they refuſed entring into the land of Canaan to poſſeſs it, upon the report of the ſpies, and afterwards reflecting upon their ſin, would go up without the word of the Lord, and contrary to the advice of Moſes, many of them periſhed in the attempt, being cut off by the Amalekites, Numb. xiv. 1, 3, 40—45. and this renewal of Jonah's commiſſion ſhows, that he was ſtill continued in his office as a prophet, notwithſtanding his failings; as the apoſtles were in theirs, tho' they all forſook Chriſt, and Peter denied him, Matt. xxvi. 56, 75. and xxviii. 19. John xxi. 15, 16, 17. and that that the Lord had heard his prayer, and graciouſly received him, and took away his iniquity from him, employing him again in his ſervice, being more fitted for it: ſaying, as follows,

℣. 2. Ariſe, go unto Nineveh that great city, &c.] So it is called ch. i. 2. ſee the note there. The order runs in the ſame words as before; and the ſame diſcouragements are preſented to Jonah, taken from the greatneſs of the city, the number of its inhabitants, its being the metropolis of the Aſſyrian empire, and the ſeat of the greateſt monarch on earth, to try his faith; but theſe had not the like effect as before; for he had now another ſpirit given him, not of fear, but of a ſound mind; he conſidered he was ſent by a greater king, and that more were they that were on his ſide, than the inhabitants of this place, who might poſſibly be againſt him: and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee; that he had bid him before, declaring and expoſing their wickedneſs, and telling them that in a ſhort time their city would be deſtroyed. Jonah muſt not be gratified with any alteration in the meſſage; but he muſt go with it as it had before been given, or what he now bid, or ſhould bid him; the word of the Lord muſt be ſpoken juſt as it is delivered; nothing muſt be added to it, or taken from it; the whole counſel of God muſt be declared; prophets and miniſters muſt preach, not as men bid them, but as God bids them. The Targum is, "propheſy againſt it the prophecy which I ſpeak with thee."

℣. 3. So Jonah aroſe, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the Lord, &c.] He was no longer diſobedient to the heavenly viſion, being taught by the rod, he acts according to the word; he's now made willing to go on the Lord's errand, and do his buſineſs, under the influence of his power and grace; he ſtands not conſulting with the fleſh, but immediately ariſes and ſets forward on his journey, as directed and commanded, being rid of that timorous ſpirit, and thoſe fears, he was before poſſeſſed of; his afflictions had been greatly ſanctified to him, to reſtore his ſtraying ſoul, and cauſe him to keep and obſerve the word of the Lord; and his going to Nineveh, and preaching to an heathen people, after his deliverance out of the fiſh's belly, was a type of the preaching of the goſpel to the Gentiles by the apoſtles, according to the commiſſion of Chriſt renewed unto them, after his reſurrection from the dead, Acts xxvi. 23. and after many failings of theirs. Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city; or a city great to God [m]; not dear to him, for it was full of wickedneſs; not great in his eſteem, with whom the whole earth is as nothing; but known by him to be what it was; and the name of God is often uſed of things, to expreſs the ſuperlative nature and greatneſs of them, as trees of God, mountains of God, the flame of God, &c. Pſ. xxxvi. 7. and lxxx. 10. Cant. viii. 6. it was a greater city than Babylon, of which ſee the note on ch. i. 2: of three days journey; in compaſs, being ſixty miles, as Diodorus Siculus [n] relates; and allowing twenty miles for a day's journey on foot, as this was, and which is as much as a man can ordinarily do to hold it, was juſt three days journey; and ſo Herodotus [o] reckons a day's journey at an 150 furlongs, which make about nineteen miles; but, according to the Jewiſh writers, a middling day's journey is ten parſa's [p], and every parſa makes four miles, ſo that with them it is forty miles: or elſe it was three days journey in the length of it, as Kimchi thinks, from end to end. This is obſerved to ſhew the greatneſs of the city, which was the greateſt in the whole world, as well as to lead on to the following account.

℣. 4. And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, &c.] As ſoon as he came to it, he did not go into an inn, to refreſh himſelf after his weariſome journey; or ſpend his time in gazing upon the city, and to obſerve its ſtructure, and the curioſities of it; but immediately ſets about his work, and proclaims what he was bid to do; and before he could finiſh one day's journey, he had no need to proceed any further, the whole city was alarmed with his preaching, was terrified with it, and brought to repentance by it: and he cried; as he went along; he lift up his voice like a trumpet, that every one might hear; he did not mutter it out, as if afraid to deliver his meſſage, but cried aloud in the hearing of all; and very probably now and then made a ſtop in the ſtreets, where there was a concourſe of people, or where more ſtreets met, and there, as an herald, proclaimed what he had to ſay: and ſaid, yet forty days and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown; not by a foreign army beſieging and taking it, which was not probable to be done in ſuch a ſpace of time, but by the immediate power of God; either by fire from heaven, as he overthrew Sodom and Gomorrha, their works being like theirs, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve, or by an earthquake; that is, within forty days, or at the end of forty days, as the Targum; not exceeding ſuch a ſpace, which was granted for their repentance, which is implied, tho' not expreſſed; and muſt be underſtood with this proviſo, except it repented, for otherwiſe why is any time fixed? and why have they warning given them? or the prophet ſent to them? and why were they not deſtroyed at once, as Sodom and Gomorrha, without any notice? doubtleſs, ſo it would have been, had not this been the caſe. The Septuagint verſion very wrongly reads, yet three days, &c. and as wrongly does Joſephus [q] make Jonah to ſay, that in a ſhort time they would loſe the empire of Aſia, when only the deſtruction of Nineveh is threatened; though indeed, that loſs followed upon it.

℣. 5. So the people of Nineveh believed God, &c.] Or in God [r]; in the word of the Lord, as the Targum; they believed there was a God, and that he, in whoſe name Jonah came, was the true God; they believed the word the prophet ſpake was not the word of man, but the word of God; faith came by hearing the word, which is the ſpring of true repentance, and the root of all good works. Kimchi and R. Jeſhuah, in Aben Ezra, ſuppoſe, that the men of the ſhip, in which Jonah had been, were at Nineveh; and theſe teſtified that they had caſt him into the ſea, and declared the whole affair concerning him; and this ſerved greatly to engage their attention to him, and believe what he ſaid: but this is not certain; and beſides, their faith was the effect of the divine power that went along with the preaching of Jonah, and not owing to the perſuaſion of men. And proclaimed a faſt; not of themſelves, but by the order of their king, as follows; tho' Kimchi thinks this was before that:

and put on ſackcloth, from the greateſt of them, even to the leaſt of them; both with reſpect to rank and age, ſo univerſal were their faſting and mourning; in token of which they ſtripped themſelves of their common and rich apparel, and clothed themſelves with ſackcloth; as was uſual in extraordinary caſes of mourning, not only with the Jews, but other nations.

℣. 6. For word came unto the king of Nineveh, &c.] Who was not Sardanapalus, a very diſſolute prince, and abandoned to his luſts; but rather Pul, the ſame that came againſt Menahem king of Iſrael, 2 Kings xv. 19. as biſhop Uſher[s] thinks; to him news were brought, that there was ſuch a prophet come into the city, and publiſhed ſuch and ſuch things, which met with credit among the people; and that theſe of all ranks and degrees, age and ſex, were affected with it, and thrown into the utmoſt concern about it; ſo very ſwiftly did the miniſtry of Jonah ſpread in the city; and what he delivered was ſo quickly carried from one to another, that in one day's time it reached the palace, and the royal ear: and he aroſe from his throne; where he ſat in great majeſty and ſplendor, encircled by his nobles, receiving their careſſes and compliments; or it may be giving audience to foreign embaſſadors, ſent to court his friendſhip and alliance; or hearing cauſes, and redreſſing the grievances of his ſubjects; for he appears to be one that did not indulge himſelf in hunting, and ſuch like exerciſes, or in his luſts and pleaſures: and he laid his robe from him; his royal apparel, his imperial robe, and garments of his glory, as the Targum; or his glorious garments, with which he was richly and moſt magnificently arrayed; he put off theſe, and left his throne, in token of his concern at hearing ſuch diſmal tidings, as the overthrow of his capital city, and of his humiliation and abaſement: and covered him with ſackcloth; which was very rough and coarſe, and muſt be very diſagreeable to a perſon ſo tender and delicate, and was what the meaneſt of his ſubjects wore on this occaſion: and ſat in aſhes; or in the or that aſhes[t]; uſed in ſuch times of mourning, which were either ſtrewed under him, or put upon his head; and this, with the other, were done to afflict the body, and affect the mind with a ſenſe of ſin, and the miſery threatned for ſin, and to ſhew deep humiliation for it.

℣. 7. And he cauſed it to be proclaimed and publiſhed through Nineveh, &c.] By an herald or heralds, ſent into the ſeveral parts of the city: by the decree of the king and his nobles; with whom he conſulted, and whoſe advice he took; and who were equally concerned at this news, and very probably were preſent when word was brought to the king concerning it: let neither man nor beaſt, herd nor flock taſte any thing; a very ſtrict and general faſt this: abſtinence from all food was enjoined; not only men of every rank and age, but the cattel likewiſe, horſes and camels, they uſed either for their pleaſure or buſineſs; their oxen, cows, and calves of their herd; their ſheep, goats, lambs, and kids of their flocks: let them not feed, nor drink water; no food were to be put into their mangers or folds; nor were they to be ſuffered to graze in their paſtures, or to be allowed the leaſt quantity of food or drink; this was ordered to make the mourning the greater; thus Virgil[u] deſcribes the mourning for the death of Cæſar, by the oxen not coming to the rivers to drink, nor touching the graſs of the field; and to afflict their minds the more, and for their greater mortification, ſince theſe creatures were for their uſe and pleaſure. Faſting was uſed by the Heathens, as well as the Jews, in ſome caſes; particularly the Egyptians, as Herodotus[w] obſerves, from whom the Aſſyrians might take it.

℣. 8. But let man and beaſt be covered with ſackcloth, &c.] As the king was, and the people alſo were; and this order enjoined the ſame to the beaſts, horſes and camels, whoſe rich trappings were to be taken off, and ſackcloth put upon them, for the greater ſolemnity of the mourning; as at this day, at the funerals of great perſons, not only the horſes which draw the hearſe and mourning-coaches are covered with black velvet, to make the ſolemnity more awful, but others are led, clothed in like manner: and cry mightily unto God; which clauſe ſtands ſo cloſely connected with the former, as if it reſpected beaſts as well as men, who ſometimes are ſaid to cry for food in times of drought and diſtreſs, Joel i. 20. and who here might purpoſely be kept from food and drink, that they might cry, and ſo the more affect the minds of the Ninevites, in their humiliation and abaſement; but men are principally meant, at leaſt, who were to cry unto God intenſely and earneſtly, with great ardor, fervency, and importunity; not only aloud, and with a ſtrong voice, but with their whole heart, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; heartily, ſincerely, and devoutly, for the averting divine wrath, and the pardon of their ſins, and the ſparing of their city: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way; as well knowing that faſting and prayer would be of no avail, without leaving every one their ſinful courſes, and reforming their life and manners: and from the violence that is in their hands; their rapine and oppreſſion, their thefts and robberies, and preying upon the ſubſtance of others; which ſeem to be the reigning vices of this city, in doing which many murders were committed alſo; ſee Nah. iii. 1. the Jewiſh writers interpret this of making reſtitution for rapine and violence, which is a genuine fruit of repentance; ſee Luke xix. 8. The Septuagint verſion underſtands this, not as a direction from the king to the men of Nineveh what they ſhould do, but as a narrative of what they did; and no doubt but they did theſe things, put on ſackcloth, faſt, pray, and turn from their evil ways; yet they are the inſtructions of the king unto them, and the orders he gave them.

℣. 9. Who can tell, &c.] The Septuagint and Arabic verſions prefix to this the word ſaying, and take them to be, not the words of the king, but of the Ninevites; tho' very wrongly: or who is he that knows; which ſome connect with the next word, he will return; that is, that knows the ways of repentance, he will return, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; or that knows that he has ſinned, as Aben Ezra; or that knows the tranſgreſſions he is guilty of, will return, as Jarchi; and ſo the Targum, "whoſoever knows that ſins are in his hands, "he will return, or let him return from them:

[w] L. 2. c. 4. & l. 4. c. 186.

but they are the words of the king, with reſpect to God, encouraging his ſubjects to the above things, from the conſideration of the probability, or at leaſt poſſibility, of God's being merciful to them: if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce wrath, that we periſh not; he ſpeaks here not as deſpairing, nor as abſolutely doubting, but as between hope and fear; for by the light of nature, it is not certain that God will pardon men upon repentance; 'tis only probable or poſſible he may; neither the light of nature, nor the law of Moſes, connect repentance and remiſſion of ſins, 'tis the goſpel does this; and it is only by the goſpel-revelation that any can be aſſured that God will forgive, even penitent ſinners; however, this heathen prince encourages his ſubjects not to deſpair of, but to hope for the mercy of God, tho' they could not be ſure of it; and it may be obſerved, that he does not put their hope of not periſhing, or of ſalvation, upon their faſting, praying, and reformation, but upon the will, mercy, and goodneſs of God.

℣. 10. And God ſaw their works, that they turned from their evil way, &c.] Not their outward works, in putting on ſackcloth and aſhes, and faſting; but their inward works, their faith in him, and repentance towards him; and which were attended with fruits and works meet for repentance, in that they forſook their former courſe of life, and refrained from it; and theſe he ſaw not barely with his eye of omniſcience, as he ſees all perſons and things, good and bad, but ſo as to like them, approve of them, and accept them, in which ſenſe the word is uſed Gen. i. 4, 31. and iv. 4. and ſo the repentance of theſe men is ſpoken of with commendation by Chriſt, and as what would riſe up in judgment, and condemn the men of that generation, Matt. xii. 41: and God repented of the evil that he had ſaid that he would do unto them, and he did it not; this is ſpoken after the manner of men, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and is to be underſtood, not of any ſuch affection in God as repentance; but of an effect done by him, which carries in it a ſhew of repentance, or reſembles what is done by men when they repent; then they change their courſe and conduct; ſo the Lord, tho' he never changes his will, nor repents of or revokes his decrees, or alters his purpoſes; yet he ſometimes wills a change, and makes an alteration in the diſpenſations of his providence, according to his unchangeable will. God, in this caſe, did not repent of his decrees concerning the Ninevites, but of what he had ſaid or threatened, reſpecting the overthrow of Nineveh, in caſe of their impenitence; it was his will that they ſhould be told of their ſin and danger, and by this means be brought to repentance, and the wrath threatened them be averted; ſo that here was a change, not of his mind and will concerning them, but of his outward diſpenſations towards them; ſee Jer. xviii. 7, 8, 9, 10.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter gives us an account of Jonah's diſpleaſure at the repentance of the Ninevites, and at the Lord's ſhewing mercy unto them, ℣. 1. the angry prayer of Jonah upon it, ℣. 2, 3. the Lord's gentle reproof of him for it, ℣. 4. his conduct upon that, ℣. 5. the gourd prepared for him; its riſe, uſefulneſs, and deſtruction, which raiſed different paſſions in Jonah, ℣. 6, 7, 8. the improvement the Lord made of this to rebuke Jonah, for his diſplicency at the mercy he ſhewed to the Ninevites, and to convict him of his folly, ℣. 9, 10, 11.

℣. 1. But it diſpleaſed Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry, &c.] Jonah was mirabilis homo, as one calls him, an amazing man; the ſtrangeſt, oddeſt, and moſt out of the way man, for a good man, and a prophet, as one ſhall ever hear or read of. Diſpleaſed he was at that, which one would have thought he would have exceedingly rejoiced at, the ſucceſs of his miniſtry, as all good men, prophets, and miniſters of the word do; nothing grieves them more, than the hardneſs of mens hearts, and the unſucceſsfulneſs of their labours; and nothing more rejoices them, than the converſion of ſinners by them; but Jonah is diſpleaſed at the repentance of the Ninevites thro' his preaching, and at the mercy of God ſhewed unto them: diſpleaſed at that, on account of which there is joy in heaven among the divine perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit, and among the holy angels, even over one repenting ſinner; and much more over many thouſands, as in this caſe: diſpleaſed at that which is the grudge, the envy, and ſpite of devils, and which they do all they can to hinder: and the more ſtrange it is, that Jonah ſhould act ſuch a part at this time, when he himſelf had juſt received mercy of the Lord in ſo extraordinary a manner, as to be delivered out of the fiſh's belly, even out of the belly of hell; which one would think would have warmed his heart with love, not only to God, but to the ſouls of men, and cauſed him to have rejoiced, that others were ſharers with him in the ſame grace and mercy. The reaſons of this ſtrange conduct, if they may be called reaſons, are ſuppoſed to be theſe: one reaſon was, his own honour, which he thought lay at ſtake, and that he ſhould be reckoned a falſe prophet, if Nineveh was not deſtroyed at the time he had fixed; but the proviſo implied, tho' not expreſſed, "except ye repent," ſecured his character; which was the ſenſe of the divine Being, and ſo the Ninevites underſtood it, or at leaſt hoped this was the caſe, and therefore repented, and which the mercy ſhown them confirmed: nor had Jonah any reaſon to fear they would have reproached him with ſuch an imputation to his character; but on the contrary, would have careſſed him as the moſt welcome perſon that ever came to their city, and had been the inſtrument of ſhewing them their ſin and danger, and of bringing them to repentance, and ſo of ſaving them from threatened ruin; and they did him honour by believing at once what he ſaid, and by repenting at his preaching; and which is teſtified by Chriſt, and ſtands recorded to his honour, and will be tranſmitted to the lateſt poſterity: another reaſon was, his prejudice to the Gentiles, which was unreaſonable; for tho' this was the foible of the Jewiſh nation, grudging that any favours ſhould be beſtowed upon the Gentiles, or propheſied of them; ſee Rom. x. 19, 20. yet a prophet ſhould have diveſted himſelf of ſuch prejudices, as Iſaiah and others did; and eſpecially when he found his miniſtry was ſo bleſſed among them, he he ſhould have been ſilent, and glorified God for his mercy, and ſaid as the converted Jews did in Peter's time, then God hath granted unto the Gentiles repentance unto life; to do otherwiſe, and as Jonah did, was to act like the unbelieving Jews, who forbid the apoſtles to preach to the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved. A third reaſon ſuppoſed is, the honour of his own countrymen, which he thought would be reflected on, and might iſſue in their ruin, they not returning from their evil ways, when the heathens did: a poor weak reaſon this! with what advantage might he have returned to his own country? with what force of argument might he have accoſted them, and upbraided them with their impenitence and unbelief; that Gentiles at one ſermon ſhould repent in ſackcloth and aſhes, when they had the prophets one after another ſent them, and without effect? and who knows what might have been the iſſue of this? laſtly, the glory of God might be pretended; that he would be reckoned a liar, and his word a falſhood, and be derided as ſuch by atheiſts and unbelievers; but here was no danger of this from theſe penitent ones; and beſides, the proviſo before-mentioned ſecured the truth and veracity of God; and who was honoured by theſe perſons, by their immediate faith in him, and repentance towards him; and his grace and mercy were as much glorified in the ſalvation of them, as his juſtice would have been in their deſtruction.

℣. 2. And he prayed unto the Lord, &c.] But in a very different manner from his praying in the fiſhes belly: this was a very diſorderly prayer, put up in the hurry of his ſpirit, and in the heat of paſſion: prayer ſhould be fervent indeed, but not like that of a man in a fever; there ſhould be a warmth and ardour of affection in it, but it ſhould be without wrath, as well as without doubting: this is called a prayer, becauſe Jonah thought it to be ſo, and put it up to the Lord as one. It begins in the form of a prayer; and it ends with a petition, tho' an unlawful one; and has nothing of true and right prayer in it; no celebration of the divine being, and his perfections; no confeſſion of ſin, or a petition for any bleſſing of providence or grace; but mere wrangling, contending and quarrelling with God: and ſaid, I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my ſaying, when I was yet in my country? in Judea, or in Galilee, at Geth-hepher; was not this what I thought and ſaid within myſelf, and to thee, that this would be the iſſue and conſequence of going to the Ninevites; they would repent of their ſins, and thou wouldſt forgive them; and ſo thou wouldſt be reckoned a liar, and I a falſe prophet? and now things are come to paſs juſt as I thought and ſaid they would: and thus he ſuggeſts that he had a greater or better foreſight of things than God himſelf; and that it would have been better if his ſaying had been attended unto, and not the order of him to Nineveh; how audacious and inſolent was this! therefore I fled before unto Tarſhiſh; before he could have a ſecond order to Nineveh: here he juſtifies his flight to Tarſhiſh, as if he had good reaſon for it; and that it would have been better if he had not been ſtopped in his flight, and had gone to Tarſhiſh, and not have gone to Nineveh. This is amazing, after ſuch ſevere corrections for his flight, and after ſuch ſucceſs at Nineveh: for I know that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſs, and repenteſt thee of the evil; this he knew from his own experience, for which he had reaſon to be thankful, and from the proclamation of God, in Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. which he ſeems to have reſpect unto; and a glorious one it is, tho' Jonah ſeems to twit and upbraid the Lord with his grace and mercy to men, as if it was a weakneſs and infirmity in him, whereas it is his higheſt glory, Exod. xxxiii. 18, 19. he ſeems to ſpeak of him, and repreſent him as if he was all mercy, and nothing elſe; which is a wrong repreſentation of him; for he is righteous, as well as merciful; and in the ſame place where he proclaims himſelf to be ſo, he declares that he will by no means clear the guilty: but here we ſee that good men, and prophets, and miniſters of the word, are men of like paſſions with others, and ſome of greater paſſions; and here we have an inſtance of the prevailing corruptions of good men, and how they break out again, even after they have been ſcourged for them; for afflictions, tho' they are corrections for ſin, and do reſtrain it, and humble for it, and both purge and prevent it, yet do not wholly remove it.

℣. 3. Therefore now, O Lord, take I beſeech thee my life from me, &c.] Or, my ſoul[x]. This, as Druſius remarks, may be obſerved againſt thoſe that think the ſoul is not immortal; for by this it appears, that it may be taken from the body, and that it exiſts ſeparate from it, and does not die with it; and ſince the body dies upon its removal, for the body without the ſpirit is dead, as James ſays; death is expreſſed by this phraſe, Job xxvii. 8. Acts viii. 33. here Jonah allows that God is the God of life, the author and giver of it, and is the ſole diſpoſer of it; it is in his own power to take it away, and not man's: ſo far Jonah was right, that he did not in his paſſion attempt to take away his own life; only deſires the Lord to do it, tho' in that he is not to be juſtified; for tho' it may be lawful for good men to deſire to die, with ſubmiſſion to the will of God; that they might be free from ſin, and ſerve him without it, and be with Chriſt, and in the enjoyment of the divine preſence, as the apoſtle Paul, and others did, 2 Cor. v. 6, 8. Phil. i. 21, 23. but not thro' diſcontent, as Elijah, 1 Kings xix. 4. or merely to be rid of troubles, and to be free from pain and afflictions, as Job, ch. vi. 1, 2, 3, 8, 9. and much leſs in a pet and paſſion, as Jonah here, giving this reaſon for it, for it is better for me to die than to live; not being able to bear the reproach of being a falſe prophet, which he imagined would be caſt upon him; or, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi, that he might not ſee the evil come upon Iſrael, which he feared the repentance of the Ninevites would be the occaſion of. Jonah was in a very poor frame of ſpirit to die in; this would not have been dying in faith and hope in God; which graces cannot be thought to be in lively exerciſe in him, when he was quarrelling with God; neither in love to God, with whom he was angry; nor in love to men, at whoſe repentance, and finding mercy with the Lord, he was diſpleaſed.

℣. 4. Then ſaid the Lord, doſt thou well to be angry?] A mild and gentle reproof this; which ſhews him to be a God gracious and merciful, and ſlow to anger; he might have anſwered Jonah's paſſionate wiſh, and ſtruck him dead at once, as Ananias and Sapphira were; but he only puts this queſtion, and leaves it with him to conſider of. Some render it, is doing good diſpleaſing to thee [y]? art thou angry at that, becauſe I do good to whom I will? ſo R. Japhet, as Aben Ezra obſerves, tho' he diſproves of it: according to this the ſenſe is, is doing good to the Ninevites, ſhewing mercy to them upon their repentance, ſuch an eye-ſore to thee? is thine eye evil, becauſe mine is good? ſo the ſcribes and phariſees indeed were diſpleaſed with Chriſt for converſing with publicans and ſinners, which was for the good of their ſouls; and the elder brother was angry with his father for receiving the prodigal; and of the ſame caſt Jonah ſeems to be, at leaſt at this time, being under the power of his corruptions. There ſeems to be an emphaſis upon the word thou; doſt thou well to be angry? what, thou a creature, be angry with his creator? a worm, a potſherd of the earth, with the God of heaven and earth? what, thou that haſt received mercy thyſelf in ſuch an extraordinary manner, and ſo lately, and be angry at mercy ſhown to others? what, thou a prophet of the Lord, that ſhould have at heart the good of immortal ſouls, and be diſpleaſed that thy miniſtry has been the means of the converſion and repentance of ſo many thouſands? is there any juſt cauſe for all this anger? no, it is a cauſeleſs one; and this is put to the conſcience of Jonah; he himſelf is made judge in his own cauſe; and it looks, as if upon ſelf-reflection and re-conſideration, when his paſſions cooled and ſubſided, that he was ſelf-convicted and ſelf-condemned, ſince no anſwer is returned. The Targum is, "art thou "exceeding angry?" and ſo other interpreters, Jewiſh and Chriſtian [z], underſtand it of the vehemency of his anger.

[x] את נפשי animam meam, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius, Cocceius.

℣. 5. So Jonah went out of the city, &c.] Had not the inhabitants of it repented, he had done right to go out of it, and ſhake the duſt of his feet againſt it; or, in ſuch a caſe, had he gone out of it, as Lot out of Sodom, when juſt going to be overthrown; but Jonah went out in a ſullen fit, becauſe it was to be ſpared; tho' ſome render the words, now Jonah had gone out of the city [a]; that is, before all this paſſed, recorded in the preceding verſes; and ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that the ſcripture returns here to make mention of the affairs of Jonah, and what happened before the accompliſhment of the forty days: and ſat on the eaſt-ſide of the city; where he might have very probably a good ſight of it; and which lay the reverſe of the road to his own country; that if the inhabitants ſhould purſue him, they would miſs of him; which ſome ſuppoſe he might be in fear of, ſhould their city be deſtroyed: and there made him a booth; of the boughs of trees, which he erected, not to continue in, but for a ſhort time, expecting in a few days the iſſue of his prediction: and ſat under it in the ſhadow; to ſhelter him from the heat of the ſun: till he might ſee what would become of the city; or, what would be done in it, or with it [b]; if this was after he knew that the Lord had repented of the evil he threatened, and was diſpoſed to ſhew mercy to the city; and which, as Kimchi thinks, was revealed to him by the ſpirit of prophecy; then he ſat here, expecting the repentance of the Ninevites would be a ſhort-lived one; be like the goodneſs of Ephraim and Judah, as the morning-cloud, and early dew that paſſes away; and that then God would change his diſpenſations towards them again, as he had done; or however he might expect, that tho' the city was not totally overthrown, yet that there would be ſomething done; ſome leſſer judgment fall upon them, as a token of the divine diſpleaſure, and which might ſave his credit as a prophet.

℣. 6. And the Lord God prepared a gourd, &c.] So the Septuagint render the word; but ſome ſay that a worm will not touch that; Jerom renders it an ivy; but neither the gourd nor that riſe upwards, without ſome props to ſupport them. The Hebrew word is Kikaion, the ſame with the Kiki, or Cici, of Herodotus [c], Dioſcorides [d], Strabo [e] and Pliny [f]; a plant frequent in Egypt, of which the Egyptians made an oil; hence the Talmudiſts [g] make mention of the oil of Kik, which Reſh-Lakiſh ſays is the Kikaion of Jonah; and which is the ſame that the Arabians call Alcheroa or Alcherva, according to Samuel ben Hophni [h], Maimonides [i], Bartenora [k] and Jerom [l]; and which is well known to be the Ricinus or Palma Chriſti; and which, by the deſcription of it, according to all the above writers, bids faireſt [m] to be here intended; it riſing up to the height of a tree, an olive-tree, having very large broad leaves, like thoſe of vines, or of plantane; and ſpringing up ſuddenly, as Pliny ſays it does in Spain; and Cluſius affirms, he ſaw at the ſtreights of Gibraltar a Ricinus of the thickneſs of a man, and of the height of three men; and Bellonius, who travelled thro' Syria and Paleſtine, ſaw one in Crete of the bigneſs of a tree; and Dietericus [n], who relates the above, ſays he ſaw himſelf in a garden at Leyden, well furniſhed and enriched with exotic plants, an American Ricinus, the ſtalk of which was hollow, weak and ſoft, and the leaves almoſt a foot and a half; and which Adolphus Vorſtius, he adds, took to be the ſame which Jonah had for a ſhade; with which agrees what Dioſcorides [o] ſays, that there is a ſort of it, which grows large like a tree, and as high as a fig-tree; the leaves of it are like thoſe of a palm-tree, tho' broader, ſmoother and blacker; the branches and trunk of it are hollow like a reed: and what may ſeem more to confirm this is, that a certain number of grains of the ſeed of the Ricinus very much provoke vomiting; which, if true, as Marinus [p] obſerves, the word here uſed may be derived from קיא, which ſignifies to vomit; from whence is the word קיא vomiting; and the firſt radical being here doubled, may increaſe the ſignification, and ſhew it to be a great emetic; and the like virtue of the Ricinus is obſerved by others [q]. Jerom allegorizes it of the ceremonial law, under the ſhadow of which Iſrael dwelt for a while; and then was abrogated by Chriſt, who ſays he was a worm, and no man: but it is better to apply it to outward mercies and earthly enjoyments, which like this plant ſpring out of the earth, and have their root in it, and are of the nature of it, and therefore minded by earthly and carnal men above all others; they are thin, ſlight and ſlender things; there's no ſolidity and ſubſtance in them, like the Kiki, whoſe ſtalk is hollow as a reed, as Dioſcorides ſays; they are light and empty things, vanity and vexation of ſpirit; ſpring up ſuddenly ſometimes, and are gone as ſoon; ſome men come to riches and honour at once, and riſe up to a very great pitch of both, and quickly fall into poverty and diſgrace again; for theſe are very uncertain periſhing things, like this herb or plant, or even as graſs, which ſoon withers away. They are indeed of God, who is the father of mercies, and are the gifts of his providence, and not the merit of men; they are diſpoſed of according to his will, and prepared by him in his purpoſes, and given forth according to them, and in his covenant to his own ſpecial people, and are to them bleſſings indeed: and made it to come up over Jonah; over his head, as follows; and it may be over the booth he had built, which was become in a manner uſeleſs; the leaves of the boughs of which it was made being withered with the heat of the ſun; it came over him ſo as to cover him all over; which may denote both the neceſſity of outward mercies, as food and raiment, which the Lord knows his people have need of; and the ſufficiency of them he grants, with which they ſhould be content: that it might be a ſhadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief; either from the vexation of mind at the repentance of the Ninevites, and the mercy ſhown them; this being a refreſhment unto him, and which he might take as a new token of the Lord's favourable regard to him, after the offence he had given him, and gentle reproof for it; or from the head-ach, with which he was thought to have been afflicted, thro' his vexation; or by the heat of the ſun; or rather it was to ſhelter him from the heat of the ſun, and the diſtreſs that gave him: ſo outward mercies, like a reviving and refreſhing ſhadow, exhilarate the ſpirits, and are a defence againſt the injuries and inſults of men, and a preſervative from the grief and diſtreſs which poverty brings with it: ſo Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd; or, rejoiced with a great joy [r]; he was exceſſively and above meaſure glad of it, becauſe of its uſefulneſs to him: outward mercies are what we ſhould be thankful for; and it is good for men to rejoice in their labours, and enjoy the good of them; to eat their bread with a merry heart and chearfulneſs; but ſhould not be elevated with them beyond meaſure, lifted up with pride, and boaſt, and glory of them, and rejoice in ſuch boaſtings, which is evil; or rejoice in them as their portion, placing their happineſs therein, which is to rejoice in a thing of nought; or to over-rate mercies, and ſhew more affection for them than for God himſelf, the giver of them, who only ſhould be our exceeding joy; and when this is the caſe, it is much if they are not quickly taken away, as Jonah's gourd was, as follows:

℣. 7. But God prepared a worm when the morning roſe the next day, &c.] That God that prepared this plant to riſe ſo ſuddenly, almoſt as ſoon prepared a worm to deſtroy it; for it roſe up one night, continued one whole day, to the great delight of Jonah; and by the morning of the following day this worm or grub was prepared in it, or ſent to it, to the root of it: this ſhows that God is the creator of the leaſt, as well as the largeſt of creatures, of worms as well as whales, contrary to the notion of Valentinus, Marcion and Apelles; who, as Jerom [s] ſays, introduce another creator of ants, worms, fleas, locuſts, &c. and another of the heavens, earth, ſea and angels: but it is much that Arnobius [t], an orthodox ancient chriſtian father, ſhould deny ſuch creatures to be the work of God, and profeſs his ignorance of the maker of them. His words are, "ſhould we deny "flies, beetles, worms, mice, weaſels and moths "to be the work of the king omnipotent, it does "not follow that it ſhould be required of us to "ſay who made and formed them; for we may "without blame be ignorant who gave them their "original;" whereas, in the miracle of the lice, the magicians of Egypt themſelves owned that the finger of God was there, and were out of their power to effect; and to the prophet Amos, the great God was repreſented in a viſion as making locuſts or graſhoppers, ch. vii. 1. and indeed the ſmalleſt inſect or reptile is a diſplay of the wiſdom and power of God, and not at all below his dignity and greatneſs to produce; and for which there are wiſe reaſons in nature and providence, as here, for the production of this worm: the ſame God that prepared a great fiſh to ſwallow Jonah, and a gourd to ſhadow him, and an eaſt-wind to blow upon him, prepared this worm to deſtroy his ſhade, and try his patience: and it ſmote the gourd, that it withered; it bit its root, and its moiſture dried up, and it withered away at once, and became uſeleſs: that ſame hand that gives mercies, can take them away, and that very ſuddenly, in a trice, in a few hours, as in the caſe of Job; and ſometimes very ſecretly and inviſibly, that men are not aware of; their ſubſtance waſtes; and they fall to decay, and they can ſcarcely tell the reaſon of it; there is a worm at the root of their enjoyments, which kill them; God is as a moth and rottenneſs unto them; and he does this ſometimes by ſmall means, by little inſtruments, as he plagued Pharaoh and the Egyptians with lice and flies.

℣. 8. And it came to paſs when the ſun did ariſe, &c.] After that the gourd was ſmitten and withered; when it was not only riſen, but ſhone out with great force and heat: that God prepared a vehement eaſt-wind; or, a deafning eaſt-wind [u]; which blowed ſo ſtrong, and ſo loud, as R. Marinus in Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſay, made people deaf that heard it: or, a ſilencing eaſt-wind; which when it blew, all other winds were ſilent, as Jarchi: or it made men ſilent, not being to be heard for it: or, a ſilent [w], that is, a ſtill quiet wind, as the Targum; which blew ſo gently and ſlowly, that it increaſed the heat, inſtead of leſſening it: or rather, a plowing eaſt-wind [x]; ſuch as are frequent [y] in the eaſtern countries, which plow up the dry land, cauſe the ſand to ariſe and cover men and camels, and bury them in it. Of theſe winds Monſieur Thevenot [z] ſpeaks more than once; in ſandy deſerts, between Cairo and Suez, he ſays, "it blew "ſo furiouſly, that I thought all the tents would "have been carried away with the wind; which "drove before it ſuch clouds of ſand, that we "were almoſt buried under it; for ſeeing nobody "could ſtay abroad, without having mouth and "eyes immediately filled with ſand, we lay under "the tents, where the wind drove in the ſand "above a foot deep round about us;" and in another place he obſerves [a], "from Suez to Cairo, "for a day's time or more, we had ſo hot a wind, "that we were forced to turn our backs to it, to "take a little breath, and ſo ſoon as we opened "our mouths they were full of ſand;" ſuch an one was here raiſed, which blew the ſand and duſt into the face of Jonah, and almoſt ſuffocated him; which, with the heat of the ſun, was very afflictive to him: and the ſun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted; the boughs of trees, of which the booth was made, being withered, and his gourd, or whatever plant it was, alſo, he had nothing to ſhelter him from the heat of the ſun; but the beams of it darted directly upon him, ſo that he was not able to ſuſtain them; they quite overwhelmed him, and cauſed him to faint, and juſt ready to die away: and wiſhed in himſelf to die; or, deſired his ſoul might die [b]; not his rational ſoul, which was immortal; but his animal or ſenſitive ſoul, which he had in common with animals; he wiſhed his animal life might be taken from him, becauſe the diſtreſs thro' the wind and ſun was intolerable to him: and ſaid, it is better for me to die than to live; in ſo much pain and miſery; ſee ℣. 3.

℣. 9. And God ſaid to Jonah, doſt thou well to be angry for the gourd? &c.] Or, art thou very angry for it? as the Targum: no mention is made of the bluſtring wind and ſcorching ſun, becauſe the gourd or plant raiſed up over him would have protected him from the injuries of both, had it continued; and it was for the loſs of that that Jonah was ſo diſpleaſed, and in ſuch a paſſion. This queſtion is put in order to draw out the following anſwer, and ſo give an opportunity of improving this affair, to the end for which it was deſigned: and he ſaid, I do well to be angry, even unto death; or, I am very angry unto death, as the Targum; I am ſo very angry that I cannot live under it, for fretting and vexing; and it is right for me to be ſo, tho' I die with the paſſion of it: how ungovernable are the paſſions of men, and to what inſolence do they riſe when under the power of them!

℣. 10. Then ſaid the Lord, thou haſt had pity on the gourd, &c.] Or, haſt ſpared it [c]; that is, would have ſpared it, had it lain in his power, tho' but a weed, and worthleſs thing: for the which thou haſt not laboured; in digging the ground, and by ſowing or planting it; it being raiſed up at once by the Lord himſelf, and not by any human art and induſtry, nor by any of his: neither madeſt it grow; by dunging the earth about it, or by watering and pruning it: which came up in a night, and periſhed in a night; not in the ſame night; for it ſprung up one night, continued a whole day, and then periſhed the next night. The Targum is more explicit, "which was in this (or one) night, "and periſhed in another night;" by all which the Lord ſuggeſts to Jonah, the vaſt difference between the gourd he would have ſpared, and for the loſs of which he was ſo angry, and the city of Nineveh the Lord ſpared, which ſo highly diſpleaſed him; the one was but a herb, a plant, the other a great city; that a ſingle plant, but the city conſiſted of thouſands of perſons; the plant was not the effect of his toil and labour, but the inhabitants of this city were the works of God's hands. In the building of this city, according to hiſtorians [d], a million and a half of men were employed eight years together; the plant was like a muſhroom, it ſprung up in a night, and periſhed in one; whereas this was a very ancient city, that had ſtood ever ſince the days of Nimrod.

℣. 11. And ſhould not I ſpare Nineveh that great city, &c.] See ch. i. 2. and iii. 3. what is ſuch a gourd or plant to that? wherein are more than ſix ſcore thouſand perſons; or twelve myriads; that is, twelve times ten thouſand, or an hundred and twenty thouſand; meaning not all the inhabitants of Nineveh; for then it would not have appeared to be ſo great a city; but infants only, as next deſcribed: that cannot diſcern between their right-hand, and their left-hand; don't know one from another; can't diſtinguiſh between good and evil, right and wrong; are not come to years of maturity and diſcretion; and therefore there were room and reaſon for pity and ſparing mercy; eſpecially ſince they had not been guilty of actual tranſgreſſions, at leaſt not very manifeſt; and yet muſt have periſhed with their parents had Nineveh been overthrown. The number of infants in this city is a proof of the greatneſs of it, tho' not ſo as to render the account incredible; for admitting theſe to be a fifth part of its inhabitants, as they uſually are of any place, as Bochart [e] obſerves; it makes the number of its inhabitants to be but ſix or ſeven hundred thouſand; and as many there were in Seleucia and Thebes, as Pliny [f] relates of the one, and Tacitus [g] of the other: and alſo much cattel; and theſe more valuable than goods, as animals are preferable to, and more uſeful than, vegetables; and yet theſe muſt have periſhed in the common calamity. Jarchi underſtands by theſe grown-up perſons, whoſe knowledge is like the beaſts that know not their creator. No anſwer being returned, it may be reaſonably ſuppoſed Jonah was convinced of his ſin and folly; and to ſhew his repentance for it, penned this narrative, which records his infirmities and weakneſſes, for the good of the church, and the inſtruction of ſaints in ſucceeding ages.

MICAH.

THIS book is called, in the Hebrew copies, Sepher Micah, the book of Micah; in the Vulgate Latin verſion, the prophecy of Micah; and in the Syriac verſion, the prophecy of the prophet Micah. This prophet is not the ſame with Micaiah the ſon of Imlah, who lived in the times of Ahab and Jehoſhaphat, 1 Kings xxii. 8. for as Aben Ezra obſerves, there were many generations between them, at leaſt many reigns of kings, as Jehoram, Ahaziah, Joaſh, Amaziah, and Uzziah, all which made up a hundred and thirty years; their names indeed ſeem to be the ſame, ſince he that is called Micaiah, 1 Kings xxii. 8. is called Micah, 2 Chron. xviii. 14. and this our prophet is named Micaiah in Jer. xxvi. 18. which is with ſome of the ſame ſignification with Michael. So Abarbinel interprets it, who is as God; ſee ch. vii. 18. which Hillerus [a] confutes, and renders it, the contrition, attrition, attenuation, and depauperation of the Lord; deriving it from מוך, which ſignifies to be depreſſed, humbled, weakened, and impoveriſhed, as others do; which name, ſome think, was given him by his parents, becauſe of their low eſtate, their meanneſs and poverty; but of them we have no account: however, this is much more probable, than the reaſon Cornelius a Lapide gives of his name, that he was ſo called, becauſe he propheſied of Chriſt who was poor, and that he ſhould be born in a poor country-village. As for his country, and the place of his birth, and the time in which he lived, they may be gathered from ch. i. 1. by which it will appear, that he was not of the tribe of Ephraim, as Pſeudo-Epiphanius [b] ſays, but of the tribe of Judah; whoſe kings reigns, in which he propheſies, are only made mention of; tho' his prophecies concerned both Iſrael and Judah, and he reproves both for their ſins, and foretels their ſeveral captivities; and for the comfort of God's people, ſays many things concerning the Meſſiah, his incarnation, the place of his birth, which no prophet ſo clearly points at as he, the execution of his offices, prophetic, prieſtly, and kingly; the bleſſings of grace that came by him, pardon of ſin, atonement, &c. and the happineſs and glory of his church in the latter day. The authority of this book is confirmed, both by the elders of Judah in the times of Jeremiah, who quote a paſſage out of it, ch. iii. 12. which they improve in favour of that prophet, Jer. xxvi. 17, 18, 19. and by the chief prieſts and ſcribes in the time of Herod, who refer that prince to a prophecy in this book, for the place of the Meſſiah's birth, ch. v. 2. ſee Matt. ii. 4, 5, 6. He is thought to have propheſied thirty or forty years. Biſhop Uſher [c] places him in the year of the world 3291, and of the Julian period 4001, and before Chriſt 713; but according to Mr. Whiſton [d], he propheſied 750 years before the æra of Chriſt, and ſo Mr. Bedford [e], and three after the building of the city of Rome; and he foretels the captivity of the ten tribes thirty years, and the coming of Sennacherib forty years, before they came to paſs; but when and where he died, and was buried, no certain proof can be given. Pſeudo-Epiphanius, confounding him with Micaiah in Ahab's time, ſays [f], he was killed by his ſon Joram, who caſt him down from a precipice, and was buried at Morathi his native place, near the burying-ground of Enakeim, and his grave was well known to that day. And according to Jerom [g], the grave of this our prophet was at Moraſthi, and in his time turned into a church or temple. Sozomen [h] reports, that in the times of Theodoſius the Elder, the body of Micah was found by Zebennus biſhop of Eleutheropolis at Berathſalia, ten furlongs from the city, near which was the grave of Micah, called by the common people the faithful monument, and in their country language Nephſameemana.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter treats of the judgments of God on Iſrael and Judah, for their idolatry. It begins with the title of the whole book, in which is given an account of the prophet, the time of his propheſying, and of the perſons againſt whom he propheſied, ℣. 1. next a preface to this chapter, requiring attention to what was about to be delivered, urged from the conſideration of the awful appearance of God, which is repreſented as very grand and terrible, ℣. 2, 3, 4. the cauſe of all which wrath that appeared in him, was the tranſgreſſion of Jacob; particularly their idolatry, as appears by the ſpecial mention of their idols and graven images, in the account of their deſtruction, ℣. 5, 6, 7. which deſtruction is exaggerated by the prophet's lamentation for it, ℣. 8, 9. and by the mourning of the inhabitants of the ſeveral places that ſhould be involved in it, which are particularly mentioned, ℣. 10—16.

℣. 1. The word of the Lord that came to Micah the Moraſthite, &c.] So called, either from Mareſhah, mentioned ℣. 15. and was a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 44. as the Targum, Jarchi, chi, Kimchi and Zacutus [i]; or rather from Moreſheth, from which Moreſheth-Gath, ℣. 14. is diſtinguiſhed; which Jerom [k] ſays was in his time a ſmall village in the land of Paleſtine near Eleutheropolis. Some think theſe two cities to be one and the ſame; but they appear to be different from the account of Jerom [l] elſewhere. The Arabic verſion reads it, Micah the ſon of Morathi; ſo Cyril in his commentary on this place, mentions it as the ſenſe of ſome, that Morathi was the father of the prophet; which can by no means be aſſented to: in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah; by which it appears that he was cotemporary with Iſaiah, Hoſea, and Amos, tho' they began to propheſy ſomewhat ſooner than he, even in the days of Uzziah; very probably he converſed with theſe prophets, eſpecially Iſaiah, with whom he agrees in many things; his ſtyle is like his, and ſometimes uſes the ſame phraſes: he being of the tribe of Judah, only mentions the kings of that nation, moſt known to him; tho' he propheſied againſt Iſrael, and in the days of Zachariah, Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, Pekah, and Hoſhea: which he ſaw concerning Samaria and Jeruſalem; in the viſion of prophecy: Samaria was the metropolis of the ten tribes of Iſrael, and is put for them all; as Jeruſalem was of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and is put for them. Samaria is mentioned firſt, becauſe it was the head of the greateſt body of people; and as it was the firſt in tranſgreſſion, it was the firſt in puniſhment.

℣. 2. Hear, all ye people, &c.] Or, the people all of them [m]; not all the nations of the world, but the nations of Iſrael, ſo called from their ſeveral tribes; tho' ſome [n] think the reſt of the inhabitants of the earth are meant: theſe are the ſame words which are uſed by Micaiah the prophet in the times of Ahab, long before this time, from whom they might be borrowed, 1 Kings xxii. 28. The phraſe in the Hebrew language, as Aben Ezra obſerves, is very wonderful, and ſerves to ſtrike the minds, and excite the attention of men; it is like the words of a crier in a court of judicature, calling for ſilence: hearken, O earth, and all that therein is; or, its fulneſs [o]; the land of Iſrael and Judah, the whole land of promiſe, and all the inhabitants of it; for to them are the following words directed: and let the Lord God be witneſs againſt you; or in you [p]; the word of the Lord, as the Targum; let him who is the omniſcient God, and knows all hearts, thoughts, words and actions, let him bear witneſs in your conſciences, that what I am about to ſay is truth, and comes from him; is not my own word, but his; and if you diſregard it, and repent not, let him be a witneſs againſt you, and for me, that I have propheſied in his name; that I have faithfully delivered his meſſage, and warned you of your danger, and reproved you for your ſins, and have kept back nothing I have been charged and entruſted with: and now you are ſummoned into open court, and at the tribunal of the great God of heaven and earth; let him be a witneſs againſt you of the many ſins you have been guilty of, and attend whilſt the indictment is read, the charge exhibited, and the proof given by the Lord from his holy temple, from heaven, the habitation of his holineſs; whoſe voice ſpeaking from thence ſhould be hearkened to; who from thence beholds all the actions of men, and from whence his wrath is revealed againſt their ſins, and he gives viſible tokens of his diſpleaſure; and eſpecially when he ſeems to come forth from thence in ſome remarkable inſtances of his power and providence, as follows:

℣. 3. For behold, the Lord cometh out of his place, &c.] Out of heaven, the place of the houſe of his Shekinah or majeſty, as the Targum; where his throne is prepared; where he keeps his court, and diſplays his glory; from whence he removes, not by local motion, ſince he is every where; but by ſome manifeſt exertion of his power, either on the behalf of his people, or in taking vengeance on his and their enemies; or on them ſinning againſt him, in which ſenſe it is probably to be underſtood. It ſignifies not change of place, but of his diſpenſations; going out of his former wonted method into another; removing, as Jarchi has it, from the throne of mercies, to the throne of judgment; doing not acts of mercy, in which he delights, but exerciſing judgment, his ſtrange work. So the Cabaliſtic writers [q] obſerve on the paſſage, that "it cannot be underſtood of place properly "taken, according to Iſ. xl. 12. 1 Kings viii. 27. "for God is the place of the world, not the world "his place; hence our wiſe men ſo expound the "text, he cometh forth out of the meaſure of "mercy, and goes into the meaſure of juſtice;" or property of it. Some underſtand this of his leaving the temple at Jeruſalem, and giving it up into the hands of the Chaldeans; but the former ſenſe is beſt: and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth; which are his footſtool; Samaria and Jeruſalem built on mountains, and all other high towers and fortified places, together with men of high looks and haughty countenances, who exalt themſelves like mountains, and ſwell with pride: theſe the Lord can eaſily ſubdue and humble, bring low and tread down like the mire of the ſtreet; perhaps there may be an alluſion to the high places where idols were worſhipped; and which were the cauſe of the Lord's wrath and vengeance, and of his coming forth in this unuſual way in his providences.

℣. 4. And the mountains ſhall be molten under him, &c.] As Sinai was, when he deſcended on it, and as all nations will be at the general conflagration; but here the words are to be taken, not literally, but figuratively, for the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah, and for the kings, and princes, and great men in them, that lifted up their heads as high, and thought themſelves as ſecure, as mountains; yet when the judgments of God ſhould fall upon them, their hearts would melt thro' fear under him; as well as all their glory and greatneſs depart from them, and they be no more what they were before, but levelled with the meaneſt ſubject: and the valleys ſhall be cleft; have chaſms made in them by the melting of the mountains, or by the flow of water from the hills: theſe may deſign the lower ſort of people, who ſhall have their ſhare in this calamity; the inhabitants of the vallies and country-villages, who, tho' mean and low, ſhall be lower ſtill, and loſe that little ſubſtance, that liberty and thoſe privileges they had; as vallies may be cleft, and open, and ſink into the lower parts of the earth; ſo it is ſignified that theſe people ſhould be in a more depreſſed ſtate and condition: as wax before the fire; melts, and can't ſtand the force of it; ſo the mountains ſhould melt at the preſence of the Lord, and kingdoms and ſtates, and the greateſt and mightieſt of men in them would not be able to ſtand before the fierceneſs of his wrath; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 2: and as the waters that are poured down a ſteep place; that run with great ſwiftneſs, force and rapidity, and there's no ſtopping them; ſo ſhould the judgments of God come down upon the lower ſort of people, the inhabitants of the valleys; neither high nor low would eſcape the indignation of the Lord, or be able to ſtand againſt it, or ſtand up under it.

℣. 5. For the tranſgreſſion of Jacob is all this, and for the ſins of the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] All this evil, all theſe calamities and judgments, ſignified by the above metaphorical phraſes, theſe did not come by chance, nor without reaſon; but were or would be inflicted according to the righteous judgment of God, upon the people of Iſrael and Judah for their manifold ſins and tranſgreſſions, eſpecially their idolatry: and ſhould it be aſked, what is the tranſgreſſion of Jacob? what notorious crime has he been guilty of? or what is the iniquity the two tribes are charged with, that is the cauſe of ſo much ſeverity? the anſwer is, is it not Samaria? the wickedneſs of Samaria, the calf of Samaria? as in Hoſ. vii. 1. and viii. 6. that is, the worſhip of the calf of Samaria; is not that idolatry the tranſgreſſion of Jacob, or which the ten tribes have given into? it is; and a juſt reaſon for all this wrath to come upon them: or, who is the tranſgreſſion of Jacob [r]? who is the ſpring and ſource of it, the cauſe, author, and encourager of it? are they not the kings that have reigned in Samaria from the times of Omri, with their nobles, princes and great men, who, by their edicts, influence and example, have encouraged the worſhip of the golden calves? they are the original root and motive of it, and to them it muſt be aſcribed; they cauſed the people to ſin: or, as the Targum, "where have they of the "houſe of Jacob ſinned? is it not in Samaria?" verily it is, and from thence the metropolis of the nation, the ſin has ſpread itſelf all over it: and what are the high places of Judah? or, who are they [s]? who have been the makers of them? who have ſet them up, and encouraged idolatrous worſhip at them? are they not Jeruſalem? are they not the king, the princes and prieſts that dwell at Jeruſalem? certainly they are; ſuch as Ahaz, and others, in whoſe times this prophet lived; ſee 2 Kings xvi. 4. or, as the Targum, "where did "they of the houſe of Judah commit ſin? was it "not in Jeruſalem?" truly it was, and even in the temple; here Ahaz built an altar like that at Damaſcus, and ſacrificed on it, and ſpoiled the temple, and ſeveral of the veſſels in it, 2 Kings xvi. 10—18.

℣. 6. Therefore I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard, &c.] As a field plowed, and laid in heaps; ſee ch. iii. 12. or as ſtones gathered out of a field, and out of a vineyard planted, and laid in a heap; ſo ſhould this city become a heap of ſtones and rubbiſh, being utterly demoliſhed; and this being done according to the will of God, and thro' his inſtigation of Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria to it, and by his providence ſucceeding his army that beſieged it, is ſaid to be done by him. With this agrees the Vulgate Latin verſion, "I will make Samaria as a "heap of ſtones in a field, when a vineyard is "planted;" ſee Iſ. v. 2. for the city being deſtroyed, cannot be compared to the plants of a vineyard ſet in good order, beautiful and thriving; but as to heaps of ſtones in a field, ſo to ſuch in a vineyard; or to hillocks raiſed up there for the plants of vines; and if the compariſon is to plants themſelves, it muſt be to withered ones, that are good for nothing. The note of ſimilitude as, is not in the text; and the words may be read without it, I will make Samaria an heap of the field, plantings of a vineyard [t]; that is, it ſhall be plowed up, and made an heap of; turned into a field, and vines planted on it; for which its ſituation was very proper, being on an hill, where vines uſed to be planted, and ſo ſhould no more be inhabited as a city: and I will pour down the ſtones thereof into the valley; the ſtones of the buildings and walls of the city, which, being on a hill, when pulled down, rolled into the valley; and with as much ſwiftneſs and force, as waters run down a ſteep place, as in ℣. 4. where the ſame word is uſed as here: and I will diſcover the foundations thereof; which ſhould be raſed up, and left bare; not one ſtone ſhould be upon another; ſo that there ſhould be no traces and footſteps of the city remaining, and it ſhould be difficult to know the place where it ſtood. This is expreſſive of the total deſolation, and utter deſtruction of it: this was not accompliſhed by Salmaneſer when he took it; for tho' he carried captive the inhabitants thereof, he put others in their room; but this was entirely fulfilled, not by Jonathan Maccabæus, tho' he is ſaid [u] to beſiege it, and level it with the ground; but by John Hyrcanus; and the account of the deſtruction of it by him, as given by Joſephus [w], exactly anſwers to this prophecy, and to Hoſ. xiii. 16. where its deſolation is alſo predicted; he ſays that Hyrcanus having beſieged it a year, took it, and not content with this only, he utterly deſtroyed it, making brooks to run thro' it; and by digging it up, ſo that it fell into holes and caverns, inſomuch that there were no ſigns nor traces of the city left. It was indeed afterwards rebuilt by Gabinius the Roman proconſul of Syria, and reſtored by Auguſtus Cæſar to Herod, who adorned and fortified it, and called it by the name of Sebaſte, in honour of Auguſtus [x]; tho' Benjamin of Tudela pretends, that Ahab's palace might be diſcerned there in his time, or the place known where it was, which is not likely; excepting this, his account is probable. "From Luz (he ſays [y]) is one day's "journey to Sebaſte, which is Samaria; and ſtill "there may be perceived there the palace of "Ahab king of Iſrael; and it is a fortified city "on a very high hill, and in it are fountains; "and is a land of brooks of water, and gardens, "orchards, vineyards and olive yards;" but ſince his time it is become more ruinous. Mr. Maundrel, who ſome years ago was upon the ſpot, gives a fuller account of it[y]; “this great city (he ſays[z]) is now wholly converted into gardens; and all the tokens that remain, to teſtify that there has ever been ſuch a place, are only on the north ſide, a large ſquare piazza, encompaſſed with pillars; and on the eaſt, ſome poor remains of a great church, ſaid to be built by the empreſs Helena, over the place where St. John Baptiſt was both impriſoned and beheaded.” So ſay others[a], “the remains of Sebaſte, or the ancient Samaria, tho' long ago laid in ruinous heaps, and a great part of it turned into plowed-land and garden-ground, do ſtill retain ſome monuments of its ancient grandeur, and of thoſe noble edifices in it, with which king Herod cauſed it to be adorned;” and then mention the large ſquare piazza on the north, and the church on the eaſt. It was twelve miles from Dothaim, and as many from Merran, and four from Atharoth, according to Euſebius[b]; and was, as Joſephus[c] ſays, a day's journey from Jeruſalem. Sichem, called by the Turks, Naplus, is now the metropolis of the country of Samaria; Samaria, or Sebaſte, being utterly deſtroyed, as ſays Petrus a Valle[d], a traveller in thoſe parts.

℣. 7. And all the graven images thereof ſhall be beaten to pieces, &c.] By the Aſſyrian army, for the ſake of the gold and ſilver of which they were made, or with which they were adorned, as was uſually done by conquerors to the gods of the nations they conquered; theſe were the calf of Samaria, and other idols; and not only thoſe in the city of Samaria, but in all the other cities of Iſrael, which fell into the hands of the Aſſyrian monarch; ſee Iſ. x. 11: and all the hires thereof ſhall be burnt with fire; this the Targum alſo interprets of idols; ſuch as eſcaped the plunder of the ſoldiers, ſhould be burnt with fire: Kimchi, by hires, underſtands the beautiful garments, and other ornaments, with which they adorned their idols, which were gifts unto them; and they committing ſpiritual adultery with them, theſe are compared to the hire of an harlot: or it may deſign their fine houſes, and the furniture of them, all their ſubſtance and riches, which they looked upon as obtained by entring into alliances with idolatrous nations, and as the hire and reward of their idolatry; all theſe ſhould be conſumed by fire, when the city was taken: and all the idols thereof will I lay deſolate; ſuch as were not broke to pieces, nor burnt, ſhould be thrown down, and trampled upon, and made no account of, or carried away with other ſpoil. The Targum interprets it of the houſes or temples of their idols, which ſhould be demoliſhed. By this and a preceding clauſe it appears, that beſides the golden calf, there were other idols worſhipped in Samaria. In the times of Ahab, was the image of Baal, with others, for which he built an altar and a temple in Samaria, and a grove, 1 Kings xvi. 31, 32, 33. 2 Kings x. 26, 27. and at the time it was taken by Salmaneſer, there were idols in it, as appears from Iſ. x. 10, 11. and xxxvi. 19. and there were ſtill more, after a colony of the Babylonians and others were introduced into it; the names of which were Succoth-Benoth, Nergal, Aſhima, Nibhaz, Tartak, Adrammelech, and Anammelech. The firſt of theſe is thought, by Selden[e], to be Venus; and the two laſt, both by him and Braunius[f], to be the ſame with Moloch, having the ſignification of a king in them, as that word ſignifies, and children being burnt unto them: they are all difficult to be underſtood. The account the Jews[g] give of them is, that Succoth-Benoth were images of a hen and chickens; Nergal, a cock; Aſhima, a goat without hair; Nibhaz, or Nibchan, as ſometimes read, a dog; and Tartak, an aſs; Adrammelech, a mule, or a peacock; and Anammelech, a horſe, or a pheaſant. And it was not unuſual for ſome of theſe creatures to be worſhipped by the heathens, as a cock by the Syrians, and others; a goat, by the Mendeſians; and the dog Anubis, perhaps the ſame with Nibhaz, by the Egyptians[h]. And tho' the inhabitants of Samaria might be better inſtructed, after Manaſſeh and other Jews came to reſide among them in after-times, ſtill they retained idolatrous practices; and even in the times of our Lord, they were ignorant of the true object of religious worſhip, John iv. 22. and they are charged by the Jewiſh writers[i] with worſhipping the image of a dove on mount Gerizzim, and alſo ſuch ſtrange gods, the Teraphim, which Jacob hid under the oak at Sichem; however, let their idols be what they will they worſhipped, they are now utterly deſtroyed, according to this prophecy. For ſhe gathered it of the hire of an harlot, and they ſhall return to the hire of an harlot; as all the riches of Samaria and its inhabitants, were gathered together as the reward of their idolatry, as they imagined, ſo they ſhould return to idolaters, the Aſſyrians; to Nineveh, called the well-favoured harlot, Nah. iii. 4. the metropolis of the Aſſyrian empire; and to the houſe or temple of thoſe that worſhipped idols, as the Targum; with which they ſhould adorn their idols, or uſe them in idolatrous worſhip: or the ſenſe in general is, that as their riches were ill-gotten, as the hire of a harlot, and which never proſpers, ſo theirs ſhould come to nothing; as it came, ſo it ſhould go: according to our proverb, lightly come, lightly go. The alluſion ſeems to be to harlots proſtituting themſelves in the temples of idols, which was common among the heathens, as at Comana and Corinth, as Strabo[k] relates; and particularly among the Babylonians and Aſſyrians, which may be here referred to: for Herodotus[l] ſays, it was a law with the Babylonians, that every woman of that country, ſhould once in her life ſit in the temple of Venus, and lie with a ſtrange man: here women uſed to ſit with a crown upon their heads; nor might they return home, until ſome ſtranger threw money into their laps, and took them out of the temple, and lay with them; and he that caſt it muſt ſay, I implore the goddeſs Mylitta for thee; the name by which the Aſſyrians call Venus; nor was it lawful to reject the price or the money, be it what it would, for it was converted to holy uſes: and Strabo[m] affirms much the ſame. So the Phœnician women uſed to proſtitute themſelves in the temples of their idols, and dedicate there the hire of their bodies to their gods, thinking thereby to appeaſe their deities, and obtain good things for themſelves[n].

ỳ. 8. Therefore I will wail and howl, I will go ſtript and naked, &c.] To his ſhirt, putting off his upper garment; the rough one, ſuch as the prophets uſed to wear; which he did as the greater ſign of his mourning: ſometimes, in ſuch caſes, they rent their garments; at other times they ſtripped themſelves of them, and walked naked, as Iſaiah did, ch. xx. 3, 4. he went about like a mad man, one diſturbed in his mind, bereft of his ſenſes, becauſe of the deſolation coming upon Iſrael; and without his cloaths, as ſuch perſons often do: ſo the word rendered ſtript ſignifies, as the Jewiſh commentators obſerve. This lamentation, and with theſe circumſtances, the prophet made in his own perſon, to ſhew the reality and certainty of their ruin, and to repreſent to them the deſolate condition they would be in, deſtitute of all good things, and to affect them with it; as well as to expreſs the ſympathy of his heart, and thereby to aſſure them that it was not out of ill-will to them, or a ſpirit of revenge, that he delivered ſuch a meſſage: or this he did in the perſon of all the people, ſhewing what they would do, and that this would be their caſe ſhortly. So the Targum, "for this they ſhall wail and howl, and go naked among the ſpoilers." I will make a wailing like the dragons; as in their fight with elephants, at which time they make a hideous noiſe[n]; and whoſe hiſſings have been very terrible to large bodies of men. Ælianus[o] ſpeaks of a dragon in India, which when it perceived Alexander's army near at hand, gave ſuch a prodigious hiſs and blaſt, that it greatly frighted and diſturbed the whole army: and he relates[p] of another, that was in a valley near mount Pellenæus, in the iſle of Chios, whoſe hiſſing was very terrible to the inhabitants of that place: and Bochart[q] conjectures, that this their hiſſing is here referred to; and who obſerves of the whale, that it has its name from a word in the Hebrew tongue, which ſignifies to lament; and which word is here uſed, and is frequently uſed of large fiſhes, as whales, ſea-calves, dolphins, &c. which make a great noiſe and bellowing, as the ſea-calf; particularly the balæna, which is one kind of a whale, and makes ſuch a large and continued noiſe, as to be heard at the diſtance of two miles, as Rondeletius[r] ſays; and dolphins are ſaid to make a moan and groaning like human creatures, as Pliny[s] and Solinus[t] report: and Peter Gillius relates, from his own experience, that lodging one night in a veſſel, in which many dolphins were taken, there were ſuch weeping and mourning, that he could not ſleep for them; he thought they deplored their condition, with mourning, lamentation, and a large flow of tears, as men do, and therefore could not help pitying their caſe; and while the fiſherman was aſleep, took that which was next him, that ſeemed to mourn moſt, and caſt it into the ſea; but this was of no avail, for the reſt increaſed their mourning more and more, and ſeemed plainly to deſire the like deliverance; ſo that all the night he was in the midſt of moſt bitter moaning: wherefore Bochart, who quotes theſe inſtances, elſewhere[u] thinks, that the prophet compares his mourning with the mourning of theſe creatures, rather than with the hiſſing of dragons. Some[w] think crocodiles are here meant; and of them it is reported[x], that when they have eat the body of a creature, which they do firſt, and come to the head, they weep over it with tears; hence the proverb of crocodiles tears, for hypocritical ones; but it can't well be thought ſurely, that the prophet would compare his mourning to that of ſuch a creature. The learned Pocock thinks it more reaſonable, that the jackalls are meant, called by the Arabians, Ebn Awi, rather than dragons; a creature of a ſize between a fox and a wolf, or a dog and a fox, which makes a dreadful howling in the night; by which travellers unacquainted with it, would think a company of women or children were howling, and goes before the lion as his provider. And mourning as the owls; or daughters of the owl[y]; which is a night-bird, and makes a very frightful noiſe, eſpecially the ſcriech-owl. The Targum interprets it of the oſtrich[z]; and it may be meant either of the mourning it makes when its young are about to be taken away, and it expoſes itſelf to danger on their account, and periſhes in the attempt. Ælianus[a] reports, that they are taken by ſharp iron ſpikes fixed about their neſt, when they are returning to their young, after having been in queſt of food for them; and tho' they ſee the ſhining iron, yet ſuch is their vehement deſire after their young, that they ſpread their wings like ſails, and with great ſwiftneſs and noiſe ruſh into the neſt, where they are transfixed with the ſpikes, and die: and not only Vatablus obſerves, that theſe creatures have a very mournful voice; but Bochart[b] has ſhewn from the Arabic writers, that they frequently cry and howl; and from John de Laet, who affirms, that thoſe in the parts about Braſil cry ſo loud, as to be heard half a mile; and indeed they have their name from crying and howling. The Targum renders it by a word which ſignifies pleaſant; and ſo Onkelos on Lev. xi. 16. by an antiphraſis, becauſe its voice is ſo very unpleaſant. Or ſince the words may be rendered, the daughters of the oſtrich[c], it may be underſtood of the mourning of its young, when left by her, when they make a hideous noiſe and miſerable moan, as ſome obſerve[d].

ỳ. 9. For her wound is incurable, &c.] Or her ſtroke is deſperate[e]. The ruin of Samaria, and the ten tribes, was inevitable; the decree being gone forth, and they hardened in their ſins, and continuing in their impenitence; and their deſtruction was irrevocable; they were not to be reſtored again, nor are they to this day; nor will be, till the time comes that all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: or ſhe is grievouſly ſick of her wounds; juſt ready to die, upon the brink of ruin, and no hope of ſaving her; this is the cauſe and reaſon of the above lamentation of the prophet: and what increaſed his grief and ſorrow the more was, for it is come unto Judah; the calamity has reached the land of Judah; it ſtopped not with Iſrael or the ten tribes, but ſpread itſelf into the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin; for the Aſſyrian army having taken Samaria, and carried Iſrael captive, in a ſhort time, about ſeven or eight years, invaded Judea, and took the fenced cities of Judah in Hezekiah's time, in which Micah propheſied. He is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jeruſalem; Sennacherib king of Aſſyria having taken the fenced cities, came up to the very gates of Jeruſalem, and beſieged it, where the courts of judicature were kept, and the people reſorted to, to have juſtice done them; and Micah being of the tribe of Judah, calls them his people, and was the more affected with their diſtreſs.

℣. 10. Declare ye it not at Gath, &c.] A city of the Philiſtines, put for all the reſt: the phraſe is borrowed from 2 Sam. i. 20. where the reaſon is given, and holds good here as there; and the ſenſe is, not that the deſtruction of Iſrael, or the invaſion of Judea, or the beſieging of Jeruſalem, could be hid from the Philiſtines; but that it was a thing deſirable, was it poſſible, ſince it would be matter of rejoicing to them, and that would be an aggravation of the diſtreſs of Iſrael and Judah: weep ye not at all; that is, before the Philiſtines, or ſuch like enemies, leſt they ſhould laugh and ſcoff at you; tho' they had reaſon to weep, and did and ought to weep in ſecret; yet as much as in them lay, it would be right to forbear it openly, becauſe of the inſults and reproach of the enemy. The learned Reland [f] ſuſpects that it ſhould be read, weep not in Acco; which was another city in Paleſtine, to the north from the enemy, as Gath was to the ſouth; and obſerves, that there is a like paronomaſia [g] in the words, as in the places aftermentioned. Acco is the ſame with Ptolemais, mentioned in Acts xxi. 7. ſee the note there. It had this name from Ptolemy Lagus king of Egypt, who enlarged it, and called it after his own name: but Mr. Maundrel [h] obſerves, "now ſince it hath been "in the poſſeſſion of the Turks, it has, according "to the example of many other cities in Turky, "caſt off its Greek, and recovered ſome ſemblance "of its old Hebrew name again, being called Acca "or Acra—As to its ſituation, he ſays, it enjoys "all poſſible advantages, both of ſea and land; "on its north and eaſt ſides, it is compaſſed with "a ſpacious and fertile plain; on the weſt it is "waſhed by the Mediterranean ſea; and on the "ſouth by a large bay, extending from the city "as far as mount Carmel." In the houſe of Aphrah roll thyſelf in the duſt; as mourners uſed to do, ſit in the duſt, or cover their heads with it, or wallow in it; this is allowed to be done privately, in houſes or in towns diſtinct from the Philiſtines, as Aphrah or Ophrah was, which was in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 23. called here Aphrah, to make it better agree with Aphar, duſt, to which the alluſion is: and it may be rendered, in the houſe of duſt, roll thyſelf in the duſt, having reſpect to the condition houſes would be in at this time, mere heaps of duſt and rubbiſh, ſo that they would find enough eaſily to roll themſelves in. Here is a double reading; the Keri or marginal reading, which the Maſora directs to, and we follow, is, roll thyſelf: but the Cetib or writing is, I have rolled myſelf [i]; and ſo are the words of the prophet, who before ſays, he wailed and howled, and went ſtript and naked; here he ſays, as a further token of his ſorrow, that he rolled himſelf in duſt, and as an example for Iſrael to do the like. This place was a village in the times of Jerom [k], and was called Effrem; it was five miles from Bethel to the eaſt.

℣. 11. Paſs ye away, thou inhabitant of Saphir, &c.] A village, according to Euſebius [l], between Eleutheropolis and Aſkkelon; perhaps the ſame with Sephoron; it is mentioned among the cities of Judah, in the Greek verſion of Joſh. xv. 48. Calmet [m] conjectures, the prophet intends the city of Sephoris or Sephora in Galilee. Hillerus [n] takes it to be the ſame with Parah, mentioned with Ophrah, in Joſh. xviii. 23. ſo called from its ornament, neatneſs, beauty, and elegance, as both words ſignify, to which the prophet alludes: now every one of the inhabitants of this place are called upon to prepare to go into captivity to Babylon; which would certainly be their caſe, tho' they dwelled in fine buildings, neat houſes, and ſtreets well paved. In the margin it is, thou that dwelleſt fairly [o]; which ſome underſtand of Samaria; others of Judea; and particularly Jeruſalem, beautifully ſituated, yet ſhould go into captivity: having thy ſhame naked; their city diſmantled, their houſes plundered, and they ſtript of their garments, and the ſhame of their nakedneſs diſcovered; which muſt be the more diſtreſſing to beautiful perſons, that have dreſſed neatly, and lived in handſome well-built houſes, and elegantly furniſhed, and now all the reverſe. The inhabitant of Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of Beth-ezel; or houſe of Azel, where the poſterity of Azel, of the tribe of Benjamin, dwelt. Hillerus [p] ſuſpects it to be the ſame with Moza, Joſh. xviii. 26. ſo called from Moza, the great grandfather of Azel, 1 Chron. viii. 37, 38. Capellus takes it to be the ſame with Azel in Zech. xiv. 5. This place being taken and plundered by the enemy, occaſioned great mourning among the inhabitants: and it ſeems to have been taken firſt, before Zaanan; perhaps the ſame with Zenan, Joſh. xv. 37. and is here read Sennan by Aquila; the inhabitants of which did not come forth, in which there is an alluſion to its name [q], either to help them in their diſtreſs, or to condole them; they being in fear of the enemy themſelves, and in arms in their own defence, expecting it would be their turn next, and that they ſhould ſhare the ſame fate with them. Some think, that under the name of Beth-ezel, is meant Bethel; and of Zaanan, Zion; and that the ſenſe is, that when Bethel, Samaria, and the ten tribes, were in diſtreſs, they of Zion and Judea did not come to give them any relief; and when they were carried captive, did not mourn with them, were not affected with their caſe, nor troubled themſelves about them. He ſhall receive of him his ſtanding; either the enemy, as R. Joſeph Kimchi, ſhall receive of the inhabitants of Zaanan his ſtanding; that is, he ſhall make them dearly pay for ſtopping him, for making him ſtand and ſtay ſo long before their city ere he could take it; for all his loſs of time, men, and money, in beſieging it; by demoliſhing their city, plundering their houſes, and carrying them captive; who remained, he put to death by the ſword. Aben Ezra interprets the word receive, of doctrine or learning, as in Prov. iv. 2. and renders it, he ſhall learn; either Beth-ezel, or rather Zaanan ſhall learn, by the caſe of Beth-ezel, and other neighbouring places, what would be his own caſe, whether he ſhould ſtand or fall.

℣. 12. For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good, &c.] Or tho' they waited for good [r]; expected to have it, yet the reverſe beſel them: or verily they were grieved for good [s]; for the good things they had loſt, or were likely to loſe; and which they had no more hope of, when they ſaw Jeruſalem in diſtreſs. Grotius thinks, by tranſpoſition of letters, Ramoth is intended by Maroth, or the many Ramahs which were in Judah and Benjamin; but Hillerus [t] is of opinion, that Jarmuth is meant, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 35. the word Maroth, ſignifies bitterneſs; ſee Ruth i. 20. and according to others, rough places; and may deſign the inhabitants of ſuch places that were in great bitterneſs and trouble becauſe of the invaſion of the enemy, who before that had promiſed themſelves good things, and lived in the expectation of them: but evil came down from the Lord unto the gate of Jeruſalem; meaning the Aſſyrian army under Sennacherib, which came into the land of Judea by the order, direction, and providence of God, like an overflowing flood; which ſpread itſelf over the land, and reached to the very gates of Jeruſalem, which was beſieged by it, and threatned with deſtruction: or becauſe evil came down, &c. that is, becauſe of that, the inhabitants of Maroth grieved, or were in pain, as a woman in travail.

℣. 13. O thou inhabitant of Lachiſh, bind the chariot to the ſwift beaſt, &c.] Horſes, camels, dromedaries, or mules. Some [u] render the word ſwift horſe or horſes, poſt horſes; others dromedaries [w]; and ſome mules [x]: the two latter ſeem more eſpecially to be meant, either dromedaries, as the word is tranſlated in 1 Kings iv. 28. which is a very ſwift creature: Iſidore ſays [y], the dromedary is one ſort of camels, of a leſſer ſtature, yet ſwifter, from whence it has its name, and is uſed to go more than a hundred miles a day; this is thought to be what the Jews [z] call a flying camel; which the gloſs ſays is a ſort of camels, that are as ſwift in running as a bird that flies; they are lighter made than a camel, and go at a much greater rate; whereas a camel goes at the rate of ten leagues a day, the dromedary will perform a journey of forty leagues in a day; they make uſe of them in the Indies for going poſt, and expreſſes frequently perform a journey of eight hundred miles upon them in the ſpace of a week [a]: this may ſerve the better to illuſtrate Jer. ii. 23. and improve the note there: but whether theſe were uſed in chariots I don't find; only Bochart [b] takes notice of a kind of camel, that has, like the dromedary, two bunches on its back, which the Arabians call Bochet, and put to chariots: or elſe mules are meant, for by comparing the above text in 1 Kings iv. 28. with 2 Chron. ix. 24. it looks as if mules were there intended; and ſo the word here uſed is rendered in Eſth. viii. 10, 14. and by their being there ſaid to be uſed for poſts to ride on expreſſes, it appears to be a ſwift creature. Ælianus [c] makes mention of mules in India of a red colour, very famous for running; and mules were uſed in the Olympic games, and many riders of them got the victory; and that theſe were uſed in chariots, there is no doubt to be made of it: Homer [d] ſpeaks of mules drawing a four-wheeled chariot; ſo Pauſanias [e] of mules yoked together, and drawing a chariot inſtead of horſes; and the Septuagint verſion of Iſ. lxvi. 20. inſtead of in litters and on mules, renders it, in litters or carriages of mules: but be they one or the other that are here meant, they were creatures well known, and being ſwift were uſed in chariots, to which they were bound and faſtened in order to draw them, and which we call putting to; this the inhabitants of Lachiſh [f] are bid to do, in order to make their eſcape, and flee as faſt as they could from the enemy, advancing to beſiege them; as they were beſieged by the army of Sennacherib, before he came to Jeruſalem, 2 Chron. xxxii. 1, 9. Or theſe words may be ſpoken in an ironical and ſarcaſtic way, that whereas they had abounded in horſes and chariots, and frequently rode about their ſtreets in them, now let them make uſe of them, and get away if they could; and may ſuggeſt, that inſtead of riding in theſe, they ſhould be obliged to walk on foot into captivity. Lachiſh was a city in the tribe of Judah, in the times of Jerom [g]; it was a village ſeven miles from Eleutheropolis, as you go to Daroma or the ſouth. She is the beginning of the ſin to the daughter of Zion; lying upon the borders of the ten tribes, as Lachiſh did, it was the firſt of the cities of Judah that gave into the idolatry of Jeroboam, the worſhipping of the calves; and from thence it ſpread itſelf to Zion and Jeruſalem; and being a ringleader in this ſin, ſhould be puniſhed for it: tho' ſome think this refers to their conſpiracy with the citizens of Jeruſalem againſt king Amaziah, and the murder of him in this place, now puniſhed for it, 2 Kings xiv. 18, 19: for the tranſgreſſions of Iſrael were found in thee; not only their idolatry, but all other ſins, with which it abounded; it was a very wicked place, and therefore no wonder it was given up to deſtruction. The Targum is, "for the tranſgreſſors of Iſrael were found "in thee."

℣. 14. Therefore ſhalt thou give preſents to Moreſheth-Gath, &c.] Since Lachiſh was the cauſe of leading Judah into idolatry, and was a city ſo very wicked; therefore it ſhould be reduced to ſuch diſtreſs, as to ſend meſſengers with preſents to the Philiſtines at Moreſheth-Gath, a place near to Gath of the Philiſtines, and may include that and other cities of theirs, to come and help them againſt the Aſſyrians: the houſes of Achzib ſhall be a lie to the kings of Iſrael; a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 44. or of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 29. the ſame with Chezib, Gen. xxxviii. 5. and called Ecdippa by Joſephus [h], Pliny [i], and Ptolemy [k]. place which divided between the land of Iſrael, which they poſſeſſed who came out of Babylon, and that land which they enjoyed who came out of Egypt; but the Jews are not agreed about the ſituation of it. One of their writers [n] places it to the north-eaſt of the land of Iſrael: but another [o] obſerves, and proves from one that reſided in thoſe parts ſome time, and diligently enquired into, and made his obſervation on places, that Cezib, and alſo Aco and Amana, frequently mentioned with it, were all on the weſtern ſea of the land of Iſrael, that is, the Mediterrenean ſea; in which he was right, without all doubt: the place is now called Zib by contraction, of which Mr. Maundrel [p] gives this account, "having travelled about one hour "in the plain of Acra, we paſſed by an old town "called Zib, ſituate on an aſcent cloſe by the ſea-"ſide; this may probably be the old Achzib, "mentioned Joſh. xix. 29. and Judg. i. 31. called "afterwards Ecdippa; for St. Jerom [q] places Achzib nine miles diſtant from Ptolemais (or Aco) "towards Tyre, to which account we found the "ſituation of Zib exactly agreeing." Now the houſes, or families that dwelt in this place; or the idols temples there, as ſome, and the idolatry exerciſed therein, ſhould be a lie unto, or diſappoint the expectations of the kings of Iſrael; which, according to Kimchi, is put for Judah, who placed confidence in them, and had dependence on them: there is an elegant paronomaſia between Achzib and a lie [r]. The Targum is, "thou ſhalt ſend gifts to "the heirs of Gath; the houſes of Achzib ſhall "be delivered to the people, becauſe of the ſins "of the kings of Iſrael, who worſhipped idols in "them."

℣. 15. Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of Mareſhah, &c.] Another city in the tribe of Judah, mentioned with Achzib in Joſh. xv. 44. and is by many thought to be the birth-place of this prophet; and if ſo, his faithfulneſs may be obſerved, in declaring the whole counſel of God, tho' againſt his own native place; and this muſt be an aggravation of the ſin of the inhabitants of it, that they had ſuch a prophet that aroſe from them, and they regarded him not. There is a beautiful alluſion in the word heir to Mareſhah [s], which ſignifies an inheritance; and here were an heir or heirs for it, as the Targum; not the Perſians, as ſome in Aben Ezra, and in an Agadah mentioned by Jarchi, who deſcended from Elam the firſt-born of Shem; and ſo had a right of inheritance, as thoſe interpreters ſuppoſe; but the king of Aſſyria, who ſhould invade the land, and ſeize upon this place among others, and poſſeſs it, as if it was his by right of inheritance, having obtained it by conqueſt; and this being by the permiſſion, and according to the will of God, he is ſaid to be brought by him to it. Capellus thinks on the contrary, that Hezekiah and his poſterity are meant: he ſhall come unto Adullam the glory of Iſrael; another city in the tribe of Judah, a royal one, Joſh. xv. 35. ſaid by Jerom to be in his time no ſmall village, and to be about ten miles from Eleutheropolis; called the glory of Iſrael, having been a royal city in Joſhua's time, Joſh. xii. 15. and a fenced city in the times of Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 7. and Euſebius ſays it was a large town; and Jerom ſays it was not a ſmall one in his time; tho' ſome think Jeruſalem is meant, the metropolis of the nation, Iſrael being put for Judah, as in the preceding verſe; and to be read, he that is the enemy and heir, ſhall come to Adullam, yea to the glory of Iſrael [t]; even to Jeruſalem, the moſt glorious city in all the tribes; tho' others are of opinion, that this is the character of the enemy or heir that ſhould come thither, called ſo by way of contradiction, as coming to the reproach and diſgrace of Iſrael; or ironically, whom Iſrael before gloried in, when they had recourſe to him for help. The margin of our bible reads, the glory of Iſrael ſhall come to Adullam; that is, the great men, the princes and heads of the people ſhall flee to the cave of Adullam [u], to hide them from the enemy, where David was hid from Saul; ſee 1 Sam. xxii. 1. Burkius [w], a very late commentator, takes Adullam for an appellative, and with Hillerus [x] renders it, the perpetuity of the yoke; and the whole thus, at the perpetuity of the yoke, the glory of Iſrael ſhall come; that is, when all things ſhall ſeem to tend to this, that the yoke once laid on Iſrael by the Gentiles ſhall become perpetual, without any hope of deliverance, then ſhall come the deliverer, that is Jeſus, the glory of Iſrael; and adds he, God forbid we ſhould think of any other ſubject here; and ſo he interprets the heir in the preceding clauſe of the Meſſiah; and which is a ſenſe far from being deſpicable.

℣. 16. Make thee bald, and poll thee for thy delicate children, &c.] Which is ſaid, either with reſpect to Mareſhah, or to Adullam, or to the whole land, as Kimchi obſerves; rather to the latter; and that either to Iſrael, or to Judah, or both; the prophecy in general being concerning them both, ℣. 1. making baldneſs, whether by plucking off the hair, or by ſhaving it, was uſed in token of mourning, Job i. 20. Jer. vii. 29. and ſo it is deſigned to expreſs it here: the inhabitants of the land are called to lamentation and weeping for their children taken from them, whom they dearly loved, and brought up in a delicate manner. The Targum is, "pluck off thy hair, and caſt it upon "the children of thy delight;" and Sanctius obſerves, that it was a cuſtom with the Gentiles to cut off their hair, and caſt it into the graves of their kindred and friends at their interment, to which he thinks the prophet alludes: enlarge thy baldneſs as the eagle; when it moults, and caſts off all its feathers, as it does in old age, and ſo renews its youth; to which the alluſion ſeems to be in Pſ. ciii. 5. Iſ. xl. 31. or every year, as birds of prey uſually do at the beginning of the ſpring. The Jewiſh writers [y] ſay, this happens to it every ten years; when finding its feathers heavy and unfit for flying, it makes a tour to the ſun with all its force it can, to get as near it as poſſible; and having heated its plumage exceſſively, it caſts itſelf into the ſea for cooling, and then its feathers fall off, and new ones ſucceed; and this it does until it is an hundred years old; and to its then ſtate of baldneſs, whilſt it is moulting, is the alluſion here; unleſs it can be thought any reſpect is had to that kind of eagle which is called the bald one. In Virginia [a] there are three ſorts of eagles; one is the grey eagle, about the ſize of a kite; another the black eagle, reſembling thoſe in England; and a third the bald eagle, ſo called becauſe the upper part of the neck and head are covered with a ſort of white down: but the former ſort of baldneſs ſeems to be intended, which is at certain ſtated times, and not what always is, and is only partial; for it denotes ſuch an univerſal baldneſs to be made, as to take in all the parts of the body where any hair grows; as expreſſive of the general devaſtation that ſhould be made, which would be the cauſe of this great mourning: for they are gone into captivity from thee; that is, the delicate children of Iſrael and Judah, and ſo were as dead unto them, or worſe: this was accompliſhed in Iſrael or the ten tribes, partly by Tiglath-Pileſer, and more completely by Salmaneſer, kings of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xv. 29. and xvii. 6. and in Judah or the two tribes, when Sennacherib came and took their fenced cities; and doubtleſs ſome of the inhabitants and their children were carried captive by him, tho' not Jeruſalem; and therefore cannot be addreſſed here, as ſome do interpret the words, unleſs the prophecy is to be extended to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Babylonians.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter complaint is made of the ſins of the people of Iſrael, and they are threatened with puniſhment for them. The ſins they are charged with are covetouſneſs, oppreſſion and injuſtice, which were premeditated, and done deliberately, ℣. 1, 2. therefore the Lord deviſed evil againſt them, they ſhould not eſcape; and which would bring down their pride, and cauſe them to take up a lamentation, becauſe they ſhould not enjoy the portion of land that belonged to them, ℣. 3, 4, 5. they are further charged with oppoſing the prophets of the Lord, the folly and wickedneſs of which is expoſed, ℣. 6, 7. and with great inhumanity and barbarity, even to women and children, ℣. 8, 9. and therefore are ordered to expect and prepare for a removal out of their land, ℣. 10. and the rather, ſince they gave encouragement and heed to falſe prophets, and delighted in them, ℣. 11. and the chapter is concluded with words of comfort to the remnant among them, and with precious promiſes of the Meſſiah, and the bleſſings of grace by him, ℣. 12, 13.

℣. 1. Wo to them that deviſe iniquity, &c.] Any kind of iniquity; idolatry, or worſhipping of idols, for the word is uſed ſometimes for an idol; or the ſin of uncleanneſs, on which the thoughts too often dwell in the night-ſeaſon; or coveting of neighbours goods, and oppreſſing the poor; ſins which are inſtanced in the next verſe; and every thing that is vain, fooliſh and wicked, and in the iſſue brings trouble and diſtreſs; now a wo is denounced againſt ſuch that think on ſuch things, and pleaſe themſelves with them in their imaginations, and contrive ways and means to commit them: and work evil upon their beds; when the ſenſes being leſs engaged, the thoughts are more free; but ſhould not be employed about evil; but either in meditating on the divine goodneſs, and praiſing the Lord for his mercies; or in examining a man's heart, ſtate and caſe, and mourning over his ſins, and applying to God for the remiſſion of them; but inſtead of this, the perſons here threatened are ſaid to work evil on their beds, when they ſhould be aſleep and at reſt, or engaged in the above things; that is, they plot and contrive how to accompliſh the evil they meditate; they determine upon doing it, and are as ſure of effecting it, as if it was actually done; and do act it over in their own minds, as if it was real; ſee Pſ. xxxvi. 4: when the morning is light, they practiſe it; they wiſh and wait for the morning-light, and as ſoon as it appears they riſe; and inſtead of bleſſing God for the mercies of the night, and going about their lawful buſineſs, they endeavour to put in practice with all vigour and diligence, and as expeditiouſly as they can, what they have projected and ſchemed in the night-ſeaſon: becauſe it is in the power of their hand; to commit it; and they have no principle of goodneſs in them, nor fear of God before them to reſtrain them from it: or, becauſe their hand is unto power [b]; it is ſtretched out, and made uſe of in the commiſſion of ſin to the utmoſt of their power, without any regard to God or man. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, becauſe their hand is againſt God; their hearts are enmity to God, and therefore they oppoſe him with both their hands, and care not what iniquity they commit; they are rebels againſt him, and will not be ſubject to him. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions are, becauſe they lift not up their hands to God; they don't pray to him, and therefore are bold and daring to perpetrate the groſſeſt iniquity, which a praying man durſt not do; but the Syriac verſion is the reverſe, they do lift up their hands to God; make a ſhew of religion and devotion, when their hearts and their hands are deeply engaged in ſinning; which ſhows their impudence and hypocriſy; but the paſſages in Gen. xxxi. 29. Deut. xxxii. 28. Prov. iii. 27. favour and confirm our verſion, and the ſenſe of it; ſo the Targum.

℣. 2. And they covet fields, and take them by violence, &c.] The fields of their poor neighbours, which lie near them, and convenient [illegible] them; they wiſh they were theirs, and they conti[illegible] ways and means to get them into their poſſeſſion; and if they can't get them by fair means, if they can't perſuade them to ſell them, or at their price, they'll either uſe ſome crafty method to get them from them, or they'll take them away by force and violence; as Ahab got Naboth's vineyard from him: and houſes, and take them away; they covet the houſes of their neighbours alſo, and take the ſame courſe to get them out of their hands, and add them to their own eſtates: ſo they oppreſs a man and his houſe, even a man and his heritage; not only diſpoſſeſs him of his houſe to dwell in, but of his paternal inheritance, what he received from his anceſtors, and ſhould have tranſmitted to his poſterity, being unalienable; and ſo diſtreſſed a man and his family for the preſent, and his poſterity after him. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, they calumniate lumniate a man and his houſe; which ſeems to be deſigned to make it agree with the ſtory of Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 13.

℣. 3. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord, behold, againſt this family do I deviſe an evil, &c.] Becauſe of thoſe evils of covetouſneſs, oppreſſion and injuſtice ſecretly deviſed, and deliberately committed; the Lord, who neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps, declares, and would have it obſerved, that he had deviſed an evil of puniſhment againſt the whole nation of Iſrael, the ten tribes particularly, among whom their ſins greatly prevailed; even an invaſion of their land by the Aſſyrians, and the carrying of them captive from it into foreign parts: from which ye ſhall not remove your necks; that is, they ſhould not be able to deliver themſelves from it; they would not be able to ſtop the enemy in his progreſs, having entered their land; nor oblige him to break up the ſiege of their city, before which he would ſit, and there continue till he had taken it; and being carried captive by him, they would never be able to free themſelves from the yoke of bondage put upon them, and under which they remain unto this day. The alluſion is to beaſts ſlipping their necks out of the collar or yoke put upon them: theſe ſons of Belial had broke off the yoke of God's commandments, and now he'll put another yoke upon them, they ſhall never be able to caſt off until the time of the reſtitution of all things, when all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: neither ſhall ye go haughtily; as they now did, in an erect poſture, with necks ſtretched out, and hands lifted up high, and looking upon others with ſcorn and contempt; but hereafter it ſhould be otherwiſe, their heads would hang down, their countenances be dejected, and their backs bowed with the burdens upon them: for this time is evil; very calamitous, afflictive and diſtreſſing; and ſo not a time for pride and haughtineſs, but for dejection and humiliation; ſee Eph. v. 16.

℣. 4. In that day ſhall one take up a parable againſt you, &c.] Making uſe of your name, as a bye-word, a proverb, a taunt, and a jeer; mocking at your calamities and miſeries: or, concerning you [c]; take up and deliver out a narrative of your troubles, in figurative and parabolical expreſſions; which Kimchi thinks is to be underſtood of a falſe prophet, finding his prophecies and promiſes come to nothing; or rather a ſtranger, a ſtander-by, a ſpectator of their miſeries, an inſulting enemy, mimicking and perſonating them; or one of themſelves, in the name of the reſt: and lament with a doleful lamentation; or, lament a lamentation of lamentation [d]; a very grievous one: or, a lamentation that is, or ſhall be, or is done [e]; a real one, and which will continue: and ſay, we be utterly ſpoiled; our perſons, families and friends; our eſtates, fields and vineyards; our towns and cities, and even our whole land, all laid waſte, ſpoiled and plundered: he hath changed the portion of my people; the land of Iſrael, which was the portion of the people of it, given unto them as their portion by the Lord; but now he, or the enemy the Aſſyrian, or God by him, had changed the poſſeſſors of it; had taken it away from Iſrael, and given it to others: how hath he removed it from me! the land that was my portion, and the portion of my people; how comes it to paſs that he hath taken away that which was my property, and given it to another! how ſtrange is this! how ſuddenly was it done! and by what means! turning away, he hath divided our fields; either God turning away from his people, becauſe of their ſins, divided their fields among their enemies; inſtead of reſtoring [f], as ſome read it, he did ſo; or the enemy the Aſſyrian, turning away after he had conquered the land, and about to return to his own country, divided it among his ſoldiers: or, to the perverſe, or rebellious one [g] he divideth our fields; that is, the Lord divides them to the wicked, perverſe and blaſpheming king of Aſſyria; ſo the word is uſed of one that goes on frowardly, and backſlides, Iſ. lvii. 17. Jer. iii. 14, 22.

℣. 5. Therefore thou ſhalt have none that ſhall caſt a cord by lot, &c. This confirms what was before delivered in a parabolical way, and as a lamentation; and is ſpoken either to the falſe prophet, as Kimchi; who ſhould not be, nor have any poſterity to inherit by lot the land of Iſrael; or to thoſe oppreſſors that took away houſes and fields from others, theſe ſhould have no part nor lot in the land any more; or rather to the whole people of Iſrael, who ſhould no more inherit their land after their captivity, as they have not to this day. The alluſion is to the diſtribution of the land by lot, and the dividing of it by a cord or line, as in Joſhua's time; but now there ſhould be no land in the poſſeſſion of Iſraelites to be divided among them; nor any people to divide it to, being ſcattered up and down in the world, and ſo no need of any perſon to be employed in ſuch ſervice; nor any Sanhedrim or court of judicature to apply unto for a juſt and equal diviſion and diſtribution, who perhaps may be meant in the next clauſe: in the congregation of the Lord; unleſs this is to be underſtood of the body of the people, who were formerly called the congregation of the Lord, Deut. xxiii. 1, 2. tho' now they had forfeited this character, and are only called ſo ironically, as ſome think. Aben Ezra interprets it, when the Lord returns the captivity of his people; and ſo Kimchi, who applies it to the falſe prophet, as before obſerved, who at this time ſhould have no part nor lot in the land.

℣. 6. Propheſy ye not, ſay they, to them that propheſy, &c.] Or drop not [h]; ſuch terrible words, ſuch menacing things; let them not flow from your lips with ſuch profuſion and abundance; ceaſe from ſpeaking in the name of the Lord, if we can hear nothing elſe but ſharp reproofs, and ſevere judgments: or the firſt word reſpects the true prophets of the Lord, and forbids their propheſying; and according to others, the next ſhould be rendered, let them propheſy, or drop [i]; that is, the falſe prophets, that propheſy ſmooth things; and ſo the ſenſe is, let the one propheſy, but not the other: they ſhall not propheſy to them; theſe are the words of the Lord, in anſwer to the other, that ſince they did not like his prophets; they ſhould no more be ſent to them, nor ſhould drop or diſtil the rain of doctrine upon them; but as a judgment upon them, ſhould be deprived of them: or, they ſhall not propheſy according to theſe [k]; as the falſe prophets do, not ſuch things as they; or the whole may be rendered thus, propheſy not, or if they propheſy, let them not propheſy as theſe [l]; ſuch things as theſe; namely, that ſhame ſhall not overtake them; that is, as the falſe prophets, who ſaid that ſhame and confuſion ſhould not come upon the people of Iſrael, or the wrath denounced againſt them, but they ſhould enjoy great peace and proſperity: but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt, and the meaning of this clauſe to be, that the true prophets of the Lord ſhould not propheſy any more to this people, ſince they did not chuſe they ſhould: that ſhame might not come upon them; that the prophets might not be treated by them in a ſhameful and ignominious manner: or, as others, ſhame ſhall not depart from them [m]; tho' they think to eſcape it by forbidding the prophets propheſying terrible things to come, yet confuſion will be their portion at laſt.

℣. 7. O thou that art named the houſe of Jacob, &c.] Called after that great and good man, and reckoned the people of God, and have the character of being religious perſons; but alas! have but a name, and not the thing, and are the degenerate offspring of that famous patriarch: is the ſpirit of the Lord ſtraitened? or ſhortened [n]; the ſpirit of the Lord in his prophets, is it to be limited and reſtrained according to the will of men? or if theſe prophets are forbid to propheſy, and they are ſilenced, is not the reſidue of the ſpirit with the Lord? can't he raiſe up others to propheſy in his name? or is the ſpirit of the Lord confined, as a ſpirit of propheſy, only to foretel good things, and not evil? may it not threaten with puniſhment for ſin, as well as promiſe peace and proſperity? and is it to be reckoned narrow and ſtrait, becauſe it now does not? the fault is not in that, but in you, who make it neceſſary by your conduct, that not good, but evil things ſhould be predicted of you: are theſe his doings? either Jacob's doings, ſuch things as Jacob did? did he ever forbid the prophets of the Lord from propheſying? or did he do ſuch things as required ſuch menaces and threatnings as now delivered by the prophets? or are theſe becoming ſuch perſons as go by his name? or are ſuch works as are done by you pleaſing to God? were they, no ſuch terrible meſſages would be ſent by his prophets: or are theſe the Lord's doings? are judgments the works he is continually doing and taking delight in? are they not his acts, his ſtrange acts? did you behave otherwiſe than you do, you would hear nothing of this kind: do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? that walks in a right way, and according to the rule of the divine word, in the uprightneſs and integrity of his heart, aiming at the honour and glory of God in all his ways? to ſuch a man the words of the Lord by his prophets ſpeak good things, promiſe him good things here and hereafter, and do him good, exhilarate his ſpirits, chear, refreſh, and comfort his ſoul.

℣. 8. Even of late my people is riſen up as an enemy, &c.] Or yeſterday [o]; meaning a very little while before this prophecy, the people of Iſrael, thoſe of the ten tribes, who were the people of God by profeſſion, roſe up as an enemy, not only to God and true religion, worſhipping idols; but rather to their brethren, thoſe of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin; as they did in the times of Pekah king of Iſrael, who ſlew a hundred and twenty thouſand of them in one day, 2 Chron. xxviii. 6. and which is here mentioned as a reaſon why the ſpirit of the Lord in his prophets threatened them with evil, and did not promiſe them good things: ye pull off the robe with the garment; the upper and nether garment, and ſo ſtripped them naked: or, they ſtripped the robe from off the garment, as ſome [p]; they took the upper garment or cloak from them, and left them only the under garment: for them that paſs by ſecurely, as men averſe from war; who were travelling from place to place about their proper buſineſs, and thought themſelves very ſafe; were peaceable men themſelves, and ſuſpected no harm from others: or, returning from war [q]; ſuch who eſcaped in the battel, and fled for their lives; and when they imagined they were ſafe, and out of danger, fell into the hands of robbers, who ſtripped them of their garments. Guſſetius [r] interprets it of ſuch who were returning to the battel, and yet ſo uſed.

℣. 9. The women of my people have ye caſt out from their pleaſant houſes, &c.] Not content to ſlay their huſbands, they took their wives or widows captive, diſpoſſeſſed them of their habitations, where they had lived delightfully with their huſbands and children; ſo we find that at the time before referred to, the people of Iſrael carried captive of their brethren two hundred thouſand women, and brought them to Samaria, 2 Chron. xxviii. 8. Some underſtand this of divorce, which thoſe men were the cauſe of, either by committing adultery with them, which was a juſt reaſon for their huſband's divorcing them; or by frequenting their houſes, which cauſed ſuſpicion and jealouſy: from their children have ye taken away my glory for ever; the which God would have had glory from, and they would have given it to him on account of; as their being brought up in a religious way; their liberties, both civil and religious; their paternal eſtates and inheritances, and the enjoyment of their own land; and eſpecially the worſhip of God in the temple, of which they were deprived by being carried away from their own country: or it may be underſtood of the glory that accrues to God by honourable marriage, and the bed undefiled; and the diſhonour caſt upon him by the contrary, as well as upon children, who may be ſuſpected to be illegitimate.

℣. 10. Ariſe ye, and depart, &c.] That is, out of the land; don't think of a continuance in it, but expect a removal from it; prepare for captivity and exile; look for it every moment, to hear it ſaid to you, ariſe, and be gone from hence; for ſince you have drove others out of their inheritances and poſſeſſions, this ſhall be your caſe: for this is not your reſt; the land in which the ten tribes then dwelt, and which was given to their fathers for an inheritance, and for a reſting place, and had been ſo for ages paſt, now would be no more ſo, becauſe of their ſins and tranſgreſſions; they muſt not expect to abide here long, and enjoy reſt and eaſe; but to be turned out, and deprived of all the bleſſings of it, and be carried into a foreign country, where inſtead of reſt and eaſe they ſhould be in ſlavery and bondage: becauſe it is polluted, it ſhall deſtroy you, even with a ſore deſtruction; becauſe the land that was given them to dwell in was defiled by their manifold iniquities, particularly adulteries before hinted at: all ſin is of a defiling nature; it defiled the bodies and ſouls of theſe men; defiled the eſtates they were poſſeſſed of, and the land on which they dwelt, and their fellow-inhabitants of it; therefore utter deſtruction, even a ſore and grievous one, ſhould come upon them, by which their land ſhould be laid waſte, and they conſumed off of it: or, it ſhall corrupt you, even with a grievous corruption[s]; or you being corrupt upon it, it ſhall ſpew you out as a corrupt thing, as it did the Canaanites, the ancient inhabitants of it; when you will appear to be as you are, extremely corrupt: or, it ſhall be in pain, even with ſore pains[t]; ſuch as thoſe of a woman in travail, not being able to bear them any longer, but eaſe itſelf of them, thro' the judgments of God upon them. This may be applied to the preſent ſtate and condition of the people of God in this world, which is not their reſt; there remains one for them in another world, but they are not yet come to it; for whilſt here they are in trouble, thro' indwelling ſin, the temptations of ſatan, divine deſertions, and various fears that attend them, ſo that they have little reſt; beſides, this is a warfare-ſtate, and they are engaged with many enemies; and at beſt are but travellers paſſing thro' this world to their father's houſe: this is alſo their working time, and they are attended with a variety of afflictions within and without; and ſince there are ſo many corruptions and pollutions in the world, thro' luſt, which makes it that it can be no reſting place for a good man; it becomes them not to take up their reſt here, but ſeek after it elſewhere; and to live in an expectation of being called out of it, and to be in a readineſs to depart when the Lord ſhall call for them.

ỳ. 11. If a man walking in the ſpirit and falſhood, do lie, &c.] Who pretends to be a prophet, and a ſpiritual man, and to be under the inſpiration and influence of the Spirit of God, but utters nothing but lies and falſhoods; or who is acted by a ſpirit of falſhood and lying; or, as in the margin, walk with the wind, and lie falſly[u]; is full of wind and vanity; or, after the wind[w]; and follows the dictates of his vain mind, and coins lies, and ſpeaks falſe things: ſaying, I will propheſy unto thee of wine and of ſtrong drink; or drop a word unto thee[x]; that there will be good times, and nothing but good eating and drinking; and that men need not fear ſuch diſmal things befalling them as the prophets of the Lord ſpoke of; but may be chearful and merry, and drink wine and ſtrong drink, and not be afraid of their evil tidings: or, for wine and ſtrong drink[y], ſo Kimchi; and the meaning is, that if they would give him a cup of wine, or a draught of ſtrong drink, he would propheſy good things to them; the reverſe of what is before ſaid, as that they ſhould continue in their land, and not depart from it; that this ſhould be their reſt, and they ſhould remain therein, and not be deſtroyed in it, or caſt out of it: he ſhall even be the prophet of this people; a dropper[z] to them; ſee ỳ. 6. ſuch a one ſhall be acceptable to them; they'll careſs him and prefer him to the true prophets of the Lord; which is mentioned to ſhew the temper of the people, and how eaſily they were impoſed upon, and their diſreſpect to the prophets of the Lord, as in ỳ. 6, 7. to which ſubject the prophet here returns, as Kimchi obſerves.

ỳ. 12. I will ſurely aſſemble, O Jacob, all of thee, &c.] Theſe words are either the words of the falſe prophet continued, that propheſied of wine and ſtrong drink, as Aben Ezra; promiſing great plenty and proſperity, and that the remnant of the ten tribes carried captive by Tiglath-Pileſer ſhould be returned, and they ſhould all live together in ſafety and plenty, and rejoice becauſe of their numbers: or elſe they are a denunciation of threatnings and judgments, as Kimchi; that the Iſraelites ſhould be gathered indeed together, but as ſheep for the ſlaughter, even thoſe that remained, not as yet carried captive; theſe ſhould be ſhut up, and cloſely beſieged in their cities, and make a noiſe, and cry for fear of their enemies, and becauſe of the great number of them: or rather they are a comfortable promiſe of the gathering of the people of Iſrael in the times of the Meſſiah, in the laſt days of the goſpel-diſpenſation, even all of Jacob, all the then poſterity of Iſrael; for then all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. xi. 26. and this is introduced, tho' abruptly, as often ſuch promiſes are, for the comfort of the Lord's people, amidſt ſorrowful and ſad tidings brought to the people in general: I will ſurely gather the remnant of Iſrael; the remnant according to the election of grace, whom the Lord will reſerve for himſelf, thoſe that are left of them in the latter day; theſe ſhall be gathered effectually by the grace of God unto Jeſus the true Meſſiah, they ſhall now ſeek after; and into his church, to join themſelves to his people, embracing his goſpel, and ſubmitting to his ordinances; when there ſhall be one fold for Jews and Gentiles, and one ſhepherd over them, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: I will put them together as the ſheep of Bozrah; a place famous for flocks and paſtures; ſignifying that they ſhould be took care of by the great and good ſhepherd, have a good fold, and good paſtures provided for them, where they ſhould feed comfortably together, in great unity and affection: as the flock in the midſt of their fold; lying down ſafely, and reſting quietly; ſee Ezek. xxxiv. 13, 14: they ſhall make great noiſe by reaſon of the multitude of men; a joyful noiſe, becauſe of their own numbers being increaſed with men like a flock, and ſo numerous, that the place will be too ſtrait for them; and becauſe of the number of good and faithful ſhepherds under Chriſt, to feed and protect them, even paſtors after God's own heart, given them to feed them with knowledge and underſtanding, Jer. iii. 15.

ỳ. 13. The breaker up is come up before them, &c.] Not the enemy, either the Aſſyrian or Chaldean army, or any part thereof, going up before the reſt, breaking down the walls of the city, either of Samaria or Jeruſalem, ſo making way for entrance therein; nor Zedekiah, as Joſeph Kimchi, who made his eſcape thro' the wall broken down; nor the Maccabees, who were inſtruments of great ſalvation and deliverance to the Jews after the captivity, and before the coming of Chriſt. Kimchi makes mention of an expoſition, which interprets the breaker of Elias, that was to come before the Meſſiah; and their king, in the latter part of the text, of the branch the ſon of David; that is, the Meſſiah; which ſenſe Mr. Pocock thinks may be admitted of, provided by Elias we underſtand John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt, who is the true Elias that was to come; who broke, prepared and cleared the way for Chriſt by his doctrine and baptiſm; ſee Luke i. 16, 17. and iii. 4, 5. but it is beſt to interpret the breaker of Chriſt himſelf; and ſo I find it explained [a] by the Jews alſo, to whom this and all the reſt of the characters in the text agree; and who may be ſo called with reſpect to his incarnation, being the firſt-born that opened the womb, and broke forth into the world in a very extraordinary manner; his birth being of a virgin, who was ſo both before and after the birth; thus Pharez had his name, which is from the ſame root, and is of a ſimilar ſound with Phorez here, from his breaking forth before his brother, unawares, and contrary to expectation, Gen. xxxviii. 29. this agrees with Chriſt, with reſpect to his death, when he broke thro' and vanquiſhed all enemies, ſin, ſatan, the world and death; broke thro' all the troops of hell, and ſpoiled principalities and powers; and thro' all difficulties that lay in the way of the ſalvation of his people; he broke down the middle wall of partition, the ceremonial law which was between Jew and Gentile; and broke off the yoke of ſin, ſatan, and the law, under which they were, and ſet them at liberty; and at his reſurrection he broke aſunder the cords of death, as Sampſon did his withs as a thread of tow; and at his aſcenſion he broke his way thro' the regions of the air, and legions of devils there, leading captivity captive, and entered into heaven; and was pandens iter, as the Vulgate Latin verſion here renders it, opening the way for his people into it; by the miniſtry of the word, he broke his way into the Gentile world, conquering and to conquer, which was mighty thro' God, for the pulling down of ſtrong holds, and reducing multitudes to his obedience; at the converſion of every ſinner he breaks open the everlaſting doors of their hearts, and enters in; he breaks their rocky hearts in pieces, and then binds up what he has broken; and in the latter day he'll break in pieces all his enemies as a potter's veſſel; yea he'll break in pieces and conſume all the kingdoms of the earth, which will become like the chaff of the ſummer threſhing-floors: and now he is aſcended, or gone up to heaven to his father there, and before them his ſheep, his people, ſaid to be aſſembled, gathered and put together; he is aſcended as the fore-runner of them, to receive gifts for them, and beſtow them on them, and to prepare heaven for them, and to make interceſſion on their behalf; and as ſure as he is gone up, ſo ſure ſhall they alſo follow: they have broken up, and have paſſed thro' the gate; and are gone out by it; not either the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans; nor the people that fled with Zedekiah; but the ſheep of Chriſt following him their ſhepherd; who, in the ſtrength of Chriſt, and the power of his grace, break out of their priſon-houſes; and break off the yokes and fetters in which they have been detained, and all allegiance to former lords; and break thro' their enemies, and become more than conquerors thro' him that has loved them; and paſs thro' him the gate; the ſtrait gate, and narrow way that leads to the Father, and to the enjoyment of all the bleſſings of grace; and into the ſheep-fold, the church, and the privileges of it; and even into heaven itſelf, eternal life and happineſs: and by which alſo they go out, for he is a door of eſcape unto them out of the hands of all their enemies, and from wrath to come; and he is a door of hope of all good things unto them, and which leads to green paſtures, and by which they go in and out, and find paſture: and their king ſhall paſs before them, and the Lord on the head of them; not the king of Aſſyria or Babylon, before their reſpective armies, the Lord God himſelf being in a providential way at the head of them, and ſucceeding them; nor Hoſhea or Zedekiah, going before their people into captivity, the Lord having forſaken them; but the king Meſſiah, who is king of Zion, king of ſaints, that goes before his people as a king before his ſubjects, and as a ſhepherd before his flock; and who is the true Jehovah, the Lord our righteouſneſs, who is at the head, and is the head of his church; the captain of their ſalvation, that is at the head of his armies, his choſen and faithful ones, they following and marching after him, Rev. xvii. 14. and xix. 14.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the prophet reproves and threatens both princes and prophets, firſt ſeparately, and then conjunctly; firſt the heads and princes of the people, civil magiſtrates, for their ignorance of juſtice, and hatred of good, and love of evil, and for their oppreſſion and cruelty; and they are threatened with diſtreſs when they ſhould cry unto the Lord, and ſhould not be heard by him, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. next the prophets are taken to taſk, for their voraciouſneſs, avarice and falſe propheſying; and are threatened with darkneſs, with want of viſion, and of an anſwer from the Lord, and with ſhame and confuſion, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and the prophet being full of the ſpirit and power of God, to declare the ſins and tranſgreſſions of Jacob and Iſrael, ℣. 8. very freely declaims againſt princes, prieſts and prophets all together; who, tho' guilty of very notorious crimes, yet were in great ſecurity, and promiſed themſelves impunity, ℣. 9, 10, 11. wherefore the city and temple of Jeruſalem are threatened with an utter deſolation, ℣. 12.

℣. 1. And I ſaid, hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] This ſeems to be a new ſermon or diſcourſe, delivered at another time, and to another people than the preceding; for as that chiefly concerns the ten tribes, this the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and was ſpoken to them in the times of Hezekiah, as appears from Jer. xxvi. 18. for tho' Jacob and Iſrael generally deſign the ten tribes, yet here the other two, as is manifeſt from the above-cited place, and alſo from ℣. 9, 10, 12. and not only heads of families, but ſuch as were in the higheſt poſts under the government, the Sanhedrim of the nation, judges, rulers and nobles, are here addreſſed; and who had a great ſhare in national guilt, being ring-leaders in ſin, who ought to have ſet good examples to others; and theſe are not to be ſpared becauſe of their grandeur and dignity, but to be faithfully reproved for their vices, and which they ſhould diligently attend unto; tho' they are to be addreſſed in a reſpectful and honourable manner, and be intreated to hearken to the word of the Lord by his prophet; all which was carefully obſerved by Micah; and it was with pleaſure he could reflect upon his plain, faithful, and affectionate reproof of thoſe great men: is it not for you to know judgment? what is juſt and right to be done by men, and what ſentence is to be paſſed in courts of judicature, in caſes brought before them; and not only to know in a ſpeculative way, what is equitable, but to practiſe it themſelves, and ſee that it is done by others; and when they duly conſidered this, they would be able to ſee and own that what the prophet from the Lord would now charge them with, or denounce upon them, was according to truth and juſtice.

℣. 2. Who hate the good, and love the evil, &c.] Inſtead of knowing and doing what was juſt and right; or directly contrary to their light and knowledge, and the duty of their office, they hated that which is good, which is agreeable to the law, nature, and will of God, and loved that which is evil, which is contrary thereunto; or they hated to do good, and loved to do evil, as the Targum; as men do who are averſe to good, and prone to evil; or they hated a good man, as Aben Ezra, and loved the evil man; not only delighted in committing ſin themſelves, but took pleaſure in thoſe that did it; and could not endure the company and converſation of holy and good men: who pluck off their ſkin from off them, and their fleſh from off their bones; like wild beaſts that tear off ſkin and fleſh from the bones, and then devour them; or like cruel ſhepherds, that not content to fleece their flocks, ſkin them, and take their fleſh alſo, and feed themſelves, and not the flock; or like butchers, that firſt take off the ſkin off a beaſt, and then cut up its fleſh. The deſign of the expreſſions is to ſhew what rigour, cruelty and oppreſſion theſe rulers exerciſed on the people; and by their heavy taxes and levies, and exorbitant mulcts and fines, pillaged and plundered them of all they had in the world, and left them quite bare, as bones ſtripped of their ſkin and fleſh. So the Targum, “ ſeizing on their ſubſtance by vio-“ lence, and their precious mammon they take “ away.”

℣. 3. Who alſo eat the fleſh of my people, and flay their ſkins from off them, &c.] Like Cannibals flay them alive, and then eat their fleſh: this ſignifies, as before, devouring their ſubſtance, only expreſſed in terms which ſtill more ſet forth their ſavageneſs, inhumanity, barbarity and cruelty. So the Targum, “ who ſpoil the ſubſtance of my peo-“ ple, and their precious mammon they take from “ them;” and what aggravated their guilt was, that they were the Lord's people by profeſſion and religion they ſo uſed; whom he had committed to their care to rule over, protect and defend: and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces as for the pot, and as fleſh within the cauldron; did with them as cooks do, who not only cut fleſh off the bones, and into ſlices, but break the bones themſelves, to get out the marrow, and chop them ſmall, that they may have all the virtue that is in them to make their ſoup and broth the richer; by which is ſignified, that theſe wicked and avaricious rulers took every method to ſqueeze the people, and get all their wealth and riches into their hands, that they might live in a more riotous and luxurious manner.

℣. 4. Then ſhall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them, &c.] When all the above evils threatened them in the preceding chapters ſhall come upon them; when the enemy ſhall invade their land, beſiege their cities, and take them, and they, their families and ſubſtance juſt ready to fall into their hands, they ſhall cry unto the Lord; or pray unto him, as the Targum, in the time of their diſtreſs; but he will not hear their prayer, ſo as to anſwer it according to their deſire; that is, he will not ſave them from imminent danger, but deliver them up, them, and all that belong unto them, into the hands of ſuch that ſhall uſe them as they have done others: he will even hide his face from them at that time; turn his back upon them, and a deaf ear to them, and ſhew them no favour, nor grant them any help and protection: as they have behaved themſelves ill in their doings; he'll puniſh them according to the law of retaliation; as when the poor cried unto them, when they were ſtripping them of their ſubſtance, and they would not hearken to them, ſo now when they cry unto the Lord in their diſtreſs, he'll not hearken to them; and as they turned their backs, and hid their faces from thoſe that were afflicted by them, and would ſhew them no favour, ſo will the Lord deal with them; and as they exerciſed the utmoſt cruelty and barbarity that could be done, they will now be given up into the hands of cruel and merciless men, that will uſe them in like manner: or, becauſe they have done ill in their doings[b]; to the poor, whoſe cauſe God will defend and vindicate.

℣. 5. Thus ſaith the Lord, concerning the prophets that make my people err, &c.] The falſe prophets, as the Targum; and as the deſcription given of them ſhews; who inſtead of directing the people in the right way, as by their office and characters as prophets they ſhould have done; they led them into miſtakes about matters of religion and civil government, and out of the way of their duty to God and men, and expoſed them to great danger and diſtreſs; and this was the more aggravating, as they were the Lord's people by name and profeſſion, whom they cauſed to err from his ways and worſhip, which brought his diſpleaſure upon them: that bite with their teeth, and cry, peace; propheſy ſmooth things, promiſe all kind of proſperity and plenty, and bite their lips, and keep in thoſe diſtreſſes and calamities which they could but ſee coming upon the people; or while they are propheſying good things, they gnaſh their teeth againſt the prophets of the Lord, and bitterly inveigh againſt them for threatning with war, deſtruction and captivity; or by flattering the people with their lips, they bite them, devour their ſubſtance, and are the cauſe of their hurt and ruin; or rather, ſo long as the people fed them well, and they had a ſufficiency to bite and live upon, they foretold happy days unto them. So the Targum, “ he that feeds them with a feaſt of fleſh, [b] כאשר, ἀνθ' ὧν, eo quod, Sept. quia, Druſius; pro eo quod, Grotius.

“ they propheſy peace to him;” which ſenſe is confirmed by what follows, and he that putteth not into their mouth, they even declare war againſt him; who don't give them what they aſk, or don't feed them according to their deſire, don't keep a good table for them, and cram and pamper them, but neglect them, and don't provide well for them; theſe they threaten with one calamity or another that ſhall befal them; and endeavour to ſet their neighbours againſt them, and even the government itſelf, and do them all the miſchief they can by defamation and ſlander.

℣. 6. Therefore night ſhall be unto you that ye ſhall not have a viſion, &c.] Not that thoſe outward gifts and illuminations, and that prophetic light they had, or ſeemed to have, ſhould be taken away from them, and it ſhould be quite night with them; becauſe theſe men were never ſent of God, or received any meſſage from him, or had any prophetic talents at all, and therefore could not be taken away from them, and they be benighted in this ſenſe; tho' it is true, ſuch might be the circumſtances they would be brought into, that it ſhould appear to the people that they are the dark perſons they were, that they have no viſion, nor never had any; but rather the ſenſe is, that ſuch dark providences and dreadful calamities ſhould come upon the people in general, and upon thoſe prophets in particular, often ſignified by night in ſcripture, that they would not have the face to pretend any more that they had any viſion from God of good times and things. It may be rendered, therefore night ſhall be unto you becauſe of viſion [c]; calamity ſhould come upon them becauſe of their falſe and pretended viſions of peace and proſperity they deluded the people with: and it ſhall be dark unto you, that ye ſhall not divine; ſuch darkneſs of affliction ſhould be upon them, that they would not offer to deliver out any divination or prediction of good things coming upon them; or ſuch darkneſs and diſtreſs would be their portion, becauſe of divination [d], on account of their lying divinations they had impoſed upon the people: and the ſun ſhall go down over the prophets; and the day ſhall be dark over them; their time of proſperity will be over, and they ſhall be no more in favour with the people, or courted and feaſted by them; but ſhall be had in the utmoſt contempt and abhorrence. The Targum of the whole is, “ therefore ye ſhall bluſh at propheſying, and be “ aſhamed of teaching; and tribulation as dark-“ neſs ſhall cover the falſe prophets, and the time “ ſhall be darkened upon them.”

℣. 7. Then ſhall the ſeers be aſhamed, and the diviners confounded, &c.] When the events of things will make it moſt clearly appear to all that their viſions, divinations and propheſies are falſe; they'll not be able to lift up their heads, or ſhow their faces, but ſhame and confuſion will cover them: yea, they ſhall all cover their lips; ſtop their mouths, hold their tongues, and be entirely and totally ſilenced; they'll not pretend to utter any other viſion or prophecy; nor be able to ſay one word in defence of themſelves, and of what they have before propheſied; every thing in providence being contrary to what they had ſaid, and agreeable to the words of the true prophets; or they ſhall cover their lips as mourners, as the Targum adds, by way of explanation; ſee Ezek. xxiv. 17, 22. It is ſaid [e], there were two gates in Solomon's temple; one called the gate of the bridegrooms, the other the gate of mourners; to thoſe that entered the latter, if their lip was covered, it was ſaid, he that dwells in this houſe comfort thee: and ſo the lips of the falſe prophets being covered, may ſignify that they were now ſorry for what they had done, at leaſt becauſe of the calamities on them and the people; tho' the former ſenſe ſeems beſt: for there is no anſwer of God; not that they ſhall be aſhamed and ſilenced, becauſe they ſhall now have no anſwer of God, for they never had any, which this would imply; but that it ſhall now be moſt plain and clear to all that the Lord never ſpoke by them, and they never had any anſwer from him; all their viſions, divinations and prophecies were of themſelves, and not of him; what they delivered was not the word of the Lord, but their own; and this now being diſcovered and manifeſt to every one, will put them to utter ſilence and ſhame. The Targum is, “ for there is not in them a ſpirit “ of prophecy from the Lord.”

℣. 8. But truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, &c.] Or, full of power, even the Spirit of the Lord, as Guſſetius [f], by way of appoſition, and as explaining what is meant by power; for ſo the Spirit is ſometimes called from his gifts and graces, which are powerful in men; ſee Luke xxiv. 47. Acts i. 8. and vi. 5, 8. Theſe are the words of Micah concerning himſelf, in oppoſition to the falſe prophets, who are deſtitute of the Spirit of God; men of mean ſordid diſpoſitions, that had nothing but ſiniſter and ſelfiſh ends in view, and not in the leaſt qualified for the office and character they bore; whereas he could ſay of himſelf with truth, that he was poſſeſſed of ſufficient abilities for ſuch an employment; and which he had, not of himſelf, but from the Spirit of God, who gives gifts to men, and divides them ſeverally as he will; ſo that this was no vaunt and vain boaſt, or a piece of arrogance and oſtentation in the prophet; ſince he only oppoſes himſelf to the falſe prophets, and aſcribes his endowments and qualifications, not to himſelf, but to the Spirit of God; he had, tho' they had not, anſwers from the Lord, viſions and prophecies from him, with a commiſſion and abilities from him to execute the office of a prophet, being under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God, and full of him and his gifts: and of judgment, and of might; or of the judgment of truth, as the Targum; being able to diſcern truth and error, between what comes from the Spirit of God, and what from a lying ſpirit, or a ſpirit of divination and falſhood; what is proper to be ſpoken, when the right time, and to whom; and having courage and greatneſs of mind, fearing no man's perſon or face, but bold to declare unto Jacob his tranſgreſſion, and to Iſrael his ſin; freely and openly to ſet it before them in a true light, with all aggravating circumſtances, and reprove them for the ſame; and threaten them with the judgments of God in caſe they repented not; ſee Iſ. lviii. 1. and as a proof of all this ſays what follows:

℣. 9. Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the houſe of Jacob, and princes of the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] As an inſtance of his boldneſs, courage and impartiality, he begins with the principal men of the land, and charges them with ſins, and reproves for them, and denounces judgments on account of them; ſee the note on ℣. 1: that abhor judgment, and and pervert all equity; a ſad character of princes, rulers and judges, who not only ought to know, but to love judgment, juſtice and equity, and do them; even take delight and pleaſure in the diſtribution of them to every one, and in every cauſe that came before them; but inſtead of this, hated to do that which was right and juſt; and perverted all the rules and laws of juſtice and equity, clearing the guilty, and condemning the innocent.

ỳ. 10. They build up Zion with blood, and Jeruſalem with iniquity.] Or, O thou that buildeſt up [g], &c. or, every one of them that buildeth up [h], &c. for the word is in the ſingular number; but be the words rendered either of theſe ways, they reſpect the heads and princes of the people; who either repaired the temple on Zion, or ornamented the king's palace, or built themſelves fine ſtately houſes in Jeruſalem, or large ſtreets there, by money they took of murderers to ſave them, as Kimchi; or by money got by rapine and oppreſſion, by ſpoiling the poor of their goods and their livelihood, for them and their families, which was all one as ſhedding innocent blood; and by money obtained by bribes, for the perverſion of juſtice, and ſuch like illegal proceedings, truly called iniquity. The Targum is, "who build their houſes in Zion with "blood-ſhed, and Jeruſalem with deceits."

ỳ. 11. The heads thereof judge for reward, &c.] That is, the heads or principal men of Zion and Jeruſalem; the kings, or Sanhedrim, according to Kimchi; but as this prophecy was delivered in the times of Hezekiah, Jer. xxvi. 18. he who was ſo good a king muſt be excepted from this charge; perhaps it was delivered in the beginning of his reign, before a reformation was made, and might be the occaſion of it: the former reign was a very wicked one; and very likely the public officers, judges and civil magiſtrates were as yet continued, and who went on in the ſame courſe of injuſtice, giving the cauſe not on the right ſide, but to them that gave them moſt money, or bribed higheſt, contrary to the law of God, Deut. xvi. 19: and the prieſts thereof teach for hire; for tho' they had a ſufficient and honourable maintenance provided by the law of God for them, yet not content with this, they took a price of the people for teaching them; and that not ſuch things as were agreeable to the will of God declared in his word, which they ought to have done freely; but ſuch doctrines as were moſt pleaſing to carnal men, and indulged them in their luſts, preſumption and vain confidence: and the prophets thereof divine for money; tell men what ſhould befal them; what good things they ſhould be poſſeſſed of; what plenty and proſperity they ſhould enjoy; and this they did according to the ſum of money given them, more or leſs. This muſt be underſtood of the falſe prophets: yet will they lean upon the Lord; on his care, providence and protection, as if they were entitled to theſe things, and might ſecurely rely and depend upon them; tho' by their ſins and tranſgreſſions they had forfeited all the benefits and privileges thereof. To lean by faith upon the Lord; or in his word, as the Targum; and to truſt in his promiſes, in his power, and faithfulneſs, and goodneſs; when this ſprings from an honeſt and upright heart, and is attended with the fruits of righteouſneſs and holineſs, it is well pleaſing to God, and highly regarded by him, and ſuch may depend upon his bleſſing and protection; but to talk of faith in him, and reliance upon him, when the whole courſe of the converſation is wicked, this is abominable in the ſight of God, and diſpleaſing to him: and ſay, is not the Lord among us? truſting to this, that the temple of the Lord was among them, and that the temple of God were they; that the moſt holy place was there, where were the ſymbols of the divine preſence, the ark, cherubim, and mercy-ſeat; and ſo concluding from hence their ſafety and ſecurity; putting their confidence in outward places and things; in external worſhip, ſacrifices, rites and ceremonies, when they neglected the weightier matters of the law, juſtice, truth and mercy: and ſo none evil can come upon us; as peſtilence, famine, ſword, and captivity, the prophets of the Lord had threatened them with.

ỳ. 12. Therefore ſhall Zion for your ſake be plowed as a field, &c.] That is, for your ſins, as the Targum; for the bloodſhed, injuſtice and avarice of the princes, prieſts and prophets; not that the common people were free from crimes; but theſe are particularly mentioned, as being ring-leaders into ſin, and who ought to have ſet better examples; as alſo to take off their vain confidence in themſelves, who thought that Zion and Jeruſalem would be built up and eſtabliſhed by them, and preſerved for their ſakes; as well as to ſhew the prophet's boldneſs and intrepidity in his rebukes and menaces of them: now this was propheſied of in the days of Hezekiah, before the invaſion of Judea and ſiege of Jeruſalem by Sennacherib; it was deferred upon the repentance and reformation of the people; and was fulfilled in part at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, when the city was reduced to an heap of rubbiſh; and more fully, when it was deſtroyed by the Romans, and plowed up by Terentius, or Turnus Rufus, as the Jews ſay; ſo that there was not a houſe or building left upon it, but it became utterly deſolate and uninhabited, eſpecially in the reign of Adrian: and Jeruſalem ſhall become heaps; not only the city of David, built on mount Zion, ſhould be demoliſhed, but the other part of the city called Jeruſalem ſhould be thrown down, and its walls and houſes lie in heaps, like heaps of ſtones in the midſt of a plowed field: and the mountain of the houſe as the high places of the foreſt; mount Moriah, on which the temple was built; hence called here by the Targum, the mountain of the houſe of the ſanctuary; the temple upon it ſhould be deſtroyed, and not one ſtone left upon another; and the place on which it ſtood be covered with graſs and trees, with briers and thorns, as a foreſt is, all which have been exactly fulfilled. The Jews ſay [i] of Turnus Rufus before-mentioned, that he both plowed up the city of Jeruſalem, and the temple, the ground on which they ſtood; and Jerom [k] affirms, the temple was plowed up by Titus Annius Ruffus; which, as it literally fulfilled this prophecy, denotes the utter deſtruction of them: for, as it was uſual with the ancients to mark out with a plow the ground on which a city was deſigned to be built; ſo they drew one over the ſpot where any had ſtood, which was become deſolate, and to ſignify that the city was no more to be rebuilt and inhabited: thus Seneca [l], Horace [m], and other writers expreſs the utter deſtruction of a city by ſuch phraſes.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter contains ſome gracious promiſes concerning the glory and happineſs of the church of Chriſt in the laſt days; as of its ſtability, exaltation and increaſe, and of the ſpread of the goſpel from it, ℣. 1, 2. and of the peace and ſecurity of it, and conſtant profeſſion and exerciſe of religion in it, ℣. 3, 4, 5. and of the deliverance of it from affliction and diſtreſs, and the ample and everlaſting kingdom of Chriſt in it, ℣. 6, 7, 8. and then follows ſome prophecies more particularly reſpecting the Jews; as that tho' they ſhould be in diſtreſs, and be carried captive into Babylon, they ſhould be delivered from thence, ℣. 9, 10. and tho' many people ſhould be gathered againſt them, yet ſhould not be able to prevail over them, but their attempts would iſſue in their own deſtruction, ℣. 11, 12, 13.

℣. 1. But in the laſt days it ſhall come to paſs, that the mountain of the houſe of the Lord ſhall be eſtabliſhed in the top of the mountains, &c.] It appears by the adverſative but, with which theſe words are introduced, that they have a dependence upon, and a connexion with, the laſt of the preceding chapter; ſignifying, that tho' the mountain of the houſe, on which the temple ſtood, ſhould become deſolate, yet the mountain of the houſe of the Lord, which is not literally the ſame, but what that was typical of, the church of Chriſt, ſhould be greatly exalted and enlarged; and which, according to this prophecy, would be in the laſt days; that is, as Kimchi rightly interprets it, the days of the Meſſiah; and it ſhould be obſerved, that all this will be in the laſt of his days, or of the goſpel-diſpenſation: the firſt of theſe days were the days of Chriſt in the fleſh, the times of his miniſtry, and of John the Baptiſt his fore-runner, and of his diſciples; and were indeed the laſt days of the Jewiſh world, or of their civil and church-ſtate; and when alſo it muſt be allowed the mountain of the Lord's houſe, or the temple literally taken, became glorious by the preſence of Chriſt in it, by his doctrine and miracles there, and by the effuſion of the Spirit on his diſciples in that place, and the miniſtration of the goſpel; but then all this was before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple; whereas this prophecy follows that, and is oppoſed to it, and ſuppoſes it; beſides, in thoſe times there was not ſuch an exaltation and ſtability of the church of Chriſt; nor ſuch a flow of nations to it; nor ſuch a ſettled and univerſal peace and ſecurity as here promiſed: this prophecy therefore reſpects times yet to come, as Aben Ezra obſerves; the laſt of the days of the Meſſiah, or the laſt times of the goſpel-diſpenſation, when the reign of antichriſt will be at an end; he will be deſtroyed, and the kingdom of Chriſt ſet up, eſtabliſhed and enlarged in the world. The prophet Iſaiah predicts the ſame things, and much in the ſame words, Iſ. ii. 2, 3, 4. theſe two prophets were cotemporary, and might converſe together, and communicate to each other what they had received from the Lord upon this ſubject; but it is needleſs to enquire which might have them from the other, ſince they were both holy men of God, and moved by his Spirit, and were inſpired by the ſame Spirit, with the ſame things, and to ſpeak the ſame language; yet there is a diverſity in words, tho' an agreement in ſentiment; nor does it appear a clear caſe that they borrowed, much leſs that they ſtole their words from one another, as the falſe prophets did; for they don't always uſe the ſame words to convey the ſame idea; and there are ſome words which Iſaiah has, that Micah has not; and there are others that Micah uſes, that Iſaiah has not; tho' in the whole there is a moſt beautiful harmony of ſenſe in their diverſity of expreſſion. By the mountain of the houſe of the Lord, is not meant the temple built on mount Moriah, where the divine majeſty reſided; where were the ſymbols of his preſence, the ark and mercy-ſeat, and where he was worſhipped, which has been deſtroyed long ago, and will never be rebuilt more; for a third temple hereafter to be built at Jeruſalem is a mere fiction of the Jews; nor indeed is any material building here intended, and ſtill leſs any ſuch building to be erected in ſuch an abſurd ſenſe literally taken, as if mountain was piled on mountain, and hill on hill, to raiſe it higher; but myſtically and ſpiritually it deſigns the church of God, called ſo becauſe it is built by him, and built for an habitation for him; where he will, at the time here referred to, more manifeſtly dwell in a ſpiritual manner; and by whom, and by which ſpiritual and gracious preſence of his, it will be made very beautiful and glorious: and it is ſignified by a mountain, to denote its viſibility, immoveableneſs and perpetuity; and is ſaid to be eſtabliſhed in the top of the mountains, with reſpect to the kingdoms of this world, and eſpecially antichriſtian churches, which, becauſe of their eminence, and largeneſs, and national eſtabliſhment, may ſeem like mountains; but in the latter day, the true church of Chriſt, which now may ſeem like a mole-hill to them, will be above them, and will be in a ſettled ſtate and condition, and not be fluctuating, and toſſed to and fro, and removing here and there, as now; but be fixed and ſtable, and continue ſo until the ſecond and perſonal coming of Chriſt: and it ſhall be exalted above the hills; by hills may be meant petty kingdoms, inferior to greater monarchies; or religious ſtates, not of Chriſt's conſtitution; and the exaltation of the church above them, denotes her power over them, to enjoy the one, and cruſh the other: it may reſpect the glory of the church, both as to things temporal and ſpiritual; for now will the kingdoms under the whole heaven be given to the ſaints of the Moſt High; civil government will come into their hands, the kings and princes of the earth being now members of goſpel-churches; ſo that the church will be in a glorious and exalted ſtate, having riches, power and authority, a large extent every where, and a multitude of members, and thoſe of the higheſt claſs and rank, as well as of the meaner and lower ſort; and all of them poſſeſſed largely of the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, and enjoying the goſpel and goſpel-ordinances in their power and purity: and the people ſhall flow unto it; in great abundance, in large numbers, in company like the flowing ſtreams of a river; and may denote not only their numbers, but their ſwiftneſs and readineſs to join themſelves with the church of God, to hear the word, and partake of the ordinances, and of all the privileges of the houſe of the Lord. It may be rendered, they ſhall look unto it, as the word is tranſlated in Pſ. xxxiv. 6. and ſo the Targum here, "and the kingdoms ſhall look (or turn "their faces) to ſerve upon it;" and this ſenſe is preferred by many learned Jewiſh writers [n]; and the meaning may be, that multitudes ſeeing the glory of the church, and the many deſireable things in it, ſhall look to it with a look of love and affection, and with a wiſhful look, greatly deſiring to be admitted into it. In Iſ. ii. 2. it is ſaid, and all nations ſhall flow unto it; not the people of the Jews only, now converted; or a ſingle nation only, or ſome out of that; but all the nations of the world, at leaſt great numbers out of all, by far the greateſt in them; ſuch an increaſe will there be of the churches in the latter day.

℣. 2. And many nations ſhall come, and ſay, come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the houſe of the God of Jacob, &c.] In Iſ. ii. 3. it is, many people, &c. ſee the note there; the ſenſe is the ſame: and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; the teacher is the king Meſſiah, as Kimchi obſerves; the great prophet of his people, the teacher ſent from God; and will in the laſt days teach men by his Spirit and word, in a very plentiful manner, and with great ſucceſs: for the law ſhall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jeruſalem; theſe, according to Kimchi, are the words of the prophet, and not of the people, that encourage one another to go up to the houſe of the Lord; but the ſenſe is much the ſame; for they contain a reaſon why the people of different nations would encourage one another to go to the houſe of the Lord, that they might learn his ways, and walk in his ſtatutes, becauſe here the word of the Lord is preached; the word which comes from God, and is concerning him, his love and grace to men; the word of peace and righteouſneſs, of life and ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; and the ſeveral doctrines of grace intended by the law, or doctrine of the Lord; the doctrines of God's everlaſting love, of election in Chriſt, and redemption by him; of juſtification by his righteouſneſs, pardon by his blood, and ſatisfaction by his atonement; as well as of regeneration by the Spirit of God, and of perſeverance in grace: in theſe and others, now ſhall all the Lord's people be taught more clearly, diſtinctly and comfortably; all ſhall know him, from the leaſt to the greateſt; and not only their light and knowledge under ſuch a teacher, and ſuch teachings, will be very great, but their practice will be anſwerable to it; as they will be inſtructed in all the ways of the Lord, and in the methods of his grace; ſo they will walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameleſs; ſee the note on Iſ. ii. 3.

℣. 3. And he ſhall judge among many people, and rebuke ſtrong nations afar off, &c.] That are in the moſt diſtant parts of the world; not only the iſles afar off, but the remoteſt parts of the continent, the American nations found out ſince. In Iſ. ii. 4. it is, and he ſhall judge among the nations, and ſhall rebuke many people; that is, the king Meſſiah, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi and Ben Melech. Some render it, it ſhall judge, &c. and interpret it either of the church, the mountain of the Lord's houſe; or of the word and doctrine of the Lord; or of the Lord in the church, by the miniſtry of the word. The phraſe, afar off, is not in Iſ. ii. 4. which the Targum interprets for ever, and the ſtrong nations of ſtrong kings; ſignifying, that the kingdom of Chriſt ſhould not only be to the ends of the earth, but ſhould endure for ever, unto diſtant time, even till it ſhall be no more; as well as ſhall reach to diſtant lands, as to ſituation, and to the Gentiles afar off, as to ſtate and condition; ſee Eph. ii. 14: and they ſhall beat their ſwords into plough-ſhares, and their ſpears into pruning-hooks: nation ſhall not lift up a ſword againſt nation, neither ſhall they learn war any more; which as yet has never been fulfilled; but will be the caſe when Chriſt's kingdom appears in its glory, and the kingdoms of this world become his, and all the enemies of the church are deſtroyed; ſee the note on Iſ. ii. 4. Theſe words are by the Jews [o] applied to the days of the Meſſiah.

℣. 4. But they ſhall ſit every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, &c.] A proverbial phraſe, expreſſive of the greateſt tranquillity, ſecurity and enjoyment of property; ſee 1 Kings iv. 25. when perſons need not keep within their walled towns and cities, and lock themſelves up in their houſes, but may ſit down in their gardens, fields and vineyards, and enjoy the fruit thereof; as the Targum interprets it, "under the fruit of his vine, and "under the fruit of his fig-tree." It was uſual for perſons in the eaſtern countries to ſit under vines and fig-trees to read, meditate, pray or converſe together, where they grow very large, as were their vines; and even with us, they are frequently raiſed and carried over ſupporters, ſo as to be ſat under; and of fig-trees, we frequently read in Jewiſh writings of their being very large, and of their going up to them, and praying on the top of them; and of ſitting under them, and ſtudying in the law there. So one of the Rabbins ſays [p], he went up into his muſtard-tree, as one goes up to the top of a fig-tree; and it is ſaid [q], he that prays on the top of an olive-tree, or on the top of a fig-tree, muſt come down, and pray below; and again [r], R. Jacob and his companions were faſting, ſtudying in the law under a certain fig-tree; and ſometimes they ſpeak of all theſe together, of ſitting under olives, and under vines, and under fig-trees, and ſtudying in the words of the law [s]; ſee John i. 48. This is to be underſtood, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi explain it, of all men; not of the Iſraelites only, but of all nations, ſince there will be no more war any where; hence it follows: and none ſhall make them afraid; the enemies of God's people will be no more, neither Turk nor pope, eaſtern or weſtern antichriſt, beaſt or falſe prophet; wherefore in thoſe days of the Meſſiah Judah ſhall be ſaved, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely, even all the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, Jews and Gentiles; there ſhall be none to hurt in the holy mountain of the Lord, or any violence and oppreſſion, waſting and deſtruction any where; ſee Jer. xxiii. 5. Iſ. xi. 9. and lx. 18: for the mouth of the Lord of hoſts hath ſpoken it; who ſpeaks nothing but truth, and who is able and faithful to perform what he has ſpoken; and therefore all this may be depended on.

℣. 5. For all people will walk, every one in the name of his god, &c.] Till thoſe times come before deſcribed; when many nations and people ſhall flock to the church, and there ſhall be ſuch general peace and tranquillity as here promiſed; till then the nations of the earth ſhall retain their former religion, and the profeſſion of it with conſtancy, till they are otherwiſe inſtructed, as Aben Ezra; or till the Meſſiah ſhall turn them into the right way, as Kimchi; till that time comes, the pagans will worſhip their idols, and continue in the idolatry of their anceſtors; the papiſts will retain their image-worſhip, and hold to their lord god the pope, as they call him; the Mahometans will cleave to their prophet, and walk according to the rules he has left them to obſerve. Jarchi's note is, "they ſhall go to deſtruction becauſe of "their idolatry;" with which he ſays the Targum agrees, which is, "all nations ſhall go according "to the idols they have worſhipped;" or as the king of Spain's bible, "they ſhall be guilty or "condemned becauſe they have worſhipped idols: and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever; both in the mean while, and when thoſe happy times ſhall come, and ſo thro' all generations as long as the world ſtands. This is the language of thoſe that know the Lord, believe in him, and ſincerely ſerve him; who determine in the ſtrength of divine grace to continue in their profeſſion of faith of him, in his worſhip and ſervice, in his ways, truths and ordinances, whatever others do; and indeed are the more animated to it, when they obſerve how conſtant and ſtedfaſt, idolaters, pagans, papiſts and Mahometans are in their falſe worſhip, both in the profeſſion and practice of it. The Targum is, "we will "truſt in the word of the Lord our God for ever "and ever;" in Chriſt the eſſential word; and ſo the phraſe is expreſſive of faith, and a profeſſion of faith in him; and of conſtant attendance upon his word and ordinances.

℣. 6. In that day, ſaith the Lord, will I aſſemble her that halteth, &c.] The Jews or Iſraelites ſo deſcribed; not from the halting of Jacob their father, as Abarbinel thinks; nor becauſe of their halting between two opinions, worſhipping both the true God and idols, as in the times of Elijah; for this will not ſuit with the Jews in their preſent ſtate; but becauſe they were like lame and maimed ſheep, to which the alluſion is; or becauſe they were guilty of ſins, which are ſometimes expreſſed by halting, Jer. xx. 10. Pſ. xxxviii. 16, 17. The word ſignifies ſuch that go ſide-way, and not uprightly; and fitly deſcribes ſuch who deviate from the ways of God, and walk not according to the divine word: now in that day or time before referred to, the laſt days of the goſpel-diſpenſation, the Lord will convert the Jews; or heal theſe lame and maimed ones, ſo Jarchi interprets the word; or will gather them by his Spirit and grace to the Meſſiah, and aſſemble them into his church, and among his people, and bring them into the ſheep-fold, under the care of the one ſhepherd the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: and I will gather her that is driven out; out of the land of Iſrael, and ſcattered among the nations of the world; even driven out by the Lord himſelf, becauſe of their tranſgreſſions againſt him; ſee Jer. xvi. 15. and xxiv. 9: and her that I have afflicted; with various calamities, with famine and ſword, with captivity and poverty; the Targum adds, "for the ſins of "my people;" the Iſraelites for their idolatry, and the Jews for the rejection of the Meſſiah, and other ſins.

℣. 7. And I will make her that halted a remnant, &c.] That is, make a reſerve of her, and not utterly cut her off for her halting or ſinning; that there may be a ſeed, a poſterity deſcending from her, that ſhall ſerve the Lord, and appear to be a remnant according to the election of grace; which will be the perſons called and gathered in the latter day: and her that was caſt afar off, a ſtrong nation; Kimchi thinks this refers to the ten tribes that were carried far off into Media and other parts, 2 Kings xvii. 6. who ſhall now be a mighty and numerous people; and eſpecially ſhall be ſtrong in a ſpiritual ſenſe in the Lord, and in the power of his might, in Chriſt and his grace, and in the faith of him; ſee Iſ. lx. 22. Zech. xii. 8: and the Lord ſhall reign over them in mount Zion, from henceforth even for ever; that is, Chriſt who is Jehovah our righteouſneſs, ſhall reign over the converted Jews and Iſraelites in the church of God, often ſignified by mount Zion; where they ſhall be aſſembled, and ſhall acknowledge him as their king, and be ſubject to his word and ordinances, and never more depart from him; nor will his government over them ever ceaſe more, Luke i. 32, 33. This ſhows that this prophecy refers not to the firſt times of the goſpel; for then the Jews would not have him to reign over them; but to times yet to come, the laſt days of the goſpel-diſpenſation.

℣. 8. And thou, O tower of the flock, &c.] The words Migdal Eder are left by ſome untranſlated, and think that place to be intended ſo called, which was near to Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 19, 21. and perhaps is the ſame which Jerom[t] calls the tower of Ader, about a mile from Bethlehem: this is ſuppoſed to be the place where the ſhepherds were watching over their flocks at the time of Chriſt's birth, the tidings of which were firſt brought to them here; and the Jewiſh[u] doctors ſpeak of it as near Jeruſalem, and as a place of paſture; for they ſay, that cattel between Jeruſalem and Migdal Eder, and in an equal ſpace to every wind; the males were uſed for burnt-offerings, and the females for peace-offerings; and this place is thought to be referred to in the latter clauſe of this verſe: others think that Bethlehem itſelf is meant, to which the dominion came; but rather, as in the next chapter, the ruler came out of that; others think that the gate in Jeruſalem called the ſheep-gate is meant, Neh. iii. 32. and the tower at it, thro' which Chriſt is ſuppoſed to paſs when he entered into Jeruſalem, as king amidſt the Hoſannah's of the people; others take it to be the ſame with the tower of David, and put for Jeruſalem itſelf, whither the tribes were gathered together three times a year, like ſheep in a fold, ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech; hence others interpret it ſpiritually of the church of Chriſt; but tho' that is ſometimes ſpoken of as a ſtrong city, and a fortified place, yet is never called a tower, or a ſtrong-hold; which phraſes, when figuratively uſed, are always ſpoken of a divine perſon; ſee Pſ. xviii. 2. Prov. xviii. 10. Zech. ix. 12. and here of the Meſſiah; and ſo the Targum interprets it, "O Chriſt of Iſrael:" the church indeed is the flock; the people of God are often compared to ſheep for their harmleſſneſs and innocence, and the church to a flock of them, which is Chriſt's flock he feeds like a ſhepherd; the flock of ſlaughter, a little one, conſiſting of perſons ſeparated from the world, and under his peculiar care; and he is the tower of this flock, in alluſion to a ſhepherd's herd's cottage, called a tower, as a cottage in a vineyard is in Iſ. v. 2. where the ſhepherds watch, and into which they bring the ſick and lame, and take care of them; Chriſt is an high tower, where his people are ſafe out of the reach of their enemies; and a ſtrong one, being the mighty God and mighty Saviour, who has all power and ſtrength to defend his church and people, and may be well called their tower: and the ſtrong-hold of the daughter of Zion; the daughter of Zion is the church, particularly the church of the converted Jews; Chriſt is the ſtrong-hold of it, into which, as priſoners of hope, they will be directed to turn, Zech. ix. 12. a ſtrong refuge he is to flee unto, from the avenger of blood, the juſtice of God; from the curſes of the law; from the ſtorm of divine wrath; from the temptations of ſatan, and from the perſecutions of men; a ſtrong-hold is he to dwell in, and where the ſaints dwell ſafely, pleaſantly, at eaſe and peace, and very comfortably, and in great plenty; a ſtrong-hold for ſhelter from every enemy: unto thee ſhall it come; not the kingdom, as follows, which our verſion leads to, and is the ſenſe of Aben Ezra; for there is a conſiderable accent on the word come, which makes a large ſtop; and that it refers, as Jarchi obſerves, to her that halteth, &c. it or ſhe that halteth ſhall come, being aſſembled and gathered, or converted by the grace of God unto the Meſſiah; as to her, or their tower and ſtrong-hold, where all bleſſings of grace, and the ſupplies of it, and all ſalvation and ſafety are to be had and enjoyed. The promiſe reſpects the Jews coming to Chriſt upon their converſion, even ſuch who have been the halt, the maimed, the lame, and the blind: even the firſt dominion, the kingdom ſhall come to the daughter of Jeruſalem; or rather, and the firſt dominion ſhall come, the kingdom to the daughter of Jeruſalem; meaning, not the firſt notice of the Meſſiah's kingdom, given by John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his apoſtles, to the Jews, in the firſt times of the goſpel; or the preaching of the goſpel of the kingdom firſt to them; but rather, he who has the firſt or principal dominion, and to whom the kingdom belongs, he ſhall come to the daughter of Zion, as in Zech. ix. 9. though it rather reſpects here his coming to them at the time of their converſion, when they ſhall come to him, Rom. xi. 26. and when the firſt, chief, and principal kingdom in the world, and which is preferable to all others, will come unto, and be placed among them, as in ỷ. 7. and when it ſhall be, as ſome interpret it, as at the beginning, in the days of David and Solomon, and much more abundantly.

[u] T. Hieroſ. Kidduſhin, fol. 63. 1. T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 55. 1. Miſn. Shekalim, c. 7. §. 4.

ỷ. 9. Now why doſt thou cry out aloud? &c.] Or cry a cry [w]; a vehement one, or ſet up a moſt lamentable cry, as if no help or hope were to be had, but as in the moſt deſperate condition: here the prophet repreſents the Jews, as if they were already in captivity, and in the utmoſt diſtreſs, and as they certainly would be; and yet had no reaſon to deſpair of deliverance and ſalvation, ſince the Meſſiah would certainly come to them, and his kingdom would be ſet up among them. The word uſed has ſometimes the notion of friendſhip and aſſociation; hence the Targum renders it, "now "why art thou joined to the people?" and ſo Jarchi, "thou haſt no need to ſeek friends and "lovers, the kings of Egypt and Aſſyria for help." And which ſenſe of the word is approved by Guſſetius [x]. Is there no king in thee? is thy counſellor periſhed? be it ſo, that they were; as was the caſe when Zedekiah was taken and carried captive, and his princes, nobles, and counſellors killed; yet God their king and counſellor was with them, to keep and preſerve them, counſel, inſtruct, and comfort them, and at laſt to deliver and ſave them; and the king Meſſiah would be raiſed up, and ſent unto them in due time, who is the wonderful counſellor Iſaiah had propheſied of: for pangs have taken thee, as a woman in travail; which is often expreſſive of great ſufferings and ſorrows; and yet as the pangs of a woman in travail don't continue always, but have an end, ſo would theirs, and therefore there was no reaſon for deſpair; and as when ſhe brings forth her iſſue, her ſorrow is turned into joy, this would be their caſe.

ỷ. 10. Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail, &c.] Bear thy troubles and calamities, ſufferings and ſorrows, patiently, and expect deliverance from them, as a woman in ſuch circumſtances does: or as ſome render it in the future, thou ſhalt be in pain, &c [y]. and ſo is a prediction of their diſtreſs and captivity, which is expreſſed in plainer terms in the following clauſes: for now ſhalt thou go forth out of the city; the city of Jeruſalem; either by flight, in a private and ſecret manner, as Zedekiah and his princes, and part of his army did; or by force, being taken and led out by the enemy: and thou ſhalt dwell in the field; being turned out of their houſes, they were obliged to lodge in the fields, whilſt they were collected together, and in a body marched as captives to Babylon; and whilſt on the road lay in the open fields, and not in houſes, who had been uſed to dwell in a city, and in their cieled houſes; but now even their city itſelf was plowed like a field, as before predicted: and thou ſhalt go even to Babylon; to the city of Babylon, as their king did, and many of them alſo; and others of them into various parts of that kingdom: this is a plain prophecy of the Babyloniſh captivity, which came to paſs upwards of a hundred years after this: there ſhalt thou be delivered; after ſeventy years captivity, by the hand of Cyrus; who taking the city of Babylon, and making himſelf maſter of the whole empire, delivered the Jews from their bondage, and gave them liberty to return to their own land: there the Lord ſhall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies; the Chaldeans: and this was typical of the deliverance and redemption of all the Lord's people, from the hand of all their ſpiritual enemies; from ſatan and the world, law, death, and hell, by the blood of the great Redeemer, and near kinſman of his people, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

ỷ. 11. Now alſo many nations are gathered againſt thee, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of Sennacherib's army invading Judea, and beſieging Jeruſalem, in Hezekiah's time; for that was not threſhed, as the phraſe is afterwards uſed, or deſtroyed by the daughter of Zion, but by an angel from heaven: nor of the Babylonians or Chaldeans, ſince they ſucceeded in their attempt, and were the conquerors, and not conquered: rather this reſpects the times of the Maccabees, as the ſeries of prophecy and hiſtory agreeing together ſhews; in which times many of the neighbouring nations of the Jews, gave them a great deal of trouble, and eſpecially Antiochus king of Syria; and many and mighty armies mies ſent by him. The Jews, as Kimchi, Aben Ezra, and Abarbinel [z], interpret this of the armies of Gog and Magog, in the times of their vainly expected Meſſiah. Some chriſtian interpreters, with much more probability, underſtand this paſſage of the firſt times of the goſpel, and the oppoſition made to that and the chriſtian church, which yet in the iſſue prevailed; and perhaps it may have reference to the laſt times, and receive its full accompliſhment in the battel at Armageddon, Rev. xvi. 14—16. and xix. 19, 20, 21. That ſay, let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion; either defiled with ſin; ſo the Targum, "that ſay, "when will ſhe ſin, and our eye ſhall behold the "fall of Zion;" as the effect of her ſin: or, as others, let her play the hypocrite [a]; and be condemned as ſuch: or rather, be defiled with ſlaughter and bloodſhed, that they might be delighted with ſo pleaſing a ſight, and their eyes might feed with pleaſure on an object ſo agreeable to their wiſhes.

℣. 12. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither underſtand they his counſel, &c.] Which are very different from theirs: the thoughts and deſigns of the enemies of Zion, in the times of the Maccabees, were, to deſtroy utterly the people of God, and root them out of the earth, and aboliſh their religion and worſhip; but the intentions of God were, to defeat them, and bring them to ruin: the views of the kings of the earth, being ſtirred up by unclean ſpirits to the battel of almighty God, will be to extirpate the intereſt and kingdom of Chriſt; but the end of the Lord, in ſuffering them to be gathered together, will be, utterly and totally to deſtroy them; and the counſel of the Lord that ſhall ſtand, and the thoughts of his heart, to all generations. Men know their own deſigns, but they don't know the deſigns of the Lord; they intend the ruin of others, but God intends to bring about theirs; and his intentions are never fruſtrated, but theirs are. For he ſhall gather them as ſheaves into the floor; as when the harveſt is ripe, it is cut down, and bound up in ſheaves, and brought home, and theſe are laid in order upon the floor to be threſhed; ſo when the nations of the earth are fully ripe for ruin, God will put, or order to be put, in the ſickle, and cut them down, and bind them in bundles, and lay them on his threſhing-floor of wrath and vengeance, and utterly deſtroy them, contrary to their views and expectations.

℣. 13. Ariſe, and threſh, O daughter of Zion, &c.] The nations gathered againſt her, and now laid together on the floor as ſheaves to be threſhed. Here the people of God are arouſed, and called out of a low and weak eſtate, and are animated and encouraged to exert themſelves, and fall upon their enemies, and deſtroy them; alluding to the threſhing of corn on the floor, the metaphor being here carried on from the former verſe. The Targum is, "ariſe, and kill, O congregation of Zion." For I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs braſs; ſignifying, that the Lord would give them ſtrength ſufficient to ſuch work, and ſuch power, their enemies ſhould not be able to reſiſt and overcome; and that they ſhould fall into their hands, and be cruſhed, trod, and trampled on by them, and utterly ſubdued. The alluſion is to oxen that have horns and hoofs; and it ſuggeſts, that they ſhould be as ſtrong as they; have horns like them, that is, power, to puſh down their enemies; and hoofs to trample upon them: or as theſe creatures have a horny ſubſtance on their feet, or hoofs, which are ſtrong, and fit for the purpoſes of treading out corn, for which they were uſed in the eaſtern countries, drawing after them iron wheels, or planks ſtuck with flints; ſo horſes and oxen that have ſtrong feet, and hard hoofs, are ſaid to have feet of braſs [b]; thus the Lord's people ſhould have ſuch courage, force, and power, as not only to withſtand their enemies, but to obtain a conqueſt over them. The Targum is, "I will make the people "in them ſtrong as iron, and their remnant firm "as braſs;" which was true of, and accompliſhed in, Judas Maccabæus and his brethren; and will be more clearly fulfilled in the chriſtian kings and princes in the latter day, when engaged with the antichriſtian ſtates. And thou ſhalt beat in pieces many people; as the Maccabees did ſubdue many people and nations, as all Paleſtine, Moab, Idumea, Samaria, and Iturea, as Joſephus [c] relates; and as the chriſtian princes will beat in pieces, and utterly deſtroy, all the antichriſtian kings of the earth, their ſtates and kingdoms, and bring them into ſubjection to them: and I will conſecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their ſubſtance unto the Lord of the whole earth; that is, to Chriſt, who in the laſt day will appear to be King and Lord of the whole earth; and all the riches of the antichriſtian nations, Pagan, Papal, and Mahometan, will be devolved to, and employed in his intereſt and ſervice; ſee Rev. xxi. 24. theſe are the words of God the Father, with reſpect to his Son Jeſus Chriſt; who will now have a dominion, glory, and kingdom given him, by the Ancient of days, that ſo all people, nations, and languages ſhall ſerve him, Dan. vii. 14. of which there might be ſome type and ſhadow in the times of the Maccabees.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter begins with a prophecy of the ſiege of Jeruſalem, ℣. 1. and then follows another concerning the place of the Meſſiah's birth, ℣. 2. and of the caſe of the Jews, either before or after it, ℣. 3. and of Chriſt's office as a ſhepherd, and of his grandeur in the world, ℣. 4. and of his being a peace-maker, and protector of his people from their enemies, ℣. 5, 6. and of his people, the great increaſe of them, and their uſefulneſs, and alſo of their courage, ſtrength, and proweſs, ℣. 7, 8, 9. likewiſe, that the Lord will remove from them their vain confidence, and all occaſion of it, and whatſoever illicit arts and practices were found among them; and all idolatry, and the inſtruments of it, ℣. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. and the chapter is concluded with a threatening of vengeance to the heathens, ℣. 15.

℣. 1. Now gather thyſelf in troops, O daughter of troops, &c.] Not Jeruſalem, full of people, called to draw out their forces, and fall upon the enemy beſieging them, whether Chaldeans or Romans: but rather the Babylonians, whoſe armies were large, and their troops numerous; who are called upon by the people of God, encouraged by the foregoing prophecies, as well as by what follows, to come forth with all their forces, and muſter up all their armies, and exert all the power and ſtrength they had, thus inſulting them; being aſſured by the above promiſes, that in the iſſue they ſhould prevail over all their enemies: unleſs the Romans ſhould be intended, to whom this character of daughter of troops well agrees, of whoſe legions all have heard; and ſince the Babyloniſh attempt on Jeruſalem, and the carrying the Jews captive into Babylon, are before predicted, with their deliverance from it, and what they ſhould do in the times of the Maccabees; a prophecy of the Romans, or a repreſentation of them, gathering their troops and legions together to beſiege Jeruſalem, very naturally comes in here. He hath laid ſiege againſt us; either Nebuchadnezzar, and the Chaldean army; or Veſpaſian with the Romans: this, according to the prophetic ſtile, is ſpoken of as if actually done, becauſe of the certainty of it. They ſhall ſmite the judge of Iſrael with a rod upon the cheek; that is, either they, the beſiegers, the king of Babylon and his army, when they ſhall have taken Jeruſalem, beſieged by them, ſhall uſe Zedekiah the king of Judah, and judge of Iſrael, and his princes and nobles, very ill, ſignified by this phraſe; yea, in a very cruel and barbarous manner; firſt ſlaying his ſons and his princes before his eyes, then putting his eyes out, binding him in chains, and carrying him to Babylon, and there laying him in a priſon, Jer. lii. 10, 11. or elſe they, the beſieged, would uſe the Meſſiah, the king, judge, and ruler in Iſrael, in ſuch a ſpiteful and ſcandalous manner; and ſo the Meſſiah was to be uſed by them, who according to prophecy gave his cheek to them that plucked off the hair, and hid not his face from ſhame and ſpitting; and ſo Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, was ſmitten, both with rods, and with the palms of men's hands, and buffetted, and ſpit upon, Iſ. l. 6. Matt. xxvi. 67. and this is mentioned as a reaſon why Jeruſalem would be encompaſſed with the Roman armies, and beſieged by their troops and legions, and become deſolate, even for their rejection and ill-uſage of the Meſſiah. Aben Ezra ſays, it is right in my eyes, that the judge of Iſrael is the Meſſiah, or Zerubbabel; not the latter, who never was ſo uſed, but the former.

℣. 2. But thou, Bethlehem-Ephratah, &c.] But tho' Jeruſalem ſhould be beſieged and taken, and the land of Judea laid waſte, yet before all this ſhould be, the Meſſiah ſhould be born in Bethlehem, of which this is a prophecy, as is evident from Matt. ii. 4, 5, 6. the place is called by both the names it went by, to point it out the more diſtinctly, and with the greater certainty, Gen. xxxv. 19. the former ſignifies the houſe of bread, and a proper place for Chriſt to be born in, who is the bread of life; and it has the name of the latter from its fruitfulneſs, being a place of paſture, and as we find it was at the time of our Lord's birth; for near it ſhepherds were then watching over their flocks; and it is here added, to diſtinguiſh it from another Bethlehem in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 15. from which tribe the Meſſiah was not to come, but from the tribe of Judah; and in which this Bethlehem was, and therefore called by Matthew, Bethlehem in the land of Judah; as it appears this was, from Ruth i. 1, 2. and from the Septuagint verſion of Joſh. xv. 60. where, as Jerom obſerves, it was added by the Greek interpreters, or eraſed out of the Hebrew text by the wickedneſs of the Jews: the former ſeems righteſt. Though thou be little among the thouſands of Judah; this ſupplement of ours, is according to Kimchi's reading and ſenſe of the words; which, in ſome meaſure, accounts for the difference between the prophet and the evangeliſt Matthew, by whom this place is ſaid to be not the leaſt, as it might, and yet be little; beſides, it might be little at one time, in Micah's time, yet not little at another time, in Matthew's; it might be little with reſpect to ſome circumſtances, as to pompous buildings, and number of inhabitants, and yet not little on account of its being the birth-place of great men, as Jeſſe, David, and eſpecially the Meſſiah: or the words may be rendered with an interrogation, art thou little? &c[d]. thou art not: or thus, it is a little thing to be among the thouſands of Judah[e]; a greater honour ſhall be put upon thee, by being the place of the Meſſiah's birth. Moreover, Mr. Pocock has ſhewn out of R. Tanchum, both in his commentary on this place, and elſewhere[f], that the word צעיר ſignifies both little and great, or of great note and eſteem. The tribes of Iſrael were divided into tens, hundreds, and thouſands, over which there was a head or prince; hence, in Matthew, theſe are called the princes of Judah. Yet out of thee ſhall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Iſrael; not Hezekiah, who very probably was now born at the time of this prophecy; nor was he born at Bethlehem, nor a ruler in Iſrael, only king of Judah: nor Zorobabel, who was born in Babylon, as his name ſhews, was governor of Judah, but not of Iſrael; nor can it be ſaid of him, or any mere man, what is ſaid in the next clauſe: but the Meſſiah is intended, as the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi confeſs, and other Jewiſh writers. The Targum is, "out of thee ſhall come forth before me the Meſſiah, that he may exerciſe dominion over Iſrael." Jarchi's note is, "out of thee ſhall come forth unto me Meſſiah, the ſon of David;" and ſo he ſays, the ſtone which the builders refuſed, &c. Pſ. cxviii. 22. plainly ſuggeſting, that that paſſage alſo belongs to the Meſſiah, as it certainly does. Kimchi's paraphraſe is, "altho' thou art little among the thouſands of Judah, out of thee ſhall come forth unto me a judge, to be ruler in Iſrael, and this is the king Meſſiah." And Abarbinel[g], mentioning thoſe words in ch. iv. 13. ariſe, and threſh, O daughter of Zion, obſerves, "this ſpeaks concerning the buſineſs of the king Meſſiah, who ſhall reign over them, and ſhall be the prince of their army; and it is plain, that he ſhall be of the houſe of David: and it is ſaid, O thou, Bethlehem-Ephratah, which was a ſmall city, in the midſt of the cities of Judah; and altho' thou art little in the thouſands of Judah, out of thee ſhall come forth unto me a man, a ruler in Iſrael, whoſe goings forth are from the days of old; the meaning is, the goings forth of the family of that ruler are from the days of old; that is, from the ſeed of David, and a rod from the ſtem of Jeſſe, who was of Bethlehem Judah." So Abendana [h], a more modern Jew, paraphraſes the words thus, "out of thee ſhall come forth unto me a judge, that is to be ruler in Iſrael, and this is the king Meſſiah; for becauſe he is to be of the ſeed of David, from Bethlehem he will be." To which may be added R. Iſaac [i], who having cited this paſſage, obſerves, and he, the ruler in Iſrael, is the king Meſſiah, who ſhall come forth from the ſeed of David the king, who was of Bethlehem Judah, as in 1 Sam. xvii. 12. Wherefore Lyra, having quoted Jarchi, and given his ſenſe of the paſſage, remarks, hence it is plain, that ſome catholicks, explaining this ſcripture of king Hezekiah, judaize more than the Hebrews. Tho' ſome of them object the application of it to Jeſus, who they ſay ruled not over Iſrael, but Iſrael over him, and put him to death; which it is true they did; but God exalted him to be a prince, as well as a Saviour, unto Iſrael, notwithſtanding that, and declared him to be Lord and Chriſt; beſides, previous to his death, and in the land of Iſrael, he gave abundant proof of his power and rule over univerſal nature, earth, air, and ſea; over angels, good and bad; and over men and beaſts: all creatures obeyed him; tho' indeed his kingdom is not of this world, but of a ſpiritual nature, and is over the ſpiritual Iſrael of God; and there is a time coming, when he will be king over all the earth. Now out of Bethlehem was the king Meſſiah, the ruler in Iſrael, to come forth; that is, here he was to be born, as the phraſe ſignifies; ſee Gen. x. 14. and here our Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, was born, as appears from Matt. ii. 8, 11. Luke ii. 1—6, 11, 15, 16. and this is not only certain from the evangelic hiſtory, but the Jews themſelves acknowledge it. One of their chronologers [k] affirms, that Jeſus the Nazarene was born at Bethlehem Judah, a parſa and an half from Jeruſalem; that is, about ſix miles from it, which was the diſtance between them: and even the author of a blaſphemous book [l], pretending to give the life of Jeſus, owns, that Bethlehem Judah was the place of his nativity: and it is clear, not only that the Jews in the times of Jeſus, expected the Meſſiah to come from hence, even both the chief prieſts and ſcribes of the people, who, in anſwer to Herod's queſtion about the place of the Meſſiah's birth, direct him to this, according to Micah's prophecy, Matt. ii. 4, 5, 6. and the common people, who thought to have confronted the Meſſiahſhip of Jeſus with it, John vii. 41, 42. but others alſo, at other times. The tower of Edar being a place near to Bethlehem-Ephratah, Gen. xxxv. 19, 21. Jonathan ben Uzziel, in his Targum of ỳ. 19. ſays of the tower of Edar, this is the place from whence the king Meſſiah ſhall be revealed in the end of days; nay, ſome of them ſay he is born already, and was born at Bethlehem. An Arabian, they ſay [m], told a Jew, "the king Meſſiah is born; he replied to him, what is his name? he anſwered, Menachem (the comforter) is his name; he aſked him, what is his father's name? he replied, Hezekiah; he ſaid to him, from whence is he? he anſwered, from the palace of the king of Bethlehem Judah." This ſame ſtory is told elſewhere [n], with ſome little variation, thus, that the Arabian ſhould ſay to the Jew, "the Redeemer of the Jews is born; he ſaid to him, what is his name? he replied, Menachem is his name; and what's his father's name? he anſwered, Hezekiah; and where do they dwell? (he and his father); he replied, in Birath-Arba, in Bethlehem Judah." Theſe things ſhow their ſenſe of this prophecy, and the convictions of their minds, as to the birth of the Meſſiah, and the place of it. The words unto me, are thought by ſome to be redundant and ſuperfluous; but contain in them the glory and goſpel of the text, whether conſidered as the words of God the Father; and then the ſenſe is, that Chriſt was to come forth in this place in human nature, or become incarnate, agreeable to the purpoſe which God purpoſed in himſelf; to the covenant made with him, before the world was; to an order he had given him as Mediator, and to his promiſe concerning him; and he came forth to him, and anſwered to all theſe; as well as this was in order to do his will and work, by fulfilling the law; preaching the goſpel; doing miracles; performing the work of redemption and ſalvation; by becoming a ſacrifice for ſin, and ſuffering death; and likewiſe it was for the glorifying of all the divine perfections: or whether as the words of the prophet, in the name of the church and people of God, to and for whom he was born, or became incarnate; he came forth unto them, to be their Mediator in general; to be the Redeemer and Saviour of them in particular; to execute his ſeveral offices of prophet, prieſt and king; and to anſwer and fill up all relations he ſtands in to them, of father, brother, head, and huſband. Whoſe goings forth have been of old, from everlaſting; which is ſaid of him, not becauſe his extraction was from David, who lived many ages before him; for admitting he was in him, in his loins, as to his human nature, ſo long ago, yet his goings forth were not from thence: nor becauſe he was propheſied of, and promiſed very early, as he was from the beginning of the world; but neither a prophecy or promiſe of him can be called his going forth; which was only foretold and ſpoken of, but not in actual being: nor becauſe it was decreed from eternity that he ſhould come forth from Bethlehem, or be born there in time; for this is ſaying no more, than what might be ſaid of every one that was to be born in Bethlehem, and was born there: nor is this to be underſtood of his manifeſtations or appearances in an human form to the patriarchs, in the ſeveral ages of time; ſince to theſe, as to other of the above things, the phraſe from everlaſting, cannot be aſcribed: but either of his going forth in a way of grace towards his people, in acts of love to them, delighting in thoſe ſons of men before the world was; in applying to his Father on their account, aſking them of him, and betrothing them to himſelf; in becoming their ſurety, entring into a covenant with his Father for them, and being the head of election to them, receiving all bleſſings and promiſes of grace for them: or elſe of his eternal generation and Sonſhip, as commonly interpreted; who is the Only-begotten of the Father, of the ſame nature with him, and a diſtinct perſon from him; the eternal Word that went forth from him, and was with him from eternity, and is truly God. The phraſes are expreſſive of the eternity of his divine nature and perſon; Jarchi compares them with Pſ. lxxii. 16. before the ſun was, his name was Jinnon; that is, the Son, the Son of God; ſo as the former part of the text ſets forth his human birth, this his divine generation; which, becauſe of the excellency and ineffableneſs of it, is expreſſed in the plural number, goings forth. So R. Eliezer [o], along with the above-mentioned paſſage in the Pſalms, produces this to prove the name of the Meſſiah before the world was, whoſe goings forth were from everlaſting, when as yet the world was not created.

℣. 3. Therefore will he give them up, &c.] Or notwithſtanding, as this particle ſignifies; ſee Hoſ. ii. 14. tho' all this ſhall be, yet previous to the birth of this perſon, the Lord would give up the Jews to trouble and diſtreſs, and into the hands of their enemies; and the time from this prophet to the birth of Chriſt, was a time for the moſt part of great trouble to the Jews; not only was their country invaded, and their city beſieged by Sennacherib in Hezekiah's time, but ſome years after that, they were wholly carried captive into Babylon; and when they returned, it was troubleſome times with them; they met with many enemies that diſturbed them, whilſt they were rebuilding the city and temple; and after that they endured much tribulation, in the times of Antiochus Epiphanes, or of the Maccabees; nor were they long in any quiet, nor in any ſettled ſtate, unto the coming of the Meſſiah. Or elſe this is to be underſtood of what ſhould be after his coming; for tho' Jeſus was born at Bethlehem, according to this plain prophecy, and had all the characters of the Meſſiah in him, yet the Jews rejected him, and would not have him to reign over them; wherefore he, the Meſſiah, as Japhet interprets it, gave them up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, and into the hands of their enemies the Romans; by whom they were deſtroyed or carried captive, and diſperſed among the nations; in which condition they ſtill remain, and will, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; ſo long will Jeruſalem be trodden under foot, or the Jews be given up to their will, according to Luke xxi. 24. or as here expreſſed, until the time that ſhe which travaileth hath brought forth; that is, according to the firſt ſenſe, until the virgin Mary travailed in birth with the Meſſiah, and brought forth him her firſt-born, Matt. i. 25. or according to the latter, until Zion, or the church of God, travailed in prayer, and in the miniſtry of the word, and brought forth many children to Chriſt, both among Jews and Gentiles; and the ſenſe is, that the Jews ſhall be given up to diſtreſs and trouble, till the time of their converſion; ſee Iſ. lxvi. 7, 8. The Jews have a tradition in their Talmud, that "the Son of David would not come, until the kingdom ſpreads itſelf over the whole world for nine months; as it is ſaid, therefore will he give them up, until the time that ſhe that travaileth hath brought forth; which is the time of a woman's going with child." This both Jarchi and Kimchi take notice of. In one place [p] it is called the kingdom of Aram or Syria; and in another [q], a blank is left for Edom, that is, Rome; for by the kingdom is meant the Roman empire, and which did extend all over the world before the coming of the Meſſiah-Jeſus, as appears from Luke ii. 1. as well as from all profane hiſtory. Then the remnant of his brethren ſhall return to the children of Iſrael; that is, the brethren of the Meſſiah, as Kimchi and Abendana interpret it; who ſhould return with the children of Iſrael, as both they and Jarchi explain it; to which the Targum agrees. Kimchi's note is, "the remnant of his brethren; they are the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which remained when the ten tribes were carried captive; and the ſurnames, his brethren, relate to the Meſſiah." So Abendana [r], "and the remnant his brethren; they are the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, they ſhall return with the children of Iſrael, who are the ten tribes; as if he ſhould ſay, theſe and theſe ſhall return to their land, and the king Meſſiah ſhall reign over them; and the ſurnames, his brethren, reſpect the Meſſiah." And to the ſame purpoſe R. Iſaac [s], "the remnant of the brethren of the Meſſiah, who are the children of Judah and Benjamin, that are left and remain of the calamities and perſecutions of the captivities, ſhall return to their own land, together with the children of Iſrael, who are the ten tribes." Meaning either the remnant, according to the election of grace, among the Gentiles; who with thoſe among the Jews ſhould be converted to Chriſt in the firſt times of the goſpel, thoſe immediately following the birth of Chriſt; the goſpel being preached both to the Jews and Gentiles, and ſome of both were called and converted, and whom Chriſt owned as his brethren, and were not aſhamed of; ſee Matt. xii. 49, 50. Heb. ii. 11. or the Lord's choſen people, and brethren of Chriſt, thoſe of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and thoſe of the ten tribes of Iſrael; who ſhall join and coaleſce together in ſeeking the Meſſiah, embracing and profeſſing him, and appointing him the one head over them, when they will turn to the Lord, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; ſee Jer. l. 4. Hoſ. i. 11. Rom. xi. 25, 26.

℣. 4. And he ſhall ſtand and feed in the ſtrength of the Lord, &c.] The ruler in Iſrael, before deſcribed and propheſied of; the Meſſiah, as Kimchi himſelf interprets it, and other Jewiſh writers. Kimchi's note is, "after the affliction, the king Meſſiah ſhall ſtand and feed Iſrael in the ſtrength of the Lord;" and ſo R. Iſaac [t] paraphraſes the words exactly in the ſame way: wherefore, as another learned Jew [u] obſerves, theſe expreſſions evince, that the ruler here ſpoken of can be no other than the Meſſiah; not Zorobabel, who never attained to this height and happineſs. He is both king and ſhepherd, and to each of theſe the act of feeding is aſcribed. The ſame word, in the Greek language, ſignifies both to rule and to feed, and is uſed by Matthew, ch. ii. 6, and kings are often compared to ſhepherds. Chriſt feeds his people, his brethren, his flock, his ſheep and lambs, all truly converted ones; and this takes in the whole office of a ſhepherd, and the care he has of his flock; he takes an exact account of them, goes before them, and leads them out into good paſtures; ſets under-ſhepherds over them; protects them from all their enemies; looks after what is loſt or driven away; heals the ſick, ſtrengthens the weak, binds up the broken, and watches over his flock continually: he feeds them with himſelf, the bread of life, with his fleſh and blood, which are meat and drink indeed; with the doctrines and ordinances of the goſpel; and which are found to be ſpiritual, ſavoury, ſtrengthening, ſatisfying, and ſoul-nouriſhing food: and he ſtands and does this, being raiſed from the dead, and poſſeſſed of all power in heaven and in earth; which deſigns not the poſition of his body, but the miniſtration of his office, and his alacrity and readineſs to perform it, and his conſtancy in it: and all this in the ſtrength of the Lord; in his own ſtrength, as a divine perſon, which is the ſame with the ſtrength of Jehovah; and in the power and ſtrength that is diſpenſed to him as Mediator; and with his goſpel, the rod of his ſtrength, and in ſuch manner as to defend his flock from all that would devour them: in the majeſty of the name of the Lord his God; Jehovah the Father is the God of Chriſt, as he is Mediator; and his name is in him, even the majeſty of it; for as a divine perſon, he has the ſame nature and perfections with him; and as man exalted at his right-hand, has a name above every name in this world, or that to come; and it is by authority from him, in his office-capacity that he rules and feeds his people, having all judgment committed to him: and they ſhall abide; that is, his people, his flock, his ſheep fed and ruled by him; theſe ſhall continue and perſevere under his care and keeping; in him, in whom they are choſen and preſerved; in his love, from which they can never be ſeparated; in his hands, out of which none can pluck them; in his church, where they ſhall ever remain; and ſo may be conſidered as a promiſe of the perſeverance of the ſaints in faith and holineſs to the end: or, they ſhall ſit [w]; quietly and ſecurely, being freed from perſecution, with which the chriſtians were attended in the firſt three centuries: this began to be accompliſhed in the times of Conſtantius Chlorus, who ſuccoured the chriſtians in the times of Diocleſian, and with whom the perſecutions ended, and peace and proſperity followed: for now ſhall he be great unto the ends of the earth; as he was in the times of Conſtantine, and will be again. Chriſt is great in himſelf, in his perſon and offices; and will appear to be ſo unto all men, even unto the ends of the earth, when his goſpel ſhall be preached and ſpread every where; when his kingdom ſhall be enlarged, and be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth; even then ſhall he appear to be a great king over all the earth, and the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, the man, Jehovah's fellow; and to have ſuch a flock, and ſo large, as never any had; when there will be one fold, and one ſhepherd; for this prophecy reſpects the latter day-glory. Kimchi's gloſs is, "the name of the Meſ-"ſiah ſhall be magnified, after the judgment of "the wicked."

℣. 5. And this man ſhall be the peace, &c.] The word man is not in the text, only this; and refers to the perſon before ſpoken of, who was to be born in Bethlehem, to be the ruler in Iſrael, that ſhould ſtand and feed his people, and ſhould be great to the ends of the earth; and is no other than the Meſſiah, as Kimchi, and other Jewiſh writers own. Kimchi's note is, "this peace reſpects "the Meſſiah; for he ſhall be the cauſe or author "of peace; as it is ſaid, he ſhall ſpeak peace unto "the heathen, Zech. ix. 10;" and R. Iſaac [x] expreſſes his ſenſe of the words in much the ſame language; and it is an obſervation the Jews ſometimes make, and which they give as a ſign of the Meſſiah's coming, "when you ſee a Perſian horſe "bound in the land of Iſrael, look for the feet "of the Meſſiah;" which is the ſenſe of Mic. v. 5. this ſhall be the peace, when the Aſſyrian comes into our land [y], &c. ſo Jeſus the true Meſſiah is called our peace, Eph. ii. 14. and is the cauſe and author of peace, not only between Jew and Gentile, but between God and men; which he has made by the blood of his croſs, and ſpeaks and gives peace to men; and he is the author of peace in his churches, whoſe kingdom is a kingdom of peace, of which there will be an abundance in the latter day; for all which he would not be ſufficient was he a mere man; tho' it was proper he ſhould be a man, that he might have blood to ſhed, a body to offer up, and in it die to procure peace; and yet be more than a man, God alſo, to put virtue and efficacy into what he did and ſuffered to obtain it, as well as to ſecure and continue the peace of his people, and preſerve them from all their enemies: when the Aſſyrian ſhall come into our land; not Sennacherib king of Aſſyria; tho' by the invaſion of Judea, and ſiege of Jeruſalem, he might have lately been concerned in, and by reaſon of the terror which that had raiſed in the people, the Aſſyrian may be here put for any powerful enemy of the people of God in after-times; or ſatan, and his principalities and powers, even all the powers of darkneſs, Chriſt our peace-maker engaged with, at the time he made peace by his ſufferings and death; and perhaps may chiefly deſign the Turk, the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel, as Mr. Mede [z] thinks, that will enter into the land of Judea, in order to take it out of the hands of the Jews, who will be poſſeſſed of it upon their converſion to Chriſt; but he by his inſtruments will ſecure to them the poſſeſſion of it, and their peace and proſperity in it: and when he ſhall tread in our palaces; the palaces of our princes, and nobles, and great men, at leaſt attempt to do it: then ſhall we raiſe againſt him; the Aſſyrian, or whatſoever enemy is meant by him: or, with him, that is, the Meſſiah, as Kimchi and others [a] interpret it. The Targum is, "then will we appoint over us;" which ſenſe the above writer wonders at, as being contrary to the Hebrew text: ſeven ſhepherds, and eight principal men; that is, many, as the phraſe is uſed in Eccl. xi. 2. to which paſſage Aben Ezra and Kimchi refer us; theſe are, as the laſt mentioned writer, and others ſay [b], the princes of the Meſſiah; and according to the ancient [c] Jewiſh Rabbins, the ſeven ſhepherds are particularly theſe, David in the midſt, Adam, Seth, Methuſelah, on his right-hand (Kimchi has it; Seth, Enoch, and Methuſelah) and Abraham, Jacob, and Moſes on his left-hand; and the eight principal men are, Jeſſe, Saul, Samuel, Amos, Zephaniah, Zedekiah (in Kimchi and Rabbot 'tis Hezekiah) Elias, and Meſſiah; but, as Aben Ezra, not fifteen perſons are deſigned, at moſt but eight, according to this form of ſpeech in Prov. xxx. 15, 18, 21, 24, 29. Amos i. 3. &c. Calmet [d] takes thoſe ſeven or eight ſhepherds to be the ſeven princes confederate with Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, who killed Smerdis the Magian, who had poſſeſſed himſelf of the empire of the Perſians, after the death of Cambyſes; but Smerdis was not an Aſſyrian, nor is the kingdom of Perſia here meant, but the land of Judea; and the prophecy reſpects the times of the Meſſiah, who ſhould appear there, and where would be raiſed up men to ſupport his intereſt: and if conjecture may be allowed, as this may be underſtood of the apoſtles and firſt preachers of the goſpel, the princes of the Meſſiah, who were raiſed up at the prayer and requeſt of the church, to oppoſe ſatan and his emiſſaries, in the firſt times of the goſpel; by theſe may be meant the writers of the New Teſtament, the four evangeliſts, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, and the apoſtles Peter, James and Jude, which make the ſeven ſhepherds; and if you add to theſe the apoſtle Paul, they will make eight principal men; or rather I ſhould think the ſeven angels are pointed at, that ſhall pour out the laſt plagues on the antichriſtian ſtates; to which, if another angel is added, that will proclaim the fall of Babylon, the ſame number will be made up; ſee Rev. xvi. 1. and xviii. 1. and who will aſſiſt the Jews againſt the Turks, when they ſhall attempt to diſpoſſeſs them of their land, they ſhall again inherit.

℣. 6. And they ſhall waſte the land of Aſſyria with the ſword, &c.] Or feed [e] upon it with the ſword, deſtroy the inhabitants of it; either ſpiritually ſubdue the nations of the world to the obedience of Chriſt, by the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; by the preaching of the goſpel, the miniſtry of the apoſtles, and others, in the Gentile world; ſee 2 Cor. x. 3, 4, 5. Eph. vi. 17. or literally, meaning that the angels of the vials, the chriſtian princes ſhall deſtroy the Ottoman empire with the ſword: and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof; the ſame with Babylon, the empire of which was firſt ſet up by Nimrod, the beginning of whoſe kingdom was Babel, Gen. x. 11. the ſame with Nebrodus, a name of Bacchus, and which is no other than Barchus the ſon of Chus, as Nimrod was the ſon of Cuſh, and Bacchus was a mighty hunter, as he was; all which Bochart [f] has obſerved: now his country was Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar, that is, the land of Babylon, as the Targum of Onkelos and Jeruſalem in Gen. x. 10. render it; tho' ſome think Nimrod extended his dominions into Aſſyria; and tranſlate [g] the following verſe, ℣. 11. out of that land, he (i. e. Nimrod) went forth into Aſſyria, and builded Nineveh, and the city Rehoboth, and Calah; and the Targum of Jonathan is very expreſs for it, which paraphraſes the words thus, "out of that "land went forth Nimrod, and he reigned in Aſſyria, becauſe he would not be in the counſel "of the generation of the diviſion, and he left "theſe four cities; and the Lord gave him a "place (or Aſſyria) and he built four other cities, "Nineveh," &c. hence ſome [h] have thought, that the land of Aſſyria, and the land of Nimrod here deſign one and the ſame country; but Aſhur in the text in Geneſis, ſeems rather to be the name of a man than of a place, even of the ſon of Shem ſo called, from whom the country of Aſſyria had its name; whereas, if it had been ſo ſoon in the hands of Nimrod, and ſo many cities had been built by him in it, it would rather have been called by his name than Aſhur's; and it ſeems moſt reaſonable to conclude, that the cities of Nineveh, &c. were built by the latter, and not the former; and the two countries of Aſſyria and Nimrod, or Babylon, are very plainly in this text diſtinguiſhed from one another; tho' they might at the time of this prophecy be united under Eſar-haddon, who was both king of Aſſyria and Babylon; and at this preſent time they are both in the hands of the Turks, and in all probability will be until this prophecy is fulfilled, in the deſtruction of them by the chriſtian princes: the ſame thing is meant as before; and the word rendered, in the entrances thereof, may as well be tranſlated, with its ſword [i]; or, as the margin of our bibles, with her own naked ſwords; ſo Kimchi and Aben Ezra interpret it: thus ſhall he deliver us from the Aſſyrian, when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders; that is, the king Meſſiah ſhall work this deliverance, as Kimchi, and others [k] explain it; Chriſt delivered his people from all their ſpiritual enemies, when he made peace for them; and he will deliver them in the latter day from both Pope and Turk, when he will deſtroy the man of ſin by the breath of his mouth, and dry up the river Euphrates, and caſt both beaſt and falſe prophet into the lake that burns with fire and brimſtone; tho' all that is ſaid in this and the preceding verſe may have had its accompliſhment already, at leaſt in part, in the Saracens and their empire, which begun in the year 623, and who prevailed very much in Arabia, Paleſtine, Syria, Perſia, Egypt and Africa, and even penetrated into Spain and France, in all which places were chriſtian churches; and ſo may be called our land, as the churches therein our palaces, which theſe people entered into, trod upon, profaned or deſtroyed; and the ſeven or eight principal men raiſed againſt them may be the chriſtian princes that fought with them, and drove them back, and deſtroyed their land; ſuch as Hugh the Great, brother to Philip king of France; Robert earl of Flanders; Robert earl of Normandy, brother to William the Conqueror, king of England; Stephen earl of Blois; Raymund earl of Tholouſe; Godfrey duke of Lorrain, and his brothers Baldwin and Euſtachius, and others. Theſe beginning at Nice, where once a famous chriſtian council was held, and driving the army of Solyman from thence, in the ſpace of four years ſubdued many provinces of Aſia, Lycaonia, Cilicia, Syria, Meſopotamia and Comagena; and at length having put to flight the Turks, and ejected the Saracens, took Jeruſalem, and made Godfrey of Bullein king of it [l]. Some [m] have interpreted it of the emperor of Germany, and the ſeven electors in the empire (for formerly they were no more) happily and with ſucceſs carrying on a war againſt the Turks, Tartars and Saracens, when they broke into Europe; but the former ſenſe ſeems better; and it is beſt of all to underſtand the prophecy of the deſtruction of the Turk or Ottoman empire in the latter day by the chriſtian princes.

℣. 7. And the remnant of Jacob ſhall be in the midſt of many people, &c.] The Jews, who will be converted in the latter day, the remnant of them according to the election of grace, as well as all true Iſraelites, whether Jews or Gentiles, the Lord's choſen and peculiar people; who, tho' but a ſmall number in compariſon of others, and mean and contemptible in the eyes of men, are ſuch as God has made a reſerve of for himſelf; and theſe, tho' not of the world, yet are in the world, and will be in the ſeveral parts of it, but a diſtinct people from it, and of no account in it; nevertheleſs will be viſible in it, and wonderfully preſerved in the midſt of it: and will be as a dew from the Lord; both with reſpect to themſelves, being like to dew for the generation of it, which is from above, from heaven, and of God, as their regeneration is; and which ſecretly and ſilently falls, as the grace of God in regeneration does; and for the number of the drops of it, which are not to be reckoned; and ſo numerous are the people of God, at leaſt they will be in the latter day, when Chriſt ſhall again have the dew of his youth; or ſuch a number of converts, as will be like the drops of the morning-dew; as alſo for the favour, grace and bleſſings of God upon them, which are as the dew; and which he himſelf is as that unto them, ſo that they themſelves are as dew from him, being indulged with his favour; which, as the dew is entirely free, very ſoftening, cooling and refreſhing, as well as fructifying; and having the dews of his grace, or the bleſſings of it falling upon them in plenty; ſee Hoſ. xiv. 5, 6. and with reſpect to others, among whom they are, and to whom they are as the dew, by their ſpeech, their doctrine, the word miniſtred by them, which diſtils like the dew, Deut. xxxii. 2. and by their good works, which are profitable unto men; and by their ſoft and gentle behaviour towards them; and by reaſon of the many outward bleſſings they enjoy thro' them, as Laban did for the ſake of Jacob, and Potiphar on the account of Joſeph: as the ſhowers upon the graſs; which revive, refreſh it, and cauſe it to grow and flouriſh; or they are like graſs, on which the ſhowers fall, and grow up as ſuch in great numbers, and with great verdure and fruitfulneſs, Pſ. lxxii. 16: that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the ſons of men; which ſeems to be connected with the dew, tho' it agrees with both dew and rain, which ſtay not for mens deſires or deſerts, but deſcend according to the will of God: and as this regards the people of God, either with reſpect to themſelves; it ſhows that as they are as the dew, or as ſhowers and clouds full of rain, either of grace or doctrine compared thereunto; they are not of themſelves ſo, or of men, but of God; and that their dependence is not upon the creature, but upon the Lord for ſupport and ſupply: and with reſpect to others, to whom they are beneficial by their doctrine and works; that it is all from the Lord, and owing to his goodneſs, which makes them a bleſſing round about unaſked and undeſerved; ſee Ezek. xxxiv. 26. It may have reſpect to plenty of goſpel-miniſters, whoſe doctrine is as the dew; and which being attended with the power and Spirit of God, waits not for any thing in man, but operates at once ſecretly and powerfully.

℣. 8. And the remnant of Jacob ſhall be among the Gentiles in the midſt of many people, &c.] The ſame perſons are meant here as before; who are compared to dew and ſhowers of rain; becauſe numerous, and full of bleſſings in themſelves, and uſeful and beneficial to others: and here are ſaid to be as a lion among the beaſts of the foreſt; ſtrong, mighty, powerful and courageous, and ſuperior to their enemies, as the lion is ſtrongeſt among beaſts, and keeps all others in awe of him. Some refer this to the times of the Maccabees, when Judas and his brethren behaved with great fortitude and courage, and were victorious, and prevailed over the armies of Antiochus, and others; but it ſeems rather to belong to the latter day, when the Jews ſhall be ſuperior to their enemies the Turks, who would diſturb them in the poſſeſſion of their land: and ſhall be a terror to them, as a young lion among the flocks of ſheep; ſignifying that their enemies ſhall be no more to them, and no more able to oppoſe them, than a flock of ſheep are to a young lion, or they to reſiſt him. The deſign of the metaphor is, not to ſignify the harmleſsneſs and innocence of their enemies, but their weakneſs, and the ſtrength and courage of them: who, if he go thro' the flock: on whatſoever he ſeizes, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver; brings it to the ground at once, tramples upon it, and tears it in pieces as its prey; and none in the flock, or to whom it belongs, can deliver out of his hand. This will be the caſe, when the Jews ſhall turn to the Lord, and the lion of the tribe of Judah ſhall be at the head of them; tho' ſome interpret this of the firſt times of the goſpel, and take it to be fulfilled in the apoſtles and firſt miniſters of the word, who were Jews; and who were valiant defenders of truth, and conquerors over the devil, and the world, and were the inſtruments of bringing many into ſubjection to Chriſt; but it ſeems beſt to apply it to the laſt times, and not to the converted Jews only, tho' in the firſt place; but to all the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, the whole chriſtian church, which will then be in ſuch happy circumſtances.

℣. 9. Thine hand ſhall be lift up upon thine adverſaries, &c.] O remnant of Jacob or Iſrael, as the Targum; the church of God: now will be the time that it ſhall prevail over all the antichriſtian ſtates; now will the chriſtian princes pour out the vials of God's wrath upon them, and they ſhall feel the ſtrength and weight of their hand; which will fall heavy upon them, even to their utter deſtruction: or thine hand, O Meſſiah, the ruler in Iſrael, the man the peace that ſhall deliver from the Aſſyrian; and who will be at the head of his church and people, the remnant of Jacob, and deſtroy their enemies with the ſword that proceeds out of his mouth: and all thine enemies ſhall be cut off; all the enemies of Chriſt and his church; all the kings of the earth that ſhall gather againſt them, the beaſt and falſe prophet, with all their followers; ſee Rev. xix. 19, 20, 21.

℣. 10. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord, &c.] When the above things ſhall be accompliſhed, even in the goſpel-day, made ſo by the riſing of the ſun of righteouſneſs; the goſpel-diſpenſation, the latter part of it: that I will cut off thy horſes out of the midſt of thee, and I will deſtroy thy chariots; which ſome take to be an apoſtrophe to literal Babylon, and to be fulfilled when Cyrus took poſſeſſion of it; but rather it reſpects myſtical Babylon, and the deſtruction of that by Chriſt; but it is beſt of all to interpret it of the church of Chriſt, all whoſe carnal confidences and dependences ſhall be cut off, and ſhall truſt alone in Chriſt for ſalvation; particularly the Jews now converted, who have been uſed to put their truſt in the fleſh, and in ſuch things as are here mentioned; but now ſhall be made to ſee the folly and vanity of ſuch things, and ſhall renounce and diſclaim them; ſee Hoſ. xiv. 3. or the ſenſe is, there ſhall be no more war; horſes and chariots ſhall be no more uſed in an hoſtile way; but there ſhall be perfect peace, all enemies being deſtroyed, which agrees with ch. ii. 3. and Zech. ix. 10. The Targum is, "I will cut off the horſes of the people "from the midſt of thee, and deſtroy their chariots."

℣. 11. And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy ſtrong-holds.] The meaning is, they ſhould not dwell in fortified cities and walled towns; they ſhould have none of theſe to truſt to, nor ſhould they ſtand in any need of them to defend them, their enemies being ſubdued; and beſides, the Lord would be their ſtrong-hold and place of defence, a wall of fire round about them, and the glory in the midſt of them. The phraſes are expreſſive of the greateſt tranquillity and ſafety, and of living in an open air, free and undiſturbed; ſee Zech. ii. 4, 5. The Targum is, "I will cut "off the cities of the people out of thy land, "and deſtroy all their ſtrong fortreſſes;" theſe ſhall dwell no more there, and be no more offenſive and troubleſome.

℣. 12. And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand, &c.] Such as were formerly practiſed among the Jews, tho' forbidden them, and in myſtical Babylon, or the antichriſtian church, whoſe ſorceries are mentioned, Rev. ix. 21. and xviii. 23. but nothing of this kind will be found in the chriſtian church, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles, in the latter day; all unlawful arts, cheating and juggling in religious matters will ceaſe, and be no more: and thou ſhalt have no more ſoothſayers; or diviners, that caſt a miſt over peoples eyes, and deceived them with falſe appearances of things; that pretended to know times and ſeaſons, when it was, or was not a good day, to go abroad, or to make merchandiſe; that judged by the clouds, and by the poſition of the heavens, what would come to paſs hereafter; and tho' ſuch ſort of men were formerly indulged, connived at, and careſſed among the Jews, they ſhould be ſo no more; nor ſhould they apply to ſuch perſons for advice and counſel; nor would they need it, nor ſhould they uſe it; ſee Deut. xviii. 10, 11.

℣. 13. Thy graven images alſo will I cut off, and thy ſtanding images out of the midſt of thee, &c.] The former were ſuch as were made of wood or ſtone; the latter, ſtatues, ſuch as were molten or caſt, and made of gold, ſilver or braſs; ſuch as the Jews ſometimes worſhipped, and are now found in the apoſtate church of Rome; but will have no place in the chriſtian churches, or thoſe ſo called, in the latter day. The Jews indeed have had no idols or idolatrous worſhip among them ſince the Babyloniſh captivity; and the prophet here ſpeaks, not of what would be found among them, and removed at their converſion; but of what was in his time, or had been, or would be again, but ſhould not be in future time, when they ſhould turn to the Lord, and be like dew among the people; and ſo we are to underſtand ſome following paſſages. The Targum is, "I will cut off the "images of the people, and their ſtatues:" and thou ſhalt no more worſhip the work of thine hands; as not to fall down to idols and worſhip them, ſo neither to truſt in carnal privileges, ceremonial rites, obſervances of the traditions of the elders, or any works of righteouſneſs done by them, which they had been prone unto.

℣. 14. And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midſt of thee, &c.] Planted for idolatrous worſhip, and which the Jews in the reigns of ſome of their kings raiſed, and made uſe of for ſuch purpoſes; ſee 1 Kings xv. 13. and xvi. 33. and xviii. 19. tho' contrary to the law of God, Deut. xvi. 21. but now there ſhould be nothing of this kind, all idolatry being rooted out of the world. The Targum is, "I will root out the plantations of the "people out of the midſt of thee:" ſo will I deſtroy thy cities; which ſome underſtand of cities given to idolatry; or rather it is to be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe as in ℣. 11. tho' by reaſon of that, and as ſomething diſtinct from it, it is better to render the words with the Targum, "I will de"ſtroy thine enemies [n]."

℣. 15. And I will execute vengeance in anger, and fury, upon the heathen, &c.] Or nations [o]; not the pagan nations only, but the papal and Mahometan ones, even all that are enemies to Chriſt, and his church and people: ſuch as they have not heard; ſuch terrible judgments, and dreadful expreſſions of divine wrath and fury, by earthquakes, hail-ſtones, &c. as were never known or heard of in the world before; ſee Rev. xvi. 18—21. or, which have not heard [p]; the people that have not heard and hearkened to the word of God, to the voice of Chriſt in the goſpel, but have turned a deaf ear to it, and deſpiſed it. So the Targum, "who have not received the doctrine of the "law;" but it is much more agreeable to underſtand it of the doctrine of the goſpel diſobeyed by men, and therefore juſtly puniſhed; ſee 2 Theſſ. i. 8, 9.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter contains reproofs of the people of Iſrael for their ſins, threatning them with puniſhment for them. The prophet is bid to tell them of the controverſy the Lord had with them, which he did, ℣. 1, 2. and the Lord calls upon them to declare if they had any thing to object to his carriage towards them, ℣. 3. and then puts them in mind of the favours they had received from him, in bringing them out of Egypt, and giving them ſuch uſeful perſons to go before them, lead and inſtruct them, as he had, ℣. 4. and alſo reminds them of what paſſed between Balak king of Moab, and Balaam the ſoothſayer; the queſtions of the one, and the anſwer of the other; whereby the deſigns of the former againſt them were fruſtrated, ℣. 5, 6, 7, 8. but ſince the voice of the Lord by his prophet was diſregarded by them, they are called upon to hearken to the voice of his rod, ℣. 9. which ſhould be laid upon them for their fraudulent dealings, injuſtice, oppreſſion, lies and deceit, ℣. 10, 11, 12. and therefore are threatened with ſickneſs and deſolation, and a deprivation of all good things, the fruit of their labours, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and that becauſe the ſtatutes of Omri, the works of Ahab, and their counſels were obſerved by them, ℣. 16.

℣. 1. Hear ye now what the Lord ſaith, &c.] Here begins a new diſcourſe, and with an addreſs of the prophet to the people of Iſrael, to hear what the Lord had to ſay to them by way of reproof for their ſins now, as they had heard before many great and precious promiſes concerning the Meſſiah, and the happineſs of the church in future time; to hear what the Lord now ſaid to them by the prophet, and what he ſaid to the prophet himſelf, as follows: ariſe; O prophet Micah, and do thine office; ſit not ſtill, nor indulge to ſloth and eaſe; ſhew readineſs, diligence, activity, zeal and courage in my ſervice, and in carrying a meſſage from me to my people: contend thou before the mountains, and let the hills hear thy voice; open the cauſe depending between me and my people; ſtate the caſe between us before the mountains and hills; and exert thyſelf, and lift up thy voice loudly, and with ſo much vehemence, that, if it was poſſible, the very mountains and hills might hear thee; the Lord hereby ſuggeſts, that they would as ſoon hear as his people; thus upbraiding their ſtupidity, as he elſewhere does; ſee Iſ. i. 2. Jer. ii. 12. and xxii. 29. Kimchi and Ben Melech render it, to the mountains, which is much to the ſame ſenſe with our verſion; call and ſummon them as witneſſes in this cauſe; let the pleadings be made before them, and let them be judges in this matter; as they might be both for God, and againſt his people: the mountains and hills clothed with graſs, and covered with flocks and herds; or ſet with all manner of fruit-trees, vines, olives and figs; or adorned with goodly cedars, oaks and elms; were witneſſes of the goodneſs of God unto them, and the ſame could teſtify againſt them; and had they mouths to ſpeak, could declare the abominations committed on them; how upon every high mountain and hill, and under every green tree, they had been guilty of idolatry. The Targum, and many verſions [q] render it, with the mountains; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, and others, againſt the mountains [r]; the inhabitants of Judea, that being a mountainous country, eſpecially ſome parts of it. Some by mountains underſtand the great men of the land, king, princes, nobles; and by hills, leſſer magiſtrates, with whom the Lord's controverſy chiefly was; they not diſcharging their offices aright, nor ſetting good examples to the people. Some copies of the Targum, as the king of Spain's bible, paraphraſe it, "judge or contend with the "fathers, and let the mothers hear thy voice;" which Kimchi thus explains, as if it was ſaid, let the fathers Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and the mothers Sarah, Rebeccah, Rachel and Leah, hear what their children hath rendered to the Lord; let them be, as it were, called out of their graves to hear the ill requital made to the Lord for all his goodneſs.

℣. 2. Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controverſy, and ye ſtrong foundations of the earth, &c.] Theſe are the words of the prophet, obeying the divine command, calling upon the mountains, which are the ſtrong parts of the earth, and the bottoms of them the foundations of it, to hear the Lord's controverſy with his people, and judge between them: or, as ſome think, theſe are the perſons with whom; and againſt whom the controverſy was; the chief and principal men of the land, who were as pillars to the common people to ſupport and uphold them: for the Lord hath a controverſy with his people, and he will plead with Iſrael; his people Iſrael, who were ſo by choice, by covenant, by their own avouchment and profeſſion: they had been guilty of many ſins and tranſgreſſions againſt both tables of the law; and now the Lord had a controverſy with them for them, and was determined to enter into judgment, and litigate the point with them; and dreadful it is when God brings in a charge, and pleads his own cauſe with ſinful men; they are not able to contend with him, nor anſwer him for one of a thouſand faults committed againſt him; ſee Hoſ. iv. 1, 2.

℣. 3. O my people, &c.] Theſe are the words of the Lord himſelf by the prophet, expreſſing his ſtrong affection to the people of Iſrael; of which his goodneſs to them was a full proof, and this was an aggravation of their ingratitude to him; they were his people, whom he had choſen for himſelf above all people of the earth; whom he had redeemed from the houſe of bondage, had diſtinguiſhed them by his favours, and loaded them with his benefits, and yet they ſinned againſt him: what have I done unto thee? what evil things, what injuries to provoke to ſuch uſage? what iniquity have you, or your fathers found in me, to treat me after this manner? have I been a wilderneſs, or a land of darkneſs to you? Jer. ii. 5, 31. have I withheld or denied you any thing that was for your good? The Targum is, "O my people, what "good have I ſaid I would do unto thee, and I "have not done it?" all that the Lord had promiſed he had performed; not one good thing had failed he had ſpoken of; how much good, and how many good things had he done for them? nay, what good things were there he had not done for them? and what more could be done for them, than what had been done? and yet they ſinned againſt him ſo groſsly; ſee Iſ. v. 4: and wherein have I wearied thee? what heavy yoke have I put upon thee? what grievous commandments have I enjoined thee? is there any thing in my ſervice, any duty too hard, ſevere or unreaſonable? are the ſacrifices required burdenſome? have I cauſed thee to ſerve with an offering, and wearied thee with incenſe? is there any juſt reaſon to ſay of theſe things, what a wearineſs is it? ſee Iſ. xliii. 23. Mal. i. 13: teſtify againſt me; declare it publickly, if any good thing has been wanting, or any evil thing done: thus the Lord condeſcends to have the caſe fairly debated, and every thing ſaid that could be ſaid in their favour, or againſt him: aſtoniſhing condeſcenſion and goodneſs!

℣. 4. For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, &c.] Inſtead of doing them any wrong, he had done them much good; of which this is one inſtance, and he was able to produce more: this was a notorious, plain and full proof of his goodneſs to them, which could not be denied. It may be rendered, as it is by ſome, ſurely I brought thee up [s], &c. this is a certain thing, well known, and cannot be diſproved; it muſt be allowed to be a great favour and kindneſs, to be brought up out of a ſuperſtitious, idolatrous, heatheniſh people, ple, enemies to God and true religion, and who had uſed them in a barbarous and cruel manner: and redeemed thee out of the houſe of ſervants; or, out of the houſe of bondage; as the ſame words are rendered, Exod. xx. 2. that is, out of hard ſervice, in which their lives were made bitter; out of cruel bondage and ſlavery; which made them cry to the Lord for help and deliverance, and he heard them, and ſent them a deliverer; by whoſe hand he redeemed them from this baſe and low eſtate in which they were, and for which they ought ever to have been thankful, and to have ſhewn their gratitude by their chearful and conſtant obedience. Some take the houſe of ſervants to be deſcriptive, not of the ſtate of the children of Iſrael in Egypt, but of the character of the Egyptians themſelves; who being the poſterity of Ham, were inheritors of his curſe, that he ſhould be a ſervant of ſervants; and ſo it is an aggravation of the bleſſing, that Iſrael were redeemed from being ſervants to the ſervants of ſervants. This ſenſe is mentioned by Kimchi and Abarbinel: and I ſent before thee Moſes, Aaron, and Miriam; not to bring them the news of their deliverance out of Egypt, before they came out of it, as Kimchi; but to be their guides, to conduct and direct them in all matters, civil and religious. Moſes was their law-giver, leader and commander; Aaron was their prieſt to offer ſacrifice for them, and to intercede on their behalf; and Miriam was a propheteſs; and they were all very uſeful and beneficial to them; and a very great bleſſing it is to a people to have a good conſtitution, civil and eccleſiaſtic, and to have good magiſtrates, and good miniſters of the word. The Targum is, "I ſent before thee "three prophets, Moſes to teach the tradition of "the judgments, Aaron to make atonement for "the people, and Miriam to inſtruct the wo-"men."

℣. 5. O my people, remember now what Balak king of Moab conſulted, &c.] What a ſcheme he had laid; what contrivances he had formed; what conſultations he had with a ſoothſayer or diviner he ſent for to curſe Iſrael; how he ſought to get the God of Iſrael on his ſide, and to ſet him againſt them, that he might be rid of them, and they be ruined and deſtroyed. The Moabites were the deſcendents of Moab, a ſon of Lot, by one of his daughters; when they firſt ſet up their king is not certain; nor who their kings in ſucceſſion were before Balak: it appears there was a former king, whom the king of the Amorites fought with, and took away his land from him, Numb. xxi. 26. who probably was Zippor, the father of Balak, and whom he ſucceeded; the kingdom being recovered by him, or by this his ſon; however, he was on the throne when Iſrael was upon the borders of his kingdom, which threw him into a pannic; upon which he ſent meſſengers to a neighbouring magician next mentioned, to adviſe with him what to do in this his extremity; and the Jews have a tradition, that becauſe of the multitude of ſacrifices he offered, he was worthy to have Ruth, the deſcendent from him; who, they ſay, was the daughter of Eglon, the grandſon of Balak king of Moab [s]: and what Balaam the ſon of Beor anſwered him; this man is called a ſoothſayer, Joſh. xiii. 22: The Jews ſay he was firſt a prophet; and ſo the apoſtle Peter calls him, 2 Pet. ii. 16. and afterwards became a diviner [t]: they differ very much about him, who he was, and from whom he deſcended. Beor his father is ſometimes ſaid to be the ſon of Laban [u]; and, at other times, Balaam himſelf is ſaid to be Laban the Syrian [w], whoſe ſoul they ſuppoſe tranſmigrated into Balaam, as it afterwards did into Nabal, according to them. Some [x] take him to be the ſame with Elihu, who interpoſed in the diſpute between Job and his friends; and others ſay, that he was one of the eunuchs, counſellors and magicians of Pharaoh, both when Moſes was a child, and when he wrought his miracles in Egypt; and that Jannes and Jambres, of whom the apoſtle Paul makes mention, 2 Tim. iii. 8. were his two ſons [y]: he was an inhabitant of Pethor, which was ſituated on the river Euphrates, thought by Junius to be the Pacoria of Ptolemy: he ſeems to have been a Meſopotamian, tho' ſome ſay a Midianite; but whether one or the other, he did not live at any great diſtance from the king of Moab: he was ſlain by the ſword of the children of Iſrael, in the times of Joſhua, Joſh. xiii. 22. and, as the Jews ſay [z] he was, when he was but thirty-three or thirty-four years of age; they obſerving upon it, that bloody and deceitful men do not live out half their days; but this does not ſeem ſo well to agree with other things they ſay of him; however this ſoothſayer and ſorcerer Balak ſent for to curſe Iſrael; whoſe heart and tongue, tho' a wicked man, and would fain have done according to Balak's wiſh and deſire, were ſo over-ruled by the power of God, that inſtead of curſing Iſrael he was obliged to bleſs them, and to propheſy of their future happineſs and proſperity, and of the Meſſiah that ſhould ſpring from them; ſee the hiſtory of all this in Numb. ch. xxii. and xxiii. and xxiv: from Shittim unto Gilgal, that ye may know the righteouſneſs of the Lord; here ſomething muſt be ſupplied to make ſenſe of the words; either, remember what good things I did for you [a], from Shittim to Gilgal; the former was the place where the children of Iſrael committed whoredom and idolatry, and was on the other ſide Jordan; and the latter was the place they came to when they had paſſed over Jordan, where the covenant of circumciſion was renewed, and the firſt paſſover kept; now they are called upon to remember the goodneſs of God unto them from one place to another, and what were done between them; how that at Shittim, tho' they provoked the Lord to anger, yet he did not cut them all off, but ſpared a number of them, to enter and poſſeſs the land of Canaan; and tho' Moſes died by the way, yet he raiſed up Joſhua to go before them, and in a miraculous manner led them thro' the river Jordan, and brought them to Gilgal, favours ever to be had in remembrance. So the Targum, "were not great things done for you in the plain "of Shittim unto the houſe of Gilgal, that the "righteouſneſs of the Lord might be known?" both his juſtice in puniſhing offenders at Shittim, and his bounty and kindneſs, as well as his truth and faithfulneſs, in ſparing others; beſtowing his favours on them, and bringing them into the promiſed land: or it may be ſupplied thus, as by ſome, remember what Balak conſulted[b] from Shittim to Gilgal; that is, with Balaam, and what anſwer and advice he gave him; which was to ſend beautiful women among the Iſraelites, and ſo tempt them to adultery, and by that means to idolatry; and which ſcheme and conſultation took place at Shittim, by means of which ſeveral thouſands were ſlain; and the device was to have continued the temptation even to Gilgal, which, had it not been prevented, in all likelihood would have iſſued in the deſtruction of that people; and therefore they had reaſon to know, own and acknowledge the goodneſs and faithfulneſs of God unto them: or rather, taking the phraſe from Shittim to Gilgal to be a proverbial one[c], of going from place to place, it may have reſpect to Balak's having Balaam from place to place, to take a view of the people, and curſe them; or how he might ſet the God of Iſrael againſt them, and gain him over to him; and then the ſenſe is this, "remember how Balak conſulted "Balaam from place to place, and what anſwers "he returned him; all which was done, that he "(Balak) might know the righteouſneſs of the Lord;" and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and it will bear to be ſo rendered: the thing which Balak chiefly conſulted was, how he ſhould get the God of Iſrael on his ſide; as it was uſual with heathen princes, when at war to attempt to get the gods of their enemies from them, and on their ſide; and enquires of Balaam how this was to be effected; what righteouſneſs it was the Lord required; what duties of religion to be performed; what rites or ſacrifices were acceptable to him; and the ſum of his queſtions on this head, and Balaam's anſwer to them, are contained in the following verſes.

℣. 6. Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord, &c.] Theſe are not the words of the people of Iſrael God had a controverſy with, and now made ſenſible of their ſin, and humbled for it; and willing to appeaſe the Lord, and make it up with him at any rate; for there are ſuch things propoſed by them, as do by no means ſuit with perſons of ſuch a character, nay, even ſuppoſe them to be hypocritical; and much leſs are they what were put into their mouths by the prophet to ſay, as ſome ſuggeſt; but they are the words of Balak king of Moab, which, and what follow, are queſtions he put to Balaam, who had told him that he could do nothing without the Lord, nor any thing contrary to his word: now he aſks what he muſt do to get the good-will of this Lord; in what manner, and with what he muſt appear before him, ſerve and worſhip him, as the Targum; that ſo he might have an intereſt in him, and get him to ſpeak a word to Balaam in his favour, and againſt Iſrael; ſee Numb. xxii. 8, 18, 38. and xxiii. 12, 15, 26: and bow myſelf before the high God? the moſt high God, the God of gods, whoſe Shekinah or majeſty is in the high heavens, as the Targum: his meaning is, with what he ſhould come, or bring with him, when he paid his homage and obeiſance to him, by bowing his body, or his knee before him; being willing to do it in the moſt acceptable manner he could: ſhall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old? ſuch as he had been uſed to offer on the high places of Baal to that deity. Sacrifices of this kind prevailed among the heathens, which they had received by tradition from the times of Adam and Noah; ſee Numb. xxii. 41.

℣. 7. Will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of rams? &c.] If ſingle burnt-offerings of bullocks and heifers will not do, will rams and thouſands of them be acceptable to him? if they will, they are at his ſervice, even as many as he pleaſes; ſuch creatures as well as oxen were offered by Balak, Numb. xxiii. 1, 2, 4, 29, 30: or with ten thouſands of rivers of oil? for meat-offerings, as Jarchi, in which oil was uſed: this is an hyperbolical expreſſion, as Kimchi rightly obſerves; ſuggeſting, that he was willing to be at any expences, even the moſt extravagant, if he could but gain his point, and get the God of Iſrael on his ſide. Some render it, ten thouſands of fat vallies[d]; abounding with corn, and wine, and oil; the produce of which, had he ſo many, he could freely part with, could he but obtain his end; ſee Job xx. 17: ſhall I give my firſt-born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul? his ſon, his firſtborn, his own fleſh and blood, to make atonement for his ſins and tranſgreſſions; this betrays the perſon ſpeaking. The people of Iſrael, tho' they were ſometimes guilty of this horrid, unnatural and abominable ſin, in the height of their degeneracy and apoſtacy, as to ſacrifice their children to Moloch; yet when convinced of their ſins, and humbling themſelves before God for them, even tho' but in an hypocritical way, could never be ſo weak and fooliſh, ſo impious and audacious, as to propoſe that to God, which they knew was ſo contrary to his will, and ſo abominable in his ſight, Lev. xviii. 21. but this comes well enough from an heathen prince, with whom it was the height of his devotion and religion, and the greateſt ſacrifice he thought he could offer up to God; for there is a climax, a gradation in the words from leſſer things to greater; and this is the greateſt of all, and what was done among the heathens, 2 Kings xvii. 31. and was afterwards done by a king of Moab, 2 Kings iii. 26, 27.

℣. 8. He hath ſhewed me, O man, what is good, &c.] This is not the anſwer of the prophet to the body of the people, or to any and every one of the people of Iſrael; but of Balaam to Balak, a ſingle man, that conſulted with him, and put queſtions to him; particularly what he ſhould do to pleaſe the Lord, and what righteouſneſs he required of him, that would be acceptable to him; and tho' he was a king, he was but a man, and he would have him know it that he was no more, and as ſuch addreſſes him; and eſpecially when he is informing him of his duty to God; which lay not in ſuch things as he had propoſed, but in doing that which was good, and avoiding that which was evil, in a moral ſenſe: and this the Lord had ſhown him by the light of nature; which is no other than the work of the law of God written in the hearts of the heathens, by which they are directed to do the good commanded in the law, and to ſhun the evil forbidden by it; ſee Rom. ii. 14, 15: and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly; or judgment[e]; to exerciſe public judgment and juſtice, as a king, among his ſubjects; to do private and perſonal juſtice between man and man; to hurt no man's perſon, property, and character; to give to every one their due, and do as he would deſire to be done by; which as it is agreeable to the law of God, ſo to the light of nature, and what is ſhewn, required, and taught by it: and to love mercy; not only to ſhew mercy to miſerable objects, to perſons in diſtreſs; to relieve the poor and indigent; to clothe the naked, and feed the hungry; but to delight in ſuch exerciſes; and which a king eſpecially ſhould do, whoſe throne is eſtabliſhed by mercy, and who is able, and ſhould be munificent; and ſome heathen princes, by their liberality, have gained the name of benefactors, Euergetes, as one of the Ptolemys did; ſee Luke xxii. 25. ſuch advice Daniel gave to Nebuchadnezzar, an heathen prince, as agreeable to the light of nature; ſee Dan. iv. 27: and to walk humbly with thy God; his creator and benefactor, from whom he had his being, and all the bleſſings of life, and was dependent upon him; and therefore, as a creature, ſhould behave with humility towards his creator, acknowledging his diſtance from him, and the obligations he lay under to him; and even tho' a king, yet his God and creator was above him, King of kings, and Lord of lords, to whom he owed his crown, ſcepter, and kingdom, and was accountable to him for all his adminiſtrations: and this walking humbly, is oppoſed to walking in pride, which kings are apt to do; but God can humble them, and bring them low, as heathen kings have been obliged to own; ſee Dan. ii. 21. and iv. 37.

℣. 9. The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, &c.] The Lord having bid his prophet call to the mountains and hills to hear his voice, and the prophet having obeyed his will, and the Lord having by him addreſſed his people Iſrael, and expoſtulated with them about their ingratitude, obſerving to them many inſtances of his goodneſs; here informs them, that this voice of his, whether in his prophet, or in his judgments, was directed to the city, either Samaria or Jeruſalem, or both, and even to all the cities of Iſrael and Judah, the ſingular being put for the plural; that is, to the inhabitants of them. Cities being populous, and where perſons of the higheſt rank and figure, as well as of the beſt ſenſe, dwell, and generally very wicked, tho' favoured with greater advantages; all which are reaſons why the voice of the Lord, in his word and providences, particularly cries to them to repent of their ſins, and reform from them, as might be expected from ſuch perſons; and ſo doing would ſet a good example to thoſe who live in the country. Some render it, the Lord's voice crieth to awake[f]; or to ſtir up; it calls upon men aſleep, to awake out of ſleep; to arouſe from their carnal ſecurity; to attend to their ſins, their danger, and their duty; to repent of their ſins, and ſo avoid the danger they were in thro' them, and perform their duty they had neglected; ſuch a voice as this, ſee in Eph. v. 14. this reading of the words is mentioned by Kimchi. And the man of wiſdom ſhall ſee thy name; not the mere natural man, or who is poſſeſſed only of natural wiſdom, tho' he may have ever ſo great a ſhare of it; for as he ſees not the things of the Spirit of God, the things of the goſpel, ſo neither the name and perfections of God in his judgments on the earth; much leſs the man that is wiſe to do evil, full of wicked ſubtlety, and makes a jeſt of every thing religious and ſerious; nor ſuch as are wiſe in their own opinion, or have only a ſuperficial ſhare of wiſdom; but ſuch who have a ſhare of ſolid and ſubſtantial wiſdom, a man of ſubſtance, as the word[g] ſometimes ſignifies; ſee Prov. viii. 21. ſuch who have true wiſdom in the hidden part, that which comes from above, and is pure and peaceable, and makes men wiſe to ſalvation; ſuch men ſee and diſcern the power and providence of God in all the judgments that are in the earth, his attributes and perfections; his ſeverity on ſome, and goodneſs to others; his ſparing grace and mercy, and his ſpecial loving-kindneſs, and even all his perfections, for he is known to ſuch by the judgments he executeth; ſee Pſ. ix. 16. and cvii. 43. and ſuch fear his name alſo, as ſome render the words[h]; they not only fear the Lord and his goodneſs, but have an awful ſenſe of his judgments, and tremble at them. Some read the words, thy name ſees that which is[i]; ſo the margin of our bibles; that is, the Lord ſeeth that which is done in the city, tho' ever ſo ſecret and private, and therefore his voice cries to it. Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it; theſe are the words of the man of wiſdom, as Kimchi obſerves; who ſeeing the name and perfections of God in his judgments on the earth, calls upon others, and exhorts them to hear the voice of the rod, of the rod of correction and affliction, the rod of judgment and vengeance, as held in the hand of God, and ſhook over a city or nation; which has a voice in it to men, reproving them for their ſins; commanding them to return from them; calling them to repentance and humiliation; teaching and inſtructing them in their duty; and giving cautions and warnings to others, leſt the like ſhould befal them; and this is the voice that is to be attended to: and it ſhould be conſidered, that there is no affliction, calamity, or judgment, but is appointed by the Lord, the kind and nature, meaſure and duration of it; what its end, iſſue, and uſe; and he that has appointed it is all-wiſe and all-knowing, unchangeable and invariable, all-powerful and able to put his purpoſes and decrees into execution; nor can they be fruſtrated. The Targum of the whole is, "with the "voice the prophets of the Lord cry to the city; "and teachers fear the name (of the Lord); hear, "O king and rulers, and the reſt of the people "of the land."

℣. 10. Are there yet the treaſures of wickedneſs in the houſe of the wicked, &c.] There are; they continue there. This is the voice of the Lord by the prophet, and the language of the rod of correction to be heard, expoſing the ſins of the people, for which the Lord had a controverſy with them; particularly their mammon of unrighteouſneſs, the vaſt wealth, riches, and treaſures, collected together by very wicked and unlawful ways and means; and which, inſtead of reſtoring them to the perſons they had defrauded of them, they retained them in their houſes, notwithſtanding the reproofs of the prophets, and the corrections of the Almighty. Some render it, is there not fire, &c[k]. that is, in the houſe of the wicked, becauſe of the treaſures of wickedneſs, that which conſumes them; but Guſſetius[l] interprets it of fornications and adulteries. Others render it, is there yet a man, &c[m]. an honourable man, as Aben Ezra, who continues in his iniquity, after the Lord's voice cries to the city; but Abendana interprets it of the prophet himſelf, continuing to reprove the wicked for their treaſures of wickedneſs, and their other ſins. And the ſcant meaſure that is abominable; or the ephah of leanneſs provoking to wrath[n]; that is, a deficient meaſure, leſs than it ſhould be; the ephah was a dry meaſure, and it was made ſmall, as in Amos viii. 5. and held leſs than it ſhould; and this brought leanneſs and poverty upon thoſe to whom they ſold by it, as well as ruin upon themſelves in the iſſue; for ſuch practices as they were abominable and deteſtable to God; they ſtirred up his wrath, and brought deſtruction on thoſe that uſed them. The Targum is, "falſe meaſures that bring a curſe."

℣. 11. Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, &c.] Theſe are the words either of the prophet, or rather of God, ſignifying that he could not, and would not allow, countenance, and approve of perſons that uſed falſe ſcales or balances; or juſtify, and reckon them juſt, as they would be thought to be, but condemn them, and pronounce them very wicked men, and deſerving of puniſhment here and hereafter: and with the bag of deceitful weights? or ſtones[o]; which were uſed in weighing goods, and which were deceitful, when a heavier was uſed in buying, and a lighter in ſelling. So the Targum, "and with the bag, in which are weights greater and leſſer;" condemned in Deut. xxv. 13, 14.

℣. 12. For the rich men thereof are full of violence, &c.] That is, the rich men of the city, to whom the voice of the Lord cried, ℣. 9. Jeruſalem or Samaria, or any or all the cities of Iſrael and Judah; the rich men of theſe cities, who had enough of the world, and were under no temptation to do an ill thing, to get money; and yet their hands and their houſes, and their treaſuries, as the Targum, were full of goods gotten by violent meaſures, by the oppreſſion of the poor and needy: and the inhabitants thereof have ſpoken lies; the reſt of the inhabitants, who were not ſo rich as others, and who had it not in the power of their hands to oppreſs as others had; yet uſed deceitful and fraudulent methods to cheat their neighbours in buying and ſelling; and to do this, did not ſtick to tell downright deliberate lies: and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth; ſay one thing, and mean another; deceive their neighbours with their tongues in trade and commerce; averring things for truth they know to be falſe.

℣. 13. Therefore alſo will I make thee ſick in ſmiting thee, &c.] With the rod, to be heard, ℣. 9. by ſending among them ſome of his ſore judgments, as famine, peſtilence, the ſword of the enemy, inteſtine wars, and the like; which ſhould cauſe their kingdom, and ſtate and families, to decline and waſte away, as a ſickly and diſeaſed body. So the Targum, "and I brought upon thee illneſs and a ſtroke." The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions render it, and I began to ſmite thee; as by Hazael king of Syria, and Tiglath-Pileſer king of Aſſyria, who had carried part of them captive. In making thee deſolate becauſe of thy ſins; went on, not only to make them ſick, and bring them into a declining ſtate, but into utter deſolation; as by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, who carried Iſrael captive; and by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, who led Judah captive, becauſe of their ſins of idolatry, injuſtice, and oppreſſion, with others that abounded among them.

℣. 14. Thou ſhalt eat, but not be ſatisfied, &c.] Either not having enough to eat, for the refreſhing and ſatisfying of nature; or elſe a bleſſing being withheld from food, tho' eaten, and ſo not nouriſhing; or a voracious and inſatiable appetite, being given as a curſe; the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt: and thy caſting down ſhall be in the midſt of thee; meaning they ſhould be humbled and brought down, either by inteſtine diſcords and wars among themſelves, or thro' the enemy being ſuffered to come into the midſt of their country, and make havock there; which would be as a ſickneſs and diſeaſe in their bowels. So the Targum, "thou ſhalt have an illneſs in thy bowels." The Syriac verſion is, "a dyſentery ſhall be in thine inteſtines;" a ſecret judgment waſting and deſtroying them. And thou ſhalt take hold, but ſhalt not deliver; and that which thou delivereſt, will I give up to the ſword; the ſenſe is, that they ſhould take hold of their wives and children, and endeavour to ſave them from the ſword of the enemy, and being carried captive: or ſhould remove them[p], as the word is ſometimes uſed, in order to ſecure them from them: or ſhould overtake[q]; the enemy, carrying them captive; but ſhould not be able by either of theſe methods to ſave them from being deſtroyed, or carried away by them; and even ſuch as they ſhould preſerve or reſcue for a while, yet theſe ſhould be given up to the ſword of the enemy, the ſame or another. Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret this of their women conceiving, and not bringing forth; and if they ſhould, yet what they brought forth ſhould be ſlain by the ſword[r]. But the Targum and Jarchi incline to the former ſenſe.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt ſow, but thou ſhalt not reap, &c.] Either that which is ſown ſhall not ſpring up, but rot in the earth; or if it does ſpring up, and come to maturity, yet before that, they ſhould be removed into captivity, or ſlain by the ſword, and their enemies ſhould reap the increaſe of their land, their wheat and their corn: thou ſhalt tread the olives; in the olive-preſs, to get out the oil: but thou ſhalt not anoint with oil; as at feaſts for refreſhment, and at baths for health, this becoming another's property; or it being a time of diſtreſs and mourning, would not be uſed, it being chiefly at feſtivals, and occaſions of joy, that oil was uſed: and ſweet wine; that is, ſhalt tread the grapes in the wine-preſs, to get out the ſweet or new wine: but ſhalt not drink wine; for before it is fit to drink, the enemy would have it in his poſſeſſion; ſee Lev. xxvi. 16. and xxviii. 30. theſe are the puniſhments or corrections of the rod they are threatened with for their ſins.

℣. 16. For the ſtatutes of Omri are kept, &c.] Who of a captain of the army was made king of Iſrael, and proved a wicked prince; he built Samaria, and ſet up idolatrous worſhip there, after the example of Jeroboam, in whoſe ways he walked, and, as it ſeems, eſtabliſhed the ſame by laws and edicts; and which were every one of them obſerved by the Iſraelites, in the times of the prophet, tho' at the diſtance of many years from the firſt making of them, which aggravated their ſin; nor would it be any excuſe of them, that what they practiſed was enjoined by royal authority, ſince it was contrary to the command of God; for the breach of which, and their obſervance of the ſtatutes of ſuch a wicked prince, they are threatened with the judgments of God; ſee 1 Kings xvi. 16, 24, 25, 26: and all the works of the houſe of Ahab; who was the ſon of Omri, and introduced the worſhip of Baal, and added to the idolatry of the calves, which he and his family practiſed; and the ſame works were now done by the people of Iſrael: and ye walk in their counſels; as they adviſed and directed the people to do in their days: that I ſhould make thee a deſolation; the city of Samaria, the metropolis of Iſrael, or the whole land, which was made a deſolation by Salmaneſer, an inſtrument in the hand of God; and this was not the intention and deſign of their walking in the counſels, and after the example of their idolatrous kings, but the conſequence and event of ſo doing: and the inhabitants thereof an hiſſing; either of Samaria, or of all the land, who ſhould become the ſcorn and deriſion of men, when brought to ruin for their ſins: therefore ye ſhall bear the reproach of my people; that which was threatened in the law to the people of God, when diſobedient to him; or ſhameful puniſhment for profaning the name and character of the people of God they bore; or for reproaching and ill-uſing the poor among the people of God; and ſo it is directed to the rich men before ſpoken of, and ſignifies the ſhame and ignominy they ſhould bear, by being carried captive into a foreign land for their ſins.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter begins with a lamentation of the prophet, in the name of the church and people of God, concerning the general depravity and corruption of the times in which he lived, ℣. 1—6. then declares what he was determined to do for his relief in ſuch circumſtances, ℣. 7. comforts himſelf and the church with a good hope and firm belief of its being otherwiſe and better with them, to the ſhame and confuſion of their enemies that now rejoiced, tho' without juſt reaſon for it, ℣. 8, 9, 10. with promiſes of deliverance, after a deſolation of the land for ſome time, ℣. 11, 12, 13. and with the anſwer returned to the prayers of the prophet, ℣. 14, 15. which would iſſue in the aſtoniſhment of the world, and their ſubjection to the church of God, ℣. 16, 17. and the chapter is concluded with admiration at the pardoning grace and mercy of God, and his faithfulneſs to his promiſes, ℣. 18, 19, 20.

℣. 1. Wo is me, &c.] Alas for me! unhappy man that I am, to live in ſuch an age, and among ſuch a people, as I do! this the prophet ſays in his own name, or in the name of the church and people of God in his time; ſo Iſaiah, who was cotemporary with him, ch. vi. 5. ſee alſo Pſ. cxx. 5, 6: for I am as when they have gathered the ſummer-fruits, as the grape gleanings of the vintage; when there are only an apple or a pear or two, or ſuch ſort of fruit, and ſuch a quantity of it left on the top of the tree, or on the outermoſt branches of it, after the reſt are gathered in; or a few ſingle grapes here and there, after the vintage is over; ſignifying either that he was like Elijah left alone, or however that the number of good men were very few; or that there were very few gathered in by his miniſtry, converted, taught, and inſtructed by it; or thoſe that had the name of good men were but very indifferent, and not like thoſe who were in times paſt; but were as refuſe fruit left on trees, and dropped from thence when rotten, and when gathered up were good for little, and like ſingle grapes, ſmall and withered, and of no value; ſee Iſ. xvii. 6: there is no cluſter to eat; no large number or ſociety of good men to converſe with, only here and there a ſingle perſon; and none that have an abundance of grace and goodneſs in them, and a large experience of ſpiritual and divine things; few that attend the miniſtry of the word; they don't come in cluſters, in crouds; and fewer ſtill that receive any advantage by it. My ſoul deſired the firſt ripe fruit; the company and converſation of ſuch good men as lived in former times; who had the firſt fruits of the Spirit, and arrived to a maturity of grace, and a lively exerciſe of it; and who were, in the age of the prophet, as ſcarce and rare as firſt ripe fruits, and as deſirable as ſuch were to a thirſty traveller; ſee Hoſ. ix. 10. The Targum is, "the prophet ſaid, wo unto me, "becauſe I am as when good men fail, in a time "in which merciful men periſh from the earth; "behold, as the ſummer fruits, as the gleanings "after the vintage, there is no man in whom "there are good works; my ſoul deſires good "men."

℣. 2. The good man is periſhed out of the earth, &c.] Here the prophet expreſſes in plain words, what he had before delivered in figurative terms. The good or godly man, as in Pſ. xii. 1. is one that has received the grace of God, and bleſſings of grace from him, and lives a godly life and converſation; who has the good work of grace begun in him, and is found in the performance of good works, and does his duty both to God and man from godly principles; and particularly is kind and merciful to the poor and needy, and thoſe in diſtreſs. The complaint is, that there were few, or ſcarce any of this character in the earth, in the land of Iſrael, where there uſed to be great numbers of them, but now they were all dead and gone; for this is to be underſtood, not of the periſhing of their graces or comforts, much leſs of their periſhing in their ſins, or periſhing eternally, but of their corporal death: and there is none upright among men; that are upright in heart and life; that have right ſpirits renewed in them, are Iſraelites indeed, in whom there is no guile; and walk uprightly, according to the rule of the divine word, truly honeſt, faithful men; very few ſuch were to be found, ſcarce any; ſee Pſ. xii. 1. Iſ. lvii. 1: they all lie in wait for blood; for the ſubſtance, wealth and riches of men, which is as their blood and life; is their livelihood, that on which they live; this they wait for an opportunity to get from them, and when it offers, greedily ſeize it; and ſtick not even to ſhed blood, and take away life, for the ſake of gain: they hunt every man his brother with a net; as men lay nets for fiſh, and fowl, and beaſts, and hunt them till they have got them into them; ſo theſe men laid ſnares, not for ſtrangers only, but for their own brethren, to entangle them in, and cheat and defraud them of their ſubſtance; and this they would do, even to the deſtruction of them, as ſome [s] render it; for the word alſo ſignifies anathema, deſtruction, as well as a net. So the Targum, "betray or deliver his brother to deſtruction."

℣. 3. That they may do evil with both hands earneſtly, &c.] Or well [t], ſtrenuouſly, diligently, to the utmoſt of their power, labouring at it with all their might and main; as wicked men generally are more induſtrious, and exert themſelves more to do evil, than good men do to do good; and even weary themſelves to commit iniquity: or, inſtead of doing good, as Marinus in Aben Ezra; take a great deal of pains to do evil; work with both hands at it, inſtead of doing good. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, they prepare their hands for evil; the Syriac verſion is, their hands are ready to evil, and they do not do good; with which agrees the Targum, "they do evil with their hands, and do not do good." Some make the ſenſe to depend on what goes before and follows; to do evil, both hands are open and ready, and they hurt with them; but to do good the prince aſketh, and the judge for a reward [u]; forward enough to do evil, but very backward to do any good office; and if they do it, muſt be bribed, and have a reward for it, even perſons of ſuch high character; but this ſenſe is not favoured by the accents; beſides, by what follows, it ſeems as if the prince, by whom may be meant the king upon the throne, and the judge he that ſits upon the bench under him, ſought for bribes to do an ill thing; to give a cauſe wrong againſt a poor man, and in favour of a rich man that will bribe high: and the great man, he uttereth his miſchievous deſire; the depravity, corruption and perverſeneſs of his ſoul; who is either ſome great man at court, that being encouraged by the example of the prince and judge, openly and publickly requires a bribe alſo to do an ill thing; and without any ſhame or bluſhing promiſes to do it, on that conſideration; or a counſellor at the bar, who openly declares that he will ſpeak in ſuch a cauſe, tho' a bad one, and defend it, and not doubt of carrying it; or elſe this is ſome rich wicked man, that ſeeks to oppreſs his poor neighbour, and being favoured by the prince and judge he has bribed, does without fear or ſhame ſpeak out the wickedneſs of his heart, and what an ill deſign he has againſt his neighbour, whoſe miſchief, hurt and ruin he ſeeks: ſo they wrap it up together; or, twiſt it together [w]; as cords are, which thereby become ſtrong; and ſo theſe three work up this miſchievous buſineſs, and ſtrengthen and eſtabliſh it; and ſuch a threefold cord of wickedneſs is not eaſily broken or unravelled: or, they perplex it [x]; as thick branches of trees are implicated and wrapped together; ſo theſe agree to puzzle and perplex a cauſe, that they may have ſome ſhew of carrying it with juſtice and truth. So the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, they trouble it; confound the matter, and make it dark, dubious and difficult. The Targum is, they corrupt it; or deprave it; put an ill ſenſe on things, and make a wrong conſtruction of them.

℣. 4. The beſt of them is as a brier, &c.] Good for nothing but for burning, very hurtful and miſchievous, pricking and ſcratching thoſe that have to do with them: the moſt upright is ſharper than a thorn-hedge; which, if a man lays hold on to get over, or attempts to paſs thro', his hands will be pricked, his face ſcratched, and his cloaths tore off his back; ſo the beſt of theſe princes, judges and great men, who put on a ſhew of goodneſs, and pretended to do juſtice, yet fetched blood, and got money out of every one they were concerned with, and did them injury in one reſpect or another; or the beſt and uprighteſt of the people of the land in general, that made the greateſt pretenſions to religion and virtue, yet in their dealings were ſharp, and biting, and tricking; and took every fraudulent method to cheat, and over-reach, and hurt men in their property: the day of thy watchmen; either which the true prophets of the Lord, ſometimes called watchmen, foretold ſhould come, but were diſcredited and deſpiſed, will now moſt aſſuredly come; and it will be found to be true what they ſaid ſhould come to paſs: or the day of the falſe prophets, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; either which they predicted as a good day, and now it ſhould be ſeen whether it would be ſo or no; or the day of their puniſhment, for their falſe prophecies and deception of the people: and thy viſitation cometh; the time that God would puniſh the people in general for their iniquities, as well as their falſe prophets, princes, judges and great men; who alſo may be deſigned by watchmen: now ſhall be their perplexity; the prince, the judge, and the great man, in juſt retaliation for their perplexing the cauſe of the poor; or of all the people, who would be ſurrounded and entangled with calamities and diſtreſſes, and not know which way to turn themſelves, or how to get out of them.

℣. 5. Truſt ye not in a friend, &c.] This is not ſaid to leſſen the value of friendſhip; or to diſcourage the cultivation of it with agreeable perſons; or to diſſuade from a confidence in a real friend; or in the leaſt to weaken it, and damp the pleaſure of true friendſhip, which is one of the great bleſſings of life; but to ſet forth the ſad degeneracy of the then preſent age, that men, who pretended to be friends, were ſo univerſally falſe and faithleſs, that there was no dependence to be had on them: put ye not confidence in a guide; in political matters, in civil affairs, as civil magiſtrates, judges, counſellors; or in domeſtic matters. The Targum renders it, in one near a-kin. Kimchi interprets it, of an elder brother; and Aben Ezra, of an huſband, who is to his wife the guide of her youth; and in religious matters as prophets, prieſts who were falſe and deceitful. It may deſign a very intimate friend, a familiar acquaintance, who might of all men be thought to be confided in; of whom the word is uſed, Pſ. lv. 13: keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy boſom; from a wife, and much more from a concubine or harlot. The Targum is, "from the wife of thy covenant keep the words of thy mouth;" divulge not the thoughts of thine heart, or diſcloſe the ſecrets of it to one ſo near; take care of ſpeaking treaſon againſt the prince, or ill of a neighbour; it may be got out of ſuch an one, and who may be ſo baſe as to betray it: or utter not any thing whatever that is ſecret, the divulging of which may be detrimental; for in ſuch an age as this was, one in ſo near a relation might be wicked enough to diſcover it; ſee Eccl. x. 20.

ỳ. 6. For the ſon diſhonoureth the father, &c.] Speaks contemptibly of him; behaves rudely towards him; ſhows him no reſpect and reverence; expoſes his failings, and makes him the object of his banter and ridicule; who ought to have honoured, reverenced and obeyed him, being the inſtrument of his being, by whom he was brought up, fed, clothed, and provided for; baſe ingratitude! the daughter riſeth up againſt her mother; by whom ſhe has been uſed in the moſt tender and affectionate manner; this being ſtill more unnatural, if poſſible, as being done by the female ſex, uſually more ſoft and pliable; but here, loſing her natural affection, and forgetting both her relation and ſex, replies to her mother, giving ill language; oppoſes and diſobeys her, chides, wrangles and ſcolds, and ſtrives, and litigates with her, as the Targum: or riſes up as a witneſs againſt her, to her detriment, if not to the taking away of her life: the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law; this is not ſo much to be wondered at as the former inſtances, which ſerve to encourage and embolden thoſe that are in ſuch a relation to ſpeak pertly and ſaucily; to reproach, and make light of mothers-in-law, as the Targum; or ſlight and abuſe them: a man's enemies are the men of his own houſe; his ſons and his ſervants, who ſhould honour his perſon, defend his property, and promote his intereſt; but inſtead of that, do every thing that is injurious to him. Theſe words are referred to by Chriſt, and uſed by him to deſcribe the times in which he lived, Matt. x. 35, 36. and the prophet may be thought to have an eye to the ſame, whilſt he is ſetting forth the badneſs of his own times; and the Jews ſeem to think he had a regard to them, ſince they ſay [y], that when the Meſſiah comes, the ſon ſhall diſhonour his father, &c. plainly having this paſſage in view; and the whole agrees with the times of Chriſt, in which there were few good men; it was a wicked age, an adulterous generation of men he lived among; great corruption there was in princes, prieſts and people; in the civil and eccleſiaſtical rulers, and in all ranks and degrees of men; and he that eat bread with Chriſt, even Judas, lift up his heel againſt him. The times in which Micah the prophet here ſpeaks of, ſeem to be the times of Ahaz, who was a wicked prince; and the former part of Hezekiah's reign, before a reformation was ſet on foot, or at leaſt brought about, in whoſe reigns he propheſied; tho' ſome have thought he here predicts the ſad times in the reign of Manaſſeh; which is not ſo probable.

ỳ. 7. Therefore I will look unto the Lord, &c.] Here the prophet, in the name of the church and people of God, declares what he would do in ſuch circumſtances, ſince there was no dependence on men, of any rank, in any relation, or connexion with each other; he reſolved to look alone to the Lord, and put his truſt in him; look up to the Lord in prayer, uſe an humble freedom with him, place an holy confidence in him, expect all good things from him, and wait for them; look to Chriſt in the exerciſe of faith, which is in New Teſtament-language a looking to Jeſus; and the Targum interprets this clauſe of the word of the Lord, the eſſential word, who is to be looked unto, and believed in, as the Son of God, who is the true God, and eternal life; as the Lamb of God, that takes away the ſin of the world; as the Mediator between God and men; as in all his offices of prophet, prieſt and king; as the Lord our righteouſneſs, and as the only Saviour and Redeemer of men; and that for all things, when in darkneſs for light, when weak for ſtrength, when ſick for healing, when hungry for food, when diſconſolate for comfort; in ſhort, for all ſupplies of grace here, and for eternal glory and happineſs hereafter; and tho' he is in heaven, and not to be ſeen with our bodily eyes, yet he is held forth in the word of the goſpel, and the ordinances of it; and is to be ſeen there with an eye of faith: I will wait for the God of my ſalvation; who is the author, both of temporal, and of ſpiritual, and eternal ſalvation; for the light of his countenance, when he hides himſelf; for the performance of promiſes he has made; for anſwers of prayer put up to him; for diſcoveries of pardoning grace, having ſinned againſt him; for help and aſſiſtance in all times of need; for the ſalvation of the Lord, for an application of it, for the joys and comforts of it; and for Chriſt the Saviour, his coming in the fleſh, which all the prophets and Old Teſtament-ſaints were looking and waiting for: and who, doubtleſs, was upon the mind, and in the view of the prophet, when he uttered theſe words, my God will hear me; this is the language of faith, both to ſay that God was his God, and that he would hear and anſwer him; the former is the ground of the latter; God has an ear to hear when his people cry; and ſooner or later it appears that he does hear, by giving an anſwer of peace unto them, which iſſues in their ſalvation, they have been praying, looking, and waiting for. The Targum is, "my God will receive my prayer."

ỳ. 8. Rejoice not againſt me, O mine enemy, &c.] Theſe are the words of the prophet in the name of the church, continued in an apoſtrophe or addreſs to his and their enemy; by whom may be meant literally, the Chaldeans or Edomites, or both, who rejoiced at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the calamities the people of the Jews were brought into at it; ſee Pſ. cxxxvii. 7, 8. Obad. ỳ. 12. ſpiritually, ſatan the great enemy of mankind, and eſpecially of the church and people of God, to whom it is a pleaſure to draw them into any ſin or ſnare, and to do them any hurt and miſchief; and alſo the men of the world, who hate and perſecute the ſaints; and watch for their haltings, and rejoice at their falls into ſin, and at any calamity and affliction that may attend them, tho' there is no juſt reaſon for it; ſince this will not always be the caſe of the ſaints, they will be in a better ſituation, and in more comfortable circumſtances; and it will be the turn of their enemies to be afflicted, puniſhed and tormented: when I fall, I ſhall ariſe; or, tho' I fall [z], or have fallen; into outward afflictions and diſtreſſes, which come not by chance, but by divine appointment; or into the temptations of ſatan, and by them, which ſometimes is ſuffered for wiſe ends and purpoſes; or into ſin, which even a good man, a truly righteous man, is frequently left unto; but then he does not fall from real goodneſs, from true grace, nor from his juſtifying righteouſneſs, which is everlaſting, and connected with eternal life: he may fall from a lively exerciſe of grace, from ſtedfaſtneſs neſs in the faith, and a profeſſion of it; but not from the principle of grace, nor a ſtate of grace; or from the love and favour of God: he may fall, but not totally or finally, or ſo as to periſh everlaſtingly; nor is he utterly caſt down, the Lord upholds him, and raiſes him up again; he riſes as the church here believes ſhe ſhould, out of his preſent ſtate and condition, into a more comfortable one; not in his own ſtrength, but in the ſtrength of the Lord, under a ſenſe of ſin, by the exerciſe of true repentance for it, and by faith in Chriſt, and in a view of pardoning grace and mercy; ſee Pſ. xxxvii. 24. Prov. xxiv. 16: when I ſit in darkneſs; or tho' [a]. The Targum is, "as it were in "darkneſs;" not in a ſtate of unregeneracy, which is a ſtate of total darkneſs, but in affliction and diſtreſs; for as light often ſignifies proſperity, ſo darkneſs adverſity, any afflictive diſpenſation of providence; and eſpecially when this is attended with deſertion, or the hidings of God's face; it is to be, not without any light of grace in the heart, or without the light of the word, or means of grace; but to be without the light of God's countenance; which is very uncomfortable, and makes dark providences darker ſtill; ſee Iſ. l. 10. yet notwithſtanding all this, the Lord ſhall be a light unto me; by delivering out of affliction; by lifting up the light of his countenance; by cauſing Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs to ariſe; by ſending his ſpirit to illuminate, refreſh and comfort; by his word, which is a lamp to the feet, a light to the path, a light ſhining in a dark place; ſee Pſ. xxvii. 1. and cxii. 4. This paſſage is applied by the Jews [b] to the days of the Meſſiah.

℣. 9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, &c.] The Targum prefaces theſe words with "Jeruſalem "ſaith;" and they are the words of the prophet, in the name of Jeruſalem or the church, reſolving in the ſtrength of divine grace to bear the preſent affliction, which had at leaſt ſome appearance of divine indignation in it; not againſt the perſons of God's people, who are always the objects of his love, and towards whom there is no fury in him; but againſt their ſins, which are diſpleaſing and abominable to him; and this is not in a vindictive way, for ſuch indignation they could never bear; nor can any creature ſtand before it, or bear up under it; and beſides, Chriſt has bore the wrath and indignation of God in this ſenſe for them; but it here means the diſplicency and indignation of God in fatherly chaſtiſements, conſiſtent with the ſtrongeſt love, and affection for them; and to bear this, is to be humble under the mighty hand of God, quietly to ſubmit to it, and patiently to endure the affliction, without murmuring and repining, till the Lord pleaſes to remove it. The reaſon follows, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him; the beſt of men ſin; ſin is the cauſe and reaſon of all affliction and diſtreſs, whether temporal or ſpiritual. The conſideration of this tends to make and keep good men humble, and quietly ſubmit to the chaſtiſing rod of their heavenly Father, which they ſee it is right and proper ſhould be uſed; and as knowing that they are chaſtiſed and afflicted leſs than their iniquities deſerve; and that it is all for their good; a ſenſe of ſin ſtops their mouths, that they have nothing to ſay againſt God. The word חטא here uſed ſometimes ſignifies the offering an expiatory ſacrifice for ſin to God; and Guſſetius [c] thinks this is the meaning of it here; and obſerves, that with the oblation of a contrite heart, and works of charity, the ſatisfaction of Chriſt is to be pleaded, and in our way to be offered up to God the judge, thro' faith flying to it; whereby the mind is diſpoſed to bear correction patiently, in hope that favour will quickly ſhine forth in help and deliverance: until he plead my cauſe, and execute judgment for me; Chriſt the mighty Redeemer, and powerful and prevalent Mediator, not only pleads the cauſe of his people with God his Father, and obtains all bleſſings of grace for them; but he alſo pleads their cauſe againſt their enemies, an ungodly people that ſtrive with them, perſecute and diſtreſs them; and will in his own time do them juſtice, and execute vengeance, his righteous judgments on thoſe that hate them, and riſe up againſt them, as he will on all the antichriſtian party: he will bring me forth to the light; like a perſon taken out of priſon, or out of a dungeon, to behold and enjoy the light of the ſun and day. The ſenſe is, that he will openly eſpouſe the cauſe of his church, and give her honour and glory publickly before men; bring forth her righteouſneſs as the light, and her judgment as the noonday; and make her innocence appear as clear as the day, and bring her at laſt to the light of glory; ſee Pſ. xxxvii. 6. Iſ. lviii. 8, 10: and I ſhall behold his righteouſneſs; the equity of his proceedings with his people, in chaſtiſing and afflicting them, that they are all right and good; his juſtice in puniſhing their enemies, and executing judgment on them; his goodneſs and beneficence to the ſaints, all his ways being mercy and truth; his faithfulneſs in the fulfilment of his promiſes; and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which juſtifies them before God, renders them acceptable to him, will anſwer for them in a time to come, and introduce them into his everlaſting kingdom and glory.

℣. 10. Then ſhe that is mine enemy ſhall ſee it, &c.] The Chaldeans and Edomites ſhall ſee the people of the Jews riſing out of their calamities, brought out of the darkneſs of their captivity in Babylon, and enjoying the light of peace and proſperity in their own land. Some editions of the Targum, and Jarchi and Kimchi, have in their gloſſes on this and the preceding verſe, Rome, of whom they interpret this enemy, as Mr. Pocock obſerves; and ſo R. Elias [d] ſays the Targum is, then ſhall Rome ſee; by which they mean the chriſtians, in oppoſition to the Jews; otherwiſe it would not be amiſs to interpret it of Rome papal or antichriſt, in oppoſition to the church of God; ſeeing the antichriſtian party will ſee the witneſſes of Chriſt ſlain for his ſake, riſe again, and aſcend to heaven, or be brought into a glorious and comfortable ſtate; ſee Rev. xi. 12. and may be applied to any age of the church, and to any particular ſaints raiſed out of a ſtate of darkneſs and affliction, into a proſperous one, in the ſight of their enemies, and in ſpite of them, to their great mortification; ſee Pſ. xxiii. 4, 5, 6: and ſhame ſhall cover her which ſaid unto me, where is the Lord thy God? as the heathens, the Chaldeans did to the Jews, Pſ. cxv. 2. and which muſt be very cutting to them, as it was to David, Pſ. xlii. 10. when they flouting and jeering ſaid, where is thy God thou boaſtedſt of, and didſt put thy truſt and confidence in, that he would deliver and ſave thee? what's become of him, and of thy confidence in him? The Targum is, “where art thou that art redeemed by the word of the Lord thy God?” but when they ſhall ſee that the Lord God has returned unto them, and wrought ſalvation for them, they'll be aſhamed of their flouts and jeers; and by reaſon of their ſad diſappointment, and the change of things for the worſe to them, who now will be brought into calamity and diſtreſs themſelves: mine eyes ſhall behold her; the enemy; their fall, as the Targum; being in a moſt deſpicable and ruinous condition, under the vengeance of the Almighty; and that with pleaſure and ſatisfaction, not from a private ſpirit of revenge, but becauſe of the glory of divine juſtice, which will be diſplayed in their righteous deſtruction; ſee Pſ. lviii. 10: now ſhall ſhe be trodden down as the mire of the ſtreets; that is, entirely conquered, and utterly deſtroyed; reduced to the utmoſt meanneſs, and had in the greateſt contempt: this was fulfilled when Babylon was taken by the Medes and Perſians; and when the Edomites were conquered and brought into ſubjection to the Jews by the Maccabees; and will be the caſe of all the enemies of Chriſt and his church, of all the antichriſtian ſtates, one day.

[c] Ebr. Comment. p. 923.

[d] In Tiſbi, p. 227.

℣. 11. In the day that thy walls are to be built, &c.] Theſe words are not ſpoken to the enemy, as ſome think; either the Chaldeans, the walls of whoſe city Babylon being demoliſhed by the Perſians, it would be a long day or time ere they were rebuilt; and when their power of ſending their decrees abroad among the nations would be far off: or to the enemy that ſhould think to build up their walls with the ſpoils of Iſrael, in the time of Gog and Magog, and when their decree determined over the nations and Iſrael would alſo be far off; but they are the words of the prophet to the church and people of God, comforting them with obſerving, that there would be a day when the walls of Jeruſalem, and the temple, which would lie in ruins during their captivity, would be rebuilt; and which was fulfilled in the times of Zorobabel and Nehemiah; and ſo the Targum, “at that time the congregation of Iſrael ſhall be built;” and which had a further accompliſhment in a ſpiritual ſenſe, in the firſt times of the goſpel, when the church of Chriſt was built up, and eſtabliſhed in the world; and will ſtill have a greater completion in the latter day, when the tabernacle of David, or church of Chriſt, ſhall be raiſed that is fallen, and its breaches cloſed, and ruins repaired, Amos ix. 11: in that day ſhall the decree be far removed; which, as it literally reſpects Jeruſalem, and the rebuilding of that after ſeventy years captivity, may ſignify, either the decree of God concerning that captivity, which would then ceaſe, according to the time fixed by it; or the cruel laws and edicts of the Babylonians, which ſhould no more bind and preſs the Jews, and be as a heavy yoke upon them; thoſe ſtatutes, which were not good, that were given them. So the Targum, “at that time the decrees of the nations ſhall ceaſe;” or the decree of Artaxerxes, forbidding and hindring the rebuilding of the city: but if the phraſe far removed, ſignifies its being divulged and ſpread far abroad, as it is interpreted by ſome; then it may refer to the decree of Cyrus for rebuilding the city and temple; and which was revived and confirmed by Darius Hyſtaſpis, and by Darius Longimanus, and which was publiſhed every where; and by means of which the Jews from all parts were encouraged to come up to their own land, and proſelytes with them; and which ſenſe ſuits well with what follows: and as this, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, may have regard to the church of Chriſt in goſpel-times; it may ſignify the removal of human laws, traditions, rites and ceremonies, reſpecting religious things among the Gentiles, and their giving way to thoſe of God and Chriſt; or the promulgation of the goſpel, in all parts, called a decree, Pſ. ii. 6. becauſe a revelation of the decrees of God, reſpecting the ſalvation of men, and to which it owes its efficacy; by means of which many would be brought to the church, and the kingdom of Chriſt be enlarged, and ſpread every where, as follows:

℣. 12. In that day alſo he ſhall come even to thee, &c.] Which words alſo are not directed to the enemy, as ſome interpret them; as to Chaldea or Babylon; and the ſenſe be, that Cyrus ſhould come thither, and take it; or any more remote enemy of the Jews in the latter day, to whom the day of the Lord ſhould come, or his decree of vengeance or judgment upon them, or any enemy to waſte and deſtroy them; but they are a continued addreſs to Jeruſalem or the church, ſignifying that he, the people of the Jews, the body of them, with the proſelyted Gentiles, ſhould come from all parts to Jeruſalem to rebuild it upon the decree of Cyrus; and that multitudes of all, or at leaſt many nations, ſhould flock to the church of Chriſt, upon the publication of the goſpel: from Aſſyria; where many of the Jews, and even of the ten tribes were, whither they were carried captive: and from the fortified cities; in Aſſyria, and other countries, where the Jews might be placed, either as priſoners, or to do ſervile work, as repairing the fortifications; or for the defence of the country, from which they were to be, and were releaſed upon Cyrus taking of Babylon; and was a type of the redemption by Chriſt from greater bondage. It may be rendered, the cities of Egypt, as Kimchi obſerves, here and in 2 Kings xix. 24. Iſ. xix. 6. and ſo Ben Melech: it is interpreted by ſome Matzor, being the ſame with Mitzraim, which is the name for Egypt; and the ſenſe would be more eaſy, as well as the words run more ſmoothly, thus, ſhall come from Aſſyria, even to the cities of Egypt: and then it follows, and from the fortreſs, even to the river; or from Egypt to the river Euphrates, which was one of the boundaries of the land of Iſrael: and from ſea to ſea; from the Perſian-ſea to the Mediterranean-ſea, or from the Red-ſea thither, and from the ſeveral maritime parts where they inhabited: and from mountain to mountain; from mount Taurus to Carmel, or Lebanon, or Hor; or from the ſeveral mountains to which they had fled for ſafety, and where they had dwelt. It may reſpect the extent of the church and kingdom of Chriſt in the latter day, enlarged by the numerous converſions of Jews and Gentiles in all parts of the world. The Jews ſhall be gathered from all places where they are, and join themſelves to the church of Chriſt; and theſe ſeveral places, particularly Aſſyria, Egypt, and the iſlands of the ſea, from whence they ſhall be brought, are mentioned in other prophecies; ſee Iſ. xi. 11. Zech. x. 9, 10, 11. tho' this may reſpect, not barely the converſion and gathering of them to Chriſt and his church, but of the Gentiles alſo in thoſe ſeveral countries, thus; they ſhall come from Aſſyria, and the fortified cities; that is, from the Turkiſh empire; the land of Aſſyria, and its fortified cities, being in the poſſeſſion of the Turks and in whoſe dominions many Jews at this day reſide;

ſide; and not only they, but multitudes in the Ottoman empire ſhall be converted in the latter day, and become members of chriſtian churches; ſignified by the flocks of Kedar, and the rams of Nebaioth, that ſhall be gathered to the church, and miniſter there, Iſ. lx. 7. and they ſhall come from the fortreſs, even to the river; from every one of the fortified cities before-mentioned to the river Euphrates, which will be dried up to make way for the kings or kingdoms of the eaſt, for their converſion to Chriſt, and embracing his goſpel; even the large kingdoms of Perſia, Tartary, China, &c. Rev. xvi. 12. or from Egypt to the river Euphrates; and ſo ſignifies the ſame as before, Egypt being part of the Turkiſh dominions; or elſe the Roman juriſdiction, ſpiritually called Egypt, may be meant, Rev. xi. 8. and in ſeveral Popiſh countries are many Jews, who will be called from thence; as well as many of the Papiſts themſelves ſhall be called out of myſtical Babylon, and embrace the true religion of Chriſt: and from ſea to ſea; this is a well known deſcription of the amplitude of Chriſt's church and kingdom in goſpel-times, eſpecially in the latter day; ſee Pſ. lxxii. 8. Zech. ix. 10. or as it may be rendered, the ſea from the ſea[e]; that is, the inhabitants of the ſea, or of the iſlands of it, ſhall come from thence to the church, ſee Iſ. xi. 11. theſe are the ſame with the abundance of the ſea, that ſhall be converted to Chriſt, and join his people in the latter day, as in our iſle and others, Iſ. lx. 5: and from mountain to mountain; or rather, and mountain ſhall come to the mountain[f]; that is, the inhabitants of the mountain, or of Rome, that is ſituated on ſeven mountains, of myſtical Babylon, the great mountain; theſe ſhall be called from hence to mount Zion, the church of the living God, where Chriſt with the 144,000 will be; and which ſhall then be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains, and all nations ſhall flow unto it, Rev. xiv. 1. Iſ. ii. 2, 3. The Targum is, “at that time the captives ſhall “be gathered from Aſſyria, and the ſtrong cities, “and from Churmini (or Armenia) the great and “the fortified cities, even unto Euphrates, and “the weſtern ſea, and the mountains of the mountain.”

℣. 13. Notwithſtanding the land ſhall be deſolate, &c.] Not the land of Chaldea, as ſome; or the land of the nations, as Jarchi and Kimchi; but the land of Iſrael. That part of it, which was poſſeſſed by the ten tribes, was made deſolate by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria; and that which was inhabited by the two tribes, by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and this deſolation was to be, notwithſtanding the above prophecies, and prior to the fulfilment of them. So ſome render the words, as in the margin of our bibles, after the land hath been deſolate[g]; and it is obſerved, partly to prevent wicked men promiſing themſelves impunity from the above prophecies; and partly to prevent deſpair in good men, when ſuch a deſolation ſhould be made. And then again it was made deſolate by the Romans, previous to the ſpread and eſtabliſhment of the church of Chriſt, by the ſucceſs of the goſpel in the Gentile world, in the firſt times of it; and by the converſion of the Jews, and bringing in the fulneſs of the Gentiles, in the laſt times of it. Becauſe of them that dwell therein, for the fruit of their doings; becauſe of the ſins of the inhabitants of the land of Iſrael: the deſolation made by the kings of Aſſyria and Babylon, was for the idolatry of Iſrael and Judah, and other ſins; and the deſolation made by the Romans, for the Jews rejection of the Meſſiah.

℣. 14. Feed thy people with thy rod, &c.] Theſe are either the words of God the Father to Chriſt, the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, calling upon him to do his office as ſuch; to feed the people he had given him, the ſheep of his hand, the flock of his paſture, by his Spirit, and with his word and ordinances; ſee Zech. xi. 5. or of Chriſt to his miniſters, his under-ſhepherds, to feed his ſheep and his lambs, the people committed to their care and charge, with wholeſome words, with ſound and good doctrine, by faithfully preaching the goſpel, and adminiſtring the ordinances to them: or rather the words of the prophet, a prayer of his to God or Chriſt, to take care of the people of God in their deſolate ſtate, in captivity; to guide and lead them, protect and defend them, by his power and providence, as a ſhepherd directs, leads, governs, and preſerves his flock with his paſtoral crook or rod; or as before, to feed the church of God as a ſhepherd does his flock, lead them into good paſtures, and ſecure them from all their enemies: and this being a prayer of faith, may be conſidered as a prophecy or prediction of what would be; and ſo ſome render the words, thou ſhalt feed thy people, &c[h]. The Targum is, “feed “thy people with thy word, the people of thine “inheritance, in the age which is to be renewed;” in the new world, the world to come; plainly referring to the times of the Meſſiah. The flock of thine heritage; who are like to ſheep for their harmleſſneſs and innocence, and to a flock of them, being aſſociated together, and folded in the church; and tho' but a little flock, yet the lot, the portion, the inheritance of Chriſt; all which is a ſtrong reaſon for his feeding, keeping, and preſerving them, being committed to his care and charge for that purpoſe: which dwell ſolitary in the wood; dwell alone in the world, which is like a wood and a wilderneſs; ſeparated from the men of the world; diſtinguiſhed by the grace of God, choſen and called out from among them, and different from them both in principle and practice: this may have reſpect to the Jews in their diſperſion, living ſeparate from, and unmixed with the nations of the world; or rather to their dwelling in ſafety and ſecurity under the protection of the great ſhepherd, the Meſſiah, David their prince, when they ſhall be returned to their own land in the latter day: in the midſt of Carmel; or of a fruitful field, as Carmel was; enjoying all happineſs and proſperity, temporal and ſpiritual: let them feed in Baſhan and Gilead, as in the days of old; places in the land of Iſrael famous for rich and fat paſtures; and ſo expreſs the great plenty of good things wiſhed for, and which will be enjoyed by the Jews when converted to Chriſt, and replaced in their own land; and are an emblem of thoſe ſpiritual good things, and of thoſe rich and green paſtures of the word and ordinances, which the great ſhepherd is deſired to lead, and does lead his people into; ſee Pſ. xxiii. 1, 2. Ezek. xxxiv. 14. theſe places are now in the hand of the Turks, and ſo the words may be a petition for their converſion, as well as for the Jews, that this country may no more be inhabited by heathens, but by the Iſrael of God, as Gulichius [i] very well obſerves.

ỷ. 15. According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt, &c.] This is an anſwer of the Lord to the prayer of the prophet, aſſuring him, and the church he perſonates, and on whoſe account he applies; that there would be as great a deliverance wrought for them, and as wonderful things done, as when Iſrael was brought out of the land of Egypt, which was effected with a mighty hand, and an out-ſtretched arm, and was attended with amazing events; as the plagues in Egypt; the paſſage of the Iſraelites through the Red-ſea, and the deſtruction of the Egyptians in it: will I ſhew unto him marvellous things; that is, unto the people of the Lord, the flock of his heritage, the ſolitary and peculiar people, fed and preſerved by him: as the deliverance out of Egypt was the Lord's work, ſo the deliverance from Babylon; as the one was the work of his power upon the heart of Pharaoh to let the people go, ſo the other as great an act of his power working upon the mind of Cyrus, ſtirring him up to let the captives go free, without price or reward; yea, to furniſh them with neceſſaries by the way, and to rebuild their city and temple: and as Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned in the Red-ſea, ſo the kingdom of Babylon was ſwallowed up by the Medes and Perſians; yea, in ſome reſpects the latter deliverance exceeded the former, and eraſed the remembrance of it; ſee Jer. xvi. 14, 15. and that redemption by Chriſt, which both theſe were typical of, was greater and more marvellous than either, being a deliverance from, and an abolition and deſtruction of ſin, ſatan, the law, hell, and death, and attended with things the moſt wonderful and ſurpriſing; as the birth of Chriſt of a virgin; the miracles done by him in life, and at death; the doctrines of the goſpel preached by him and his apoſtles, and the amazing ſucceſs of them, eſpecially in the Gentile world, being teſtified and confirmed by ſigns, wonders, miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt. This paſſage, both by ancient and modern Jews [k], is applied to the times of the Meſſiah. So in an ancient [l] book of theirs, ſpeaking of the times of the Meſſiah, they ſay, "from that day all the ſigns "and wonders, and mighty works, which the "Lord did in Egypt, he will do for Iſrael, as it is "ſaid, according to the days of thy coming out of the "land of Egypt, &c." It is alſo ſaid by a modern writer [m] of theirs, "becauſe of the miracles "and wonders which ſhall be in the days of the "Meſſiah, ſuch as the gathering of the captives, "the reſurrection of the dead, and the deſtruction "of Gog and Magog, beſides other miracles and "wonders, the end of the redemption is called the "end of wonders in Dan. xii. 6. and this is that "which God has promiſed by his prophets, particularly Micah, ch. vii. 15. according to the days, "&c. and from what follows, with the reſt of "the verſes to the end of the book, it is manifeſt, "that theſe promiſes are not yet fulfilled, but "will be fulfilled in the days of the Meſſiah." From whence it appears, that it was the ſenſe of the ancient Jews, as well as ſome modern ones, that miracles would be wrought in the days of the Meſſiah; tho' ſome of them reject them, and look not for them; particularly Maimonides [n] ſays, "let "it not enter into thine heart, that the king Meſ"ſiah hath need to do ſigns and wonders; as that "he ſhall renew things in the world, or raiſe the "dead, and the like; theſe are things which fools "ſpeak of; the thing is not ſo." But however, certain it is, the ancient Jews expected miracles to be done by the Meſſiah; hence ſome, in the times of Jeſus ſaid, when Chriſt cometh, will he do more miracles than theſe which this man hath done? John vii. 31. and accordingly the miracles Jeſus did, were full proofs of his being the Meſſiah, and were wrought for that purpoſe, and owned as ſuch; wherefore the above Jew, tho' he is right in the application of this paſſage to the times of the Meſſiah, yet is wrong in ſaying theſe promiſes are not yet fulfilled, ſince they have had a full accompliſhment in the Meſſiah-Jeſus; nor is another to be looked for, or ſuch miracles to be hereafter wrought.

ỷ. 16. The nations ſhall ſee, and be confounded at all their might, &c.] The Chaldeans or Babylonians, when they ſhall ſee the wonderful things done by the Lord in the deliverance of his people out of their hands, ſhall be aſhamed of their own power and might, in which they truſted, and of which they boaſted; but now ſhall be baffled and defeated, and not able to ſtop the progreſs of the arms of Cyrus, or detain the Jews any longer their captives; or they ſhall be confounded at the power and ſtrength the Jews will have to repoſſeſs their land, rebuild their city and temple, under the encouragement and protection of the king of Perſia; and as this may refer to a further accompliſhment in goſpel-times, it may reſpect the confuſion the Gentile world would be in at the mighty power and ſpread of the goſpel, in the converſion of ſuch multitudes by it, and in the abolition of the Pagan religion. Kimchi interprets this of the nations that ſhall be gathered together with Gog and Magog againſt Jeruſalem in the latter day; ſee Ezek. xxxviii. 15, 16, 23. and xxxix. 21. They ſhall lay their hand upon their mouth; be ſilent, and boaſt no more of themſelves; nor blaſpheme God and his word; nor inſult his people; nor contradict his goſpel, or open their mouths any more againſt his truths and his ordinances: their ears ſhall be deaf; hearing ſo much of the praiſes of God, of the ſucceſs of his intereſt, and of the happineſs of his people dinned in their ears, they will be ſtunned with it, and ſcarce know what they hear; become deaf with the continual noiſe of it, which will be diſagreeable to them; and will chuſe to hear no more, and therefore through envy and grief will ſtop their ears at what is told them.

ỷ. 17. They ſhall lick the duſt like a ſerpent, &c.] Whoſe food is the duſt of the earth, according to the curſe pronounced on it, Gen. iii. 14. and which is either its natural food it chuſes to live on, as ſome ſerpents however are ſaid [o] to do; or going upon its belly, it cannot but take in a good deal of the duſt of the earth along with its food; and hereby is ſignified the low, mean, abject, and curſed eſtate and condition of the ſeed of the ſerpent, wicked and ungodly men, the enemies of Chriſt and his people; who will be forced to yield ſubjection to him and his church, and will pretend the moſt profound reſpect for them, and the higheſt eſt veneration of them. The alluſion ſeems to be to the manner of the eaſtern nations, who in complimenting their kings and great men, bowed ſo low to the ground with their faces, as to take up with their mouths the very duſt of it. Particularly it is ſaid of the Perſians, that they firſt kiſs the pavement on which the king treads, before they ſpeak unto him, as Quiſtorpius on the place relates; and Valerius Maximus[p] ſays, that when Darius Hyſtaſpis was declared king by the neighing of his horſe, the reſt of the ſix candidates alighted from their horſes, and proſtrated their bodies to the ground, as is the manner of the Perſians, and ſaluted him king; and Herodotus[q] obſerves the ſame cuſtom among the Perſians; and to this cuſtom the poet Martial[r] refers; and Druſius ſays, it is a cuſtom in Aſia to this day, that when any go into the preſence of a king, they kiſs the ground, which is a token of the great veneration they have for him. The phraſe is uſed of the enemies of the Meſſiah, and of the converted Jews and Gentiles at the latter day, and is expreſſive of their great ſubmiſſion to them; ſee Pſ. lxxii. 9. Iſ. xlix. 23. They ſhall move out of their holes like worms of the earth; who put out their heads, and draw them in again upon the leaſt notice or approach of danger; or like ſerpents, as Jarchi and Kimchi, which lurk in holes, and creep out of them on their bellies, or any other creeping things. The word[s] here uſed ſignifies a tremulous and tumultuous motion, like the wriggling of a worm out of the earth; or the hurry of ants, when their neſts are kicked or thrown up: this is expreſſive of the confuſion and perturbation of the enemies of the Lord and his people; of the Babylonians, who were obliged in a hurry to leave their palaces, as the Targum and Aben Ezra interpret their holes, and their fortreſſes and towers, and deliver them to the Medes and Perſians; and of Gog and Magog, and the antichriſtian ſtates, who will be obliged to abandon their places of abode, and creep out of ſight, and be reduced to the loweſt and meaneſt condition. They ſhall be afraid of the Lord our God; becauſe of the glory of his majeſty, the greatneſs of his power, and for fear of his judgments: and ſhall fear becauſe of thee; O God, or Iſrael, as Kimchi; the church of God, whom they deſpiſed and reproached before; but now ſhall be ſeized with a pannic, and live in the utmoſt dread of, becauſe of the power and glory of God in the midſt of them, and leſt they ſhould fall a ſacrifice to them.

℣. 18. Who is a God like unto thee, &c.] There is no God beſides him, none ſo great, ſo mighty as he; none like him for the perfections of his nature; for the works of his hands; for the bleſſings of his goodneſs, both of providence and grace; and particularly for his pardoning grace and mercy, as follows: that pardoneth iniquity; that lifts it up, and takes it away, as the word[t] ſignifies; thus the Lord has taken the ſins of his people off of them, and laid them on Chriſt, and he has bore them, and carried them away, as the antitype of the ſcape-goat, never to be ſeen and remembred any more; and whereas the guilt of ſin lies ſometimes as an heavy burden upon their conſciences, he lifts it up, and takes it away, by ſprinkling the blood of Chriſt upon them, and by applying his pardoning grace and mercy to them: pardon of ſin is peculiar to God; none can forgive it, but he againſt whom it is committed; forgiveneſs of ſin is with him, promiſed by him in covenant, proclaimed in Chriſt, by him obtained and publiſhed in the goſpel: and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage; the people of God are his portion, his lot, and his inheritance; they are a remnant according to the election of grace, choſen of God, taken into his covenant; redeemed by Chriſt, and called by grace, and brought to repent and believe; theſe God forgives, even all their tranſgreſſions, ſins, and iniquities of every kind; which is here expreſſed by another word, paſſing them by, or paſſing over them: ſin is a tranſgreſſion or paſſing over the law, and pardon is a paſſing over ſin; God taking no notice of it, as if he ſaw it not; not imputing it to his people, or calling them to an account for it; or condemning and puniſhing them according to the deſert of it; but hiding his face from it, and covering it: he retaineth not his anger for ever; that which he ſeemed to have againſt his people, and appeared in ſome of the diſpenſations of his providence, is not continued and lengthened out, and eſpecially for ever, but it diſappears; he changes the courſe of his providence, and his conduct and behaviour to his people, and ſhews them his face and favour, and manifeſts his forgiving love; which is a turning himſelf from his anger; ſee Pſ. lxxxv. 2, 3. Iſ. xii. 1: becauſe he delighteth in mercy; which is natural to him, abundant with him, and exerciſed according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure, very delightful to him; he takes pleaſure in ſhewing mercy to miſerable creatures, and in thoſe that hope in it, Pſ. cxlvii. 11. this is the ſpring of pardon, which ſtreams through the blood of Chriſt.

℣. 19. He will turn again, &c.] From his anger, and ſhew his face and favour; which is not inconſiſtent with his everlaſting and unchangeable love; for anger is not oppoſite to love, and is only a diſplicency at ſin, and not at the perſons of his people; and properly ſpeaking is not in God; is rather in appearance than in reality; when his people ſin againſt him, he ſhows himſelf as if he was angry; he turns away from them, and withdraws his gracious preſence and ſenſible communion from them; but when they are brought to a ſenſe of ſin, and acknowledgment of it, he returns to them, manifeſts his love to them again, and applies his pardoning grace, which is the thing believed would be done; it is only another expreſſion of that, as all the reſt that follow are: the prophet, or the church, dwells on this article of grace, and heaps up words to expreſs it by, as if they could never ſay too much of it, or ſufficiently explain it. The Targum is, "his word ſhall "return." He will have compaſſion upon us; the Lord is naturally compaſſionate; he is full of compaſſion, he has bowels of compaſſion; theſe are tender mercies, and never fail, and which are exerciſed in a ſovereign way; pardon of ſin flows from hence; every manifeſtation of it is a diſplay thereof: ſin brings afflictions on the ſaints, and then the Lord pities them, and is afflicted with them; ſin grieves them, and he is as it were grieved for them; it wounds them, and then, as the good and compaſſionate Samaritan, he pours in the oil and wine of pardoning grace, and heals them; they are, whilſt in this ſtate, in ſuch circumſtances often, as need his compaſſion, and they may be aſſured of it, Pſ. lxxviii. 38. He will ſubdue our iniquities; which may be underſtood alſo, as a further explanation of the grace of pardon: ſin is an enemy to God and his people; it is too ſtrong and mighty for them; it reigns over them in a ſtate of nature; they are under the power of it, and can't get rid of it, its influence, guilt, and puniſhment; Chriſt has conquered it, made an end of it, and took it away: God tramples upon it, as a conqueror does upon the necks of his enemies; it is ſubdued by him, and is under his feet; which he treats with contempt, diſdains to look upon, keeps it under, ſo that it ſhall never riſe again to the condemnation of his people; he overcomes the provocation of it, removes the guilt by pardon, and ſecures from the puniſhment of it: or this may be conſidered as the effect of pardon; as what is done in conſequence of it, by the Spirit and grace of God in ſanctification; when not only the deeds of the body are mortified thro' the Spirit, or the outward converſation reformed, but the inward power of ſin is weakened; it is laid under the reſtraints of efficacious grace, and is kept under by it; ſo that it ſhall not, and cannot have the dominion over the ſaints again, of which they may be confident, Rom. vi. 14. And thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea; never to be ſeen any more; tho' they are ſeen with the eye of omniſcience, and taken notice of by the eye of providence, yet not beheld with the eye of avenging juſtice, that being ſatisfied by Chriſt; beſides, all the ſins of God's people have been removed from them to Chriſt, and by him carried away into the land of oblivion; ſo that they are no more to be ſeen on them, who are thro' his blood and righteouſneſs without fault, ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; and being out of ſight, they are out of mind, never remembred any more, and like things caſt into the ſea, deſtroyed and loſt: perhaps there may be ſome alluſion to the Egyptians drowned in the Red-ſea; and what is caſt into the ſea, eſpecially into the depths of it, is irrecoverable, not to be fetched up again, nor does it riſe more; and ſo it is with the ſins of God's people, forgiven for Chriſt's ſake, even all of them; for they have all been bore by Chriſt, and are covered, blotted out, and pardoned, not one remains unforgiven; ſee Iſ. xxxviii. 17. This is an apoſtrophe of the prophet unto God. The Targum is, "and he will caſt into the depths of the ſea all "the ſins of Iſrael;" and it may denote their being loathſome and abominable to him, and therefore here caſt by him. It is very common in Jewiſh writings, to ſay of any thing that it is uſeleſs, abominable, accurſed, and utterly rejected, that it is to be caſt into the ſalt-ſea. For inſtance, "Aquila the proſelyte divided an inheritance with "his brother (a Gentile), and he caſt the profit of "it into the ſalt-ſea: three doctors there were, one "ſaid, the price of the idol he caſt into the ſalt-"ſea; another ſaid, he caſt the price of his part "of the idol into the ſalt-ſea; and the other ſaid, "he caſt the idol itſelf into the ſalt-ſea [u]." Again it is ſaid [w], "a ſin-offering, whoſe owner is dead, "goes into the ſalt-ſea." The heathens uſed ſea-water for the purgation and expiation of ſin; hence the poet [x], to aggravate the wickedneſs of a very wicked man, obſerves, that the ocean itſelf could not waſh away his ſins. And Cicero [y], ſpeaking of the law of the Romans for the puniſhment of parricides, which ordered that they ſhould be ſowed up alive in ſacks, and caſt into the river, obſerves the wiſdom and propriety of it; they would not, ſays he, have them caſt naked into the river, leſt when they ſhould be carried into the ſea, they ſhould pollute that by which other things that are defiled are thought to be expiated. So Iphigenia is made to ſay [z], that the ſea waſhes away all the ſins of men. Theſe are the Jewiſh and heatheniſh notions; whether there is any alluſion to them, may be conſidered; however, certain it is, that nothing ſhort of the fountain opened for ſin and uncleanneſs, or the ſea of Chriſt's blood, can waſh away ſin; that cleanſes from all ſin; and happy are they whoſe ſins are caſt in thither, or are expiated and purged away thereby!

NAHUM.

THIS book is called in the Vulgate Latin verſion, the prophecy of Nahum; and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, the prophecy of the prophet Nahum; and in ch. i. 1. it is called the book of the viſion of Nahum; which is very ſingular; and from whence we learn of what place this prophet was; but of this more will be ſaid on that verſe. His name ſignifies conſolation; and tho' the ſubject of his prophecy chiefly relates to the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian empire, and of Nineveh, the chief city of it; yet this was a comfort to the people of the Jews, that an enemy ſo powerful, and who was ſo troubleſome to them, and whom they dreaded, ſhould one day be deſtroyed. In what age Nahum lived, is not ſaid; and writers very much diſagree about it. Some make him to be the moſt ancient of all the prophets; who ſuppoſe him to propheſy of the deſtruction of Nineveh, before the reigns of Joaſh king of Judah, and Jehu king of Iſrael, as Huetius [a] obſerves; and others bring him down as low, placing him after Ezekiel, in the times of Zedekiah, as Clemens of Alexandria [b]; neither of which is likely. The Jewiſh chronologers [c] generally make him to live in the times of Manaſſeh, and ſo Abarbinel; but Joſephus [d], with more probability, puts him in the times of Jotham; tho' perhaps what the greater number of interpreters give into may be righteſt; as that he lived in the times of Hezekiah, and was cotemporary with Iſaiah, Hoſea, Amos, and Micah; and that this prophecy was delivered out after the ten tribes were carried captive by the king of Aſſyria, which was in the ſixth year of Hezekiah, and before Sennacherib's invaſion of Judea, and ſiege of Jeruſalem, which was in the fourteenth year of his reign; and which is thought to be referred to in the firſt chapter of this prophecy. Mr. Whiſton [e] places him in A. M. 3510, and of the Julian period 3988, and before the æra of Chriſt 726; and ſays, that he foretold the deſtruction of Nineveh 115 years before it came to paſs, ſo ſays Joſephus [f]. How long this prophet lived, and where he died, and was buried, is uncertain. Pſeudo-Epiphanius [g] ſays, he died and was buried in Begabar. Iſidore [h] ſays, it was in Bethafarim; both which are to be corrected by Dorotheus, who calls the place Bethabara, as Huetius [i] obſerves; the ſame where John was baptizing, John i. 28. but Benjamin of Tudela [k] ſays, his grave was to be ſeen in a place called Ein-ſiphla, in the land of Chaldea; and ſpeaks of a ſynagogue of this prophet in the province of Aſſyria [l]; but on theſe things we cannot depend. Of the authority of this prophecy there need be no doubt, as appears from the inſcription of the book, the ſublimity and majeſty of the ſtile, and its agreement with other prophets; ſee ch. i. 15. compared with Iſ. lii. 7. and the accompliſhment of the prophecies contained in it, which reſpect the ruin of the Aſſyrian empire, and particularly Nineveh, the metropolis of it; the cauſe of which were their ſins and tranſgreſſions, the inhabitants thereof were guilty of, and are pointed at in it.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter begins with the title of the book, ſhewing the ſubject-matter of it; and deſcribing the pen-man of it by his name and country, ℣. 1. which is followed with a preface to the whole book; ſetting forth the majeſty of a jealous and revenging God; the power of his wrath and fury; of which inſtances are given, in exciting tempeſts; drying up the ſea and the rivers; making the moſt fruitful mountains barren, which tremble before him; yea even the whole world, and the inhabitants thereof, his indignation being intolerable; and yet he is ſlow to anger, good to them that truſt in him, whom he knows, and whoſe protection he is in a time of trouble, ℣. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Next the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian empire, and of the city of Nineveh, is propheſied of; and is repreſented as an utter and an entire deſtruction, and which would come upon them ſuddenly and unawares, whilſt they were in their cups, ℣. 8, 9, 10. A particular perſon among them is ſpoken of, deſcribed as a deſigning wicked man, an enemy to the Lord and his people, thought to be Sennacherib king of Aſſyria, ℣. 11. from whoſe evil deſigns, yoke and bondage the Jews ſhould be delivered; and he and his poſterity be cut off, becauſe of his vileneſs, ℣. 12, 13, 14. and the chapter is concluded with tidings of joy to Judah, who are exhorted to keep their feaſts, and perform their vows on this occaſion, ℣. 15.

℣. 1. The burden of Nineveh, &c.] Of the city of Nineveh, and the greatneſs of it, ſee the notes on Jonah i. 2. and iii. 3. Jonah was ſent to this city to threaten it with ruin for its ſins; at that time the king and all his people humbled themſelves and repented, and the threatened deſtruction was averted; but they relapſing to their former iniquities, this prophet foretels what would be their their certain fate; very rightly therefore the Targum, and ſome other Jewiſh writings [m] obſerve, that Jonah propheſied againſt this city of old; and that Nahum propheſied after him a conſiderable time, perhaps at an hundred years diſtance. This prophecy is called a burden; it was taken up by the prophet at the command of the Lord, and was carried or ſent by him to Nineveh; and was an hard, heavy, grievous and burdenſome prophecy to that city, predicting its utter ruin and deſolation; and which, as Joſephus [n] ſays, came to paſs 115 years after this prophecy; and which event is placed by the learned Uſher [o] in the year of the world 3378, and of the Julian period 4088, and which was 626 years before Chriſt; and by others [p] in the year of the world 3403, of the flood 1747, before Chriſt 601; but by Dean Prideaux [q] and Mr. Whiſton [r], in the year before Chriſt 612: the book of the viſion of Nahum the Elkoſhite; no other prophecy is called a book but this, as Abarbinel obſerves; and gives this reaſon for it, becauſe the other prophets immediately declared their prophecies, as Jonah; but Nahum never went to the Ninevites, but wrote his prophecy in a book, and ſent it to them. It is called the book of the viſion; what it contains being made known to him by the Lord in a viſion, as was common; hence the prophets are called ſeers; and the prophet is deſcribed by the place of his birth, an Elkoſhite; tho' ſome think he is ſo called from his father, whoſe name was Helkeſi, and ſaid to be a prophet too, as Jerom relates; and with this agrees the Targum, which calls him Nahum of the houſe or family of Koſhi; but Jarchi ſays, that Elkoſh was the name of his city; Aben Ezra and Kimchi are in doubt which to refer it to, whether to his city, or to his anceſtors; but there ſeems no reaſon to doubt, but that he is ſo called from his native place; ſince Jerom [s] ſays, that there was a village in Galilee called Helkeſi in his days, and which he had ſeen; tho' ſcarce any traces of the old buildings could be diſcerned, it was ſo fallen to ruin, yet known to the Jews; and was ſhewn him by one that went about with him; and which is, by Heſychius [t] the preſbyter placed in the tribe of Simeon. This is another inſtance, beſides that of Jonah, diſproving the aſſertion of the Jews, that no prophet roſe out of Galilee, John vii. 52.

℣. 2. God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth, &c.] He is jealous of his own honour and glory, and for his own worſhip and ordinances; and will not give his glory to another, nor his praiſe to graven images; and therefore will puniſh all idolaters, and particularly the idolatrous Aſſyrians: he is jealous for his people, and cannot bear to ſee them injured; and will avenge the affronts that are offered, and the indignities done unto them: the Lord revengeth, and is furious; or, is maſter of wrath [u]; full of it, or has it at his command; can reſtrain it, and let it out as he pleaſes, which man cannot do; a furious and paſſionate man, who has no rule over his ſpirit. The Lord's revenging is repeated for the confirmation of it; yea it is a third time obſerved, as follows; which ſome of the Jewiſh writers think has reſpect to the three times the king of Aſſyria carried the people of Iſrael captive, and for which the Lord would be revenged on him, and puniſh him: the Lord will take vengeance on his adverſaries; on all his adverſaries; particularly the Aſſyrians are here meant, who were both the enemies of him, and of his people. The Targum explains it, "that hate his people:" vengeance belongs to the Lord, and he will repay it ſooner or later; if not immediately, he will hereafter; for it follows: and he reſerveth wrath for his enemies; and them for that; if not in this world, yet in the world to come; he lays it up among his treaſures, and brings it forth at his pleaſure. The word wrath is not in the text; it is not ſaid what he reſerves for the enemies of himſelf and church; it is inconceivable and inexpreſſible.

℣. 3. The Lord is ſlow to anger, &c.] He is not in haſte to execute it; he takes time for it, and gives men ſpace for repentance. Nineveh had had a proof of this when it repented at the preaching of Jonah, upon which the Lord deferred the execution of his wrath; but leſt they ſhould preſume upon this, and conclude the Lord would always bear with them, tho' they had returned to their former impieties; they are let to know, that this his forbearance was not owing to want of power or will in him to puniſh: ſince he is great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked; he is able to execute the wrath he threatens, and will by no means clear the guilty, or let them go free and unpuniſhed; tho' he moves ſlowly, as he may ſeem in the execution of his judgments, yet they ſhall ſurely be brought on his enemies, and be fully accompliſhed: the Lord hath his way in the whirlwind, and in the ſtorm, and the clouds are the duſt of his feet; he ſpoke to Job out of the whirlwind; he deſcended on mount Sinai in a ſtorm and tempeſt; and the clouds are his chariots; in which he rides ſwiftly; and which, for their appearance and number, are like the duſt raiſed by a multitude of horſemen riding full ſpeed. The wrath of God may be compared to a whirlwind, and a ſtorm, which is ſometimes haſtily and ſuddenly executed upon men: reſpect ſeems to be had to the armies of the Medes and Chaldeans againſt the Aſſyrians; who, as the Babylonians againſt the Jews, came up as clouds, and their chariots as the whirlwind, Jer. iv. 13. and the figures beautifully deſcribe the numbers of them, the force with which they came; and in an elegant manner repreſent the vaſt quantity of duſt raiſed by an army in full march; at the head of which was the Lord himſelf, ordering, directing and ſucceeding, before whom none can ſtand.

℣. 4. He rebuketh the ſea, and maketh it dry, &c.] As he did the Red-ſea, when the children of Iſrael paſſed thro' it as on dry land; which ſhows his power and ſovereignty over it; that it is at his command, as a ſervant at his maſter's; and ſince the wind and ſea obey him, what is it he cannot do? ſee Iſ. l. 2. and li. 10: and drieth up all the rivers; that is, he can do it if he will; as he divided the waters of Jordan, thro' the midſt of which the Iſraelites paſſed on dry ground; and will dry up the river Euphrates, to make way for the kings of the eaſt; and as for Tigris, on the banks of which the city of Nineveh ſtood, of which the inhabitants boaſted, and in which they truſted for their ſecurity, he could dry up, and make way for the enemy to enter in; or make that their enemy, and overflow them with it, as he did; ſee ℣. 8. ch. ii. 8. By the ſea and rivers may be meant the whole Aſſyrian empire, and many nations and people, as Jarchi and Abarbinel interpret it, of whom it conſiſted; ſee Jer. li. 36. Rev. xvii. 15: Baſhan languiſheth, and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languiſheth; when the Lord reſtrains the heavens from giving rain, then Baſhan famous for its fat paſtures and fruitful meadows, and Carmel for its rich corn-fields, and Lebanon for its tall ſhadowy cedars, theſe, and the glory of all, wither and fade away, being parched and dried up for want of moiſture. Theſe were places in the land of Iſrael, but may be put for like flouriſhing and fruitful hills and countries in the land of Aſſyria, which ſhould become deſolate; ſee Pſ. cvii. 33, 34.

℣. 5. The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, &c.] As Sinai of old did, when the Lord deſcended on it, Exod. xix. 18. Judg. v. 5. Mountains may figuratively ſignify kings and princes; and hills large countries, as Jarchi and Abarbinel obſerve, and the inhabitants of them; particularly the kingdoms and nations belonging to the Aſſyrian empire, which would tremble and quake, and their hearts melt with fear, when they ſhould hear of the deſtruction of Nineveh their chief city; and of the devaſtation made by the enemy there and in other parts, under the direction of the Lord of hoſts; his power and providence ſucceeding him: and the earth is burnt at his preſence; either when he withholds rain from it, and ſo it becomes parched and burnt up with the heat of the ſun; or when he rains fire and brimſtone on it, as he did on Sodom and Gomorrah; or conſumes any part of it with thunder and lightning, as he ſometimes does; nay, if he but touch the mountains, they ſmoke; ſee Pſ. civ. 32: yea, the world, and all that dwell therein; as in the laſt day, at the general conflagration, when the world, and all the wicked inhabitants of it, will be burnt up; ſee 2 Pet. iii. 10.

℣. 6. Who can ſtand before his indignation? &c.] No creature whatever; no man nor body of men; not Nineveh, and the inhabitants of it; nor the whole Aſſyrian empire: and who can abide in the fierceneſs of his anger? not the great men of the earth; not kings or generals of armies; not kingdoms and nations, ever ſo numerous and powerful; but all muſt be conſumed by him, who is a conſuming fire; ſee Jer. x. 10. Rev. vi. 15, 16, 17: his fury is poured out like fire; or like metal that is melted by fire, and poured out by the force of it; or like fire of lightning poured out of the heavens, which is quick, powerful and penetrating, and there is no reſiſting it: and the rocks are thrown down by him; by the Lord, by his wrath and fury; kingdoms that ſeemed as ſtrong and immoveable as rocks, and mountains are thrown down; as ſuch have been by the force of fire burſting from the midſt of them, as Ætna, Veſuvius, and others.

℣. 7. The Lord is good, &c.] To Iſrael, as the Targum adds; to Hezekiah and his people, that betook themſelves to him, and put their truſt in him; whom he defended and preſerved from the king of Aſſyria, to whom he was dreadful and terrible, deſtroying his army in one night by an angel; and ſo delivered the king of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem from that terror that had ſeized them, and that danger they were expoſed unto; and ſo the Lord is good in himſelf, in the perfections of his nature, in the works of his hands, in all his perſons to his people, that fear him, truſt in him, and ſeek him, and wait for him, and on him: a ſtrong hold in the day of trouble; or, he is good for a ſtrong hold[w], &c. it was a day of trouble, rebuke and blaſphemy with Hezekiah and his people, when they were beſieged by the army of Sennacherib king of Aſſyria, and had received from Rabſhakeh by his orders a railing and reproaching letter; and then the Lord was a ſtrong hold to them, to whom they betook themſelves, and he protected and defended them. The whole time of this life is a time of trouble to the ſaints, tho' it is but a day, a ſhort time; in which they meet with much from their own corrupt hearts, and the ſin that dwells in them; from ſatan and his temptations; from carnal profeſſors, their principles and practices; and from a profane and perſecuting world; and from the Lord himſelf, who ſometimes lays his afflicting hand upon them, and hides his face from them; and yet he is their rock and their refuge, their ſtrong tower and place of defence; where they find ſafety and plenty in all their times of diſtreſs and want: and he knoweth them that truſt in him; in his word, as the Targum; and they are ſuch that know him, and are ſenſible of the vanity of all other objects of truſt; who betake themſelves to him for ſhelter and protection; lean and ſtay themſelves upon him, and commit all unto him, and expect all from him: theſe he knows, loves, and has the ſtrongeſt affection for; he approves of them, and commends their faith and confidence; he takes notice of them, viſits them, and makes himſelf known unto them, even in their adverſity; he owns and acknowledges them as his own, claims his right in them now, and will confeſs them hereafter; and he takes care of them that they periſh not, whoever elſe do; ſee Pſ. i. 6. 2 Tim. ii. 18, 19. he knows the neceſſities of thoſe that truſt in him, as Jarchi; he knows them for their good, takes care of them, provides for them, and watches over them, as Kimchi. The ancients formerly had their γνωστηρας and μυνηλας, notores[x], ſuch as knew them, and were their patrons and defenders; as when a Roman citizen was condemned to be whipped or crucified in a province where he was not known, and claimed the Roman privileges, ſuch perſons were his witneſſes and advocates; and thus the Lord is repreſented as one that knows his people, and is their patron and advocate. The goodneſs of God expreſſed in this text, is ſet off with a foil, by the terribleneſs of his wrath and vengeance againſt his enemies.

℣. 8. But with an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof, &c.] Of Nineveh, againſt whom this prophecy was, and upon whom it lay as a burden, ℣. 1. and now, tho' the Lord was good to them that truſt in him, and a ſtrong hold to them in a time of trouble; yet he was determined to deſtroy their enemies the Aſſyrians, and Nineveh their chief city; and that by the means of a powerful army, which, like a flood or inundation of water breaking in, over-runs and carries all before it; and very fitly may the Medes and Babylonians, who joined together in an expedition againſt Nineveh, be compared to ſuch a flood for their number and force; ſince, as the hiſtorian tells [y] us, they were no leſs than four hundred thouſand men: tho' this may be literally underſtood; for as the ſame writer [z] obſerves, "there was an oracle received by the Ninevites from their anceſtors, that Nineveh could never be taken by any, unleſs the river (on which it ſtood) firſt became an enemy to it; and ſo it was, that in the third year of the ſiege, the river being ſwelled with continual rains, overflowed part of the city, and broke down the wall for the ſpace of twenty furlongs; hence the king concluded the oracle was fulfilled, and gave up all hopes of ſafety; and thro' the breach of the wall the enemy entered, and took the city;" and an utter end was made of it, and of the place of it, inſomuch that hiſtorians and geographers diſagree about it; ſome ſay it was ſituated upon the river Euphrates, others upon the river Tigris, which is the righteſt; ſome ſay on the eaſt of that river, others on the weſt; ſome will have it to be above the river Lycus, and others below it: ſo true is that of Lucian [a], that Nineveh is now entirely loſt, and no traces of it remain; nor can one eaſily ſay where it once was; and travellers in general, both ancient and modern, agree that it lies wholly in ruins, and is an heap of rubbiſh. Benjamin Tudelenſis [b], who travelled into theſe parts in the twelfth century, relates, that between Almozal or Moſul, and Nineveh, is only a bridge, and it (Nineveh) is a waſte; but there are villages, and many towers. Haitho an Armenian [c], who wrote more than an hundred years after the former, ſays, "this city (Nineveh) at preſent is wholly deſtroyed; but by what yet appears in it, it may be firmly believed that it was one of the greateſt cities in the world." Monſieur Thevenot [d], who was upon the ſpot in the laſt century, obſerves, "on the other ſide of the river (Tigris, from that on which Moſul ſtands) at the end of the bridge begins the place, where, in ancient times, ſtood the famous city of Nineveh.—There is nothing of it, (adds he) now to be ſeen, but ſome hillocks, which (they ſay) are its foundations, the houſes being underneath; and theſe reach a good way below the city of Moſul:" and darkneſs ſhall purſue his enemies; the enemies of God and his people, who would make ſuch a devaſtation of Nineveh; even he would cauſe all manner of calamities, often ſignified in ſcripture by darkneſs, to follow and overtake them; ſo that they ſhould be brought into the moſt uncomfortable and diſtreſſed condition imaginable.

[w] טוב יהוה למעוז bonus Dominus ad robur, Burkius; bonus eſt Jehovah in arcem, Cocceius.

[x] Dannhaver. apud Burkium in loc. Vid. Turnebi Adverſar. l. 29. c. 36.

℣. 9. What do ye imagine againſt the Lord? &c.] O ye Ninevites or Aſſyrians; do you think you can fruſtrate the deſigns of the Lord, reſiſt his power, and hinder him from executing what he has threatened and has determined to do? or what miſchief is it you deviſe againſt his people, which is the ſame as againſt himſelf? can you believe that you ſhall proſper and ſucceed, and your ſchemes be carried into execution, when he, the all-wiſe and all-powerful being, oppoſes you? he will make an utter end; of you, as before declared, and will ſave his people; which may be depended on will certainly be the caſe: affliction ſhall not riſe up the ſecond time; either this ſhould be the laſt effort the Aſſyrians would make upon the Jews, which they made under Sennacherib, and this the laſt time they would afflict them; or rather their own deſtruction ſhould be ſo complete, that there would be no need to repeat the ſtroke, or give another blow; the buſineſs would be done at once. This ſeems to contradict a notion of ſome hiſtorians and chronologers, who ſuppoſe that Nineveh was deſtroyed at two different times, and by different perſons of the ſame nations; and ſo the whole Aſſyrian empire was twice ruined, which is not likely in itſelf, and ſeems contrary to this paſſage; for tho' ſome aſcribe it to Arbaces the Mede, and Beleſis the Babylonian, as Diodorus Siculus [e]; and others to Cyaxares the Mede, as Herodotus [f], and to Nebuchadnezzar the firſt, or Nabopolaſſar the Babylonian, in a later period: ſo Tobit [g] ſays, it was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, and Abaſuerus the ſame with the Cyaxares of Herodotus; yet all ſeem to agree that it was taken by the conjunct forces of the Medes and Babylonians; and there are ſome things ſimilar [h] in all theſe accounts, which ſhew that there was but one deſtruction of Nineveh, and of the Aſſyrian empire.

℣. 10. For while they be folden together as thorns, &c.] Like them, uſeleſs and unprofitable, hurtful and pernicious, fit only for burning, and being bundled together, are prepared for it; and which is not only expreſſive of the bad qualities of the Ninevites, and of the danger they were in, and what they deſerved; but of the certainty of their ruin, no more being able to ſave themſelves from it, than a bundle of thorns from the devouring fire: and while they are drunken as drunkards; dead drunk, no more able to help themſelves than a drunken man that is fallen; or who were as eaſily thrown down as a drunken man is with the leaſt touch; tho' there is no need to have recourſe to a figurative ſenſe, ſince the Ninevites were actually drunk when they were attacked by their enemy, as the hiſtorian relates [i]; that the king of Aſſyria being elated with his fortune, and thinking himſelf ſecure, feaſted his army, and gave them large quantities of wine; and while the whole army were indulging themſelves, the enemy having notice of their negligence and drunkenneſs by deſerters, fell upon them unawares in the night, when diſordered and unprepared, and made a great ſlaughter among them, and forced the reſt into the city, and in a little time took it: they ſhall be devoured as ſtubble fully dry; as eaſily, and as inevitably, and irrecoverably.

℣. 11. There is one come out of thee, &c.] That is, out of Nineveh, as the Targum explains it; meaning Sennacherib, who had his royal ſeat and palace there; or Rabſhakeh, that was ſent from hence by him with a railing and blaſpheming letter to the king of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem. This is ſaid to be at the preſent time of writing this prophecy, tho' it was after it, becauſe of the certainty of it, as is uſual in prophetic language; unleſs it can be thought that this prophecy was delivered out exactly at the time when Sennacherib had entered Judea, and was before the walls of Jeruſalem; but not yet diſcomfited, as after predicted: that imagineth evil againſt the Lord; againſt the people of the Lord, as the Targum; formed a ſcheme to invade the land of Judea, take the fenced cities thereof, and ſeize upon Jeruſalem the metropolis of the nation, and carry the king, princes, and all the people captive, as Salmaneſer his father had carried away the ten tribes: a wicked counſellor; or, a counſellor of Belial[k]; who, by Rabſhakeh, adviſed Iſrael not to regard their king, nor truſt in their God, but ſurrender themſelves up to him, 2 Kings xviii. 29, 30, 31.

℣. 12. Thus ſaith the Lord, tho' they be quiet, and likewiſe many, &c.] The Aſſyrian army under Sennacherib before Jeruſalem, tho' they were quiet and ſecure, and thought themſelves out of all danger; not at all fearing that the beſieged would ſally out againſt them, they being ſo numerous, and therefore betook themſelves to ſleep and reſt: yet thus ſhall they be cut down; or ſhorn[l]; as the wool is ſhorn off the back of a ſheep with ſheers; or graſs or corn is mowed with a ſcythe; or elſe as the hair of a man's head and beard are ſhaved with a razor; which ſometimes was done, not only in a way of ignominy and contempt, as David's ſervants were ſerved by Hanun, 2 Sam. x. 4. but as a token of ſervitude; hence thoſe words of the poet[m], "after thou art a ſervant, doſt thou let thy hair grow?" upon which it is obſerved[n], that it belongs to freemen to let the hair grow; and ſo the philoſopher ſays[o], to let the hair grow, or to nouriſh it, is commendable with a Lacedemonian, for it is a ſign of liberty; for it is not for him who lets his hair grow to do any ſervile work; and it was uſual with conquerors to ſhave the conquered, and ſuch as were carried captives[p], which ſome think is referred to in Deut. xxxii. 42. and render the latter clauſe of that verſe, "and there ſhall be captivity, by reaſon of the head of nakedneſs of the enemy;" that is, there ſhould be captives whoſe heads ſhould be made bare, or ſhaved by the enemy the conqueror[q]; hence the king of Aſſyria when a conqueror, is compared to a ſharp razor, that ſhould ſhave the head, and feet, and beard, even all ſorts of people, Iſ. vii. 20. but now he and his army ſhould be ſhaved themſelves; that is, conquered, ſlain, or taken captives, and become ſlaves, and treated with contempt; all which may be taken into the ſenſe of this phraſe, and ſerve to illuſtrate it: when he ſhall paſs thro'; when the angel ſhould paſs thro' the camp of the Aſſyrians, then were they cut down by him in great numbers, a hundred and fourſcore and five thouſand ſlain at once, 2 Kings xix. 35: tho' I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more; or any longer[r]; tho' the Lord had afflicted the people of the Jews by the Aſſyrian king, the rod of his anger, again and again, yet after this he would afflict them no more by him; for otherwiſe they were afflicted afterwards, yet not by the Aſſyrians, but by the Babylonians, Syrians and Romans. Some underſtand this, as before, of the Ninevites and Aſſyrians, that ſhould be utterly deſtroyed at once, and their affliction ſhould not be a ſecond time; ſee ℣. 9. ſo Abarbinel: or, I will not hear thee any more[s]; as he did formerly, when they repented at the preaching of Jonah.

℣. 13. For now will I break his yoke from off thee, &c.] The Aſſyrian yoke from off the Jews, who had been obliged to pay tribute, or ſend preſents to the king of Aſſyria, from the times of Ahaz; and were in bondage, whilſt ſhut up and beſieged by his army, and the country all around laid under contribution; from all which they were delivered, when his army was in that dreadful manner deſtroyed: and will burſt the bonds in ſunder; and ſet thee entirely free from the bondage of the enemy, and all fear of it; a type of that freedom from the yoke of ſin, ſatan, and the law, which the people of God have by Jeſus Chriſt.

℣. 14. And the Lord hath given a commandment concerning thee, &c.] This is directed to Sennacherib king of Aſſyria, as the Targum expreſſes it; and ſo Jarchi and Kimchi; and ſignifies the decree of God concerning him, what he had determined to do with him, and how things would be ordered in providence towards him, agreeable to his deſign and reſolution: that no more of thy name be ſown; which is not to be underſtood, that he ſhould have no ſon and heir to ſucceed him; for Eſarhaddon his ſon reigned in his ſtead, 2 Kings xix. 37. and after him, according to Ptolemy's canon, Saoſduchinus and Chyniladanus; but the memory of his name ſhould not be ſpread in the earth; or the fame of it, with any marks of honour and glory, but of ſhame and diſgrace. So the Targum, "neither ſhall be any memory of thy name any more:" out of the houſe of thy gods will I cut off the graven image, and the molten image; called the houſe of Niſroch his god, 2 Kings xix. 37. where he was ſlain; and ſome ſay, that after that it ceaſed to be a place of worſhip, being polluted with his blood. Joſephus[t] calls it his own temple, where he uſually worſhipped, for which he had a peculiar regard, and for his god Niſroch; but who this deity was, is not certain. Selden ſays[u], he knew nothing, nor had read any thing of him, but what is mentioned in the ſcripture. Some of the Jewiſh writers[w] take it to be a plank of Noah's ark; and Mr. Baſnage[x] is of opinion, that it is Janus repreſented by Noah's ark, who had two faces, before and behind; a fit emblem of Noah, who ſaw two worlds, one before, and another after the flood. Some ſay Dagon the god of the Philiſtines is meant, which is not likely; ſee the note on Iſ. xxxvii. 38. but be he who he will, there were other idols beſides him, both graven and molten, in this temple, as is here expreſſed; very probably here ſtood an image of Belus or Pul, the firſt Aſſyrian monarch, and who was deified; and perhaps Adrammelech the god of the Sepharvites was another, ſince one of Sennacherib's ſons bore this name; and it was uſual with the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans and Babylonians to give the names of their gods to their princes, or inſert them in theirs: here alſo might be the Aſſyrian Venus, Derceto, Semiramis, and others: fiſhes alſo were worſhipped by the Aſſyrians, in honour of Derceto; and doves in remembrance of Semiramis, ſaid to be nouriſhed by one in her infancy, and turned into one at her death; hence thoſe creatures became ſacred in Aſſyria, and were not ſuffered to be touched and killed, as Philo obſerved at Aſcalon; ſee the note on Hoſ. xi. 11. and Lucian [y] at Hierapolis in Syria; where he ſays, of all birds they think the dove moſt holy; ſo that they count it very unlawful to touch them, and if by chance they do, they reckon themſelves unclean that whole day; hence you may ſee them frequently in their houſes, converſing familiarly with them, generally feeding on the ground, without any fear; and he alſo ſays [z], the Aſſyrians ſacrifice to a dove, and which he muſt have known, ſince he himſelf was an Aſſyrian, as he tells us; but whatever theſe graven and molten images were, it is here predicted they ſhould be utterly demoliſhed. The ſenſe is, that whereas Sennacherib's empire ſhould be deſtroyed, and his capital taken; the temple where he worſhipped would be defaced, and all his gods he gloried of, all his images, both graven and molten, would be cut to pieces, falling into the conqueror's hands, as was uſual in ſuch caſes; theſe would not be able to defend him or his, or ſecure them from the vengeance of God, whom he had blaſphemed: I will make thy grave, for thou art vile; the Targum is, "there will I put "thy grave;" that is, in the houſe of thy god, as Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; where he was ſlain by two of his ſons, as before obſerved; and this judgment came upon him by the will of God, becauſe he was a looſe, vile creature; becauſe he had vilified the true God, and reproached him, as unable to deliver Hezekiah and his people out of his hands. The Targum paraphraſes it, "becauſe this is eaſy before me;" what the Lord could eaſily do, make his idol-temple his grave; or however, take away his life, and lay his honour in the duſt: or it may be rendered, I will put upon thy grave, that thou art vile [a]; he, who thought to have a ſuperb monument over his grave, and an epitaph inſcribed on it to his immortal honour, as kings uſed to have; this ſhall be the ſepulchral inſcription, "here lies "a vile, wicked and contemptible man;" ſo Abarbinel. There was a ſtatue of this king in an Egyptian temple, as Herodotus [b] relates, according, as many think, with this inſcription on it, "who-"ſoever looks on me, let him be religious;" tho' I rather think it was a ſtatue of Sethon the prieſt of Vulcan, and laſt king of Egypt. Here ends the firſt chapter in ſome Hebrew copies, and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, and in Aben Ezra.

℣. 15. Behold upon the mountains, &c.] Of the land of Iſrael, as the Targum; or thoſe about Jeruſalem: the feet of him that bringeth good things; ſee how they come one after another with the news of the havock and ſlaughter made in the army of Sennacherib by an angel in one night; of his flight, and of the death of him by the hands of his two ſons; and after that, of the deſtruction of Nineveh, and of the whole Aſſyrian empire; all which were good tidings to the Jews, to whom the Aſſyrians were implacable enemies, and whoſe power the Jews dreaded; and therefore it muſt be good news to them to hear of their defeat and ruin, and the meſſengers that brought it muſt be welcome to them: that publiſheth peace; to the Jewiſh nation, who might from hence hope for peaceable and proſperous times: like expreſſions with theſe are uſed in Iſ. lii. 7. on account of the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity; and are applied by the apoſtle to goſpel-times and goſpel-preachers, Rom. x. 15. as theſe may alſo, and expreſs the good tidings of victory obtained by Chriſt over ſin, ſatan, the world, hell and death; and of ſalvation wrought out, and peace made by him; it being uſual for the prophets abruptly and at once to riſe from temporal to ſpiritual and eternal things, particularly to what concern the Meſſiah, and the goſpel-diſpenſation; ſee the note on Iſ. lii. 7: O Judah, keep thy ſolemn feaſts; of the paſſover, pentecoſt and tabernacles; which had been interrupted or omitted thro' the invaſion of the land, and the ſiege of Jeruſalem, by the enemy; but now he being gone and ſlain, they had full liberty, and were at leiſure to attend theſe ſolemnities: perform thy vows; which they had made when in diſtreſs, when the enemy was in their land, and before their city; promiſing what they would do, if it pleaſed God to deliver them out of his hands, and now they were delivered; and therefore it was incumbent on them to make good their promiſes, and eſpecially to offer up their thankſgivings to God for ſuch a mercy; ſee Pſ. l. 14. and lxvi. 13, 14. Eccl. v. 4, 5: for the wicked ſhall no more paſs thro' thee, he is utterly cut off; or Belial, the counſellor of Belial, as in ℣. 11. the king of Aſſyria; who, tho' he had paſſed thro' their land, had invaded it, and made devaſtation in it, ſhould do ſo no more; being dead, cut off in a judicial way, thro' the juſt judgment of God, ſuffering his ſons to take away his life whilſt in the midſt of his idolatrous worſhip; and this may reach, not only to him, and his ſeed after him being wholly cut off, but to the whole Aſſyrian empire, who ſhould none of them ever give any further trouble to Judah.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter gives an account of the deſtruction of the city of Nineveh; deſcribes the inſtruments of it, as very terrible and powerful, and not to be reſiſted, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. The manner of taking it; the flight of its inhabitants; and the ſpoil of its riches and treaſures, ℣. 5—10. and the king and the princes thereof compared to a lion, and a lion's whelp, are inſulted as being without a den or dwelling place, becauſe of their cruelty and ravening, for which the Lord was againſt them, and threatened them with utter ruin, which he brought upon them, ℣. 11, 12, 13.

℣. 1. He that daſheth in pieces is come up before thy face, &c.] O Nineveh, or land of Aſſyria; for this is not to be underſtood of Sennacherib's coming up againſt Jeruſalem, as Kimchi; but of Nebuchadnezzar againſt Nineveh, as Aben Ezra; not Nebuchadnezzar the Great, who, the Jewiſh chronologers ſay [c], took Nineveh in the firſt year of his reign; but his father, Nebuchadnezzar the Firſt, called Nabopolaſſar, who, with Cyaxares or Ahaſuerus the Mede, joined their forces againſt Nineveh, and took it, Tobit xiv. 15. and theſe together, the Chaldeans and Medes, are the daſher in pieces; or, the hammer[d], as the word may be rendered; and ſo Babylon, over which one of theſe kings reigned, is called the hammer of the whole earth, Jer. l. 23. theſe came up openly, boldly, to the face of the king of Aſſyria, attacked him in his metropolis, not fearing his ſtrength and numbers: keep the munition; this and what follow are ſpoken ironically to the Aſſyrian king, and inhabitants of Nineveh, to take care of their towers and garriſons, and fortify them, and fill them with ſoldiers: and watch the way; in which the enemy came; ſecure the paſſes and avenues that lead to their city; ſtop his march, and prevent his acceſs: make thy loins ſtrong; put on armour, gird on the ſword, prepare for war: fortify thy power mightily; increaſe thine army, exert all thy ſtrength and courage, and do all that is in thy power to do, to oppoſe the enemy, and defend thyſelf; and when all is done, it will be in vain.

℣. 2. For the Lord hath turned away the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Iſrael, &c.] Or, will render a recompence for, or revenge the pride of Jacob[e]; all that inſolence, and thoſe injuries done in a proud and haughty manner by Sennacherib king of Aſſyria to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin; invading their land, taking their fenced cities, and beſieging their metropolis; and in an audacious manner threatning them with utter deſtruction, unleſs they ſurrendered; and alſo by Salmaneſer, another king of Aſſyria, who had beſieged and took Samaria the capital city of Iſrael or the ten tribes, and had carried them captive; and now Aſſyria, tho' it had been the rod of God's anger, and the inſtrument of his chaſtiſement and correction of his people, muſt in its turn ſuffer and ſmart for all this: for the emptiers have emptied them out; the Aſſyrians, partly by their exactions and tributes they demanded, and partly by their ſpoil and plunder, had ſtripped Iſrael and Judah of all, or the greateſt part of their ſubſtance, wealth and treaſure: and marred their vine-branches; their children, their ſons and daughters, ſlaying them, or carrying them captive. Iſrael and Judah are often compared to a vine, and ſo their poſterity to branches: or corrupted[f] them, with ſuperſtition and idolatry. The Targum interprets it of their renowned cities; theſe, and towns and villages, being to the land as branches to the vine; and which had been ranſacked and pillaged by the Aſſyrians, and now they ſhould be paid in their own coin.

℣. 3. The ſhield of his mighty men is made red, &c.] The ſhields of the ſoldiers in the armies of the Babylonians and Medes, thoſe daſhers in pieces that would come up againſt Nineveh ſhould be red; either with the blood of the ſlain, or thus coloured on purpoſe to inject terror to their enemies: or this may expreſs the luſtre of them, which being gilded, or made of gold or braſs, in the rays of the ſun glittered, and looked of a fiery red; ſee 1 Maccab. vi. 39: the valiant men are in ſcarlet; the generals and other officers of the army were clothed in ſcarlet; partly to ſhew their greatneſs and nobleneſs, and partly to ſtrike their enemies with terror, and to hide their blood ſhould they be wounded, and ſo keep up their own ſpirits, and not encourage their enemies: the chariots ſhall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation; that is, when the Medes and Chaldeans, under their reſpective commander or commanders, ſhall prepare for the ſiege of the city, and to make their onſet and attack upon it; the chariots uſed by them in war, which was common in thoſe times, would have flaming torches in them; either to guide them in the night, or to ſet fire to houſes or tents they ſhould meet with, or to terrify the enemy: or the chariots ſhall be as flaming torches[g]; they ſhould run with ſuch ſwiftneſs, that the wheels being of iron, or caſed with it, ſhould ſtrike fire upon the ſtones in ſuch quantities, that they ſhould look like torches flaming: and the fir-trees ſhall be terribly ſhaken; with the motion of the chariots; or this may be interpreted of ſpears and lances, and ſuch like inſtruments of war made of fir; which ſhould be in ſuch great numbers, and with ſo much activity uſed againſt the Ninevites, that it would look like ſhaking a foreſt of fir-trees. The Targum interprets theſe of the great men and generals of their armies, glittering in dyed garments; and Kimchi's father, of the princes and great men of the city of Nineveh, who would be ſeized with terror, and reel about like drunken men; and ſo all that follows in the next verſe.

℣. 4. The chariots ſhall rage in the ſtreets, &c.] In the ſtreets of Nineveh when taken; where they ſhall be drove in a furious manner from place to place, the men in them breathing out ſlaughter and death wherever they came. Kimchi underſtands this of the chariots of the Ninevites, who ſhall drive about in them in the ſtreets of the city like mad men; not daring to go out to fight the enemy, being mightier and more numerous than they. They ſhall juſtle one againſt another in the broad ways; becauſe of their numbers, and the haſte they ſhall make to ſpoil and plunder the city; or the Ninevites ſhall juſtle one againſt another, in their hurry and confuſion, to make their eſcape. They ſhall ſeem like torches; either the chariots of the Medes and Chaldeans, for the reaſons given in the preceding verſe; or they themſelves, becauſe of their fierceneſs and cruelty; or the faces of the Ninevites, being covered with ſhame, ſo Kimchi; ſee Iſ. xiii. 8. They ſhall run like the lightnings; exceeding ſwiftly, with irreſiſtible force and power: the above writer interprets this of the Ninevites alſo, running from one end of their city to the other in the utmoſt confuſion, not knowing what to do; but the whole of theſe two verſes ſeem to be a deſcription of their enemies.

℣. 5. He ſhall recount his worthies, &c.] Either the daſher in pieces, ℣. 1. the kings of Babylon and Media, ſhall call together their general officers, and muſter the forces under them, and put them in mind of their duty, and recount the actions of their anceſtors in former times, in order to animate and encourage them to the ſiege and attack of the city of Nineveh; or the king of Aſſyria ſhall recount and muſter up his nobles, and the troops under them, to ſally out againſt the enemy, and meet him in the field, and give him battel: they ſhall ſtumble in their walk; being many, and in haſte to obey the orders of their commander, ſhall ſtumble and fall upon one another; or elſe the Ninevites in their march out againſt the enemy ſhall be diſcomfited and flee before him, or be diſpirited and flee back again: they ſhall make haſte to the wall thereof; of Nineveh; that is, the Medes and Chaldeans ſhall make haſte thither to break it down or ſcale it; or the Ninevites failing in their ſally out, ſhall betake themſelves in all haſte to their city-walls, and defend themſelves under the protection of them: and the defence ſhall be prepared; or the covering; the word [h] uſed has the ſignification of a booth or tent, to cover and protect; here it ſignifies ſomething that was prepared, either by the beſiegers to cover them from the darts and ſtones of the beſieged, as they made their approaches to the walls; or which the beſieged covered themſelves with, from the aſſaults of the beſiegers; rather the former.

℣. 6. The gates of the rivers ſhall be opened, &c.] Of Diava and Adiava, or Lycus and Caprus, between which, according to ſome writers [i], Nineveh was ſituated; or the gates of the city, which lay neareſt to the river Tigris, are meant; or that river itſelf, the plural for the ſingular, which overflowing, brake down the walls of the city 20 furlongs, and opened a way for the Medes and Chaldeans to enter in; of which ſee ch. i. 8: and the palace ſhall be diſſolved; by the inundation, or deſtroyed by the enemy; meaning the palace of the king, which might be ſituated near the river; or the temple of Niſroch the Aſſyrian deity, or Jupiter Belus; for the ſame word [k] ſignifies a temple, as well as palace.

℣. 7. And Huzzab ſhall be led away captive, &c.] The Targum tranſlates it, the queen; and Jarchi and Aben Ezra, after R. Samuel, take it to be the name of the queen of Aſſyria; ſo called, as every queen might, from her ſtanding at the king's right-hand, Pſ. xlv. 9, who, when the royal palace was deſtroyed, was taken out, and carried captive with the reſt, who before was in a well-ſettled and tranquil ſtate and condition: or perhaps the king himſelf is deſigned, who may be repreſented as a woman, as follows, for his effeminacy; converſing only with women; imitating their voice; wearing their apparel; and doing their work, ſpinning, &c. which is the character hiſtorians [l] give of the laſt king of the Aſſyrians: ſome [m] take it to be the idol Venus, worſhipped by the Ninevites: tho' it may be meant either of the palace itſelf, as Kimchi's father, which was firm and well eſtabliſhed; or rather Nineveh itſelf, thought to be ſtable and ſecure, the inhabitants of which ſhould be carried into a ſtrange land: ſhe ſhall be brought up; the queen, or the king, out of the palace or private retirement, where they were in peace and ſafety; or Nineveh, and the inhabitants of it, out of their ſecure ſtate and condition: and her maids ſhall lead her; her maids of honour, ſupporting her on the right hand and left, ready to ſink and faint under her misfortunes: this may alſo be underſtood of towns and villages, and the inhabitants of them, that ſhould go into captivity along with Nineveh: as with the voice of doves tabering upon their breaſts; mourning like doves, inwardly and ſecretly, not daring to expreſs their ſorrow more publickly, becauſe of their enemies; but knocking and beating upon their breaſts, as men do upon tabrets or drums, thereby expreſſing the inward grief of their minds; ſee Ezek. vii. 16.

℣. 8. But Nineveh is of old like a pool of water, &c.] This was a very ancient city, built by Nimrod, as ſome ſay; or rather by Aſſhur, as appears from Gen. x. 10, 11. and it was like a fiſh-pool, full of people, as it was in the times of Jonah, who for their number may be compared both to water and to fiſh; and likewiſe full of wealth and riches, which for their inſtability may be ſignified by water alſo; and moreover, like a pool of ſtanding water, had never been liable to any commotions and diſturbances, but had remained from the beginning in a tranquil and proſperous ſtate; beſides, ſome regard may be had in a literal ſenſe to its ſituation, being watered by the river Tigris, and which was for its profit and defence: ſo ſome copies of the Septuagint read the words, "Nineveh "is like a pool of water, the waters are her walls:" and the Syriac verſion is, "Nineveh is as a lake of "water, and is among the waters;" ſee ℣. 6: yet they ſhall flee away; the waters out of the pool, the ſluices being opened, or the banks broken down; or the people out of the city, breaches being made in its walls, or its gates opened, and the enemy entring; when every one would flee for his life, and make his eſcape in the beſt manner he could: ſtand, ſtand, ſhall they cry; either the generals and officers of the king of Aſſyria's army, to the ſoldiers running away; or the more courageous inhabitants of the city, to thoſe that were timorous and ſeized with a pannic, fleeing in the utmoſt conſternation; or the enemy, as Kimchi, who ſhall call to them to ſtop, promiſing to ſpare their lives upon a ſurrender of them to them: but none ſhall look back; and ſtand to hear what is ſaid unto them, but make the beſt of their way, and flee with all their might and main.

℣. 9. Take ye the ſpoil of ſilver, take the ſpoil of gold, &c.] Of which there was a great quantity in this rich and populous city: theſe are the words of the prophet, or of the Lord by the prophet, to the Medes and Chaldeans, to ſeize the ſpoil of the city, now fallen into their hands; ſuggeſting that this was by the order and will of God, tho' they ſaw it not: or of the generals of the army of the Medes and Babylonians; giving leave to the common ſoldiers to take part of the plunder, there being enough for them all, officers and private men: for there is none end of the ſtore, and glory, out of all the pleaſant furniture; no end of the wealth which had been hoarded up, and of their houſhold-goods and rich apparel, which their coffers, houſes, and wardrobes were full of, the value of which could not be told. The king of Aſſyria, perceiving that he, his family, and his wealth were like to fall into the hands of the enemy, cauſed a pile of wood to be raiſed, and in it heaped his gold, ſilver, and royal apparel, and incloſing himſelf, his eunuchs and concubines in it, ſet fire to it, and deſtroyed himſelf and them. It is ſaid [n], there were no leſs in this pile than a thouſand myriads of talents of gold, which are about fourteen hundred millions ſterling, and ten times as many talents of ſilver, together with apparel and furniture unſpeakable; and yet after all this, the princes of the Babylonians and Medes carried off vaſt quantities. The Babylonian prince loaded ſeveral ſhips with the aſhes of the pile, and a large quantity of gold and ſilver, diſcovered to him by an eunuch, a deſerter; and the Median prince, what of the gold and ſilver left out of the pile, which were many talents, that fell into his hands, he ſent to Ecbatana, the royal city of Media [o].

℣. 10. She is empty, and void, and waſte, &c.] The city of Nineveh, empty of inhabitants, being killed, or having fled; and ſtript of all its treaſures and riches by the enemies; its walls and houſes demoliſhed, and pulled down, and laid in ruins, and become an heap of rubbiſh; ſee the note on ch. i. 8. Various words are here uſed to aſcertain and confirm the thing; and there is an elegant paronomaſia or likeneſs of ſounds, which our language will not expreſs: and the heart melteth; the heart of every inhabitant of Nineveh melted with fear at the approach of their enemies, their entrance into the city, and plunder of it; flowed like water, or melted like wax; ſee Pſ. xxii. 14: and the knees ſmite together; like people in a fright, and when a pannic has ſeized them; and as it was with Belſhazzar, Dan. v. 6: and much pain is in all loins; like that of women in travail; or of perſons in a ſudden fright, which gives them a pain in their backs at once: and the faces of them all gather blackneſs; like a pot, as the Targum adds; being in great diſtreſs and diſconſolation, which make men appear in a diſmal hue, and their countenances look very dark and gloomy; ſee Joel ii. 6.

℣. 11. Where is the dwelling of the lions? &c.] Of the kings of Aſſyria, comparable to lions for their ſtrength, courage and cruelty, tyranny and oppreſſion; ſuch as Pul, Tiglath-Pileſer, Salmaneſer, and Sennacherib. So the Targum, "where are the "habitations of kings;" thoſe are the words, either of the prophet, or of the people that had ſeen this city in its glory, and now ſee it in its ruins; and ſo deſolate and waſte, as that it could ſcarcely be ſaid where it once ſtood: and the feeding place of the young lions? the ſons of the kings of Aſſyria, the princes of the blood, and who were of the ſame blood, temper and diſpoſition of their anceſtors, and were born, brought up, and educated in Nineveh the royal city. So the Targum, "and the dwelling houſes of the princes," or governors: where the lion, even the old lion walked; not Nebuchadnezzar, as Jerom, who entered into Nineveh the den of thoſe lions, or ſeat of the Aſſyrians, and took it, and walked about in it, as the conqueror and poſſeſſor of it; but rather Nimrod that old lion and tyrant, if he was the firſt founder of this city, as ſome ſay; tho' it does not ſeem ſo much to deſign any particular perſon, but the kings of Aſſyria in general, even the moſt cruel and ſavage, as the old lion is. So the Targum in the plural number, "whither the kings went:" and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid; there were none to reſiſt their power, curb their inſolence, and put a ſtop to their cruelty and oppreſſion; or make them afraid of purſuing ſuch methods. The Targum is, "there they leave their children, even as a "lion that continues in hunting with confidence, "and there is none that terrifies."

℣. 12. The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, &c.] The metaphor is ſtill continued; and the kings of Aſſyria are compared to lions that hunt for their prey, and having found it, tear it in pieces, and carry home a ſufficiency for their whelps. It is a notion that is advanced by ſome writers, as Herodotus [p], that the lioneſs, the ſtrongeſt and boldeſt creature, brings forth but once in its life, and then but one; which Gellius [q] confutes by the teſtimonies of Homer and Ariſtotle; and it appears from the prophet here to be a falſe one, as well as from Ezek. xix. 2, 3. thus the Aſſyrians made war on other nations, and pillaged and plundered them, to enlarge their dominions, provide for their poſterity, and enrich their children: and ſtrangled for his lioneſſes; that is, ſtrangled other beaſts, as the lion firſt does, when it ſeizes a creature, and then tears it in pieces, and brings it to the ſhe-lion in the den with its whelps. Theſe lioneſſes deſign the wives and concubines of the kings of Aſſyria, among whom they parted the ſpoils of their neighbours. So the Targum, "kings "bring rapine to their wives, and a prey to their "children;" that is, riches, which they have taken from others by force and rapine: thus Cicero [r] obſerves of the kings of Perſia and Syria, that they had many wives, and gave cities to them after this manner; this city for their head-dreſs, this for the neck, and the other for the hair; the expences of them: and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravine; as the lion fills his dens and lurking-holes with the prey he has ſeized and ravened; ſo the kings of Aſſyria filled their palaces, treaſures, magazines, towers, cities and towns with the wealth and riches they took by force from other nations; as the Targum, "and they filled their treaſuries "with rapine, and their palaces with ſpoil."

℣. 13. Behold, I am againſt thee, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] Againſt Nineveh, and the whole Aſſyrian empire, for ſuch rapine, violence and oppreſſion their kings had been guilty of; and if he, who is the Lord of hoſts, of all the armies of heaven and earth, was againſt them, nothing but ruin muſt inevitably enſue: or, I come unto thee [s]; or will ſhortly come unto thee, and reckon with thee for all this; will viſit thee in a way of wrath and vengeance. The Targum is, "behold I will ſend my fury upon thee:" and I will burn her chariots in the ſmoke; either thoſe in which the inhabitants of Nineveh rode in great ſplendor about the city; or thoſe which were uſed in war with their enemies; and this he would do in the ſmoke; or, unto ſmoke, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; or, into ſmoke, as the Syriac [t]; eaſily, quickly, at once, ſuddenly, ſo that they ſhould evaporate into ſmoke, and be no more; or, with fire, as the Targum; that is, as Kimchi interprets it, with a great fire, whoſe ſmoke is ſeen afar off; and may be figuratively underſtood of the ſmoke of divine wrath, as Aben Ezra explains it: and the ſword ſhall devour thy young lions; the ſwords of the Medes and Chaldeans ſhall deſtroy the princes, the ſons of their king. The Targum interprets this of towns or villages deſtroyed thereby: and I will cut off thy prey from the earth; cut them off that they ſhould no more prey upon their neighbours; bours; and what they had got ſhould be taken away from them, and be of no uſe to them: and the voice of thy meſſengers ſhall no more be heard; in foreign courts, demanding homage and ſubjection; exacting and collecting tribute; blaſpheming the God of heaven, and menacing his people, as Rabſhakeh a meſſenger of one of theſe kings did; and which is mentioned by moſt of the Jewiſh commentators, as being then a recent thing. Some render it, the voice, or noiſe of thy jaw-teeth[u]; alluding to the lion's breaking the bones of its prey, which is done with a great noiſe; ſignifying, that ſuch cruelty and oppreſſion the Aſſyrians had been guilty of ſhould be uſed no more; or rather, as R. Judah ben Balaam obſerves, as it ſignifies the noiſe of the teeth devouring the prey, it is as if it was ſaid, I will cut off thy prey from the earth; and Ben Melech ſays, that in the Perſian language, grinding ſtones are expreſſed by this word, and teeth are called grinders; ſee Eccl. xii. 3.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter is contained the prophecy of the deſtruction of Nineveh, and with it the whole Aſſyrian empire; the cauſes of which, beſides thoſe before-mentioned, were the murders, lies and robberies it was full of, ℣. 1. for which it ſhould be ſwiftly and cruelly deſtroyed, ℣. 2, 3. as alſo its whoredoms and witchcrafts, or idolatry, by which nations and families were ſeduced, ℣. 4. and hence ſhe ſhould be treated as an harlot; her nakedneſs expoſed, and ſhe caſt out with contempt, and mocked at by all, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and all thoſe things ſhe placed her confidence in, are ſhewn to be of no avail; as her ſituation and fortreſſes, as ſhe might learn from the caſe of No Amon, ℣. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. nor the number of her inhabitants, which were weak as women; nor even her merchants, captains, nobles, and king himſelf, ℣. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. nor the people ſhe was in alliance with, who would now mock at her, her caſe being irrecoverable and incurable, ℣. 19.

℣. 1. Wo to the bloody city, &c.] Nineveh, in which many murders were daily commited; innocent blood ſhed; the lives of men taken away, under the colour of juſtice, by falſe witneſſes, and other unlawful methods; and which was continually making war with neighbouring nations, and ſhedding their blood, which it ſtuck not at, to enlarge its wealth and dominions; and therefore wo is denounced againſt it; and it is threatened with the righteous judgments of God, with all ſorts of calamity and diſtreſs: or, O bloody city, as the Septuagint; for the word uſed is vocative, and expreſſive of calling, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi obſerve: it is all full of lies and robbery; the palace and court; the houſes of noblemen and common perſons were full of flattery and deceit; men of high degree were a lie, and men of low degree vanity; no man could truſt another, or believe what he ſaid; there were no truth, honeſty, and faithfulneſs in converſation or commerce; their warehouſes were full of goods, got by rapine and violence; and their ſtreets full of robbers and robberies: the prey departeth not; they go on in making a prey of their neighbours, in pillaging and plundering their ſubſtance; they repent not of ſuch evil practices, nor deſiſt from them; or becauſe of the above ſins they ſhall fall a prey to the enemy, who will not ceaſe plundering them till he has utterly ſtript them of all they have; and who is repreſented in the next verſe as juſt at hand.

℣. 2. The noiſe of a whip, &c.] Of a horſeman or chariot-driver whipping his horſes to make ſpeed to Nineveh, and enter into it, ſo near as to be heard by the inhabitants of it; and is thus repreſented in order to ſtrike terror into them: and the noiſe of the ratling of the wheels; that is, of the chariots upon the ſtones, whoſe drivers drove Jehu-like, making the utmoſt haſte they could to get in firſt, and ſeize the prey: and of the pranſing horſes; or bounding ſteeds upon a full gallop; either with horſemen on them riding full ſpeed to partake of the booty; or in chariots, in which they caper and pranſe, and ſhake the ground as they go; hence it follows: and of the jumping chariots; which, thro' the ſwiftneſs of the motion, ſeem to leap and dance as they run along.

℣. 3. The horſeman lifteth up both the bright ſword, and the glittering ſpear, &c.] Or, the flame of the ſword, and the lightning of the ſpear[w]; he rides with a drawn ſword, which being brandiſhed to and fro, looks like a flame of fire; or with a ſpear made of poliſhed iron, or ſteel, which, when vibrated and moved to and fro, glitters like lightning; a large number of which entring the city, muſt be terrible to the inhabitants of it: and there is a multitude of ſlain, and a great number of carcaſes; of dead men lying in the ſtreets, pierced and ſlain with the bright ſword and glittering ſpear of the Medes and Chaldeans: and there is none end of their corpſes; the number of them could not be told; they lay ſo thick in all parts of the city, that there was no telling them: they ſtumble upon their corpſes; the Ninevites in fleeing, and endeavouring to make their eſcape, and the Medes and Chaldeans purſuing them.

℣. 4. Becauſe of the multitudes of the whoredoms of the well-favoured harlot, &c.] Meaning Nineveh; which, as it was an ancient city, was a well built one; full of ſtately and beautiful buildings, the ſeat of the kings of Aſſyria, and the metropolis of the nation, and abounded with wealth and riches; perhaps here may be an alluſion to the name of the city, and to the ſignification of it; for Nineveh may have its name from the beauty of it, and be read in Hebrew נאי נוה or נוי, and may ſignify a beautiful or pleaſant habitation; ſo Hillerus[x] and Cocceius[y] give the etymology of it; which agrees with its delightful ſituation on the banks of the river Tigris, and the ſtately edifices in it, as the king's palace, and others; juſt as Zion is ſaid to be beautiful for ſituation, the joy of the whole earth, Pſ. xlviii. 2. and the epithet of well-favoured, well agrees with an harlot, whoſe beauty is engaging and enſnaring, as Lais, and others; particularly Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, from whom it is generally thought Nineveh had its name, was firſt an harlot, and one of exceeding beauty, who ſurpaſſed all others in it; on account of which ſhe was beloved by the king of Aſſyria, and after a ſhort time made his wife, and then he delivered the government of the kingdom to her [z]; yea Sardanapalus the laſt, and at this time the preſent king of the Aſſyrians, was very effeminate, uſed to dreſs himſelf in womens cloaths, imitate a woman's voice, and paint his face, and even his whole body; and by other tricks and enticements of harlots, made himſelf more laſcivious, and behaved more lewdly, than any harlot [a]; in ſhort, all the Aſſyrian women muſt be harlots, ſince they were obliged once in their life-time to lie with a ſtranger in the temple of Venus, whom the Aſſyrians call Mylitta, as Herodotus [b] and Strabo [c] relate; to all which here may be an alluſion: and particularly the inhabitants of this city had all the arts of addreſs and inſinuation to deceive others, as harlots have; and both men and women very probably were given to whoredom and adultery in a literal ſenſe, as is generally the caſe where luxury and intemperance abound; and eſpecially were groſsly guilty of idolatry, which in ſcripture is frequently expreſſed by whoredom and adultery; worſhipping Bel, Niſroch, and other deities, and which was highly provoking to God; and therefore for theſe things, his judgments came upon them, before and after-deſcribed: the miſtreſs of witchcrafts; thoroughly verſed in ſuch wicked and deviliſh practices, literally underſtood; ſee Iſ. xlvii. 9, 12. for the Aſſyrians, as well as the Babylonians and Chaldeans, were addicted to ſuch diabolical arts, as appears from a paſſage in Theocritus [d], which Grotius has alſo quoted; where one is repreſented, ſaying, that ſhe kept in her box or cheſt very pernicious poiſons, which ſhe had learned from an Aſſyrian gueſt. The alluſion ſeems to be to philtres, and other tricks uſed by harlots to beſot young men, and bewitch and captivate them: likewiſe this city and its inhabitants were well verſed in all the arts of flattery, deceit and carnal policy; and in all the charms of wealth, riches, luxury and ſenſuality, the pomp of ſuperſtition and idolatry, to draw in kingdoms and nations into ſubjection to them: that ſelleth nations thro' her whoredoms, and families thro' her witchcrafts; enſlaved whole kingdoms, and brought them under her power and dominion, to be her vaſſals; and was the inſtrument, not only of corporal ſervitude, but of their ſelling themſelves to work wickedneſs, by committing ſpiritual fornication or idolatry; into which multitudes were led by her influence and example, and particularly the kingdoms and families of Iſrael and Judah; ſee 2 Kings xvi. 10. Ezek. xxiii. 5, 7, 11, 12. In theſe whoredoms and witchcrafts, as well as in her blood-thirſtineſs, lies and oppreſſion, Nineveh was a type of the whore of Rome; ſee Rev. xvii. 12, 5, 6. and xviii. 23.
